PREFACE.

THE importance of placing in book form biographical history of representative citizens both for its immediate worth and for its value to coming generations is admitted by all thinking people; and within the past decade there has been a growing interest in this commendable means of perpetuating biography and family genealogy.

That the public is entitled to the privileges afforded by a work of this nature needs no assertion at our hands; for one of our greatest Americans has said that the history of any country resolves itself into the biographies of its stout, earnest and representative citizens. This medium, then, serves more than a single purpose: while it perpetuates biography and family genealogy, it records history, much of which would be preserved in no other way.

In presenting the COMMEMORATIVE BIOGRAPHICAL RECORD to its patrons, the publishers have to acknowledge, with gratitude, the encouragement and support their enterprise has received, and the willing assistance rendered in enabling them to surmount the many unforeseen obstacles to be met with in the production of a work of this character. In nearly every instance the material composing the sketches was gathered from those immediately interested, and then submitted in type-written form for correction and revision. The volume, which is one of generous amplitude, is placed in the hands of the public with the belief that it will be found a valuable addition to the library, as well as an invaluable contribution to the historical literature of southwestern Pennsylvania.

H. Julius Lemoyne

WASHINGTON COUNTY.

ME MOYNE, DR. FRANCIS JULIUS, was born September 6, 1798, in Washington, Penn., where he spent his whole life, dying there October 11, 1879, in his eighty-second year. The father of Dr. Le Moyne was Dr. John Julius Le Moyne, who was born and educated in Paris, France. He was a practicing physician at the beginning of the French Revolution in 1790, and came to the United States with the French colonists who settled at Gallipolis, Ohio. Several years after he came to Washington, Penn., and in 1797 married Nancy McCully, who had come over from Ireland with her family when a little girl.

The subject of this memoir was their only child. From the Scotch-Irish side of the house he derived a robust constitution and physical development that was unusual for strength, activity and endurance. As a young man, he had but few equals in all the sports that required strength and nerve. His school days were spent in his native town, where at the age of seventeen he graduated from Washington College in the class of 1815. He commenced the study of medicine with his father, and finished his course in Philadelphia. On his return from Philadelphia in the winter, in an old-fashioned stage coach, whose flimsy blinds were insufficient to repel the cold, they stopped, far in the night, at one of the hostleries in the mountains, which was filled with wagoners who occupied all the available space where warmth could be obtained. Not being therefore able to stop, the passengers were literally packed up to their necks in straw within the coach, and started toward Pittsburgh.

from which Dr. Le Moyne rode to Washington on horseback in a most terrible storm. It was a dreadful and dangerous ride, and the result was that he was so seriously injured by the exposure as to be a chronic sufferer from rheumatism for the rest of his life. He commenced the practice of medicine in 1822. Shortly after his return from the East, he met Miss Madelaine Romaine Bureau, at his father's house, who had accompanied her sister from Gallipolis in order to receive medical treatment. The young Doctor being smitten by the charms of the sprightly young lady, they were married in May, 1823.

About this time his father suffered heavy pecuniary losses by his endorsement for his friends, and his house, the present homestead, was sold to meet his liabilities. Francis borrowed the money from two kind friends, Mr. Alexander Reed and Mr. Kerr, who lent him upon his own endorsement, and he bought in the house. Thus he started in life heavily in debt. In a few years, by hard work and the most economical living, he not only paid off his own debts, but relieved his father from his embarrassments also. Our subject had eight children—three sons and five daughters—all of whom are living. Feeling deeply interested in education, he early manifested a desire to promote and extend its benefits. On April 2, 1830, he was elected a trustee of Washington College, in which position he remained a prominent and useful member until the union of Washington and Jefferson Colleges, which occurred in 1865. The Washington Female Seminary was established in 1836, and the Doctor was one of its earliest and firmest friends, and a member of its original board of trustees, where he worked in company with Alex. Reed, Colin M. Reed, T. McK. T. McKennan, John H. Ewing, Alex. Sweeney, Jacob Slagle, John L. Gow and others.

The Doctor became interested in the anti-slavery question in 1835 or 1836. He had the reputation of being an able debater, having a fine presence, a good clear voice, a versatile and strongly self-reliant mind, and, in addition, a flow of language that made him a very dangerous adversary on the platform. On one occasion a young man, an early advocate of the anti-slavery cause, appeared in Washington and injudiciously gave a general challenge for a discussion. The challenge was at once accepted, and the day fixed for the meeting. The challenger expected to have Rev. Dr. Blanchard as his champion, but from some mischance the latter had left Pittsburgh before the news could reach him, and the young man came back himself to meet the engagement with forebodings of defeat. In this dilemma an appeal was made to Dr. Le Moyne for assistance, as he was known to be fond of intellectual gymnastics and always ready for a discussion. The Doctor, however, excused himself, had not examined the subject, was not prepared. But on being shown the constitution of the Anti-slavery Society, which was for the most part a declaration of the rights of man, he was induced to enter the arena as the champion of the slave. From this time forward he was known as one of the most aggressive of the anti-slavery party, and at the same time an opponent of the American Colonization Society, which he believed was established in the interests of American slavery. He became so prominent a partizan that in 1841 he was the candidate of the Abolition party for Governor of Pennsylvania. Of course he had no expectation of being elected, the object of the campaign being to create a political balance of power that would ultimately control the other parties. At the next election, in 1844, he was again the candidate, and also in 1847. During the early discussion both public and private, upon this exciting subject, there was sometimes manifested an intolerance toward him and his party that was painful and often oppressive. He was a man, however, who was not to be daunted by any show of force. Such was his peculiar mental constitution that majorities had no influence upon his judgments and actions. He was an original, independent thinker, and nothing apparently gave him so much satisfaction as the opportunity to maintain his views by discussion with a champion whom he considered a worthy opponent. After years spent in advocating the cause of liberty, he had the satisfaction and happiness of seeing the object of his greatest hopes accomplished in the emancipation of the slaves of the United States, and indeed in almost the whole world.

Having suffered, as we have already related, a severe shock from exposure, Dr. Le Moyne was compelled, when about fifty-five years of age, to relinquish the arduous practice of his profession. So great were his sufferings, which he bore with heroic fortitude, that for twenty-nine years he never occupied a bed to seek a night's repose. Of these matters of personal suffering he was very reluctant to speak, preferring to suffer in silence rather than annoy his friends with his griefs which he well knew they could not even alleviate. The latter portion of his life was devoted to banking, farming and the interests of education. He was a successful business man, and accumulated considerable property. As a farmer he was very enthusiastic and successful. He was one of the original members of the Washington County Agricultural Society, and maintained an active interest in it during his whole life. He farmed with brains. Being a chemist he understood something of the relations of plants to soils, and fertilizers, and it was very instructive to listen to his theories, which were, in many cases, the result of his own observation and experiments. He was one of the first to appreciate the importance of introducing improved sheep, cattle and horses into the county as a means of increasing the natural wealth of the people. He left a herd of the finest cattle in the State, and an elegant stock horse of superior blood. For years he was a member of a Farmers Club, that met in Washington for the comparison of views and for the discussion of such topics as concerned their peculiar interests. In 1866 and 1867, as president of the National Wool Growers Association, he succeeded in harmonizing the views of the manufacturers and producers of wool, and as a result their united efforts obtained the passage through Congress of the best wool tariff law the country has ever had.

When the erection of the present Town Hall in Washington was first talked of, Dr. F. Julius Le Moyne offered, if room in the building was given, to donate the sum of $10,000 to found a public library. When the building project became settled, the offer was accepted, and the two large reading rooms with the vault rooms in them were set apart for the use of the library. Two thousand dollars of the sum donated was used in making fire-proof vaults where the books are kept. A like sum was set apart to be invested permanently, the annual interest thereon to be used in making additions of books; the remainder, $6,000, has been expended in the purchase of the body of the library. The Citizens Library Association, in whose charge the library is, was incorporated by the court May 27, 1870, upon the petition of Dr. Le Moyne and others. The board of curators is composed of five persons: One appointed by the trustees of the college; one appointed by the court; and three elected by the people to serve for the term of three years; until his death Dr. Le Moyne was a member and president of the board. No one took a deeper interest in the matters of the corporation than he, and no one labored more zealously to make it a power for good in the community. He did not limit his labors to devising plans for others to carry out, but, of choice, performed much of the drudgery himself. The first catalogue which was used for years was entirely the work of his heart and hand. It embraces several thousands of entries in the work, giving in one place for each work the title, name of author, shelf letter and number, and in another the name of the author, followed by the title, shelf letter and number. In doing this he would often write until after midnight, and the neat round hand, carefully made letters and figures show that Dr. Le Moyneslighted nothing that came under his eye or hand. He often expressed his regret at the meetings of the curators that the work did not go forward more rapidly, and even during the last year, when he was suffering intensely, expressed his willingness to do any work that would fall to him. When he became unable to visit the library, at almost every meeting of the board he would make inquiry of the members as to number and character of the persons visiting the rooms nightly. Particularly was he desirous of making the library a place of resort for boys. He felt that while occupied there, they would not only be out of temptation, but would have the opportunity of acquiring useful knowledge. In selecting books his doubt about approving a book was removed by some one saying it "was a good book for boys." The only regret he had to express was that the people did not patronize the library in larger numbers, and that its influence was not more extensively felt in the community. But he was never heard to take to himself any credit for his munificent donation which breathed into life and kept on foot the library; on the contrary, he was disposed to assume that he had done nothing more than the duty he owed as a citizen of the community in which he had lived all his life.

About the time that the donation of $10,000 was made for the Citizens' library, the Doctor felt it his duty to do something for the elevation of the colored people of the South, who had been enfranchised by the war. He made a donation of $20,000 to the American Missionary Society, to be used in the erection and support of a colored normal school, in which colored people might be prepared to be the instructors of their race. A portion of this sum was devoted to building, and the remainder to the endowment of the institution. The site selected was on a bluff in the vicinity of the city of Memphis, Tenn. The school proved very successful, so much so that the Doctor added an additional $5,000 for its equipment. His views upon the subject of education were somewhat in opposition to the system under which he was brought up. In the curriculum of his day, a great deal of time was devoted to the study of Greek and Latin, very little to natural sciences and still less to English literature. The practical bent of his mind rebelled against what he deemed a false system of instruction. He was a naturalist by instinct; a keen observer of all the phenomena of nature; a fine practical gardener; a devoted admirer of flowers; a close botanical student and entomologist. These studies so charming to him were not taught him in school, and it was a matter of regret to him that they had not been. He insisted that the study of the ancient classics, for the unprofessional students, did not afford an equivalent for the time and money spent in their acquisition. With this idea in view he determined to endow a professorship in Washington and Jefferson College. In 1872 he paid to the treasurer of the college the sum of $20,000 to endow the chair entitled "The Le Moynes Professorship of Agriculture and Correlative Branches," which chair is now filled by Prof. Ed Linton. In July, 1879, he made an additional endowment of $20,000 for a chair of Applied Mathematics, with an additional $1,000 to better equip the said chair and the chair of Agriculture. Five hundred of this last $1,000 gift was appropriated by the local trustees to purchase in part a set of Ward's Casts, which were on exhibition at the Pittsburgh Exposition.

About 1875 the Doctor became interested in the subject of cremation, and in order to show his faith in it as a proper means of disposing of the dead, he in 1876 built a crematory a short distance from town. The furnace is but little more in appearance than a large gas retort. Into this, when heated, the body is placed and there consumed. Forty cremations have taken place in this crematory, the first being the remains of Baron De Palm, an Austrian, who died in New York, and which attracted more attention and newspaper comment than any like event since. Dr. Le Moynes' wishes in regard to his own remains were carried out to the letter, the cremation taking place on Thursday, October 16, 1879. His ashes are buried in the crematory lot, marked by a monument of granite on which is the following inscription:

F. JULIUS LE MOYNE, M. D.

"A FEARLESS ADVOCATE OF THE RIGHT."

The disease under which he finally succumbed was saccharine diabetes. With the eye of a philosopher he watched the progress of the disease for nearly six years, a much longer period than is usually required for this malady to complete its work. At different periods investigations were interesting to himself and his profession. An autopsy showed that the conclusions arrived at by himself were in the main correct.

And now, in concluding these few and hasty lines, the question may arise what was the mental condition and what was the religious hope of this strong intellectual man, as he approached slowly but surely the confines which divide the present from the spirit world? Before the days of political abolitionism Dr. Le Moyno was a member of the Presbyterian Church, but when goaded to madness by the oppressions of slavery he felt that the church did not come up to what he conceived to be its duty, and he withdrew. Some have supposed, on account of his withdrawal from the church, and from his views on the cremation of the dead, that he had cut loose from his Christian moorings, and had drifted away out upon the shoreless sea of infidelity. He maintained that the burning of the dead was wholly and entirely a secular and sanitary measure, altogether outside of any religious considerations. The disposal of the dead, he maintained, should be made entirely dependent upon the safety and comfort of the living. Those who knew him best, and were most intimate with his views, are very free to assert that he never lost confidence in the great doctrine of salvation through faith in the merits of the atonement offered by the blood of Christ.

VACHEL HARDING, retired merchant, residing in the borough of Washington, was born in Maryland in 1828, and is descended from an English family who had immigrated to that State in an early day. Matthew Harding, the grandfather, also a native of Maryland, was a prominent farmer in that State, and died there.

Joseph Harding, father of our subject, was also born in Maryland, where he married Sophia Young, who died there about the year 1815. Twelve children were born to them, five yet living, of whom: Vachel is the only one in Washington county, Penn.; Joseph is a farmer in Allen county, Ind.; Edward is a farmer in Alabama; John Hersey is a farmer in Allen county, Ind.; Rebecca is married to John Elrichs, and lives in Maryland. The father departed this life in 1871, in Ohio, while on a visit to one of his sons. In his political preferences he was an Old line Whig.

Vachel Harding received but a limited education at the subscription schools. At the age of fifteen he commenced clerking in a store at Hyatts town, Md., and as he was then learning the trade he received no salary for his services while there. At the age of eighteen years he removed to Union town, Penn., where he remained clerking in a dry goods store for five years, or until 1851, when he came to Washington, this county, and here clerked for a short time for William Mills, an old established dry-goods merchant of the place. Afterward he went into business in a partnership; then for a time carried on business alone, and, later, was associated with James Brown in the clothing business, at the same time carrying on his dry-goods department. In 1864 he gave up the dry-goods business, and later he carried on a music business in Wheeling, W. Va. (but did not move from Washington), which after four years he sold to Adams & Lucas. After that he purchased a coal property, and was engaged in that business several years. In 1888 he retired from active life, and is now peacefully enjoying the fruits of his industry at his comfortable home on Maiden street, Washington, where he has resided since 1861.

Mr. Harding married, October 15, 1855, in Washington, Annie Le Moyno, daughter of Dr. Francis Julius and Madelaine Romaine (Bureau) Le Moyno, the former of whom was born September 4, 1798, in Washington, this county, and died October 11, 1879, his wife having preceded him to the grave in July, 1873. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Harding were born children as follows: Charles V. (is married and lives in Washington, Penn.), Madeline Sophia, deceased, and Annie, at home. Politically Mr. Harding is a Republican, and has held several offices of trust; he is now a trustee of Washington and Jefferson College, and of Washington Female Seminary. He has been a member of the M. E. Church for forty years, and for a long period was superintendent of the Sunday school. During the war of the Rebellion Mr. Harding subscribed liberally of his means to assist in filling the quota for the army, and also put in a substitute. He is a representative self-made man, having commenced life quite a poor boy, and presents an illustration of what can be accomplished in business life by earnest application, industry and economy.

WILLIAM L. MILNE, a leading contractor, of Washington. The Milne family, of which this gentleman is a conspicuous member, have been residents of Scotland for many generations, and trace their lineage back to one Robert Milne, whose son, David, married and reared a family of children as follows: Jennie, Jessie, Robert, David, James and one whose name has not been ascertained. The early ancestors followed farming, but the sons of the family just enumerated were for the most part mariners.

David Milne, one of these sons of Robert Milne, began a "life on the ocean wave" at the early age of ten years, and devoted his entire life to his chosen vocation. He sailed around the world twice, and was a ship captain for over twenty years. In 1838 he was united in marriage with Annie, daughter of David Scott, who is supposed to have been a lineal descendant of the old Scott family. Five children were born to David Scott, viz.: Alice, Peter, James, David and Annie (the latter of whom was born in 1819 and died in 1872). David and Annie (Scott) Milne settled in Tayport, Fifeshire, Scotland, and three children were born to their union: James (now a resident of Chicago, where he was vice-president of the Board of Trade); Annie (living in Scotland, widow of Thomas Primrose), and William L.

William L. Milne was born March 10, 1853, in Tayport, Scotland, and received an elementary education in his native country. Following his father's example, the lad was eager to begin life for himself in his boyhood. His elder brother had emigrated to America, and sent back enthusiastic descriptions of the New World, which fired the youthful imagination of the then thirteen year old boy. He too must go to this wonderful country, and he too would win fame and fortune in the "Land of the free and the home of the brave." Doubtless his mind was filled (as in the case of most boys of his age) with roscate visions of the future, destined to be crushed by the stern realities of a hard life in a strange land, far from friends and home. But underneath the wild and impossible boyish dreams lay a firm resolve, a determination and strength of purpose, inherited from the sailor father, who had chosen his life in his childish years. The parents at length recognized the fact that the boy was not cherishing a mere whim or fancy, which would be crushed out by harsh experience, but a fixed resolution that must guide and determine his future life. So they consented to his journey, and one morning he bade farewell to the land of his birth—a little choking in his throat as the "good bye" words were spoken, one last look at the dear home faces, the bonny hills of Scotland—and was fairly launched on his new life with the parting words of his father ringing in his ears: "Take good care of yourself; keep clean and good company."

After landing in America the young aspirant went to Pittsburgh, Penn., where his brother was living, and bound himself out to his trade, under Col. D. B. Morris, colonel of the One Hundred and First P. V. I., and then came the test of his purposes, a trial to which many an older person would have yielded, and giving up their projects, have returned to the parental roof. Homesick and discouraged he certainly was, and so nearly vanquished by that discouraging feeling that within three weeks from the date of landing in the country of his dreams, the homesick boy would have given all he possessed (in reality the small sum of $10) to return to his dear old Scotland. He must go home. In desperation he started to walk to New York, and getting as far as East Liberty, Penn., he asked a man how much farther it was to New York. He thought if he could reach that city he might be able there to secure passage to Scotland on some ship in the capacity of cabin boy; but this man took him to a friendly Scotelman, who knew Col. Morris, and he advised the lad to return to his work. The little fellow rallied once more, and returning to his patron, devoted his days to the duties of his apprenticeship, and in order to complete his education attended night school. He had laid his plans with wisdom far beyond his years, determining to become a master mechanic, and unable to succeed by easier methods he concluded to bind himself out as a four years' apprentice. At that time he was the only "bound boy" in the city of Pittsburgh, but in that way he learned all the various parts of his trade, receiving from $5 to $8 per week during the latter part of his apprenticeship. At the end of four years he had saved $300 from his wages, and was, moreover, an expert workman, a master of his vocation. Just as he stood on the threshold of success at last, he fell sick with typhoid fever, and the $300, so hardly earned and carefully saved, was swept away by the expenses incurred in his illness. But health returned, and with the old heroic spirit of perseverance the young man in 1872 began business at Washington, Washington Co., Penn. From that date Fortune, who had so persistently frowned upon the struggling youth, began to shower upon him her richest smiles, seeming at last to realize that here was a spirit deserving of sympathy and encouragement. "It never rains but it pours," and no sooner was his financial success assured than other dreams became a reality. Love crowned the young man's life, and in 1873 he was married to Flora E., daughter of the Rev. J. S. Baldwin, of Amity, Amwell township, this county, whose father is yet living in Iowa, aged over ninety years. Mrs. Milne is a sister of W. C. Baldwin, of Washington, Penn. Three children have been born to the union of William L. and Flora E. Milne, viz.: Gertrude, Annie Elizabeth Scott and Florena May, all of whom are residing at the parental home. Mr. Milne has a beautiful home on North avenue and Beau street, and the dwelling is adorned by a handsome stucco ceiling of his own making. In 1882 he visited the "old country," and again in 1891, on which occasion he took his family with him, and made a visit to his father, who is yet living in Scotland, now in his seventy-sixth year. In politics Mr. Milne is a Republican, and he is a member of the East Washington council. In religious faith he is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church; socially he is a member of the Royal Arcanum. Among the worthy and notable citizens of Washington, none have better deserved success than has the subject of this sketch, as no one will question who knows the history of his early struggles.

JAMES M. McBURNEY, a rising young attorney of Washington, well versed in civil law which is his special practice, is a native of the borough, born March 7, 1858. His great grandfather, James McBurney, married Martha McGoffin, and they had six children, viz.: Mary (Mrs. John McAuley), Alexander, Joseph, James, Martha (Mrs. James Matthews) and Jane (Mrs. John Gillespie). Of these, James, who was a native of Washington county, married and had children, as follows: Ebenezer, James, Joseph, Eliza (Mrs. Hawkins), Martha (Mrs. Watson), Sarah (Mrs. Thompson, of Mercer county), and Catherine (Mrs. Gault, atso of Mercer county), all dead except Mrs. Thompson and Mrs. Gault. Their father was an officer in the Pennsylvania Militia, and died many years ago on his farm in South Strabane township, now owned by the Zediker family.

Ebenezer McBurney was born in 1814, in Mercer county, and was educated in the subscription schools of the locality of his birth. He learned and worked at the trade of carpenter in Washington, where he put up many buildings; later in life he was employed in moving buildings, at which he was considered, in his day, quite an expert. Some years before his death, which occurred September 12, 1889, when he was seventy-five years of age, he gave up working at his trade. He was a kind-hearted, generous man—too confiding, over liberal with his means, and, through giving bailment for others, lost a large part of his hard earned estate. He was a Democrat until the breaking out of the Civil war, when he went over to the Republican party. He was too old to go to the war, moreover had broken his leg by falling off a barn, but he served as provost marshal for his district; was also private detective for the county, under Ralph McConnell and J. F. Taylor, district attorneys, serving as such six years. At one time he was a member of the old Seceder Church, but having joined the I. O. O. F., he was dismissed from the church. He married Mary, daughter of Thomas Maxwell, who came from Wheeling, W. Va., to Washington where he (Maxwell) worked at his trade, that of hatter. Eleven children were born to this union: Helen, wife of Joseph Shaw, in Houstonville, Chartiers township; Samuel F., on a stock farm in Texas; John F., on the old homestead in South Strabane township; Alexander F., a dentist in Canonsburg, this county; James M., our subject; George M., a farmer in Belmont county, Ohio; Kate M., wife of George M. Haldeman, of Washington; two daughters, Mary and Margaret, who died at the age of sixteen and twenty one respectively; and two that died in infancy. The parents are both deceased, the mother having passed away six months before the father.

James M. McBurney received his primary education at the schools of the neighborhood, and then (1875) entered the preparatory department of Washington and Jefferson College, graduating in 1881 in the classical course. After leaving college he taught one year as principal, in McKeesport Academy, being associated with Rev. Robert M. Russell, who now has charge of a U. P. Church in Pittsburgh, East End. Returning to Washington, Mr. McBurney commenced the study of law with Hon. H. J. Vankirk, finishing under John W. Donnan, and was admitted to the bar of Washington county, April 27, 1885, since when he has been in the continuous practice of his profession in the borough. In 1889 Mr. McBurney was united in marriage with Miss Annie S., daughter of J. B. Reekers, of Washington, and one child, Louise R., has come to cheer their home. Our subject has been a member of the U. P. Church since 1876, is a deacon in the same, and a teacher in the Sabbath school. He is a Republican, but does not allow politics to interfere with his business, which commands all his time, and receives his diligent attention.

WILLIAM MARTIN, president of the First National Bank of Canonsburg, is the only living representative of his branch of the Martin family in Washington county; he is a native of the same, born December 18, 1821, on a farm in North Strabane township. He is a son of Samuel and Mary (McNary) Martin, the former of whom was a son of James Martin, a native of Scotland, who immigrated to this country at a very early period, settling in York county, Penn.; the latter a daughter of David McNary, of Cross Creek township, Washington county, same State.

Samuel Martin, great grandfather of our subject, emigrated from Scotland with his son James, and was the first of the family to come to York county, where he followed farming and died. He had one daughter, and three sons—Andrew, Peter and James—of whom Peter and James came to Washington county in 1804. James had married Margaret McNary, in York county, and the children born to them there were Samuel, Esther (Mrs. Joseph McNary), Isabella (Mrs. John C. Hanna), Margaret (Mrs. David Templeton), all now deceased. The father of this family was born in 1762 and died in 1853, aged ninety years, the mother passing away when the subject of this sketch was a little boy.

Samuel Martin, father of William, was born in 1790, in York county, Penn., and received his education at the subscription schools of his locality during a few weeks in winter time, the remainder of the year being devoted to learning the practical lessons of agricultural pursuits. On the death of his father he came into possession of the homestead in North Strabane township, Washington county, and it may be here stated that the land was originally patented by the Government to one James McCready, from whom it was afterward purchased by the Martin family. It was found on the old homestead farm in 1887, and nine wells have been sunk on it. All were producers; two when the oil gave out were sunk deeper and made gas wells; these were piped to Pittsburgh by Jones & Laughlin, and are still producers. After his marriage with Mary McNary, in 1812, Samuel Martin made a final settlement on the old farm in North Strabane township, carrying on general farming till the time of his retirement to Canonsburg, where he died in 1878, aged eighty-eight years. His wife, a native of Washington county, Penn., died one year later, at the age of eighty-nine years. They were active members of the Chartiers United Presbyterian Church. Their family consisted of ten children: Esther (now the widow of B. M. Crouch, of Mansfield, Ohio), Margaret (deceased wife of Judge McCarroll, of Washington county, Penn.), Sarah (widow of Robert Rowen, residing near Venice, Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn.), James (who removed many years ago to the vicinity of Mansfield, Ohio), John and David (who died when small children), William (subject), Isabelle (Mrs. Ross Taggart, of Beaver county, Penn.), Isaac (a farmer near Indianola, Iowa) and Eliza Jane (residing at the old home in the edge of North Strabane township, this county).

William Martin, the subject proper of this memoir, was reared on the farm where he was born, and received his rudimentary education at the primitive subscription schools of the neighborhood, afterward attending Jefferson College, Canonsburg, several years, and then returned to the farm which he has since conducted with well-earned success. He taught school one term in the county. On April 24, 1850, Mr. Martin married Mary A. Houston, of Lowellville, Ohio, daughter of Hon. David Houston, who for several years served as State senator on the Democratic ticket. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have two children: David Houston, who graduated from Wilmington College, and is now practicing law in Pittsburgh, and Samuel Albert, a Presbyterian minister, now professor of theology at Lincoln University, in Chester county, Penn. In 1873 Mr. Martin moved into the borough of Canonsburg to educate his children, and has since made his home here, in the West Ward. He and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church, in which he has been an elder forty years. Politically he has been an influential Republican since the organization of the party, but is no partisan. He has served as school director for some time. Mr. Martin is well preserved for his years, and is of an active, social and hospitable disposition.

GEORGE SCOTT HART was born in the City of Pittsburgh, Penn., on the 29th of July, 1824. He was the son of John and Susanab (Barr) Hart, both of whom were descended from Scotch Irish ancestry. When the subject of this notice was but four years old, the family removed to Burgettstown, Washington Co., Penn., and four years later settled at Washington, Penn. In the latter town George grew to manhood, and in it spent the remainder of his life. He received his primary education in the private schools then in existence, and in 1838 he entered the Washington College, in the same town, as a student, from which institution he was graduated in the class of 1842, when he had scarcely entered his nineteenth year. Several of his classmates rose to places of high distinction. Among them were Caleb Baldwin, who became Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Iowa; J. Kennedy Ewing, afterwards President Judge of the Fourteenth Judicial District of Pennsylvania; Rev. Franklin Moore, an eminent as well as eloquent minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

After leaving college the subject of this notice was engaged in teaching for two years, one as a private tutor in Accomac county, Va., and one in the public school at Prosperity, in Washington county, Penn. Afterward he entered the office of John L. Gow, Esq., a prominent lawyer of Washington, Penn., as a law student, and in August, 1846, after due examination, he was admitted as a member of the Bar of Washington county. The same year he was appointed Deputy Attorney General, to fill a vacancy. When that office afterward became elective, he was nominated for the place by the Democratic Convention, and at the ensuing election obtained a majority of the votes cast, and was commissioned for the full term of three years. During his term of office several very important criminal trials took place, in all of which it was demonstrated that he was an able and fearless prosecutor.

In May, 1853, he acquired an interest in the Washington Examiner, a weekly newspaper, and for three years he was its principal editor. Tiring of journalism, he disposed of his interest in the newspaper in 1856, after the close of the Presidential campaign, and thenceforward until his fatal illness his time and energies were devoted to his chosen profession. In 1876, without opposition, he was nominated for the office of President Judge of the Twenty-seventh Judicial District of Pennsylvania, by the Democratic Convention, and the Convention's action was ratified by the voters of the District at the general election held in November of that year. He was duly commissioned, and served for a term of ten years from the first Monday of January, 1877. Judge Hart also served, previous to his elevation to the Bench, as a member of the School Board of Washington for some twelve years, more than ten of which he acted as Secretary.

After the death of his father, in 1859, Mr. Hart assumed the headship of the family, caring, and abundantly providing, for his mother during her declining years. By his unselfish exertions and personal sacrifices, the old home was saved for his brothers and sisters, and they remained together until circumstances brought about changes in the family circle. He was the family counsellor, mentor and friend, and his chief aim through life was to make them happy.

Such is a brief sketch of the life of a good man. He died at his home, near Washington, on the 15th of May, 1888, surrounded by grief-stricken relatives and several of his sorrowful neighbors. Two days after his body was laid away by the side of kindred dust in the Washington Cemetery, to await the resurrection of the just.

THOMAS McKENNAN, M. D., a well known prominent and successful physician of Washington county, was born May 21, 1825, in the house where he at present resides in the borough of Washington.

In 1800 the first of the family came to Washington county in the person of Col. William McKennan, a merchant, who was born in 1758 at New Castle, Del., a son of Rev. William McKennan, a prominent Presbyterian minister, who had a church for fifty years in Wilmington, Del.; he came to America about the year 1730, and died in Delaware, where he had settled. Col. McKennan at a very early date came from Delaware to West Virginia, to what is now Wellsburg, later moving to Washington. He was present at the battle of Brandywine, in 1777, where he received a wound, from the effects of which he died, and he spent the memorable winter at Valley Forge. He married Elizabeth, a daughter of John Thompson, a prominent citizen of Brandywine Hundred, in Delaware, and a niece of Thomas McKean, a member of the first Congress from Delaware, who later came to Pennsylvania, of which State he became governor; he was one of the Signers of the "Declaration of Independence." Col. William McKennan and his family moved to Charlestown, Va. (now W. Va.), from there to West Middletown, this county, and finally, in 1801, to the borough of Washington, where he died in January, 1810, his widow in 1830, at the age of seventy-eight years. The children born to them were seven in number, as follows: William, John, Thomas McK. T., David, Ann, Rev. James W., and one that died in infancy, unnamed.

Hon. Thomas McK. T. McKennan, the third son of Col. William McKennan, was born in 1794, in Newcastle county, Del., and received his primary education in the private schools at Washington. When sixteen years old he graduated from Washington College, in the second class, there being three members in that class. Immediately thereafter he began the study of law under Parker Campbell, an attorney of Washington borough, and November 7, 1814, at the age of twenty-one, was admitted to the bar, and he at once commenced to build up his remarkable career. The year after his admission he succeeded Walter Forward as deputy attorney general of the county, serving in that capacity until 1817; and his rise at the bar was rapid and honorable, the front in his profession being maintained throughout his life. The degree of LL. D. was conferred on him by Jefferson College. In 1831 Mr. McKennan became a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, remaining in Congress four terms, and declining re-election on account of his urgent professional work at home. In 1842, however, a vacancy occurring in the House through the demise of Joseph Lawrence, Mr. McKennan yielded to the solicitations of his party, and the public demand, and served the balance of the term. He was chairman of the committee of the whole for two months, in the first session of that year, and during his incumbency rendered powerful aid to the more important industries of the country. In 1840 he was chosen a Presidential elector, and in 1848 he was made president of the Pennsylvania Electoral College. In 1850 he was called by President Fillmore to the position of Secretary of the Interior; but for various reasons he had no liking for the office, and a few weeks after his appointment he resigned and returned to his more genial home. Soon after this he became president of the Hempfield Railroad Company, and while attending to its affairs died July 9, 1852, at Reading, Penn.

Mr. McKennan had entered Washington College at a very early age, and passed through the entire curriculum. In February, 1813, he was appointed tutor of ancient languages, in which capacity he served eighteen months; in April, 1818, he was chosen a member of the college corporation, continuing as such up to the day of his death, a period of thirty-four years. For several years he held the position of adjunct professor of languages. The life of Mr. McKennan was one of the purest probity, and among the galaxy of distinguished him the eyes of many in different places. Among other invitations received by him was a call to the presidency of Centre College, at Danville, Ky., and the trustees of Dickinson College also desired him to fill a similar position. As pastor of the church in Washington he remained until 1822, when he resigned this charge, having accepted the presidency of Jefferson College, at Canonsburg.

At this period an incident occurred—an incident, perhaps, unprecedented in college history. It was the night before the college commencement day, and at a late hour, that the trustees of Jefferson College elected Dr. Brown to fill the presidential chair which had shortly before become vacant. For various reasons it was necessary that the president-elect should immediately enter upon the duties of his office. So, early the next morning, while he was yet in bed, a committee waited upon him, and, having urged him to accept the position, managed to have him brought, before breakfast, to Canonsburg, where he took the oath of office, and at 9 o'clock presided over the commencement exercises, conferred the degrees upon the graduates, and then delivered his Baccalaureate address. Thus was the last Wednesday of September, 1822, a memorable day in Canonsburg, marking as it does, the crisis and dawn of the true glory of Jefferson College. To the students and friends of this college the event was one of great joy, and was hailed as an omen of prosperity. It was an event from which untold blessings and benefits have descended, not only upon the college and its hundreds of students, but upon thousands of the human race to whom through them Dr. Brown became, under God, by his pre eminent capacities for government and instruction, and by his piety and prayers, a benefactor of the highest order to which humanity can attain.

Under the administration of Dr. Brown, a period of twenty-three years, the college advanced rapidly in its glorious career. Never was there, perhaps, a more popular or a more successful president. He was peculiarly gifted with qualities of head and heart that secured the respect and affection of the students, both while under his care and in after life. To him the pious students were warmly attached, and by the wildest and most reckless he was respected and venerated. In him special eccentricities and the reaction of mirth and depression were joined with a vigorous intellect, clear judgment, quick discernment, good sense, ardent piety and untiring energy. In him opposites blended most remarkably. His nature, indeed, was marked by all those characteristics which make a great leader and commander. Being of a nervous temperament, and quick in thought and action, his impetuosity sometimes led him into mistakes, but he always managed to get everything right again without losing the respect of others or his own authority. He certainly was the most remarkable man, in his day, for the possession of qualities apparently the most compatible, but strangely and happily balancing each other. Though an eccentric man, never was eccentricity more completely governed by good sense and sound judgment. His very personal and mental peculiarities contributed greatly to his usefulness, and the success of the college over which he so long and efficiently presided. While at times he was impulsive and variable in temper, he never lost his dignity, and the reigns of government never hung loosely in his hands. But whatever were his peculiarities and eccentricities, he was a man of God, whose personal piety was of the highest order. The religion of Christ was his meat and drink, in which he found all his springs of hope and power, light and rest. No matter from what book he was giving instruction, the students felt that they were sitting under a religious teacher. As evidence of this, of the 770 students who were graduated under him, 350 became ministers of the Gospel. Frequently, during his presidency, there were great revivals of religion, which were attributed, under God, to his faithful, earnest preaching, and to his conversations and prayers with the students in their rooms. He was pre eminently a man of prayer. Often would the students hear him in the arbor of his garden, in the summer nights, when he thought all human ears were closed, praying for hours, beginning his entreaties with sighs and tears, and ending his devotions with the song of triumph. The distinguishing trait in his Christian life was that it was a life of communion with God. Of him it might truly be said, "He prayed without ceasing." To the members of the family his wife would often say, "Mr. Brown spent the whole night in prayer." This was the secret of the wonderful outpouring of God's Spirit again and again upon the college. People are astonished at the multitudes of ministers and missionaries who have gone forth from Jefferson College. Here is the secret. There was a wrestling Jacob in the presidential chair who said to the God of Israel, "I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me." The fact that he was a man who was constantly praying held the students in awe, and threw around him a sacred atmosphere, and to his prayers is to be attributed much of his usefulness when alive, and his permanent influence when dead.

Another prominent feature in the character of Dr. Brown was his unwavering and profound conviction of the truths of the Bible. So confident was he that the Bible would take care of itself that he feared not the newest and most popular forms of infidelity, nor had he any apprehensions lest the camp of Israel would be disturbed by the discovery of ancient manuscripts and historical records. With him for their teacher, the students, no matter what had been their early training, learned to respect the Gospel without knowing how opposition was disarmed and infidelity silenced. In the history of the Jefferson College class of 1830, written thirty years after the members were graduated, Rev. Dr. J. J. Marks, the author, thus refers to their president, Dr. Brown:

In him we all recognized the Christian, but still a man of like passions with ourselves; honest, impulsive and variable in temper, all the hues of his character, and the many sides of his mind were fully displayed. We felt that here was a man, who, though far in advance of us, was ready to help us, for our infirmities were his, and we saw the scars of yet unhealed wounds of battle, and we learned in a thousand ways that he never forgot the weaknesses of youth, nor the conflicts of manhood.

In manner he was eminently courtly and urbane, with that ease and tact which is only gained by associating with the world, and conversing with refined and cultivated minds. He walked among men after the manner of Socrates, talking with all, learning from all, showing sympathy with the poorest, listening with the rapt interest of a boy to the stories of their adventures and journeys. He had an epicurean pleasure in rare characters, for they amused him and gratified his taste for the humorous and the graphic. His own conversational talent was of the highest order, humorous, sprightly and descriptive, thus making his words instructive and fascinating. In his conversation he threw open the treasures of years, gathered from reading, observation and converse with the great and good. I have heard many talkers, but none that excelled Dr. Brown, none that equaled him in depth of tone and moral value of conversation. His face was a wonderful spectacle and a deep study. We have watched him in the class room and in the chapel for hours with unwearying interest, for the whole world seemed to be in his face. We not only listened to him, but we studied him. We had reason to be grateful for the nice adjustment of his religious character and teachings. Deeply anxious for our spiritual welfare, he led us to the Savior whom he loved. Surely the students who received from him the religious impressions which ripened into penitence and faith, must look back to those years with an interest which can never fade. The remembrance of his wisdom and integrity is among the most precious heritages of the soul.

For several years after he moved to Canonsburg he preached alternate Sabbaths with Dr. McMillan in the Chartiers Church, of which the latter minister was the pastor, but in 1880 a congregation was organized in the town in connection with the college, which enjoyed his pastoral and pulpit labors until the year 1845 when, on account of feeble health, he resigned the presidency of Jefferson College.

Of the power and influence of Dr. Brown many pages might be written, but want of space limits us in writing this sketch. While he was president of Jefferson College, an additional building was erected, and through his efforts most of the necessary funds for this purpose were raised. In respect to his whole career as president of Jefferson College, it can be truly said that it was an auspicious day for that institution when he was chosen to stand at its head. The people of Washington were not insensible to the loss they had sustained by the removal of Dr. Brown to Canonsburg. Accordingly, about six years after he had left Washington, he received a united call from the congregation and college to return to his former position there as pastor and president. But though greatly attached to the church which he had served for seventeen years, and though the college which had sprung into existence under his hand made a strong appeal to his sympathies, he finally decided to remain at Canonsburg, much to the gratification of the people of that place, and all the friends of Jefferson College. For a number of years after his retirement from the college and church at Canonsburg, he embraced every favorable opportunity of preaching the Gospel to his fellow-men, in which work he took great delight. Notwithstanding his growing infirmities he continued to preach until near the close of his life. On July 29, 1853, he died at the age of seventy-seven years. The funeral services were held at Canonsburg, but the body was laid to rest beside his loved ones in Washington. In both towns there was every demonstration of respect and sorrow. Stores were closed and many a face was wet with tears. In person Dr. Brown was tall and slender, with a thin and narrow face which usually bore a bright and animated expression. His movements were rapid, and his manner of walking, and the way he handled his cane would attract the attention of a stranger. His mind was of a high order, and was especially adapted to abstract metaphysical inquiries. He had a keen sense of the ludicrous, and his sayings at times were full of wit. His heart was generous and open, and with a spirit of benevolence his delight was in making others happy, and in giving liberally of his means to the poor and needy. In social circles he was the master spirit, being gifted with fine conversational powers and having in store a large fund of knowledge. As a minister he was one of the most effective preachers in the country. As a Christian he was a man of liberal views and feelings. Though a Presbyterian in principle and practice, his Christian sympathies were as wide as the world. His moral courage was great, possessing as he did a spirit which would not have faltered at the sight of Nebuchadnezzar's furnace, and yet his faith in religion was often like that of a little child. As a scholar he ranked among the first, and was honored with the degrees of Doctor of Divinity and Doctor of Laws.

Before closing, a few words must be added regarding his domestic relations; he was twice married—first in 1804 to Miss Mary Blaine, of Cumberland county, Penn., who died in 1818, leaving two children; one of them was the Rev. Dr. Alexander Blaine Brown, who two years after his father's resignation succeeded him as president of Jefferson College. The other was Elizabeth, the estimable and talented wife of Rev. D. H. Riddle, D. D., who also became president of the same institution. In 1825 Dr. Brown was married to Mary W. Ferguson, widow of Rev. Mr. Backus Wilbur. She died in 1838, leaving one daughter, Susan Mary, the wife of Mr. Henry M. Alexander, a prominent lawyer in New York City, one of the well-known Princeton family of Alexanders, and son of the first professor in the Princeton Theological Seminary. This daughter inherits her father's talents and many excellent traits. She is an earnest worker in the church, devotes much time in laboring for the good of others, and gives freely of her means to charitable objects.

REV. ALEXANDER BLAINE BROWN, D. D. This eminent Presbyterian minister and educator is, alike by birthright and character, entitled to a prominent place in this volume.

He was the only son of Rev. Matthew Brown, D. D., LL. D., and was born in Washington, Penn., August 1, 1808. His mother's maiden name was Mary Blaine, daughter of Alexander Blaine, of Cumberland county, Penn., who was commissary-general of Pennsylvania in the time of the Revolution, and was distinguished for his self-sacrificing patriotism. In the son, Alexander B. Brown, were blended the mental talents and mental vigor of his father, and the mild, gentle disposition of his mother. In 1822 his father having been elected president of Jefferson College at Canonsburg, Penn., young Alexander became a student of that institution, from which he was graduated in 1825, at the age of seventeen years. While at college he represented the Philo-Literary Society as their champion in oratory at one of the annual contests. Having taught for some time in classical schools in Newark, Del., and Princeton, N. J., he entered, in 1828, the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Penn., and was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Ohio, October 5, 1831. After two years of ministerial work in Virginia, where he declined several offers to settle as a pastor, he returned to his native State in 1833, and took charge of the Birmingham Church, now known as the First Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, South Side. Here he was successful in securing a commodious house of worship. A year later he became pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Niles, Mich., when he soon was recognized throughout the State as one who had an education and mind of a high order. In May, 1839, he was called to the Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth, Ohio, where he labored with great success until April, 1841, when, having accepted a professorship in Jefferson College, he came to Canonsburg. At the same time he took charge of the congregation of Centre Church, a few miles east of the town. To this congregation he ministered until 1845, when he was called to the pastorate of Chartiers Church, which is about one mile south of Canonsburg.

Rev. Dr. Robert J. Breckinridge, who had succeeded Dr. Matthew Brown as president, at the end of two years resigned his office. It became a grave question with the trustees as to who should be chosen to fill the place of that brilliant man. Several prominent names were suggested, but the trustees, appreciating the talents and worth of their modest professor, Alexander B. Brown, unanimously elected him president of the college. When informed of his election, he was greatly surprised, and most earnestly remonstrated against it, as he entirely distrusted his own qualifications. But his love for the institution would not permit him to decline the trust so strongly pressed upon him, and he accepted the position. It was the desire of the trustees that he should be inaugurated the same evening while they were present, which gave him but an hour or two to prepare for the occasion. To a friend he said that when he was being escorted to the college, he felt like one going to the gallows rather than to a scene of triumph. The oath of office having been administered, he made an address which for eloquence and pathos was unequalled, during which there was scarcely a dry eye in the audience.

Many of the friends of Dr. A. B. Brown, knowing the sensitive delicacy of his disposition, and his habit of shrinking from publicity, feared that his fine qualifications as a professor would fall short of the more heroic and rugged demands of the presidency. But their mistake was most happily demonstrated in the actual development under pressure of duty, which soon showed him to be a model governor, as well as an instructor. His power over the students was wonderful. His mingled suavity and firmness, together with their unbounded confidence in him, as one who sought only their highest good, disposed them to heed his wishes; and if at any time he suddenly appeared among them in the midst of their youthful noise and riot, it was like the voice of Neptune amid the raging waves. His administration was a most remarkable one, during which the prosperity of the college continued to rapidly increase. The nine years of his presidency were peculiarly marked with peaceful relations in the college, and with its advancing reputation and usefulness. Four hundred and fifty-three diplomas bear his presidential signature, making an annual average of fifty graduates. At the time of his resignation the whole number of students was 230. He was also successful in raising an endowment fund of $60,000, which, in those days, before millionaires were known, was of itself a herculean task. His zeal in the cause of education caused him to be generous to a fault. When from year to year he witnessed the embarrassed financial condition of the college, he declined to draw his own salary in order that the other members of the faculty should be promptly paid, and in this way he freely gave $6,000 to the institution. His fine reputation, like that of his venerated father, has gone forth with the sons of Jefferson College into every part of our land, and into distant nations across the seas. It will ever widen, as the alumni of Washington and Jefferson College, in the coming generations, shall prove themselves worthy of the heritage of glory descended through both the old institutions into their consolidation and unity of achievement.

But honorable as was the career of Dr. A. B. Brown, as an educator, he ever felt himself consecrated to the Gospel ministry, and in this service he found his chief joy. And he was a model minister in the judgment alike of his brethren and the people. Referring to him in an address before an Alumni Association in Pittsburgh, Rev. Dr. D. A. Cunningham said: "He who holds the stars in His right hand, held no brighter one than Rev. A. B. Brown, D. D. We sat under his teaching with great delight, and were more than charmed with his eloquence in the pulpit. The flash of his keen eye, the tremulous tones of that sweet voice, and the heavenly light which beamed from his countenance as he led us to the Cross of Christ, can never be forgotten." Of him, the Hon. Thomas K. Ewing, a prominent judge in Pittsburgh, said: "He was the finest teacher and the most eloquent minister I ever knew." Unambitious of prominence, even to a fault, and habitually refusing audience to the approaches of most inviting pastorates seeking his services, he ever preferred the work of the Gospel without the stress of competition for human praise. The common people heard him gladly, while the most intelligent and fastidious received his messages with delight. His sermons were a happy combination of evangelistic truth, faultless taste, affectionate tenderness, and persuasive—often thrilling—eloquence. His public lectures and addresses were also widely sought and highly appreciated. It was a treat to listen to his recitations of poetry, especially of his favorite Cowper, and his quotations from the grander portions of inspiration.

Soon after Dr. Brown was inaugurated president of the college, it was necessary for him to sever his relations with the Chartiers Church, in order that he might become pastor of the Canonsburg congregation which worshipped with the students in the chapel. This position he retained, to the great joy of the congregation, until he resigned the presidency. In 1856 the trustees reluctantly yielded to his oft repeated request to be relieved from the duties which were too arduous for his declining health, and accepted his resignation. He then retired to his country residence, "Mount Blaine," and being within the bounds of Centre Church, his former charge, he was induced to become its pastor. This relationship he held until the close of 1862, when failing health forced him to retire from active labors. Though afflicted with a painful disease, he patiently bore his sufferings until the eighth day of September, 1863, when God took him to the land of health. He was buried in the Centre Church graveyard, where a grateful and appreciative people erected a handsome monument to his memory. His death at the age of fifty five left a void deeply felt and not easily filled. Religion and learning alike will long cherish his memory, and blend their tears over his grave.

Only a little space is yet claimed for the domestic and social relations of this "beloved disciple." He was married December 3, 1833, to Miss Elizabeth Finley Nevin, daughter of Mr. John Nevin, of Cumberland county, Penn., and sister of Rev. Dr. John W. Nevin, at one time the distinguished and scholarly professor of the Allegheny Theological Seminary, and afterward the successful president of Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Penn. This estimable lady was well qualified to assume the high and responsible duties which her husband's position placed upon her, and her public services were crowned with blessings and honor, and by her pure and earnest life, her sweet and noble character, her unselfish nature, kind words and charitable deeds she will long be remembered as a bright example, worthy of imitation. Now, in the thirtieth year of her widowhood, she still lingers in venerable age to bless her children, while she gives witness of the matured experience of the Lord's faithfulness. Of the children, five sons and one daughter are now living. Two of the sons, having chosen the profession of their grandfather and father, are now prominent Presbyterian ministers.

[In the above sketch, which is from the pen of Rev. James I. Brownson, D. D., LL. D., free use has been made of all available material, especially of a memorial address by the late Rev. Aaron Williams, D. D., an associate in the college faculty, and an intimate friend of Dr. A. B. Brown.

Rev. W. F. Brown, D. D., Canonsburg, Penn. In publishing a brief record of the life of Rev. Dr. W. F. Brown, we can furnish no better sketch than that written and read by Hon. John A. McIlvaine, Judge of the Washington County Court, at a college class reunion in 1890.

Born under the shadow of Jefferson College, of which both his father and grandfather were popular and beloved presidents, our classmate naturally began his classical course within its walls. He was enrolled a Senior "prep" in 1859, but at the end of his Freshman year he remained at home in order that his brother might enlist as a soldier. The next year, 1862, he entered our class as a Sophomore. Although descending from a long line of learned and pious ancestors, which drew toward him the respect of the class even before his acquaintance was fully made, his own innate qualities soon caused him to be very popular. While having reason to be proud of his parentage, he was extremely modest, and in his intercourse with his fellow students he never by word or deed referred to the honorable connection with the college which his birth gave him. From all public performances he shrank, only assuming a prominent position when in the line of duty. At college he showed a preference for the classics and was especially fond of Latin, which accounts for the high compliment passed upon his Latin exegesis when he was licensed to preach. Rev. Dr. George Marshall, who was then chairman of the examining committee, pronounced it the best that had been presented in the Presbytery during the thirty years he had been a member. But while studying the ancient languages he spent much time with the goddess of music, and the clear, melodious tones of his fine tenor voice were a source of delight to us all. Possessing this natural gift to a high degree, after his graduation he frequently aided his five brothers in giving vocal and instrumental concerts, which were highly appreciated by all who heard them, and which were given for the benefit of churches and educational institutions. Of the many patriotic songs he sang while at college there was one entitled "Wake Nicodemus," which he selected as the subject of his commencement oration. He was a member of the Philo Society, but never joined a secret fraternity, although often importuned so to do. In this matter he religiously adhered to and followed the request of his father, notwithstanding that at one time it left him the only student in the college who did not belong to a fraternity.

Three years from the time he left college he graduated at the Allegheny Theological Seminary, and was licensed as a Presbyterian minister to preach the Gospel. For several months he supplied the Fairview Church, and also the congregation then worshipping in the College Chapel. In 1870 the Canonsburg congregation desired his whole time, and he became the successor of Rev. Dr. Jonathan Edwards, who was its pastor while he was president of the college. Three other calls were at the same time offered to Brown; but, being strongly urged by the congregation he accepted the call to the "College Church" of which both his grandfather and father had for many years been pastors. Owing to the transfer of the college classes to Washington, the students' side of the chapel was left vacant, but in a short time the congregation so increased under his ministrations that the hall on each Sabbath day was filled. While pastor of this church he taught in the Linnean Academy, and was afterward professor of Latin in Jefferson Academy for three years. While preaching and teaching here he secured, through the alumni of Jefferson College, a donation of $2,100 for their former beloved Greek professor, Dr. William Smith. In this labor of love he wrote and sent out some 1,700 letters.

After six years of labor in Canonsburg, he received a call to the Presbyterian Church in Charleston, W. Va., and also a call to the First Presbyterian Church of Newark, Ohio. The latter he accepted, and, being duly installed there, he preached for the period of two years, when, on account of throat trouble, he resigned, and upon the advice of his physician he did not preach for one year. About the same time his wife's health demanded a change of climate, and for a number of years they spent their winters in the South, where he preached in some of the leading churches, his services always being in demand. For quite awhile, when in New Orleans, he supplied with great acceptance the First Presbyterian Church during the absence of their distinguished pastor, Rev. Dr. Palmer. In 1884, Rev. William Ewing, Ph. D., having resigned, our classmate was chosen principal of Jefferson Academy, at Canonsburg, which position he ably filled for four years, when he was compelled to abandon this work on account of the severe and protracted illness of his wife. As a teacher he was thorough and faithful, which the high rank taken afterward by his pupils in colleges and seminaries fully attest. His government in the academy was that of love, and by his gentlemanly and polished manners as well as by the quality of the work done, he won the respect and affection of his scholars. Under his administration the institution flourished, and he proved himself to be a most successful teacher. As a preacher, this brother is both able and eloquent. His sermons evidence deep thought and originality. He is especially strong in his descriptive powers. He has a fine presence and a good voice, and never fails to hold the attention of his audience. A year ago, 1889, he received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Franklin and Marshall College, at Lancaster, Penn., and also from the University of Western Pennsylvania, in recognition of his ability as a preacher and a teacher. Referring to this degree, a Pittsburgh paper says: "Upon no more worthy man has the highest honors of these time-honored institutions been conferred." But while our classmate has become prominent, he has not been able to respond to the many calls to come up higher. Within the past few years he has had more than one invitation to prominent churches and wider fields of labor and influence, but sickness in his family prevented him from accepting these positions. As intimated, Mrs. Brown has been a great sufferer for years, and in relieving her pains he has manifested a spirit similar to Wendell Phillips, who, when urged to accept the most tempting offers, replied that neither money nor glory could induce him to deprive his suffering wife of whatever assistance and comfort he could bestow. If, as one of our brightest stars, Dr. Brown's light has been for a time partly hid from the world, it has shone in his ministerial and educational work at home, and has also brightened the dark rooms of sickness in many houses, and has cheered the sad heart of one whose deepest sorrow has been that her feeble health and severe pains have caused clouds to surround the brilliancy of her devoted husband. His wife was Miss Mary Houston, one of Canonsburg's brightest and most attractive young ladies, who during her years of sickness has given sunshine and comfort to many by her deeds and words of charity and love.

During the years 1890 and 1891 Dr. and Mrs. Brown made an extensive tour through Europe, chiefly for the benefit of the latter's health. While visiting the principal foreign countries and cities they spent much time in Italy, lingering for many months in Rome, which gave the Doctor an opportunity of studying the interesting and historical objects of the Eternal City. Shortly after returning home he was frequently called upon to speak of his travels in public, and soon his name and fame spread over the lecture field, he having added to his scholastic learning the polish and distingue of the Continental tourist. His lectures are said to be highly literary, entertaining and instructive, and in this field he has won the reputation of being an original, magnetic and eloquent speaker.

But, successful as he might be in the lecture field, in which his eloquence, grace and wit could be displayed to great advantage, he still clings to the work of preaching and teaching, the professions he chose when he entered upon the active duties of life. He is, therefore, to be found every Sabbath in the pulpit, and during the week he gives instruction in Jefferson Academy, in which institution his services have again been called into requisition.

REV. ALEXANDER BLAINE BROWN, JR. As in the case of his brother (whose sketch is given above), Rev. A. B. Brown, Jr., was born amid the classic scenes of Jefferson College, at Canonsburg, Penn., at the time when his father was the president of this renowned institution. In early life he manifested a decided taste for literary pursuits, and having adopted one of the mottoes of Jefferson College, "Inter silvas Academi querere verum" ("Among the groves of the Academy seek truth"), he spent a number of years at Jefferson Academy, Jefferson College having been removed from Canonsburg, he went to Lancaster, Penn., and entered the junior class of Franklin and Marshall College, of which his uncle, Rev. John W. Nevin, D. D., LL. D., was for many years the honored and successful president. Having completed his collegiate course at Lancaster, he was elected professor of Latin in Jefferson Academy, in which institution he taught for a year, when he entered the Western Theological Seminary, at Allegheny City, Penn., from which he was graduated in 1878. The following year he was unanimously called to the pastorate of the Centre Presbyterian Church, five miles east of Canonsburg, a church of which his father had also been pastor, and to which he ministered during the latter part of his life, and in the bounds of which he died. This call young Mr. Brown accepted, and December 15, 1879, he was ordained and installed the pastor of a people among whom he had grown up, and of a church which he had attended and with which he united in his earlier years. In this field he has labored faithfully for thirteen years, during which time his ministry has been greatly blessed, and his services highly appreciated by a people by whom he has always been dearly beloved. As a preacher Rev. Mr. Brown is earnest, impressive, instructive and eloquent. His sermons give evidence that he is a man of decided talents and a diligent student, who always brings beaten oil into the sanctuary. His reading of the Scriptures and hymns has won for him the reputation of being one of the best readers in the Presbytery. As a pastor he is faithful, devoted and sympathetic, whose bright, genial ways and pure, noble character cause him to be highly esteemed and greatly beloved by all who know him. A few days since (March 13, 1893), he received a unanimous call to the pastorate of the Fairview Presbyterian Church, which is situated a few miles south of Centre. So great was the desire and so urgent the request of the Fairview people to have him become their pastor that he felt it his duty to transfer his labors to this neighboring field, in which he has received a most cordial welcome.

BROWN BROTHERS. In addition to the two eloquent ministers mentioned above, there were four other sons in the family of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. A. B. Brown. While all of these sons enjoyed an enviable reputation, on account of their educational qualities and moral worth, they possessed extraordinary musical talents which gave them great celebrity. Without making it a specialty, these six brothers excelled in music, each one being a fine singer, and also a skillful performer on some musical instrument. They appeared in public for the first time when they exerted themselves to raise funds to carry on the suit for the recovery of Jefferson College, which had been consolidated with Washington College. By this act Jefferson College was removed from Canonsburg to the town of Washington, which caused a litigation that lasted for several years. Those who had contributed funds to Jefferson College, feeling that the trustees had violated their trust in transferring the College from its original location, brought suit for the recovery of the institution. Suit having been entered, the case was tried in both the State and the United States Supreme Courts, and this involved considerable expense. To help defray this the Brown Brothers, whose grandfather and father had contributed thousands of dollars, and devoted the greater part of their lives to the institution, offered their services as musicians. The proposition received a hearty response, and many churches and halls were offered free to these brothers, who took rank at once as distinguished vocalists and instrumentalists. Thus by their musical entertainments they succeeded in liquidating almost the entire cost of the suit, a part of the amount having previously been raised by subscription. In this way they became known as the "Brown Brothers." Up to that period, this was the first instance on record where the brothers of one family had given either a vocal or an instrumental concert. Referring to them as "A Band of Brothers," the Washington (Penn.) Advance said: "There are a few cases where the male and female members of one family appear as professional musicians, but we doubt very much if such an instance as this furnished by the Brown Brothers is to be found in our own or other countries."

Having, while invoking the aid of the muses in behalf of Jefferson College, acquired the reputation of being musicians of a high order, the Brown Brothers were frequently requested to give concerts for the benefit of churches, Sabbath-schools, educational institutions and various objects to which they generously devoted the proceeds of their entertainments. Frequently they appeared four or five times in one place, and on each occasion drew a large audience. The concerts of these brothers were characterized by a great variety of songs which were rendered with remarkably fine expression, clear and distinct articulation, intermingled in a most pleasing manner with many different kinds of instruments. From a Pittsburgh paper we give the following extract: "When either one or all of the brothers begin to sing, the audience is subdued into the most tender mood by the exquisite rendering of their pathetic songs, or breaks out into the most rapturous applause over their rendering of the sentimental and comic. Besides being remarkable as vocalists they are equally so as instrumentalists. Much of their music too is of their own composition and many of their songs are original with themselves. Such a combination of musical talent in one family is not, perhaps, to be found in this or any other country. It is a sight worth seeing, six noble young men, brother musicians, and all of them gentlemen of high personal worth." Although great inducements were offered the brothers to enter the public arena as professional musicians, they declined all such propositions, preferring only to appear in public when they could benefit some worthy object by the proceeds of their concerts. Being invited to sing at the centennial celebration of the Chartiers Presbyterian Church, of which the Rev. Dr. John McMillan, the religious and educational pioneer of western Pennsylvania was the first pastor, they composed and sang an appropriate ode, giving a brief history of that distinguished minister, which was so well received that its repetition was requested three times on that occasion. At the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. William Smith, D. D., at the Miller's Run Presbyterian Church, by special request they gave two concerts, in the afternoon and evening of the same day, when they donated the proceeds to a purse that was being raised as a token of respect for the honored Doctor. For this anniversary they also composed a special song which, having been rendered at their afternoon concert, was, at the request of the audience, sung again in the evening. The entertainments given by these brothers extended over a period of fourteen years, during which time they continued to pursue their regular occupations and professions.

By the death of Matthew, a young man of bright promise, the tuneful circle of the Brown Brothers was suddenly broken, and since then the voices of the rest are seldom heard together in public. The names of the six brothers are as follows: J. Nevin, Henry H., William F., Alexander B., Matthew B. and D. Finley Brown. At the last concert in which they all took part they sang an original ode entitled, "We're a Band of Brothers," in which their sentiments were portrayed. Of this ode we give the closing verse:

"We'll keep the bells of Freedom ringing,
We'll keep the voice of Temperance singing;
To the Bible we'll keep clinging,
While upon this earth we stand,
And when death has come before us,
And the vesper stars shine o'er us,
Let others swell the chorus,
And shout it through our land."

Soon after this concert the Brown Brothers numbered but five on earth, Matthew having been called to join the Heavenly Choir.

MRS JANE B. PRALL was born November 9, 1803, in Washington, Penn., in a house on the lot where Dr. Little now lives. Her father, John Bollen, had come from New Jersey to Washington county, where he married Ann, daughter of William Huston, a native of Ireland, who came to Washington county while the Indians were still denizens of the woods.

It is said of William Huston that he was the first white man to settle in the county. His first dwelling, said to have been the first house built in Washington, was located on a piece of land where H. C. Swart now resides, on East Maiden street. He had married in Ireland, his native land, and had brought his wife with him to this country. Both died in Washington county, and at the time of his death he was the owner of a farm of 500 acres near the borough of Washington. In 1754, while the English and French were at war, he was taken prisoner by the latter and sent to France, where he lay in prison for about a year, was then exchanged and returned to America. His children were as follows: Dixon, Hamilton, James, Polly (married to Archibald Carr), Jane (married to John Smith), Margaret (married to John Paxton), and Ann (married to John Bollen). After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Bollen made their home in the borough of Washington until 1811, when, having exchanged their property there for a farm in Amwell township, they removed thereon, remaining some eleven years; thence came to South Strabane township where they passed the rest of their days. Mr. Bollen, who was a shoemaker by trade, died November 7, 1846, his wife on May 4, 1848, aged eighty-five years. They were the parents of children as follows: James and John, both deceased when young; William, who died in 1875; Margaret, married to William Van Kirk; Mary, married to George Week, and died in Ohio; Jane, the subject proper of this sketch, and Matilda (a mute), deceased in 1881.

Jane Bollen was married to John Prall, a farmer of Amwell township, in 1849. He was a man of nearly seventy years of age at the time, and died, January 10, 1875, at the age of ninety-six years. He had been previously married, and had by that union eight children, viz.: Benjamin and Harrison (both deceased), Jackson (a resident of South Strabane township), William, Nancy and Elizabeth (all three deceased), Mary (wife of W. Lacock, of Amwell township) and Sarah (who died in Illinois). After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Prall made their home in Amwell township, where Mr. Prall died as already related. One year after that event his widow came to the borough of Washington, where she now has her home, a pleasant and comfortable one, on East Wheeling street. She is a remarkably well-preserved lady, and is spending her declining years with Christian patience and resignation, calmly awaiting the inevitable summons that shall call her hence. In her church connection she was originally identified with the Cumberland Presbyterians, but is now a member of the Second Presbyterian Church of Washington.

Mordecai Hoge (deceased), a half brother of Mrs. Prall, was born January 22, 1784, on the old Huston farm in this county, a son of John Hoge, who owned the land from the center of Main street, in Washington, westward to, and perhaps including, the whole or a portion of the Dr. Reed farm. The boyhood days of Mordecai Hoge were passed chiefly in and around Washington, and when about six years of age he was sent to the old-time log schoolhouse which stood a little below where the old weigh scales were placed, and on the right side of the alley where the worshippers in the United Presbyterian Church are accustomed to put their conveyances. At that time there was in the then village but one stone dwelling, owned by a Mr. Bradford. After Mr. Hoge had passed through his primary and academical training, about the year 1805, he became a student in Dickinson College, Carlisle, shortly after leaving which he married Rebecca Pentecost. In 1811 he engaged in teaching, his first school being kept in a log cabin located on the bank of Little Chartiers creek, and between the farm some time since owned by Sheriff R. McClelland and Linden village. The following year he moved about one mile south of this place, and taught twelve years at what was called the Cross Roads. He next taught for one year in a rude cabin on a farm situated on the pike leading from Washington to Monongahela City. In 1827 he commenced teaching on what came to be known as "Hoge's Summit," and continued there for six years. Mr. Hoge then took up his residence on the farm now owned by the heirs of Samuel Brownlee, and during the time he would walk, summer and winter, not less than six miles. Immediately after the expiration of this last mentioned school term he taught near Pees' Mill for a short time, and later in a log schoolhouse on or near the site of the Hardy school in North Strabane township.

From that point he returned to Hoge's Summit, and taught about twenty-three years, at the expiration of which time his public labors in this calling ceased. In summing up the whole time in which he was engaged in the work of teaching, the calculation will make it not less than forty-five years. It is a marked characteristic of the high esteem and appreciation of his services as an instructor of youth that this entire period was spent within the limit of seven miles, in many instances teaching the parent, then the child, then the grandchild, until superannation alone required his withdrawal from his arduous vocation. Mr. Hoge departed this life in 1870, at the age of eighty-six years, two months and three days, and on his tombstone in the Pigeon Creek cemetery is the following inscription: "True Honor. A Faithful Teacher of Youth for More than Forty five Years." This sketch of Mordecai Hoge has been gleaned from one that appeared in the Washington Review and Examiner at the time of his decease.

G V. LAWRENCE The genealogy of the Lawrence family, of which this gentleman is a member, is imperfect. Those of that name who became prominent in Massachusetts, New York and Pennsylvania are supposed to have sprung from the brothers who came from England at an early day. A son of one of these settled in Adams county, Penn., about the year 1770, where he afterward died, leaving a family of ten children.

About the year 1788 his widow, with this large family, came over the mountains when there was only a pathway, the mother carrying the youngest son, Joseph (then three years old), on her knee on horseback. They settled on a small farm on the headwaters of Pigeon creek, eight miles east of Washington, in a cabin, and here the family—seven daughters and three sons—grew up. In time the daughters all married in Washington county, and raised families; and a numerous progeny of children and grandchildren and their descendants sprang from these excellent women, and some of the later generation are found scattered over the West. The oldest son, John Lawrence, married and moved to Beaver county, and was twice elected to the Legislature from that county; afterward moved to Delaware county, Ohio, and died there, leaving a family. One of his sons was educated at Washington College, studied law, became very prominent in his profession, and served in the Legislature of Ohio. His son afterward served in the Senate of the State.

Samuel Lawrence, the second son of the older stock, also moved to Beaver county, Penn., and was prothonotary of the courts for nine years. He was there elected to the Legislature, serving two sessions, and there died, leaving a large family. One of his sons was prothonotary of that county nine years, and afterward an associate judge.

Joseph, the third son, remained on the farm with his mother, to whom he was much attached, and to whom he clung with strongest affection until she died at the age of ninety-five years. This son was compelled to work hard on the farm to maintain the family, and only obtained a few months for improvement at school. He was married about the year 1812 or 1813 to Rebecca Van Eman, by whom he had four children: Joseph, George V., Sarah and Samuel. About the year 1823 the mother died, Samuel being then a babe, and when five or six years old he died. Joseph grew up and married Eliza Horner, and they both died in February, 1842, leaving four children, all of whom married, and three of them are still living. Sarah, the daughter, married Ard. Moore, an excellent man, and they raised five children, all of whom are married and very prosperous, living in Carthage, Mo., except one daughter who is in Portland, Oreg. The father of this family died about the year 1866; the mother is still in good health, and lives with the children in Carthage. Of George V. we will speak more in detail hereafter.

Joseph Lawrence, the elder, about the year 1826 married, for his second wife, Maria, a daughter of Judge Bucher, of Harrisburg, an excellent woman, as all who knew her bear testimony, and with her had four sons and one daughter. John J. Lawrence, the eldest son, was superintendent of the western portion of the Philadelphia & Erie Railroad for years, and afterward of the Allegheny Valley Railroad; he was colonel of one of the Pennsylvania regiments in the army. He has a most interesting family, and is now retired, living in Allegheny, Penn. James K. Lawrence, the next son (now deceased), was a captain in the regular army; was efficient and brave, and had the confidence and esteem of every one in his company and regiment. He was very severely wounded at Fredericksburg, but recovered and died three years since at Reynoldsville, Penn., leaving a small family. W. C. A. Lawrence, third son, was educated at Washington College, and studied law with Hon. J. C. Kunkle, of Harrisburg. He was fine looking, very pleasant in manner, and possessed of excellent natural ability. He was succeeding to a fine practice at the bar in Dauphin county when he was elected to the Legislature in 1857. He was re-elected in 1858, and was elected speaker, obtaining the nomination over Hon. A. K. McClure, a man of unusual ability. He was perhaps the youngest man ever elected speaker in this State. In 1859 he was re-elected to same position, and was exceedingly popular and efficient. The labor in the law office, and in the speaker's chair, proved too much for his constitution, and he died in 1860.

Samuel, the fourth son, was well prepared by education, and studied engineering. He was a long time employed on the Philadelphia & Erie Railroad when very young. He laid out and helped to locate and build the Oil Creek Railroad. He was very efficient, and popular with all classes of people, and was nominated and elected to the Legislature, from Warren, McKean and Elk counties, serving one winter, peremptorily declining a renomination. He died in Warren in 1862, leaving a widow but no children; she since died in Philadelphia. Susan M., the youngest, remained with her mother until her death, which occurred in Harrisburg, in 1860, and during the long illness of her mother was ever with her, patient, considerate and kind. She afterward married Mr. Myron Sanford, of Erie, Penn., a retired and wealthy man of excellent character, who proved a most devoted husband. They raised one son a promising and intelligent young man, but both he and his father are dead; Mrs. Sanford still lives in her beautiful home, esteemed and loved by all who know her and can appreciate the highest womanly virtues.

The foregoing is a very brief and condensed history of the several children of Joseph Lawrence, the elder. A more extended notice of him and his son George V. Lawrence is appropriate, with a general reference to the public life of this family. It is seen here that the three brothers who were brought to Washington county, so early by the mother, poor and fatherless, were all members of the Legislature of their native State. Joseph, the youngest, was elected from Washington county in 1820, and served until 1826, being speaker of the House two sessions; was elected to Congress in 1826. He was for J. Q. Adams for President, but the tide for Jackson swept him down in 1828. In 1834 he was nominated for the Legislature and elected, and re-elected in 1835; was elected State treasurer in 1836. He ran for Congress in 1838, and was defeated by seventeen votes. In 1840 he was again the candidate of the Whig party and elected. He died on April 17, 1842, while a member, and his body lies in the Congressional Cemetery, at Washington, D. C. Mr. Lawrence was a man of fine physical and mental abilities; was a good public speaker, logical and clear in argument with an unusual memory and a very pleasant manner, and he had the respect and confidence of all who knew him. Like his mother, and all his extensive family, he was a Presbyterian, and when at home in the county generally walked three and one-half miles to church, and sat in the Bible class, his sons going with him to Sunday-school. He was firm in the Pauline and Augustinian faith.

and a student of theology. His house was always open, and a kind of home for ministers who were fond of his company.

We have before referred to his sons William and Samuel as members of the Legislature, and now come to speak more in detail of the remarkable life of George V., his son by his first marriage. It is believed that no man in the State, and few anywhere, has had so many marks of public favor. He was born on November 13, 1818, named after his uncle, George Van Eman, a Presbyterian minister, and raised on a farm in sight of the old home of his grandmother. He went to the district school, then kept in a small log-cabin house, with a log on each side cut out, and the opening covered with oiled paper to give light. When about fifteen years of age he studied Latin grammar with Rev. W. C. Anderson, then boarding with his father, and preaching at Pigeon Creek Church; afterward went for a time to a small select school, opened a few miles off; then went one year to the English Department of Washington College. His health failing, and being threatened with pulmonary disease, his father, like any sensible man, took him back to the farm where he regained his health, and remained there until twenty-one years of age. He was fond of horses, and was a fearless and excellent rider, and still mounts his horse, takes his dogs and goes out to the country to run foxes. He has been an active politician since 1842. He was elected to the Legislature in 1843-'46 '58-'59. In 1848 he was elected to the State Senate over his opponent, the late William Montgomery. He was re-elected to the Senate in 1860, from counties of Washington and Greene (overcoming 1,000 Democratic majority), of which body he was speaker in 1863, and he was again elected to the Senate in 1874-'76-'78. In 1864-'66 '82 he was elected a member of Congress. In 1872 he was elected a delegate at-large to the constitutional convention, and was again elected to the Legislature in the fall of 1892. Thus for fifty years he was identified with national and State politics, and it is a happy thought that his course in public life has always been devoted to progress and the right.

In 1829 he married Elizabeth Welsh, a daughter of the late William Welsh, Esq., of Washington county, and moved to a farm in Carroll township, near Monongahela City. About 1862 he came into the town, and has remained there ever since. His first wife died in 1855, leaving two children: Mary Virginia, still at home, and Joseph, who died when three years old. In 1857 Mr. Lawrence was again married, this time to a daughter of Rev. John Reed, of Indiana county, Penn., and she is still living. Three children were born to them, the youngest of whom died when very young. George R., the eldest, was educated at La Fayette College, studied law with G. W. Bidle, Esq., of Philadelphia, and after practicing some years in Pittsburgh, died leaving a widow highly esteemed and respected. Carrie Belle, the daughter, married Dr. C. B. Wood, a regular physician, and lives near her parents.

MRS. MARY (CLARK) WYLIE. This highly esteemed and much beloved lady is a native of Washington county, born in Hopewell township, July 30, 1811, of Scotch-Irish origin and Covenanter extraction. Her paternal ancestor, James Clark, was driven from Scotland to Ireland during religious persecution, and from the latter country he emigrated to America about the year 1750, and in the Revolutionary war he was found in the Continental army. James Clark settled upon land in Cumberland (now Franklin) county, Penn., upon which the town of Strasburg was afterward laid out and built. "Clark's Knot," or "Clark's Gap," at the mountain near there, still tell of the original owner of the land which was then called "Clark's Fancy." James Clark died near Mercersburg, Penn., of which locality her grandfather, David Clark, was a native. The latter was married to Hannah Baird, of Carlisle, same State, and they became the parents of seven children, viz.: James (father of Mrs. Mary Wylie); Esther, married to Rev. Joseph Stockton, of Allegheny, now deceased; Nancy, married to David Larimer, a merchant of Steubenville, Ohio; Elizabeth, married to Daniel Houston, of near Canonsburg, this county; Mary, wife of Paul Anderson, of St. Louis, Mo.; David and Eliza, in Mercersburg, Pennsylvania.

James Clark, the eldest son of David and Hannah (Baird) Clark, grew to manhood on the farm in Canton township (now known as the S. K. Weirich farm), where he received a liberal education for those early days. Later he kept a store in Hopewell township, also a mill, and was engaged in various other business enterprises; he had an interest in the wagon trains that crossed the mountains for merchandise, and assisted in the building of the National pike. He married Jane Henderson, a daughter of Rev. Matthew Henderson, one of the first Associate ministers to cross the mountains, and who came to Washington county in 1780, taking charge of the Chartiers Church. He was in line of Rev. Alexander Henderson of "Solemn league and Covenant" fame, of Edinburgh, Scotland. Rev. Matthew Henderson married Miss Mary Ferris, who bore him ten children, all of whom grew to maturity and married, their names being as follows: Matthew, Ebenezer, Robert, John, Mary, Ann, Elizabeth, Jane, Joseph and Helen. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. James Clark settled on a farm in Hopewell township, where, July 10, 1821, at the age of thirty seven years, the husband was summoned from earth. He was a member of the Associate Church. They had seven children, as follows: David, who died in Washington county, leaving a family of five children; Mary, the subject proper of this memoir; Matthew, who was a physician, and died in Washington, Penn.; James, who died in Canonsburg, Penn.; Elizabeth, married to John Murdoch, and died in Parkersburg, Va.; William, who died in Canton township, and Ebenezer, who died when a child. The widowed mother continued to remain on the old home farm with her children, until they had all left for homes of their own, and she then lived with one or other of them, the last year of her life being passed with her daughter, Mary (Mrs. Wylie), at whose home she died in 1870, at the ripe old age of eighty-six years.

Mary Clark remained at the place of her birth in Hopewell township until her marriage September 2, 1829, with William Wylie, when they took up their residence on the farm in Canton township, now occupied by the David McClay heirs, whence after five years they moved to the Razortown farm (now known as the Ellenmount stock farm) in the same township, and here for forty-five years they shared life's joys and sorrows. In 1877 Mr. Wylie was called from earth at the age of nearly seventy-seven years. About a year and a half after her husband's death, Mrs. Wylie broke up housekeeping, and in 1880 moved to her present home on East Maiden street, in the borough of Washington, where she resides with her widowed daughter, Mrs. Annie Thompson. She is remarkably well preserved for her years, and is in the enjoyment of good health. All her life from girlhood she has been a member of the United Presbyterian Church. She can recount many interesting anecdotes of her early life and other days, which carry the listener back to a time when Washington county was in a condition of comparative wildness. In her childhood the Indians had for the most part gone from the county, but when she was about seven years of age, on proceeding one day to the old spring in the neighborhood for water, she heard a moan, and on looking up was horrified to see a hideous Indian watching her: it is almost needless to add that she fled in no small alarm to the house. Her people went in search of the Indian, and finding him they gave him food, and sent him on his way rejoicing, for they learned from him that he was traveling eastward.

Mrs. Wylie is the mother of four children: Robert, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere; Jane, married to John S. Beall, and has two children (residence, Wellsburg, W. Va.); Annie, widow of Rev. Joseph R. Thompson, and James Clark (deceased). Joseph R. Thompson was born in Mt.

Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., in 1828. He graduated from Canonsburg Theological Seminary, became the pastor of the U. P. Church at Hickory (he was one of three brothers, all of whom were ministers in the U. P. Church), and was filling the incumbency at the time of his death in 1861. In 1859 he was married to Miss Annie Wylie, and they had one child, named William, who died at the age of four years.

JUDGE WILLIAM McKENNAN. The great-grandfather of Judge William McKennan, Rev. William McKennan, immigrated to America from the North of Ireland about the middle of the last century. For a period of fifty-four years, from December, 1755, he was pastor of the White Clay Creek and the Red Clay Creek Presbyterian churches, near Wilmington, Del., and during thirty-four years of this time he was also pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Wilmington. He died in 1809, at the age of ninety, and is buried at Red Clay Creek church.

His son, William McKennan, was born in Delaware in 1758. In the early part of 1776 he entered the Continental army as second lieutenant of Capt. Kean's company of the regiment of the Flying Camp. In the latter part of the same year, upon the organization of the famous Delaware Regiment, he became first lieutenant of the first company, and afterward he was promoted to the captaincy of his company. In September, 1777, he was engaged in the battle of Brandywine, and a month later, at the battle of Germantown, he received a wound in the arm which ultimately caused his death, thirty years later. In 1780 he took part in the battles of Monmouth, Camden, South Carolina and Cowpens. After the battle of Camden, in which the Delaware regiment suffered severe losses, Capt. Kirkwood took command of the regiment, and, in December, 1780, Capt. McKennan returned to Delaware and enlisted a body of men, who, however, did not join the Delaware regiment, but was brigaded with William Washington's Legion and troops of the Maryland Line, and was commanded by Capt. McKennan until the close of the war, in 1783. Capt. McKennan and his battalion were engaged in the operations against Yorktown, which resulted in the surrender to the Continentals of the main British army under Cornwallis. Afterward the battalion performed arduous and highly honorable service under Gen. Greene, in North and South Carolina. Upon his return to civil life, Capt. McKennan was chosen colonel of a regiment of Delaware militia, and was elected a member of the Legislature of his native State. He also became a member of the Order of the Cincinnati. In 1797 he removed to Charlestown, Va. (now Wellsburg, W.

Va.), thence, in 1800, to West Middletown, Washington county, and in 1801, having been appointed prothonotary of Washington county, he became a resident of the town of Washington, and continued to live there until his death, in January, 1810. In 1800, before his removal from Charles town, he was one of the three presidential electors from Brooke county. Col. McKennan married Elizabeth Thompson, daughter of John Thompson, one of the judges of the court of common pleas and Orphans' court of Newcastle county, Del., an active patriot and prominent citizen of the State during and subsequent to the Revolutionary war. Mrs. McKennan's mother was the sister of Thomas McKean, a member of Congress and a Signer of the Declaration of Independence, from Delaware, and afterward governor and chief justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. Mrs. McKennan died at Washington, Penn., in 1839, at the age of seventy-eight years.

Thomas McKean Thompson McKennan, the third son of William and Elizabeth Thompson McKennan, was born in March, 1794, in Newcastle county, Del. He was educated at Washington College (Penn.), whence he graduated at the age of sixteen in the class of 1810. Immediately thereafter he began the study of law under Parker Campbell, of Washington (Penn.), one of the most brilliant lawyers who has ever graced the bar of western Pennsylvania, and on November 7, 1814, at the age of twenty-one, he was admitted to practice. Shortly afterward he formed a legal partnership with Obadiah Jennings, eminent as well in the forum as in the pulpit, and at once entered upon a career of success. A year later he succeeded Walter Forward as deputy Attorney-general or district attorney of the county, in which office he served until 1817. In 1831 Mr. McKennan was elected to the House of Representatives of the United States, and continued a member thereof for four terms, finally declining further reelection on account of the urgency of his professional work. In 1842, however, a vacancy having occurred in the House by reason of the death of Joseph Lawrence, Mr. McKennan yielded to the solicitations of his party and the public demand, and served the remainder of the term. He was chairman of the Committee of the Whole for two months of the first session of that year, and as such was largely instrumental in securing the passage of the famous Tariff Act of 1842. In 1840 he was chosen a presidential elector on the Whig ticket, and in 1848 he was made president of the Pennsylvania Electoral College. In 1850 he was appointed Secretary of the Interior by President Fillmore, but resigned a few weeks later. Soon after this he became president of the Hempfield Railroad Company, and while attending to its affairs he died at Reading, Penn., on July 9, 1852. In politics Mr. McKennan was an earnest Whig.

Mr. McKennan entered Washington College at a very early age, and passed through the entire curriculum. In February, 1813, he was appointed tutor of the ancient languages, in which position he continued for eighteen months. In April, 1818, he was chosen a member of the College Corporation, and continued as such up to the time of his death, a period of thirty four years. For several years he held the position of adjunct professor of languages. The degree of LL. D. was conferred on him by Jefferson College, Canonsburg, Penn. The life of Mr. McKennan was one of purest probity, and in his quiet, unobtrusive, yet effective way, he contributed largely toward the shaping of the political destiny of the State of Pennsylvania. He was universally respected, and his popularity was unbounded. In his private life he was beloved by all as a loyal citizen, a devoted husband, an affectionate and indulgent parent and a true friend. He was devotedly attached to children, was a lover of good men and a supreme detester of all manner of vice and meanness. In 1815 Mr. McKennan married Matilda, daughter of Jacob Bowman, one of the pioneer merchants of Brownsville, Penn.

William McKennan, the eldest son of Thomas M. T. and Matilda (Bowman) McKennan, was born at Washington, Penn., September 27, 1816. He graduated as valedictorian of his class, from Washington College, Washington (Penn.), in 1833, and afterward took a post graduate course at Yale College, New Haven., Conn. He was admitted to the bar of Washington county in June, 1837, entered into partnership with his father, and on August 23, 1837, qualified as deputy attorney-general or district attorney of Washington county, and served one term. In 1847 he was burgess of the borough of Washington, and in 1852 a member of its councils. In 1858, 1862 and 1863 he was a delegate from Washington county to the Republican State Conventions, and in 1868 a delegate to the National Convention. In 1857 he was chairman of the Republican committee of Washington county; in 1858 was a member of the Republican State Central committee; in 1860 was a presidential elector; in the same year was a delegate to the Peace Congress, and on December 21, 1869, was commissioned Judge of the Circuit Court of the United States for the third circuit, comprising Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, which office he resigned on January 3, 1891. While at the bar, Judge McKennan was recognized as one of the foremost lawyers of western Pennsylvania, and during his twenty-one years' incumbency of the bench he won a high reputation for integrity and ability.

He married, October 12, 1842, Pauline Gertrude de Fontevieux, who was born at Paris, France, March 23, 1821, and died May 7, 1886, at Washington, Penn. The children of this union were: Isabel B., who married George M. Laughlin, of Pittsburgh, Penn., and died December 5, 1891; Thomas M. T.; Emma W., who married William W. Smith, of Washington, Penn., and died August 30, 1879; Henry S., who died at Washington, Penn., January 9, 1888; Samuel C.; John D.; Gertrude M.; Annie, who married Alexander W. Biddle, of Philadelphia, Penn.; David W. and William, Jr.

THE GRAYSON FAMILY of Washington, Penn. Nathaniel Grayson, the first of the family of whom we have record, lived and died in or near Glaslaugh, County Monaghan, Ireland, where he carried on a woolen manufactory. He was the father of five children: four sons—George, William, Robert and Thomas—and one daughter—Mary. The family residence was called "New Mills," where the youngest son died, and William and the late Judge John Grayson were born. George, the eldest son, followed the pursuit of his father, and removing to Manchester, England, established a manufactory. The family at latest accounts, still reside there. William, the second son of Nathaniel, preceded his brother to this country, both arriving several years prior to the adoption of the Federal Constitution. Robert, whose wife was Mary Murdock, of Glaslaugh, sister of Robert and John Murdock, prominent citizens of that place, arrived at New Castle, Delaware, in June, 1784, with his wife and son, John, then nine months old, widowed mother and son William. He soon purchased property, locating in Mifflin, Penn., where at an early period his wife and mother died. The family then removed to Carlisle, Cumberland county, Penn., where the sons were reared and educated. After the lapse of several years the father married Mrs. Jane Kennedy, widow of Thomas Kennedy, who tenderly, indulgently and faithfully contributed to raise her stepsons, William and John. The latter in his diary, speaking of his stepmother, remarks: "And even now, in my old age, I recall to mind with tender recollection her devotion and anxious care and industry, as a wife and mother." The children of this marriage were as follows: George, Mary, Margaret and Anne. Mr. Robert Grayson, as a citizen, occupied a prominent place and took an active part in the political events of his day. At one time he was sheriff of Cumberland county, and died in Carlisle after a well-spent life.

William was connected with the regular army, and stationed at Carlisle barracks. In 1808 he was ordered to Fort Wayne, Ind., where, soon after his arrival, he died from fever contracted on the march.

Having a taste for the printing business, John Grayson at a suitable age commenced to acquire a knowledge of the same in Carlisle. After close application for four years, he went to Philadelphia and entered the book office of William Dnane, editor of The Aurora. From this time until near the breaking out of the war of 1812, Mr. Grayson was engaged in the printing business at different times, in Philadelphia, New York and Baltimore. On June 18, 1812, news was received by express from Washington, D. C., of the declaration of war by Congress against Great Britain, Mr. Grayson being in the city of Baltimore at the time. He at once enlisted in a volunteer regiment, serving as a volunteer in the army until September, 1813, when he was honorably discharged; but immediately re-enlisted in the regular army, serving as lieutenant and adjutant in the regiment to which he belonged until the close of the war, participating in many of the prominent battles. After the close of the war he was appointed by President Madison to the corps of artillery to form part of the "New Seventh Regiment;" but, wishing to return to private life, he resigned his commission September 7, 1815. Returning to Baltimore, he entered the book office of James Kennedy as partner, and remained there until after his marriage. On May 9, 1816, he was married in Baltimore, Md., by Rev. James Inglis, D. D., to Miss Martha Wray, daughter of John and Mary Wray, of that city. Mr. Wray came from Ireland to this country soon after the Revolutionary war, settling in Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Penn., where he became an active citizen, being identified with the business and political interests of the community. He was married to Mary, daughter of John Robinson, of Chester county, Penn. Their family consisted of three children, viz., Thomas R., John and Martha, the wife of Mr. Grayson. Mr. Wray, the father, died in Baltimore, June, 1819, aged sixty-nine years, and Mrs. Wray, having spent a long and useful Christian life, died peacefully in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Grayson, Washington, Penn., at the advanced age of ninety-five. In the year 1817, Mr. Grayson purchased in Philadelphia a plant for the establishment of a newspaper. Traveling by stage, he proceeded to Washington, Penn., and issued the first number of The Examiner on May 28, 1817, of which he was sole proprietor and editor until 1833, when he took into partnership William Jack. This partnership continued several years, when Mr. Jack retiring, his son Thomas W. became his partner, Mr. Grayson, senior, retiring in 1840.

Thomas W. Grayson, the eldest son, was born in Baltimore, Md., and brought by his parents, an infant, when they permanently removed to Washington. After his father retired from the editorship, he continued connected with The Examiner until May, 1861, when he removed to Meadville, Penn., there becoming proprietor and editor of The Crawford County Democrat, and continued to edit it for more than twenty years, when he retired on account of ill health. Thomas W. Grayson was married to Miss Mary Elizabeth Green, daughter of Mr. A. Green, of Washington, D. C. Their family consisted of four daughters and one son: Miss Annie, now a resident of Washington, Penn.; Mrs. Mary W. Richmond, wife of A. G. Richmond, Esq., of Meadville, Penn.; Mrs. Martha Ayres, wife of Samuel Ayres, M. D., of Pittsburgh, Penn.; Lucy M. (deceased), and Thomas Wray, a resident of Washington, Penn. Mr. T. W. Grayson died in Meadville, Penn., May 20, 1876, and Mrs. Grayson in Washington, Penn., in February, 1892.

The remaining portion of Mr. and Mrs. John Grayson's family consisted of four sons and two daughters. Of these a son, Stephen, and daughter, Mary J., died in infancy. John Grayson, Esq., at present a resident of Pittsburgh, Penn., until within a few years a prominent and useful citizen of Washington, was married to Miss Sarah Ellen Scott, daughter of Mr. George Scott, of Pittsburgh. Their children: Mary, Lizzie, Eleanor, John, John T., William, and Eugene deceased. Anna Moore, residing with her parents; Sarah E., wife of Mr. Douglas Buchanan, Pittsburgh, Penn., and Harry S., of the same city.

William Grayson, son of Judge Grayson, graduated at Washington College, studied law with John L. Gow, Esq., was admitted to the bar. He was a young man of fine, scholarly attainments, a close student with bright hopes before him, but died just entering upon a professional life, lamented by all who knew him.

Miss Martha, the only remaining daughter, is a graduate of the Washington Female Seminary, and during the principalship of Mrs. Hanna was an instructress in that institution. Being a member of the Presbyterian Church, she is much interested in the missionary efforts of that body. Miss Grayson resides at and dispenses the hospitalities of the homestead. Dr. Wray Grayson resides in his native place. At an early age he entered Washington College, and graduated in the class of 1846. Soon after he commenced reading medicine, finishing his studies, and receiving his degree at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1853. With the exception of ten years, when engaged in hospital practice, Dr. Grayson's entire professional life has been spent in his native place. In 1877 the Doctor was married to Miss Margaret Hazlett, daughter of Mr. Samuel Hazlett (banker), of Washington, Penn. He is a member of the "American Medical Association," "The Pennsylvania State Medical Society," and the "Washington County Medical Society."

Judge John Grayson's ancestry were adherents to the Evangelical Church; and for many years he was a member of the First Presbyterian Church, Washington, Penn. Reference has already been made to his faithful services during the war of 1812. In after life he was appointed and elected to the following official positions: Register of wills by Governor Wolf in 1830; re-appointed by same in 1833. Appointed, by Governor Porter, prothonotary of Washington county, and in 1839 was elected to same office. In March, 1843, he was appointed associate judge of the courts of Washington county, by Governor Porter; in 1853 was appointed, by President Pierce, pension agent; in 1857 was appointed to same by President Buchanan, and continued performing the duties of that office in Pittsburgh, Penn., until August, 1861. Although a large portion of Mr. Grayson's life was occupied with the public duties mentioned, he nevertheless took a deep interest in matters pertaining to the moral and educational improvement of the community in which he lived. He was the fast friend of educational institutions, and in connection with other venerated and spirited citizens, assisted in establishing the Ladies' Seminary of Washington, Penn., performing the duties of treasurer of the board of trustees for more than thirty years, when advancing age compelled him to resign—yet, as a trustee and stockholder, he continued to take a deep interest in the institution. Mr. Grayson retained in a remarkable degree his mental vigor, and was interested in everything pertaining to the public welfare almost to the hour of his death, which event occurred March 11, 1871, with the full assurance of a blessed immortality, his last words being: "Passing, passing, entering through. Peaceful, peaceful, powerful with God in Christ through all eternity."

Mrs. Grayson died April 20, 1865, at the age of seventy-five, leaving the cherished record of a useful life; loving and affectionate in her home, at the same time reaching forth with sympathetic heart and generous hand to others. Her memory is revered by all who knew her.

ROBERT HAZLETT, head of the Hazlett family of Washington, Penn., with his wife, Mary Colwell Hazlett, came to America from Coleraine, Ireland, about the close of the Revolutionary war. They settled in Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Penn., where their children, Hugh, Isaac, John and Jane, were born. In 1793 they concluded to change their residence for a home in the South (Kentucky), but upon arriving at Washington over the road then traveled from Red Stone Fort, they were detained on account of a severe storm. The impression made by this brief detention was so favorable that they concluded to locate in the then small village of Washington, where he commenced business as a dry-goods merchant. Being successful he purchased property in the central part of the town, where his sons—Robert and Samuel—and daughters—Margaret and Mary—were born. (This spot has been in possession of the Hazlett family about one hundred years, part of the third generation being its occupants at present). Of Robert Hazlett's ancestry in Ireland we know but little personally. His parents being interested in the highest welfare of the family, Robert was sent to Edinburgh (Scotland), to be educated for a clergyman in the Established Church (Episcopal), but that not being his desire, he left before taking orders. His brother, it is thought, was also at the same university, and, being more devout in the faith, became a minister in the Anglican Church, and afterward was ordained bishop. Mary Colwell Hazlett, as nearly as we can trace history, was of Huguenot descent (the family name being Reanie). The ancestors escaped from France to England, and went from there to the North of Ireland, after the "Edict of Nantes" had been revoked, as there was "no safety for Protestants but in flight from their native land." Mary (wife of Robert Hazlett) was remarkable for her personal beauty, and great force of character. During her residence in Carlisle she became very ardently attached to the Methodist Episcopal Church. With a heart consecrated to the service of Christ, her enthusiastic nature and integrity of purpose were wonderfully developed by Divine influence. She was not only a wise counsellor, judicious mother, in her own home, but a tower of strength in the Church of her choice. Upon arriving at Washington, not finding a Methodist minister, such was her love for the Master, she would ride several miles to Chartiers Presbyterian Church to hear a sermon (Dr. McMillan being the pastor). But her zeal urged her to work for her own denomination. Collecting the few members she could find, she formed a class, and in a short time a Methodist minister (Rev. Furlong) held service in an upper room in a building used as a market house; afterward in the court house, where seats were provided for women only, men being obliged to stand. This continued until 1801, when, through the kindness of David Hoge, a lot was donated at the corner of Franklin and Chestnut streets, where a log church was speedily built, in which the small congregation stately worshipped, increasing in numbers and religious interest until 1816, when, through the influence of Mary Hazlett and family, a new brick church was erected on Franklin street (now occupied by Hays & Wilson as a carriage factory). As long as health permitted, she was a devout worshiper in that church, and when strength failed, had a religious meeting weekly at her own home, until removed in 1844 to the "City whose Maker and Builder is God." Her grandchildren and great-grandchildren refer to her memory with gratitude and gladness of heart on account of her many noble, womanly traits, for surely "Her works praise her in the gates."—Prov. xxxi: 31. The sons (of Robert and Mary Colwell Hazlett), Hugh, Isaac and Robert, left their native State (Pennsylvania) when quite young and located in Ohio. Hugh married Miss Mary McFadden; had three sons, Robert, Thomas, and Hugh; also three daughters, Mary, Eliza and Margaret. Second son (Isaac) married Miss Matilda Calhoun; their sons (three in number) were Robert, Samuel and Theodore; daughters, Mary Frances and Matilda, the latter being the only surviving member. Third son (John Hazlett) died of fever in early manhood, unmarried. Fourth son (Robert) married Miss Lucy Reed, of Putnam, Ohio; had four sons, William, John, George and Charles. The latter, Charles E. Hazlett, was educated at West Point, and yielded up his life to his country's cause on the battle field of Gettysburg (July 2, 1863), while in command of a battery of rifled cannon of the Fifth Artillery. His superior officer, Gen. Weed, being mortally wounded, Lieut. Hazlett, while bending over to hear his dying words, received his death wound. He is referred to, and spoken of in history, as the gallant young Lieut. Hazlett. The daughters of Robert and Lucy Reed Hazlett were Mary, Elizabeth, Lucy and Margaret. Jane Hazlett, eldest daughter of Robert and Mary Colwell Hazlett, was married to Dr. James Wishart, brother of late Dr. John Wishart, well and favorably known in Washington and vicinity. Two children survived their parents, Robert and Mary. Second daughter (Mary Hazlett) was married to James Acheson Cummins, then a resident of Washington, Penn., and afterward removed to the vicinity of Wheeling, W. Va. Their sons were Robert, James, and Thomas; daughters, Mary, Elizabeth, and Margaret. Eldest son, Dr. Robert Cummins, became eminent in his profession in his native city (Wheeling). Honored and beloved, he was removed by death in the midst of his useful career. Dr. James Cummins also practiced medicine in the same city. The care of the homestead devolved upon Thomas, who never married; Elizabeth and Margaret Cummins are the only members now surviving. Margaret, youngest daughter of Robert and Mary Colwell Hazlett, was married to Michael Johns, and died in a few short years, leaving one little daughter, Mary. Samuel Hazlett married Miss Sarah Johns, eldest daughter of the late Thomas and Elizabeth Shryock Johns, whose home in earlier days was at Chambersburg, Penn. Sons of the latter, six in number, were William, Michael, Lewellyn, Edwin, Alfred and Thomas; eldest son, Dr. William Johns, was a physician of note in Erie, Penn. Dr. Alfred

Johns died shortly after commencing the practice of medicine at Norfolk, Va. There are, at this date, but two living members of the family, Elizabeth and Hester Ann (Mrs. Day), of Canonsburg, Penn. Thomas Johns was of Quaker descent, his family being originally from Wales. The family of Samuel and Sarah Johns Hazlett, consisted of four sons and seven daughters. Thomas, the eldest, an intelligent, promising son, died of pulmonary disease in his early manhood. Robert studied medicine with his cousin, the late Dr. Robert H. Cummins; located in Wheeling and became a very successful practitioner; married Miss Mary E. Hobbs, of Boston, Mass.; has four living sons, Howard, Samuel, Edward and Robert, active, energetic young business men, interested in progress of Church and State, Katharine being the only daughter. Third son, Samuel, married Miss Lucy Woodhull, of Bangor, Me.; have three living children: Helen, eldest and only daughter; Charles R., engaged in commission business, Kansas City, Mo.; Samuel, younger son, being associated with his father in a banking house. The latter being very much interested in the Church of his grandparent, has been instrumental in the organization and completion of Jefferson Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, lately erected in Washington, Penn. Homer, youngest son of Samuel and Sarah Johns Hazlett, died in infancy, as did also Mary, Elizabeth, Matilda and Anna Augusta. The two living daughters are Margaret (wife of Dr. Wray Grayson, Washington, Penn.); Mary (Mrs. Joseph H. Brown, Pittsburgh, Penn.). Latter had one child, Maddie H. Brown, an unusually bright and lovely daughter, who was removed from earth to Heaven at the early age of fourteen. Sarah Hazlett, the late Mrs. S. B. Vowell, was taken away in the prime of her useful life, loving and beloved. Her husband and three children survive her: Samuel, Sarah (Mrs. Edwin F. Brown, in Chicago, Ill.) and Mary. Samuel Hazlett, youngest son of Robert and Mary Colwell Hazlett, was born in 1798, upon the spot where he continued to transact business and reside during the greater part of his useful life. When about fifteen years of age, his father died, leaving the widowed mother in Samuel's care, who devoted himself to her interests with tender love and watchfulness during her entire life; received such an education as the times afforded; at an early age engaged in mercantile business, which he continued until 1837, when he became interested in banking business. Being public spirited, always looking at the prosperity of his native town, he from time to time engaged in other pursuits that promised the welfare of Washington. At one time he conducted a manufactory of woollen goods, finding ready sale for the same, not only in Pennsylvania and Ohio, but extending to a considerable distance west. The large flouring mill (now in possession of Zelt Bros.) was also built through the capital and enterprise of Samuel Hazlett. He was also the pioneer banker of Washington county. Banking facilities at that time were so limited that business men had to depend for accommodations upon Pittsburgh, Wheeling and Brownsville. Moneyed transactions, therefore, were not and could not be conducted as now, in this section. State banks were in a very uncertain condition; counterfeiters of coin and paper money carried on their trade almost unrestrained, and many things contributed to make private banking a business of great risk. Notwithstanding all difficulties, knowing the advantage to the public, and being encouraged by friends in the idea of establishing a "banking house," Samuel Hazlett opened an office in Washington, in 1837, and continued in the same during the remainder of his life. In his career as a banker, he confined himself to what he considered a legitimate banking business. Holding that it was not right to place in jeopardy the moneys of depositors, he never engaged in stock, or other speculations of like nature. The "Banking House" of Samuel Hazlett was a constant success. At the time of the death of its founder (1863) it stood "first class," not only in this country, but abroad. Samuel and Sarah Johns Hazlett were devoted members of the M. E. Church, showing their devotion to its best interests at home, and in distant missionary fields, by liberal contributions to its support—thus proving their faith by their works; and their family bear in their heart of hearts the remembrance of their unbounded affection, the religious principles inculcated in the home training, their sense of justice and correct judgment which gave direction and guidance to all with whom they were connected. Those that "knew them best, loved them most."

A B. CALDWELL. Washington county has possessed many prominent citizens; but in all their number can be found no one more truly representative, more widely and actively awake to the interests of the community at large than was the subject of this sketch. A self-made man in its truest and broadest sense, by his own energy and untiring efforts A. B. Caldwell, rose from the humble ranks of a poor farm boy, to the proud distinction of being one of the most universally respected and influential merchant citizens of Washington county.

The Caldwell family are descended from Scotch-Irish ancestry, who were among the pioneer settlers of Pennsylvania. The first of the family to settle in Washington county was Samuel Caldwell (grandfather of subject), who made his cabin home with the then scattered settlers of Buffalo township. Here, surrounded by the dangers of those early days, enduring the privations which none but a pioneer can know, his children were born. Of them James Caldwell (father of subject) was born in 1797. Upon reaching manhood he married Miss Esther McCracken, daughter of a neighboring pioneer. The young couple made their home in their native township, and began tilling the soil; but some years later, in connection with farming, he opened and kept, on the "Old West Pike," the "Caldwell Inn," within whose hospitable walls so many travelers have found food and shelter. The original inn, like its builders, has passed away, but in its place stands another hostelry, built on the same plan, in 1883, by the subject of this sketch. James and Esther Caldwell were the parents of the following named children: Samuel, who died in Missouri; John, who died in Illinois; Joseph, William, A. B. and Esther, who resided in Washington county, and of whom only Esther is now (1893) living. The father of this family died in 1839, aged forty-two years, the mother in 1875, at the age of seventy-five.

A. B. Caldwell was born in 1828. He was but eleven years of age when his father died, thus throwing upon the mother the entire care and responsibility of the family, and necessitating that the children should early participate in the real battle of life, and contribute to their own support. A woman of sterling character herself, Mrs. Caldwell labored earnestly to keep her family together, and impress them with the principles of the strictest honesty. Ever entertaining for his mother the greatest reverence and affection, her son readily imbibed her teachings, that did much to mold his after life. At the age of sixteen he went to Claysville, Washington county, where he clerked for a time, and then formed a partnership with a Mr. Stillwagen, to conduct a general dry-goods business, the firm being known as Caldwell & Stillwagen. This partnership continued for three years, when, selling the interest to his partner, in January, 1852, Mr. Caldwell came to Washington, and took charge of William Smith's dry goods store, where as manager he remained twelve years. In 1858 Mr. Caldwell was united in marriage with Miss Mary Lonkert, a member of a most highly respected and prominent pioneer family of Washington, and of this union children have been born as follows: Minnie, George, Essie, Charles and Kate. In 1865 he began business for himself in the room now occupied by Brown's dry-goods store. Under his efficient management his business steadily increased, and in 1873 he erected in Main street, opposite the courthouse, one of the finest blocks in Washington, which he immediately stocked with an extensive line of dry goods, carpets, clothing and merchant tailoring supplies. His business soon became the most extensive in the place, and his annual receipts averaged from $125,000 to $140,000. At the time of his death, which occurred October 27, 1892, he was the only citizen in Washington paying a license of over $100 a year, for general business. But, extensive as was his business interests in the line enumerated, his entire time was by no means absorbed, and he always found opportunity and disposition to take an active part in every enterprise tending to the material improvement or advancement of the social and business interests of his town and county.

The bare probability that beneath the fertile fields of Washington county lay stores of buried wealth in the shape of oil and gas, was sufficient to arouse to activity in Mr. Caldwell his innate spirit of leadership, and he became the pioneer in these industries, which have in their development so largely contributed to the prosperity of western Pennsylvania. He drilled quite extensively for oil, and ten producing wells in Buffalo township repaid his enterprise and investment. In 1891 he organized The Leader Refining Company, of which he was the owner, and built on the B. & O. R. R., seven miles west of Washington, a refinery with a capacity of 100 barrels per day. At the organization of the People's Light & Heat Company—a corporation which supplies the boroughs of Washington with those two essentials—he became the principal stockholder, and was elected its president, a position he held during the rest of his life. At the time of his death he was a director of the Washington County Fire Insurance Company.

Mr. Caldwell was a man of wonderful push, pluck and perseverance, and it may be truly said that no man did more to advance the interests of Washington than did he. And these very qualities, which contributed so largely to the advantage of the community at large, brought to him his own almost unparalleled success, and made him one of the wealthiest men of Washington county. One of his especially distinguishing characteristics was his love of home. His wife and children were to him the dearest objects in life, and his happiest moments were those spent by his own fireside surrounded by his loved ones. His residence on East Wheeling street, Washington, one of the handsomest in the borough, improved and beautified to the highest degree, and surrounded by its broad and well kept lawn, bespeaks the refined and cultured taste of the once owner. An ardent lover of nature, passionately fond of flowers, Mr. Caldwell found great comfort in the study of these "angels of the grass," and owned the largest private conservatory in western Pennsylvania. Gifted with an inquiring mind, he loved to investigate the mysteries of nature, of life and death. Surrounded by the conflict of creeds and theories, in the twilight of uncertainty he set his face toward the light and sought for Truth, and firmly stood by and fearlessly proclaimed the result of his investigation. While many of his friends and neighbors differed from him in religious opinions advanced, not one was found to question the sterling honesty of the advocate. Possessing a nature sympathetic, generous and just, he was moved by the sufferings or misfortunes of his fellow-man; the open hand of deserving charity found him ever a willing giver, and he was just to render unto every man his due. While interested in all questions of government and State, and a staunch Democrat in sentiment, yet he preferred the quiet of home life as a private citizen, to the turmoil of political struggles.

On October 27, 1892, after weeks of wasting illness, Mr. Caldwell passed from earth, and his remains now rest on the hillside in the beautiful Washington cemetery, which overlooks the town where most of his busy life was spent. Years and generations yet to be will feel the influence of the life of A. B. Caldwell.

DR. E. F. DODD. Among the many influential and enterprising families of Washington county, the name of Dodd stands among the oldest and most esteemed of the early pioneer settlers, and of that honored name our subject is a worthy representative.

Daniel Dodd (1) was born in England, and in 1612 immigrated to America, locating in Branford, Conn., where his son Stephen (1) was born. The latter married in Connecticut, and reared a family of whom a son Daniel (2) also married and passed his life in that State. Of Daniel's (2) sons are recorded the names of Stephen (2), Daniel and John. Stephen Dodd (2) was born April 15, 1703, in Guilford, Conn., and in early life moved to New Jersey, first locating in Newark, and finally settling in Mendham, same State. Of his children, two sons Thaddus and Daniel—became pioneer settlers of Washington county, Penn.

Thaddus Dodd was born March 7, 1740, in Newark, N. J. His parents were "poor in worldly goods, but rich in faith," and his boyhood was passed under the influence of the most devout Christians, and in the midst of religious revivals. In early youth he evinced a strong inclination for study, and passed much of his time in delving into the mysteries of mathematics (in which he especially excelled) and the ancient languages. On July 18, 1764, he was converted during the progress of a great revival, and this important event molded and directed his future life, which was to be so full of service for the Master. He entered Princeton College in his thirty-first year, and graduated in the autumn of 1773. The following is quoted from the sketch given at the centennial celebration of the Ten-Mile Churches, August 28, 1879, by Rev. James Allison, D. D.

Soon after graduation he went to Newark, N. J., where he married Miss Phebe Baldwin, and entered upon the study of theology, under the direction of Rev. Dr. McWhorter. One year later he removed to Morristown, N. J., and continued the same line of study under Rev. Dr. Johns, who had been his first instructor in Latin. He was licensed to preach the Gospel by the Presbytery of New York, but there is no existing record of the date at which this took place. Through the winter of 1776-77, he suffered from a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism; but in the month of March, though still feeble, he started upon a journey to the West. After preaching in parts of Virginia and Maryland, he crossed the mountains, visited the settlements on George's creek, Muddy creek and Dunlap's creek, and then came to Ten Mile. He remained here until August, preaching in private houses, in the woods, and in Lindley's and Bell's forts. After his return to the East he was ordained by the Presbytery of New York as an evangelist, on some day of the week preceding Sabbath, October 19, 1777, as there is a record of baptisms by him on that Sabbath, in which it is said that this was the first Sabbath after his ordination. Shortly after this he left New Jersey with his wife and daughter (three years old), and a son still younger, accompanied by two brothers and their families. On the 10th of November they arrived at Patterson's creek, Hampshire Co., Va., and after hearing of the formidable attack which had been made by the Indians upon Wheeling, and the consequent alarm and confusion prevailing in all the frontier settlements, it was thought best not to proceed any farther at that time. But in a few days he crossed the mountains alone, came to Ten Mile, preached in the forts, and baptized the children. In a short time he returned to his family, and it is not known that he visited this place again until he brought his family and settled down permanently in the fall of 1779—one hundred years ago. In the interval he had not been idle, but had been busily engaged in preaching the Gospel in the adjacent parts of Virginia and Maryland, where no churches seem to have been then organized, at least there were no church buildings, as all the services were held at private houses or in the woods. He was entreated to remain, and inducements apparently stronger than any held out by Ten Mile were brought to bear upon him, but he had given his pledge to the people here—his heart was here—and hither he came in September, 1779.

In personal appearance Thaddus Dodd is thus described: "A pale, slender youth with jet-black hair, dark, piercing eyes, and a countenance highly expressive of mental power and activity." After coming to Washington county, Mr. Dodd first resided near the Lindleys, in what is now Morris township, and on November 22, 1786, he took a patent for 400 acres of land in Amwell township, called "Fame" (which was situated on the middle fork of Ten-Mile creek), and there made his permanent home. To Thaddus and Phebe (Baldwin) Dodd were born two sons and three daughters: Cephas, Stephen, Hannah, Sarah and Mary. The Rev. Thaddus Dodd was an exceptionally cultured and scholarly man. His early years of preparation and association with the most cultivated minds of the day, combined with his natural gifts and experience as a teacher, especially fitted him for his brilliant and useful career as a leading educator and minister of the Gospel. Always a student he was familiar with the languages, and excelled in the natural sciences and mathematics. Deeply realizing the need of a broader education for young men in the West, Dr. Dodd opened a classical and mathematical school in 1782, especially designed to prepare young men for the ministry. This school continued three years and a half. In 1789 he became principal of an academy at Washington, Penn., which position he filled fifteen months. On August 15, 1871, the first Presbyterian Church was organized, and in 1785 the first church building was erected, but just as the Society was beginning to grow, and success was crowning his efforts, the heroic minister yielded to the disease (consumption) that had so long been weakening his system, and on May 20, 1793, passed to his reward. His funeral sermon was preached from Revelations xiv: 13, by Rev. Dr. McMillan, his associate pioneer minister of Washington county, and he was followed to the grave by a grateful and sorrowing people, for a "Prince in Israel had fallen."

Cephas Dodd was born October 12, 1789, on his father's farm in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., and studied at home during his earlier years, receiving his later education at Canonsburg, where he early evinced the ability which distinguished his later life. While a student he spent his leisure time in the study of medicine, and at the time of his graduation had so thorough a knowledge of the science, that he was often consulted professionally. After leaving college, he entered the ministry, in which he zealously labored many years, but when his skill as a physician became known, his services were so often needed that he continued to practice both professions till his death. He preached his last sermon and visited a distant patient two days before yielding to his last sickness. He practiced both in Greene and Washington counties. In 1805 Cephas Dodd was united in marriage with Ruth Fleniken, of Greene county, Penn., and the young people immediately settled in Amwell township, this county, where the following children were born: Jane (Mrs. Dr. Simon Strouss), Sarah (Mrs. John McFarland), Thaddeus, Cornelia, Eliza, Hannah, James, Cephas and Elias F. In reference to the personal qualities of Cephas Dodd, we quote the following from the address of Rev. Allison: "This son (Cephas) is said to have possessed a clear and strong mind, enriched by manly culture and varied learning; remarkable gentleness and amiability of temper; great practical wisdom; a tranquil and steady piety; high devotion and loyalty as a friend; in short, a combination of qualities, a character complete, harmonious and symmetrical in an unusual degree." Concerning his work as a pastor, Rev. Allison says: "He was the second successor of his honored father, and was installed as pastor of the Ten-Mile congregations in Amity, with, as Dr. Wines declares, 'the open canopy of heaven for a temple, the snow for a carpet, and the wind whistling through the leafless branches of the trees as an accompaniment to the solemn music, as it pealed forth from a choir of hundreds of voices.'" In politics Cephas Dodd was an adherent of the Whig party. He died January 16, 1858.

Dr. Elias F. Dodd, the subject proper of this sketch, was born December 1, 1823, in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his youth on the home farm until the year 1841, then he entered Washington College, from which he was graduated in 1818. After his graduation he at once began the study of medicine, commencing to practice in 1853, and has since followed the profession, being now regarded as one of the leading physicians of the county. On May 12, 1853, he was married to Margaret, daughter of Eli Bradford, of Greene county, Penn., and immediately afterward settled in Franklin township, this county. In 1867 he moved to his present residence. Dr. and Mrs. Dodd have had a family of four children: Cephas T., Lillie J. (deceased in infancy), Elias F. (also deceased in infancy), and Samuel B. (on the home farm). Of these Samuel B. married Mary C., daughter of David Clark, of Buffalo township, and two children have been born to them: Lizzie and William; Samuel B. was a school director. Dr. Elias F. Dodd has always been a leading member of the Whig and Republican parties, and for the past two years has been a justice of the peace.

Dr. Cephas T. Dodd was born April 21, 1851, on the home farm in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his general education at Washington and Jefferson College. He secured his medical training at Cleveland Medical College, from which he was graduated in March, 1881, and he then immediately began practice as a physician. On June 30, 1881, he was united in marriage with Ella C., daughter of James W. Patterson, and two sons have come to cheer their home: John A., born September 7, 1882, and Frank C., born July 23, 1888. In politics Dr. Cephas T. Dodd is a Republican. In 1877 he was clerk in the treasury office at Washington, and traveled for four months over the county under Col. A. L. Hawkins, county treasurer, collecting taxes; in 1879 he was chief clerk in the county treasurer's office under S. C. McGregor, county treasurer.

JAMES W. PATTERSON, in his day a leading citizen of Franklin township, was born May 1, 1815, in Washington county, Penn. He attended the subscription schools of the home neighborhood, and early evinced an unusual aptitude for business. He began life with but little financial aid, and November 1, 1836, was married to Caroline Van Kirk, who was born July 1, 1817. Some time after their marriage the young couple moved to Athens county, Ohio, where they lived two years, and then came to Franklin township, Washington county, where he purchased an improved farm, upon which he erected fine buildings, and was extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits, becoming a very prosperous business man, and dealing in stock and wool. Mrs. Patterson died March 11, 1862, leaving a family of eleven daughters, namely: Parmelia, wife of John N. Andrews; Mahala A., deceased; Sarah, wife of Hiram McClain; Evaline, married to Oliver L. Hart; Minerva, deceased wife of C. M. Minton; Mary P., wife of Joseph Hunter; Miranda V., married to B. C. Lindley; Emma, deceased; Ella C., wife of Dr. Cophas T. Dodd; Caroline L., wife of Joseph M. Clark, and Martha A., married to Clarence Munon. For his second wife Mr. Patterson was married, on August 15, 1865, to Mrs. Ann Elliott, who died October 20, 1885, having been preceded to the grave by her husband, May 24, 1884. Mr. Patterson was a member of the Democratic party. He was actively interested in religious matters, and contributed liberally to the support of the Master's cause; he was an elder of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at the time of his death.

JAMES Q. MCGIFFIN. Nathaniel McGiffin, great-grandfather of this gentleman, was a native of Scotland, from whence he removed to Ireland in his youth, with his father's family. He came to America prior to the Revolutionary war, entered the Continental army, in which he served, participating in the battles of Brandywine and Trenton, and experiencing the memorable winter of Valley Forge. He served for a time under Gen. La Fayette and received an honorable discharge at the end of the war, signed by Gen. Washington. By occupation he was a farmer, and about the year 1781 he made a settlement on Ten Mile creek, Amwell township, this county, where he died. He had two children, viz.: one daughter, Elizabeth, married to Jacob Cook, a farmer, who died in Texas.

His only son, Thomas, was born in Amwell township, in this county, January 1, 1784, and received his education at Canonsburg Academy, studied law with Parker Campbell, Esq., and was admitted to the bar of Washington county, in February, 1807. He commenced practice at Vincennes, Ind., and was also admitted at St. Louis, to practice in the then Territory of Louisiana. In 1809 he returned to Washington county, and during the remainder of his life continued in practice in the chief borough and in adjoining counties, a portion of the time in partnership with John L. Gow, Sr. At the same time he carried on his farm in Amwell township, which he stocked with thoroughbred cattle from Henry Clay's farm in Kentucky. He enjoyed the friendship of Mr. Clay, with whom he interchanged letters expressive of mutual esteem and confidence. He was interested in politics, and in 1836 represented the county in the Legislature. Thomas McGiffin was one of the contractors who built the Cumberland road, also known as the "National Road," and had large contracts in Washington and Fayette counties, Penn., and in Virginia; associated with him in the enterprise were Maj. John H. Ewing, Judge Baird and others. He was married to Maria Norton, a native of Connecticut. To Thomas and Maria (Norton) McGiffin were born children as follows: Nathaniel (deceased), who was a merchant in Knox county, Ohio; Thomas, Jr. (deceased in 1890, at the age of seventy years), was an attorney in Washington, Penn., having been admitted to the bar in 1841 (in 1865 he removed to Fairfield, Iowa, where he carried on farming); George Wallace (died in Washington, Penn., when young); Philo Norton (died in boyhood); Norton, the father of the subject of this sketch; Maria, married to Thomas Boyd, died in Connellsville, Penn.; Julia, married to Rev. William Hamilton, for years a missionary among the Indians, is deceased; Margaret, married to Rev. W. B. McIlvaine, formerly of East End, Pittsburgh, late of Peoria, Ill. (deceased), died at the latter place in February, 1891; Ann, unmarried, lives in Peoria. The father of this family was an able lawyer, a genial wholesouled man, and enjoyed the esteem of a wide circle of friends.

Norton McGiffin, son of Thomas, Sr., was born January 23, 1824, in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., and received his primary education at the public schools of the borough, after which he attended Washington College, from which he graduated in 1841. Subsequently, for a period of two years, he read law with Nathaniel Ewing, Esq., at Uniontown, Penn., and then, the Mexican war having broken out, he enlisted in the First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Company K (this company was known as the "Du Quesne Greys"), at Pittsburgh, and served throughout the entire struggle, participating in the siege of Pueblo, the storming of the Castle of Chapultepec, City of Mexico and Vera Cruz. His company was surrounded in the streets of Pueblo, and the greater part of it was cut to pieces, but he escaped serious injury. At the close of this war he was commissioned colonel by the governor of Pennsylvania. On his return to the pursuits of peace he was elected treasurer of Washington county, serving from 1849 to 1852, after which he farmed until he was elected sheriff, an incumbency he filled from 1859 to 1861. In response to President Lincoln's call for 75,000 volunteers in the war of the Rebellion, he led the first company that left Washington for the front, known as the "Washington Invincibles." This company left Washington April 20, 1861, and in Pittsburgh was incorporated as Company E, in the Twelfth P. V. I., upon the organization of which Norton McGiffin was elected lieutenant colonel. At the close of the three months' service Col. McGiffin was commissioned lieutenant colonel of the Eighty-fifth P. V. I., Col. J. B. Howell, under Gen. McClellan, serving in the Peninsular campaign, during which he was stricken with disease from which he still suffers. Being disabled, he resigned his commission and returned to Washington, a mere shadow of his former self. About the close of the war he went to Ohio county, W. Va., where he resided until 1870, then returned to Washington county. In 1880 he was elected to the House of Representatives, serving until 1882, in which year he removed to Ida Grove, Ida Co., Iowa, where he engaged in farming. In 1885 he proceeded to Fair Haven, Cayuga Co., N. Y., and in 1890 was appointed U. S. Consul at Port Rowan, on Lake Erie, Ontario (Canada), with headquarters at Simcoe, a few miles further north. On March 13, 1892, he was appointed U. S. Consul at Port Hope, Canada, where he now resides. In 1853 he was married to Miss Sarah Houston, daughter of James Quail, one of the early settlers of North Strabane township, having come about the year 1816; of his children, William lives near Topeka, Kans.; Alexander in Ida Grove, Iowa, and a daughter (Mrs. George F. McCombs) in Allegheny, Penn. To Col. and Mrs. McGiffin were born six children, five of whom are yet living, viz.: Sallie Quail, widow of G. W. Henshaw, of Virginia; Thomas, living at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands; James Quail, subject proper of these lines; Philo Norton, superintendent of the "Imperial Chinese Naval College" at We Hai Wei, China (he is a graduate of the U. S. Naval Academy, at Annapolis, Md., and for a time was in the U. S. Navy); and Nathaniel, at present a student at Hamilton College, New York.

James Quail McGiffin was born September 21, 1856, in Amwell township, this county, at the common schools of which place he received his primary education. Afterward he entered Washington and Jefferson College, but while in the sophomore year he left for California, where he remained four years. On his return to Washington, in 1878, he read law with John W. Donnan, Esq., and was admitted to the bar of Washington county, January 9, 1882. In the spring of the same year he moved to Ida Grove, Iowa, where he remained, engaged in the practice of law till March 1891, when he returned to Washington and resumed the practice of his profession. In December, 1884, Mr. McGiffin was married to Miss Carrie, daughter of Noble Ruggles, of Manchester, Iowa, and two children have come to brighten their home—Norton and Helen Elizabeth. Politically our subject is a Republican.

JAMES K. MITCHELL, one of the representative business citizens of Washington, and a typical self made man, is a native of Missouri, born in Pike county August 15, 1853. His grandfather, Alexander Mitchell, in an early day made a settlement, in company with his brother Andrew, at Short Creek, W. Va., on a farm. Alexander married a Miss Jacobs, a native of near Wellsburg, that State, and children as follows were born to them: Isaac, who died in St. Louis, Mo. (one of his sons, John, is clerk of the county courts at Wheeling, W. Va.; two other sons Zachariah, an attorney, and Samuel, a merchant—live in St. Louis, Mo.); Samuel, who died in Wheeling, W. Va.; Jane, who died December 9, 1892, and Zachariah, the father of James K.

Zachariah Mitchell was born in 1816, in West Virginia, where he was reared to agricultural pursuits, which he followed for some time; later he became a contractor in Texas, where he was living at the time of the breaking out of the Rebellion; he served in the Confederate army as a commissary. The war crippled him financially, and at the close of the struggle he went to Lexington, Mo., where he died in 1882. He was a Democrat in his political predilections, and at one time was assessor for Clay county. In Wheeling, W. Va., he was married to Miss Ann, daughter of George Baird, who was a son of Absalom Baird, of Revolutionary fame, and the children born to this union were George B.; Alexander, treasurer of the Mutual Savings Bank of Wheeling; Martha B.; Isaac W., and James K. The mother died in Missonri August 28, 1853, when the subject of these lines was two weeks old.

Until the age of five years James K. Mitchell was reared at the home of his uncle, Isaac Mitchell, in St. Louis, Mo., and was then brought by the family to Washington, this county. Here he attended the public schools, and at the age of fourteen commenced to work in the Baird grocery as clerk, remaining there till 1882, a period of fifteen years. In that year he bought an interest in the Budke Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of powder cans, at Canonsburg, where the sheet-iron mills, in which his brother George B. Mitchell had an interest, were located. The latter was also connected with the Riverside Iron Works of Wheeling; he died in March, 1890, leaving a widow and two children, now living in Washington. In 1884 our subject sold out his interest in the powder can industry to the Canonsburg Iron Company, and on January 1, 1885, embarked in the grain and agricultural implement business in Washington borough, in partnership with J. A. Howden, their place of business being situated where the B. & O. R. R. station now stands. In this they continued till the following January, when Mr. Mitchell bought out his partner's interest, and his uncle, A. T. Baird, became associated with him, which arrangement remained in force until the death of Mr. Baird in March, 1887. In January, 1888, Mr. John W. Seaman became partner with Mr. Mitchell in the general hardware and house furnishing business, under the firm name of Mitchell & Seaman. This partnership continued until May, 1892, when Mr. Mitchell sold his interest to Mr. J. W. Seaman and rented the room on the corner of Main and Wheeling streets, from W. C. Bryson, and organized "The Dime Savings Institution of Washington," which was opened for business January 1, 1893, with Dr. Thomas McKennan as president and Mr. Mitchell as cashier.

On July 14, 1885, Mr. Mitchell was united in marriage with Miss Frances J., daughter of Joseph F. Osborne, of Clarksburg, W. Va., whose family were originally of Fayette county, Penn., whence they moved to West Virginia. To this union have been born three children: Osborne, Baird and Susan Baird. Politically Mr. Mitchell is a Republican, and has served his borough as treasurer. For the past six years he has been treasurer of the Western Pennsylvania Agricultural Association, and is at present treasurer of the Mutual Building and Loan Association. He has been a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington since 1876, and in 1884 was elected an elder in same.

JOHN A. BEST. John Best, Sr., was born in Benburb, County Armagh, Ireland, in May, 1780. From his early training and constant reading in the land of his nativity, he learned much of the United States, and her progress.

He and his wife landed in Philadelphia in 1811, and thence journeyed over the Alleghany mountains in a wagon to Pittsburgh, and hearing of Washington county as a great wool-growing section, he concluded that the county seat, or its neighborhood, would be a proper place to settle in, and to that place he went, not by stage or railroad, but by wagon, then the only mode of conveyance. He purchased the property on the north-east corner of Beau and Franklin streets, and there erected and engaged in the wool carding business, where the first stationary engine in Washington county was placed and owned by him. He remained as a prominent citizen of Washington till 1856, when his two sons, John and William, purchased farms near New Concord, Guernsey Co., Ohio. His wife being dead, and his daughter married to James S. Bushfield, he concluded to leave his adopted town and go and live with them. John Best, Sr., while still a resident of Washington was one of the committee to receive Gen. La Fayette on his last visit to this country when he was on his way over the old National pike to visit George Washington at Mount Vernon. John Best, Sr., was a Mason, having entered that order in Ireland, in Lodge No. 722, which Lodge was organized in 1788, his own father having procured its charter from the Grand Lodge of Ireland, and the meetings were held in his house. He died in 1878 at the advanced age of ninety-eight years, the oldest Mason at that time in the country.

John Best had four sons to survive him: Samuel, James, John and William. Samuel married Miss Isabella Dickson, to whom were born Isabella D., wife of John Woodcock, of McCune, Kans.; Ellen R., wife of R. A. Anderson, of Claysville, Penn., and John A. Samuel Best died in New Orleans of yellow fever, and his wife died in Buffalo township, Washington county, in 1881, at the age of seventy-five years, a devout Christian, and a loving and beloved mother, esteemed by all who knew her.

John A. Best, the son of Samuel and Isabella Best, was born in Washington, May 20, 1838. In 1853 he was a newsboy on the Examiner, a weekly newspaper owned at that time by Thomas Grayson, shortly after which he learned the printing trade on the same paper. He worked at his trade on the Pittsburgh Dispatch, for some time, and then went to New York. After being there some time he returned to Pittsburgh and started a steam job printing office, and branched out into the mercantile business, which he has been in ever since. On Thanksgiving Day, 1869, he moved to Washington, and opened a general store and printing office on the corner of Main and Chestnut streets, where the Washington Observer was first printed by him under the editorship of Horace Durant. During the financial panic of 1873 he failed and lost everything, leaving him in debt, but he has since paid every cent that he ever owed, and now owns one of the largest businesses in the county, occupying No. 73, 75, 77, 79, 81, 83 and 85 North Main street, and constantly adding to it; he is not only progressive but aggressive, and that is the secret of his success.

On September 3, 1863, Mr. Best married Jennie D., daughter of John E. Roberts, of Hartford, Conn., and there were born to them seven children, five of whom are still living: Grattan G., Nellie M., Albion E., Jennie I. and John A., Jr. Mrs. Best is an active worker in the W. C. T. U., of which she is president, and devotes a great deal of time to local charity and doing good. In 1879 Mr. Best, with some other public-spirited citizens, built the Washington Lead Works, which were destroyed by fire in 1883. He is a believer in Divine healing, and is president of the board of directors of Bethany Home, No. 113 Centre avenue, Pittsburgh, an institution for the education of young men for the ministry and missionary field.

Grattan G., son of John A. and Jennie D. Best, was born in Pittsburgh, Penn., June 9, 1864. He came in 1869 with his father to Washington, where he was educated, spending two years at Trinity Hall, being the first scholar enrolled in that institution, and then went to Washington and Jefferson College, class of 1885. He studied bookkeeping at Duff's Commercial College, Pittsburgh, and has ever since been in business with his father. Mr. Best is a member of the Masonic Fraternity, being past eminent commander of Jacques de Molay Commandery No. 3, the second oldest Commandery in the State, and is a thirty-second degree Mason. At the time Mr. Best was eminent commander he was the youngest commander in the State. On February 25, 1886, Grattan G. Best married Carrie, daughter of Jonathan Brownlee, of Buffalo township. Mr. Best is a practical printer, and now publishes the Weekly Financial Economist. He says he does not remember the time when he could not set a stick of type, as he was raised in a printing office. He is very much interested in Sabbath-school work, and is superintendent of Jefferson Avenue M. E. Church Sunday-school, also president of the Epworth League.

FREDERICK WHITTLESEY, M. D., for nearly forty years a resident of the borough of Washington, and one of the leading physicians of the county, is a native of Ohio, having been born in Atwater township, Portage county, March 6, 1830.

The family name is one of prominence in the Buckeye State. John H. Whittlesey, grandfather of the Doctor, was the fifth person to settle in Atwater township, Portage Co., Ohio, making a home for himself and family in the wild woods. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. Elisha Whittlesey, who was member of Congress from 1823 to 1839, and first comptroller of the U. S. Treasury for nearly thirty years, and William Whittlesey, who represented his district in the Ohio State Senate in 1839, and was elected to Congress in 1848, and also Charles Whittlesey, the State geologist of Ohio, were near relatives. Friend Whittlesey, cousin of our subject, is a member of the present Ohio Legislature.

John B. Whittlesey, father of Dr. F. Whittlesey, now aged eighty-seven years, is still living in Ohio, where he has followed farming. He was married, in 1828, to Emeline Mix, of Atwater, who died in Portage county, Ohio, in 1866, leaving four children: Frederick (subject), Mary (now deceased), Emma (wife of Rev. Wilson, of Canton, Ohio), and Charles (killed on the railroad, in 1867, when thirty-five years of age); Julia Helen, the third child in order of birth, died in infancy.

Frederick Whittlesey received his literary education entirely in his native county, where he also read medicine, finishing his studies in 1855. He then commenced the practice of his profession in Portage county, but in 1856 he came to this county, taking up his residence in Washington, where he has since remained and built up an enviable practice which extends to all portions of the State, his specialty being chronic diseases. In 1851 the Doctor was united in marriage with Miss Laura L. Teel, of Alliance, Ohio, who died in 1853, leaving one child, Josephine, wife of Amos Benjamin, of Portage county, Ohio. In 1855 the Doctor was married, the second time, to Mrs. Hannah Chittendon, of Youngstown, Ohio, who died June 3, 1892. Socially the Doctor is a member of the Masonic Fraternity, in which he held the position of D. D. G. M. for ten successive years, and is the present treasurer of the Chapter and Commandery. In politics he is a Republican. The Doctor is not a member of any church. His religious views are inclined to be agnostic, and while very decided in his opinions, he is not in the habit of thrusting his ideas upon others whom he has reason to believe differ with him. He believes that enlightened human reason, untrammelled by prejudice, is the highest tribunal known to man, and that every rational being has a right to decide for himself all questions pertaining to his present or future welfare.

COL. L. M. MARSH, one of the representative business men of Washington, was born June 24, 1824, at Orange, Essex Co., N. J., the eldest child of Abraham R. and Sarah (Munn) Marsh, both natives of New Jersey.

Abraham R. Marsh, father of our subject, was born July 8, 1800, in Rahway, N. J., where he was reared and educated. He learned the trade of shoemaker, which he followed in connection with storekeeping for many years, and he lived to a patriarchal age, dying in 1890, when ninety years and two days old. He had married Sarah, daughter of David Munn, of New Jersey, and their children were L. M., David, Stephen, Harriet, George, Abraham, Charles, and Henry and Mary (twins). The mother died in Huron county, Ohio, in 1860, aged fifty-eight years. The father of this family was a Whig in politics, but a Republican as soon as that party was organized. In religious connection he was an old-time member of the Presbyterian Church, in which for sixty years he was an elder.

Col. L. M. Marsh passed his boyhood in his native county until he was thirteen years old, when he accompanied his parents to Coshocton, Ohio.

the family residing there two years, then moved to Huron county, Ohio, where they made their home some years. Our subject remained in Coshocton county until he was twenty one years old, and then proceeded to Marietta, Ohio, where he worked at the tailor's trade, which he had learned in Coshocton county. From Marietta he moved to West Virginia, remaining there until 1862, in which year he joined Company E, Tenth W. Va. Volunteer Infantry, as captain, which regiment was assigned to the army of the Potomac, and did guard duty throughout the early part of their service. At the battle of Kernstown he was wounded in the foot, and was left on the field, where he was captured by the Confederates, who took him to Libby prison. After two months' confinement there he was paroled, and in six months thereafter was exchanged. During the six months he was on duty as member of a Court Martial at Baltimore, Md. He rejoined his regiment, and shortly after was mustered out with the command, our subject being then lieutenant-colonel. Col. Marsh then came to Washington, Penn., where he was for the next two years engaged as a bookkeeper, and then (1870) received the appointment as secretary and treasurer for the Washington County Fire Insurance Company, which position he still fills. He also does a large real-estate business, his son, Addison C., being associated with him, the style of the firm being L. M. Marsh & Son. On January 14, 1850, Col. Marsh was married to Louisa, daughter of Asa McCollum, of Washington county, and two children were born to them, viz.: Ella (Mrs. William S. Parker) and Addison C. Our subject is a member of the M. E. Church; in politics he was originally a Whig, and since the organization of the party has been a Republican.

SAMUEL M. CHARLTON, proprietor of the well known and long established confectionery business in Washington, comes of German ancestry. His grandfather, Robert Charlton, a native of Germany, came to Washington county in 1813, and died at Cook's Place, Chartiers township, in 1828, his wife (who had accompanied him from the Fatherland) dying some time later. They had a family of seven children, of whom only one, James, survives—his home being in Iowa.

Samuel Charlton, eldest son of Robert, was born in Germany and came with his parents to this country and county. By occupation he was a wagoner, or teamster, on the National Pike between Washington, Penn., and Baltimore, Md. He was twice married: first time to Miss Shippe, who died leaving two children: Robert (now deceased) and Frank (in Mannington, W. Va.). His second marriage was with Mrs. Elizabeth Morrow, nee Hewey, a lady of Irish parentage, and they had a family of five children, as follows: John H., in Washington; Mary, wife of Fred Hood, of Washington; Susan, also in that borough; Rebecca, deceased wife of Henry Llewellen (she died in 1871), and Samuel M., subject of sketch. The parents soon after marriage came to live in the borough of Washington, where the father died about the year 1858, at the age of sixty years, the mother in 1875, aged sixty five.

Samuel M. Charlton was born in Washington, this county, in 1847, and received a liberal education in the schools of the borough. In boyhood he learned the trade of tobacconist with Thomas McKean, and followed same for fourteen years in his native town. In 1876 he opened a confectionery store on Main street, and in 1889 removed it to East Maiden street, where he has since continued. In 1871 Mr. Charlton was united in marriage with Eliza, daughter of William Hays, of Waynesburg, Greene Co., Penn. Her parents at one time lived in Washington county, whence they moved to Greene county, where her widowed mother now lives; her father at one time was clerk of the courts of Washington county. To Mr. and Mrs. Hays were born children as follows: James, John, Eliza, Catherine, Margaret, George, Ella and Matilda. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Samuel M. Charlton, viz.: Sarah Hedge and William Hays (both deceased), and Alfred W., Nannie E., Marion Elizabeth and Sabina Pearl, all living at home. Politically Mr. Charlton is a Republican, and, in religious connection, a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington.

WILLIAM SMITH, who in his lifetime was one of the most prominent and enterprising citizens of Washington borough, was a native of Beaver county, Penn., born near Darlington, August 15, 1800.

Until he was twenty years of age he worked on his father's farm, and in 1821, in company with his brother James, he came to Washington and opened a general store. The brothers remained in the borough about one year, and then removed to Philadelphia, where they engaged in the same business on Market street, on a more extensive scale. They met with success, but about the year 1825, owing to the failing health of James, the business was disposed of, and the brothers returned to western Pennsylvania, William locating in Uniontown, where he once more embarked in mercantile business. In 1828 he returned to Washington and opened a store in a house where the Watson block now stands, south of the Public Square. The business from the very start proved a success. In 1835 he purchased from Rev. Thomas Hogue the north-east corner of Main and Beau streets, to which he moved his store. Prior to this he had bought of Judge Baird the "Round Corner." In 1861 he erected the magnificent brick and iron structure on the northwest corner of Main and Beau streets, known as the "Iron Hall." In 1853 he received his son William W. into partnership, the name of the firm becoming William Smith & Son, which yet remains. At an early day, Mr. Smith commenced a private banking business, which he also made a success, and on his retirement from active business life about the year 1867, the private banking house of William Smith & Son was firmly established.

While a resident of Uniontown Mr. Smith met Miss Wrenshall, of Pittsburgh, whom he subsequently (1828) married in Stenbouville, Ohio, to which union were born two children, of whom W. W., the present head of the business, survives; the other one was Fanny Fielding, who became the wife of Ferdinand Varro. In the fall of 1861, after a long and painful illness, Mrs. Smith died, and her husband subsequently married, in Philadelphia, Mrs. Newell (a widow) of that city, a daughter of John Simes, one of the early citizens of Washington. Several years afterward, Mr. Smith, having retired from business, purchased a pleasant home in Philadelphia, to which he removed, and here his second wife died in the winter of 1886. He continued to reside in Philadelphia till the spring of the following year, when he returned to Washington, where he peacefully and painlessly passed away on Tuesday evening, July 12, 1887, in the eighty-seventh year of his age. Mr. Smith was in his younger life an adherent of the Covenantan Church, but while a resident of Washington he was an active member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. When he removed to Philadelphia he connected himself with the United Presbyterian Church, under whose banner he died.

W. W. SMITH was born August 15, 1830, in Washington, Penn., a son of William and Fanny (Wrenshall) Smith. His elementary studies were pursued in the preparatory department of Washington College, under Prof. Robert Milligan, and in 1848 he entered the freshman class. After his graduation, in 1852, he commenced commercial life in his father's dry-goods store and banking office, becoming a partner in 1853, as already related. Mr. Smith had studied law in the office of Robert H. Kuntz, but was not admitted to the bar, having exclusively devoted himself to the business upon which he had entered. During the Civil war he served as a volunteer aid-de-camp on the staff of Gen. U. S. Grant, both in the Southwest and in Virginia. On June 13, 1867, he married Miss Emma Willard McKennan, daughter of Judge William McKennan, of the United States Court, of whom prominent mention is made elsewhere. To this union were born two children: William McKennan, assisting his father in the management of his business, and Ulysses S. Grant, instructor of military tactics and calisthenics at Trinity Hall. The mother died in 1879. Among the many distinguished guests present at the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Smith were Gen. U. S. Grant (who was a frequent visitor at their pleasant home), wife and sons, and of the General's staff were present Gen. Hilyer and Col. William Dunn.

Mr. Smith was elected treasurer of the Episcopal Church in 1853, holding said office until 1892; was three times representative of the diocese of Pittsburgh in the general conventions of the church, held respectively in Boston (1877), in New York (1880) and in Philadelphia (1883), and for many years has been one of the board of trustees of Washington and Jefferson College. He is proprietor and Rector of Trinity Hall, a select boarding school for boys in Washington, Penn. He is the owner of much valuable business property in Washington borough, including the well-known "Iron Hall" block; of numerous fine farms in the county; lands in Florida and West Virginia, besides valuable residence property in Philadelphia.

TRINITY HALL.

In 1866 Mr. W. W. Smith became owner, by purchase, of this fine property where he resided until the death of his wife. The school was established in 1879 by Mr. Smith, mainly in order that his own sons should be instructed at their home. The original building was erected in 1857 as a private residence, owned and occupied by Joseph McKnight, and, since its purchase by Mr. W. W. Smith, who occupied it as a private residence for over twelve years, it has been greatly enlarged from time to time, as the growth of the patronage of the school demanded. The Rev. Fred C. Cowper, of Amesbury, Mass., pays the following tribute to the excellency of Trinity Hall and its surroundings: "The school grounds contain forty acres situated in a rich and beautiful hill country, 1,200 feet above tide water, and surrounded by wide-spreading maples, elms, lindens and evergreens, with orchards, gardens and vineyards, through which wind broad drives bordered by well kept lawns. There has never been sickness in the school. Delicate boys become strong and manly in its pure health giving atmosphere. The morals of the place are pure; the tone elevating and refining. Under the present management, the household in all departments is suitable for the sons of gentlemen, and has all the comforts of a refined home. It is a lovely spot indeed, favored by nature, developed by the best skill of the landscape gardener, kept up by those who take pride in it; and fortunate is the boy who is permitted to spend his school days at Trinity Hall."

GEORGE ARMSTRONG LINN, M. D., for well nigh a quarter of a century has practiced his profession at Monongahela, where, and in the neighborhood, he has, as a skillful and successful physician, established a reputation second to none in the county. He is a native of the Keystone State, born in Butler county December 8, 1831. He is the son of Dr. George and Elizabeth (Gibson) Linn, a sketch of whose lives is given in the biography of Prof. Alonzo Linn.

The subject proper of this sketch received his education at the common schools of his native place, and at Morrison's Academy, at Monongahela. He then commenced the study of medicine and entered Jefferson Medical College, in Philadelphia, where he completed a full course, graduating in 1869. Dr. Linn at once located in Monongahela, and has since been one of the leading physicians of that city and surrounding country. On June 12, 1861, the Doctor married Frances, daughter of Joseph Wall, of Allegheny county, whose wife was Frances Allen, daughter of David Allen. His father was Garrett Wall, whose wife was a daughter of Capt. Sparks, of the regular army. One daughter has been born to Dr. and Mrs. Linn: Hannah A., wife of Homer H. Swaney, of Pittsburgh. Our subject and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church of Monongahela. In politics he was a Whig, and, since the organization of the party, a Republican. He has served on the school board of his adopted city. He is self-made and self-educated, a man of excellent literary taste, and well acquainted with scientific questions, germane to his profession and otherwise.

JOHAN W. SEAMAN, junior member of the well known firm, Mitchell & Seaman, dealers in general hardware, etc., Washington, is a native of the borough, born in October, 1841.

The family came from New Jersey, and tradition says that the first to bear the name was a waif picked up, no more than alive, on the seashore, and given the name "Seaman." Joseph Seaman, great-grandfather of our subject, came to Washington, this county, in 1785, and died here; a blacksmith by trade, his shop stood on the site where is now the high school. Jacob, grandfather of J. W., a mason by trade, and who kept tavern for many years at Amity, Amwell township, was married to Lydia Jones, daughter of an early comer to the county; she was a native of Philadelphia, and when a girl migrated to this county, where she had several sisters living. Jacob Seaman and wife had a family of five children, viz.: John W., who died in Washington, leaving a widow and children;

Alexander and James are also dead, leaving children, and Thomas (all were residents of Washington county); and Mary, who died in infancy. The father of this family died about the year 1831.

Alexander Seaman, son of Jacob, was born in the borough of Washington in 1813, and received his education at the subscription schools of the place. He was brought up to the trade of mason, which he followed in early life, but abandoned for mercantile pursuits. About the year 1849 he opened out a grocery store in Washington, which he carried on for several years with considerable success. About 1837 he married Jean Dagg, daughter of Richard Dagg, of Strabane township, and granddaughter of Henry Taylor, a pioneer farmer of that township, coming to the county when the woods were still teeming with wild animals and hostile Indians; he was the first president judge of the county, and a prominent factor in the early politics of the State. To Alexander and Jean (Dagg) Seaman were born five children, three of whom grew to maturity, viz.: Mary, wife of Samuel Taggart, of Chartiers township; John W., and Margaret, wife of Joseph M. Spriggs, grocer, Washington. The parents both died in the borough in 1880, the mother in August, the father in November. Until 1860 he had been a Democrat, but after that date voted under the banner of the Republican party.

John W. Seaman received his education partly at the common schools of his native borough, supplemented by a partial course at Washington and Jefferson College. At the age of fourteen years he entered his father's store as clerk, remaining until 1874, in which year he was appointed deputy prothonotary, filling the incumbency four years; from 1878 to 1881 he was out of office, but in the latter year he was elected prothonotary, serving six years. In 1888 he entered into partnership with J. K. Mitchell in general hardware, house furnishings, etc., under firm name of Mitchell & Seaman, the business being one of the most successful and extensive in that line in the county. In 1869 Mr. Seaman married Louise Mills, of Washington, daughter of Andrew Mills, who, about 1830, came from the North of Ireland to Washington county. To this union seven children, all yet living, were born, named as follows: Nellie, James Alexander, Alice M., Jean D., Harry E., John T. and Margaret Louise. Mr. Seaman in his political preferences is a Republican, and has held with characteristic ability many offices of honor and trust in the county. He is secretary of the Mechanics Building & Loan Association, and of the Mutual Building & Loan Association. He is a prominent and influential member of the First M. E. Church, and superintendent of the Sunday-school of same.

COL. J. B. R. STREATOR is a native of Washington county, born March 12, 1856, at Lone Pine, where his father, Rev. Lyman Pierce Streator, was conducting an academy at the time. The latter was born in Portage county, Ohio, and was educated for the ministry of the Christian Church.

In 1812, being then twenty two years of age, he came to Washington county, Penn., where he preached for a time at Pancake, and then moved into Washington borough in 1870. In the meantime, in 1859, the family had proceeded to May's Lick, Ky., where they remained until the breaking out of the Civil war, when they returned to this county. At Lone Pine Mr. Streator founded an academy, which he kept for some time. In Washington county he married Miss Eliza, daughter of Jonathan Martin, to which union were born five children: Martin Lyman, pastor at Helena, Mont. (he is working for the Woman's Board Home Missions); Jonathan M., who formerly was a minister in Florida, but has now charge of the Ocala public schools, same State; Alexander Campbell, a physician in Washington, a sketch of whom follows this; Frank W., in the employ of A. B. Caldwell, Washington, Penn.; and Charlotte, deceased wife of Robert McDonough. The mother of these children dying, Mr. Streator married April 3, 1855, Rebecca Ruple, who was born in Washington, Penn., in 1827, a daughter of James Ruple who performed efficient service in the war of 1812-15. By this marriage there was one child, James B. R., the subject of this memoir. In 1866 Mr. Streator removed to Philadelphia, where he preached for six months; thence went to Braddocks Field, Penn., where, in the capacity of State Evangelist, he worked for the State Missionary Society. In May, 1867, he returned to Washington county, and is now a resident of South Strabane township. Politically Mr. Streator was for many years a consistent Democrat, but of late he has been standing in the van of the Prohibition party; socially, he is a Knight Templar.

Col. James B. R. Streator attended the public schools of the vicinity of his birth, and afterward Washington and Jefferson College, one year. He then read law in the office of I. Y. Hamilton, and in October, 1877, was admitted to the bar of Washington county. He practiced his profession in Washington until the formation of the Peoples Light & Heat Company, when he was chosen secretary and general superintendent of same, and he has since taken an active interest in the oil and gas development in the county. In July, 1877, Col. Streator married Emma, daughter of John McCoy, late of South Strabane township, where her widowed mother is yet living. Of this union seven children have been born, as follows: John McC., Rebecca, Jane, Emma, Bessie, James B. R.

and L. P., all at home except John, Bessie and L. P., who are deceased. Col. Streator has been a straight Democrat from early youth. Socially, he is a member of the F. & A. M. On January 25, 1881, the Colonel enlisted in Company H, Tenth Regiment N. G. P.; June 19, 1882, was promoted to adjutant, and August 8, 1887, was further promoted to lieutenant colonel, which rank he still holds. During the time of the riots in the coke regions he went with his regiment there, remaining on the spot and at the Morewood Works sixteen days.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL STREATOR, M. D., was born February 20, 1848, in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. When he was nine years of age his parents moved to Bethany, W. Va., and thence to Indiana, where they remained until 1851, when they returned to Washington county, at which time their son, Alexander C., was thirteen years old. He attended the high school, and afterward Washington and Jefferson College, from which he was graduated in 1866. Having decided on making the medical profession his life work, he at once, after graduation, commenced the study of medicine under the preceptorship of his uncle, Dr. David G. Streator, of Bedford, Ohio; but on account of declining health he was obliged to abandon reading for a time. Regaining his health, he renewed his medical studies, this time with Dr. Thomas McKenna, and then, in 1882, took his degree of M. D. at Cleveland Medical College. For a short time afterward he practiced his profession at Belle Vernon, Penn., and then came to the borough of Washington, where he has since remained in general practice, meeting with eminent success. In 1877 Dr. Streator was united in marriage with Miss Ann Eliza, daughter of William Birmingham, of Pancake, this county, and four children blessed this union, viz.: Sarah Eliza, Virginia Birmingham, Helen Meehener and Hugh Henry. On April 2, 1891, at the age of forty-two years, the wife and mother was gathered by the Grim Reaper from the bosom of her loving family. Politically the Doctor is a staunch Republican, but not a partisan; socially he is a member of the Royal Arcanum and National Union.

GRAHAM S. CAMPBELL, cashier of the First National Bank of McDonald, Penn., is descended from a well known family of this county. John Campbell (the great-grandfather of Graham S.) was a native of York county, Penn., and moving to Washington county about 1778, located on a tract of 191 acres, called "Fumanah," in Cross Creek township. His family consisted of six sons and three daughters, namely: John, William and James (all of whom moved to Belmont county, Ohio), David, Charles and George (these remaining in Cross Creek township, where some of their descendants are yet living), Grace (wife of Maj. Benjamin Bay, moved to Ohio in 1812), Elizabeth (married to William Rea) and Mary (Mrs. William Fulton, living in Mt. Pleasant township). The father died in 1813, and was laid to rest in the cemetery at Cross Creek. George Campbell grew to manhood on the home farm, in Cross Creek township. He was united in marriage with Elizabeth Rea, who bore him the following children: John, Jane, William, Mary, Samuel, George W., Elizabeth, Esther, James and Georgetta. Mr. Campbell followed agriculture all his life. In politics he was a Whig, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Mount Prospect.

George W. Campbell was born September 26, 1826, and passed his youth on the home place. In early manhood he was married to Charlotte, daughter of James Wilson, of West Pike Run township, and the young people resided in Cross Creek township until 1867. They then came to Midway, Robinson township, and in 1869 built the Midway Hotel, of which he was the proprietor until his death, having previously followed farming and stock raising. In politics he was formerly a Whig, then became an active worker in the Republican ranks, having held various township offices. For many years he was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Mount Prospect, then at Cross Creek, finally uniting with the church at Candor, this county. He died September 4, 1885, leaving the following children: Wilson S., Graham S. and Elida (Mrs. W. H. Baldwin), two others, Johuetta and Mary, having died in infancy.

Graham S., son of George W. and Charlotte (Wilson) Campbell, was born September 14, 1860, on the home farm, in Cross Creek township. His early literary training was secured at the common schools, afterward attending the Ingleside Academy, at McDonald. At the age of eighteen years he entered the employ of J. D. Sauters, of McDonald, Penn., with whom he remained eleven years. He then opened a real estate and insurance office, in which business he was successful. On the organization of the First National Bank of McDonald, he disposed of his business and accepted the position of cashier, which position he now holds. On December 18, 1884, he led to the marriage altar Annie, daughter of Addison Foster (deceased), formerly of Pittsburgh, Penn., and their children are George, Verner, Ross and James. Mr. Campbell possesses the confidence of the community, and is a very successful man. In 1890 he was elected justice of the peace, being an active member of the Republican party. He and his family are earnest workers in the First Presbyterian Church at McDonald, in which he is now member of the Session and superintendent of the Sabbath school.

THOMAS C. M. STOCKTON, M. D., a cultured gentleman and physician of Washington county, is a son of the late Rev. Dr. John Stockton, whose ancestors came from England to America prior to the Revolution, settling in New Jersey. Thomas Stockton (grandfather of subject) was born in New Jersey, and coming to Washington county, Penn., in early manhood, was married to Miss Sarah Graham of this county. The children born to them were Polly, Sarah (Mrs. Gordon), Robert, Thomas and John.

John Stockton (father of subject) was born November 18, 1803, in Washington county, Penn., and was reared to manhood on his father's farm near Washington. He was a student at Washington College, graduating therefrom in 1820, and then entered the Theological College at Princeton, N. J. On June 20, 1827, he was ordained in the Cross Creek Church of Washington county, and preached regularly for that congregation until June 20, 1877, proclaiming the "glad tidings of the Gospel" for over fifty years. Although many times offered a more lucrative position, in which he would seemingly have a wider scope, his only answer to such propositions was: "I have started with my people here, they are my children, and I will live and die with them, and be buried among them." In 1831 he was united in marriage with Nancy Clark, daughter of James Clark, a prominent farmer of Franklin county, Penn., and six children came to bless their union, namely: Thomas C. M., James C. (a physician living in West Philadelphia), John P. P. (a minister of West Unity, Williams Co., Ohio), Robert W. G. (deceased in infancy), William (a graduate of Muskingum College), and Marion E. (wife of Hugh Lee, a prominent farmer of Cross Creek township). William entered the Civil war as captain in the One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment P. V. I., attached to the Second Corps, and served for some time as colonel of his regiment, although never promoted to that rank. After the war he went to North Carolina, soon afterward dying from an attack of typhoid fever.

Thomas C. M. Stockton was born May 30, 1832. He was a close student from early boyhood, and at the age of twelve years entered the Cross Creek Academy, afterward taking a course at Washington College. After his graduation the young man returned home and taught in Cross Creek Academy, for six or seven years, and then one year in Muskingum College. In 1862 he began the study of medicine under Dr. Dickson, of Pittsburgh, with whom he remained one year, afterward attending one year at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. At this time, the war of the Rebellion being in progress, he joined the Union army as assistant surgeon of the Eighty-third Regiment, P. V. I., serving until the close of the struggle, when he re-entered Jefferson Medical College. In 1866 he graduated, and same year entered upon his professional duties in Cross Creek village.

On June 4, 1863, Dr. Stockton was married to Miss Anna, daughter of the late Hampton Kerr, of Cross Creek village, and they have had two children: Jennie, born September 7, 1871 (was a student at Wilson College, and graduated in June, 1892), and Hampton Kerr, born September 23, 1882 (a bright, affectionate child, possessing an intelligence far beyond his age, he was the hope and pride of the parents in their declining years; but when three short years of the little life had passed, God called this flower to the "eternal gardens," leaving a void in the family circle which can be filled by none other. The dread disease, scarlet fever, was the messenger sent by the Angel of Death, and though the years were few, that life has left a blessed memory that will never die). Dr. Stockton has been very successful in his chosen calling. He is a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church at Cross Creek village, over which his father had presided for so many years. Politically he was formerly a Whig, and since the organization of the party has been a Republican.

WILLIAM EWING. The Ewing family are of Scotch Irish descent. In their blood is mingled the fiery, ardent nature of the natives of Erin, with the conscientious, persevering and thrifty people of Scotland. The ancestors of the particular family whose history we are now recording were born in County Londonderry, Ireland, and in 1725 came to America. Nathaniel Ewing, one of these early pioneers, was a farmer who settled in Cecil county, Md., and reared a family of eight sons, one of whom was George Ewing.

William Ewing, a son of George, came to Fayette county, Penn., toward the close of the last century. He was married to a Miss Nancy Conwell who bore him children as follows: George, Nathaniel, John H., Elizabeth Breading (of Pittsburgh, Penn.), Maria (Mrs. Veech, of Pittsburgh), Louisa (Mrs. Wilson, of Uniontown, Penn.), Mrs. Mary Mason (living in Iowa) and Mrs. Ellen Wallace (formerly of Pittsburgh). Of this family, Mrs. Mason alone is living. The father died in Fayette county, Penn. Nathaniel Ewing was judge of Fayette and Washington counties. The children of John H. Ewing were: William, Mrs. Prof. Wood, Mrs. Dr. Speer, Mrs. Dr. Hallock, Col. John Ewing, Dr. George, Samuel and Florence.

William Ewing, whose name opens this sketch, was born in 1823, in Washington, Penn. where his boyhood was passed. He attended Washington College (Dr. McKenna having been one of his classmates), graduating in 1842, then took a three years course at the Western Theological Seminary. After completing his studies at the seminary he spent several years in Europe in study and travel, and upon returning to Pennsylvania took his first charge at the "Chartiers Church," of which he was the pastor for nineteen years.

In April, 1853, Mr. Ewing was united in marriage with Miss Isabelle M., daughter of David Quail, of this county, who was a native of northern Ireland. She died in May, 1883, leaving four children: John (deceased in his twenty fourth year); David, an attorney at Pittsburgh, Penn.; William Brown, one of three assistant physicians at Dixmont; and Samuel Blaine, a graduate of the Philadelphia Law School. On August 1, 1859, Mr. Ewing married, for his second wife, Mary Catherine Herriett, a native of Washington county. He was principal of the Canonsburg Academy for twelve years, being a very popular and influential citizen of that place. In politics he is a Republican, and in religious faith a member of the Presbyterian Church.

JOSEPH ALEXANDER HERRON, junior member of the banking firm of Alexander & Co., was born in Monongahela City, Penn., October 16, 1817, the only child of Capt. David B. and Eliza (Alexander) Herron, the latter of whom was a daughter of the late Joseph Alexander, who died June 20, 1871, in Monongahela City, where he had been engaged in business up to the date of his death, a period of over forty consecutive years.

The immediate ancestry of Capt. David B. Herron made their homes in Cincinnati, Ohio. About the year 1811, he and his two older brothers, William and John, made Monongahela City their homes, and they became, with him, identified with the business and social interests of the town for a number of years. Capt. D. B. Herron subsequently became identified with steamboat interests in the upper and lower river trade, acting in the capacity of chief clerk, and commander of some of the steamers. Many of his old surviving friends will recollect his politeness, suave and urbane manner, his strict integrity, his high sense of honor, and obliging and generous disposition. He died March 22, 1864, from disease contracted by exposure on his steamboat in transporting troops, munitions of war and supplies on Tennessee and Cumberland rivers for the Union army. His body lies in the Monongahela cemetery; his brothers are both dead.

Joseph A. Herron received his education at the public schools of Cincinnati and at West Chester, (Penn.) Military Academy. Returning to Monongahela City he entered the banking house of Alexander & Co., conducted by his nudes, William J. and James S. Alexander; in 1871 he became a partner, and has continued an active business member to the present time. He is prominently identified in municipal, educational, church and social interests in the place of his nativity; is a trustee in the Monongahela City Manufactured & Natural Gas Company; the Washington & Williamsport Turnpike Co.; the Williamsport Bridge Co., and the Monongahela Cemetery. He is a member of the school board, and a trustee of the First Presbyterian Church, of which he and wife are members. On October 25, 1877, Mr. Herron was married to Miss Mary Campbell, daughter of William Campbell, Esq., president of Butler Savings Bank of Butler, Penn. His mother, who survives, is a member of his family.

MATTHEW BERRY was born January 30, 1823, at Venice, in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., the third son of William Gilmore Berry, Esq., late of the same county.

Matthew Berry, for nearly threescore years, has lived on what is known as the "Peach Garden" farm, one mile south of Caunonsburg, Penn. He being the eldest of the Berry family now living, has consented to furnish a brief history of the Berry family from his grandfather, John Berry, to the present time.

The grandfather, John Berry, was a native of Dublin, Ireland, born A. D. 1753. About 1775 he emigrated to the United States, and immediately upon his arrival in the county enlisted in the army for five years, and served under Gen. Washington. In 1780 he was married to Elizabeth Gilmore, who came from Ireland in the same ship with him. In religion he was a Presbyterian, by occupation a shoemaker. After his marriage he settled in Colerain township, Lancaster Co., Penn. In 1794 or 1795 he visited Washington county, on a prospecting trip, and worked one summer for the Rev. Dr. McMillan, the founder of Jefferson College. Late in the fall he returned to his home in Lancaster county, but next spring he again came to Washington county, bringing with him his eldest son, William Gilmore Berry, and purchased a farm of 251 acres, being part of a tract of land owned by Gen. Washington, who sold it to Matthew Ritchie, who by will conveyed it to Alex. Addison, from whom John Berry purchased it. To this farm he moved his family during the summer or fall of 1795. The farm is still owned by his descendants, the heirs of William Berry (deceased). There were born to John Berry eight children—three sons and five daughters, viz.: William Gilmore, John, James, Elizabeth, Nancy, Isabell, Ann and Mary. Of these, William Gilmore was married in 1804 to Jane McConnell, daughter of Mathew McConnell, Esq.; John was married to Rachel Phillips; James died unmarried at the age of twenty years; Elizabeth was married to Hugh Carson, of Ross county, Ohio; Nancy was married to Ebenezer Carson, of Ross county, Ohio; Isabell was married to Jacob George, of Washington county, Penn.; Ann was married to Alexander McConnell, of Washington county, Penn.; Mary was married to Thomas Torance, of Washington county, Pennsylvania.

William Gilmore Berry was born December 2, 1781, in Colerain township, Lancaster Co., Penn., the eldest son of John Berry. He came to Washington county with his father in 1795, learned the trade of house carpenter, and for a short time worked at the trade. In 1804 he was married to Jane McConnell, and to them were born eight children—four sons and four daughters—as follows:

(2) Samuel W. Berry, born in 1850, was married to Isabell McNary in November, 1876, and their family consists of three children— one daughter, Elva L., and two sons, Matthew Willison and Walter U. (VIII). James Berry, youngest son of William Gilmore Berry, born March 22, 1827, was married to Martha McConnell, February 22, 1846; she died January 22, 1890; the family consisted of nine children—five sons and four daughters their names and dates of birth being as follows: Sarah Jane, March 20, 1847; Martha, June 19, 1848; William McConnell, October 21, 1849; James Carson, June 20, 1851; Anna May, March 28, 1853; Francis Alex, January 3, 1855; John, January 28, 1858; Mary Margaret, April 9, 1859; David Paul, October 28, 1860. Of these Anna May, John and Mary Margaret died in infancy. William, Sarah and Martha live at No. 100 West Pike street, Canonsburg, Penn.; James C. married Kate M. Miller, November 1, 1881, and their family consists of two children (they are living at Sheridan-ville, Allegheny Co., Penn.; he is a member of the White Moton Planing Mill Co., Allegheny, Penn.); Francis Alexander married Mary Elizabeth Mc Peak, July 26, 1889 (by occupation he is a miller, and he lives in Canonsburg, Penn.); David Paul was married to Bertha Rigby, October 6, 1888 (by occupation he is a house carpenter, and he lives at Copeland, Penn.).

William Gilmore Berry began his business career at Venice, Penn., working for some time at house carpentry. Soon, however, purchasing a small farm and gristmill, he successfully managed them for a number of years, improving the farm, erecting a new dwelling house and new mill, with increased capacity. About 1821 he purchased a small flock of Spanish Merino sheep from the celebrated flock of W. R. Dickinson, of Steubenville, Ohio, and from that date until he disposed of his business interests his prominent industry was sheep raising and wool growing. In order that he might increase his flocks he purchased from time to time a number of farms in Washington county and in Ohio. The first purchase was the Nelson farm in Mt. Pleasant township; the second purchase was, in company with his brother, John, a farm of 200 acres near Cecil postoffice, in Washington county, known as the Gordon farm. Later they purchased the Spencer farm of 200 acres on Paint creek, Ross Co., Ohio, near the city of Chilliothe. In 1834 he purchased in his own interest a farm in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., from James Watson, same containing 170 acres. In August, 1835, he purchased the "Peach Garden" farm one mile south of Canonsburg, Penn., containing 300 acres. He moved to this farm his family (except his oldest son John) on the last day of March, 1836, and lived for one year in the home now occupied by S. W. Berry. Here he made extensive improvements, building the large brick dwelling now owned by Robert Johnston, and very extensive and commodious farm buildings. He purchased and operated the Canonsburg Mills for a number of years, with the land adjoining, mostly now within the borough limits. The aforementioned properties he disposed of from time to time, his son William securing the north end of the Peach Garden farm, while Matthew procured the south end, the Canonsburg Mill property going to the youngest son, James.

William Gilmore Berry lived for a number of years on the Peach Garden farm, but later moved to Canonsburg, building the dwelling house at No. 101 West Pike street, where he resided until his death October 26, 1866, in his eighty fifth year; his wife, Jane, died February 25, 1848. He was recognized as being a capable business man, settling up a number of estates. Gov. Simon Snider commissioned him justice of the peace for District No. 5, composed of Cecil and Chartiers townships, his commission bearing date December 13, 1815, and to use the language of the commission for "so long as you shall behave yourself well." He held the office until he moved from the district in March, 1836. He was a prominent Abolitionist, and associated in this movement with such men as Dr. F. Julius Le Moyne, Maj. Samuel McFarland, W. H. McNary, Joseph Lee and others. He gave liberally of his means to establish and maintain the "Underground Railroad," which put many a black man to the land north of the great lakes, and he lived to read the Emancipation Proclamation of President Lincoln. In politics he was first a Democrat, afterward a Whig, then an Abolitionist, and later a Republican. In religion he was a Presbyterian, in later life a member of the Associate Reformed Church, and after the union a United Presbyterian, a member of the Speer Spring Congregation from its organization until his death, and for a number of years was a ruling elder in that congregation.

John Berry, the brother of William Gilmore, was born in Colerain township, Lancaster Co., Penn., March 29, 1811, came to Washington county when a boy with his father, John Berry. He purchased from his father his farm of 251 acres in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington county, where he lived until his death in 1871. He was married to Rachel Philips, and to them were born six children—four sons and two daughters: Eliza, Jonathan, John, Mary, William and Rev. Samuel P.

Matthew Berry, the subject proper of this sketch, is still engaged in his chosen vocation. He has given the subject of breeding Merino sheep his best thought, and made a success of the same, making most marvelous improvements since he began the business as a shepherd under his father's direction as a boy, and since he became owner of the flock, in 1817. Never being absent at breeding or shearing time since he began the business, his aim has been to improve both the fleece and mutton qualities of his sheep, until his reputation as a "flock master" has become national in its character. A great number of flocks in various States trace their origin to this flock, and among the many famous "flock masters" in Washington county he stands near the head. Mr. Berry never aspired to public position in politics; he was first a Whig and since the organization of the Republican party has been a Republican. In religion he was first a member of the Speer Spring Congregation Associate Reformed, and since the union has been a United Presbyterian, and has been a member of the First U. P. Church at Houstonville, Penn., since its organization.

JOHAN N. McDONALD. Among the energetic early settlers of Washington county the McDonald family, of whom this sketch treats, was very prominently identified.

John McDonald (grandfather of John N.) was born in eastern Pennsylvania, where he received his educational training and grew to manhood. He was married to Martha Noble, of the same county, a daughter of the founder of Nobles-town, Penn., and the young couple then came to Washington county, locating, in 1775, in Robinson township, on the farm still occupied by their descendants. The children born to them were James, Andrew, William, Alexander, Edward, John, Margaret (Mrs. Glenn), Martha (Mrs. Allison), Elizabeth (Mrs. Mitchell) and Mary (Mrs. William Nesbit). The father of this family passed the latter part of his life in improving the home farm, and he cleared the meadow on which an Indian trading post was erected. He was a Federalist in politics, and in religious connection was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Candor.

Edward McDonald (father of John N.) was born August 13, 1792, in Robinson township, this county, where he was reared and educated and passed his entire life. On April 27, 1819, he married Margaret Nesbit, of Allegheny county, Penn., and she bore him children as follows: John N., Nesbit, Martha (wife of the late Rev. J. M. Hastings, of West Chester, Penn.), Hannah J., Elizabeth, Emily (married to Jacob H. Miller), James, Edward and Margaret M. Mrs. McDonald died in 1839, and in 1844 Edward McDonald married Margaret B. Snodgrass, of Allegheny county, Penn. Mr. McDonald followed farming and stock raising, and in politics was a prominent worker in the Whig party, serving as a member of the Legislature and as a justice of the peace. In religious faith he was an elder and trustee of the Presbyterian Church at Candor. He died May 30, 1867.

John A. Mc Donald

John N. McDonald was born February 10, 1820, on the home farm, in Robinson township, this county, and received a liberal subscription school education. On October 29, 1862, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth M., daughter of Maj. William Lee, of Cross Creek township, Washington county, and the children born to this marriage were: Edward, Jane Craig, Margaret (deceased), William Lee (deceased) and J. Nesbit. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. McDonald settled on the home farm, where the family have since resided, engaging in agricultural pursuits. He was formerly a Whig, and upon the organization of the Republican party became an active worker of that body.

He served in the State Legislature of 1853 and 1858, as a representative of Washington county; was also a delegate to the Union State Convention, in 1856; a representative delegate in the convention of 1868; a senatorial delegate in 1876, and again a representative delegate in the conventions of 1880 and 1884. For many years he had been a member of the board of trustees of Washington and Jefferson College; and of his efficiency as a school director in his district, of the work he did for the Presbyterian Church of McDonald, and his interest in the cause of education and religion generally, all who knew him were aware.

In fact, it would require a volume to record all that he accomplished in these directions. He was formerly a member and trustee of the Presbyterian Church at Candor, but, in 1886 became an elder of the First Presbyterian Church at McDonald, Robinson township. John N. died May 23, 1889, and was buried in the Raccoon cemetery.

Edward McDonald, the eldest in the family of John N. and Elizabeth M. (Lee) McDonald, was born January 11, 1864, on the homestead at McDonald, Penn. In 1884 he graduated at Washington and Jefferson College, and then returning to the farm was taken into partnership with his father in stock raising. In April, 1892, he was elected president of the First National Bank of McDonald.

JAMES H. ALLEN, editor and publisher of The Saturday Evening Supper Table, an interesting illustrated weekly published at the office No. 61 N. Main street, Washington, Penn., was born in that town, July 21, 1857. His grandfather Allen came with his family from England to this country, and to Washington county in 1829.

John Allen, father of James H., was a native of Lancashire, England, and was about thirteen years old when brought to this country by his parents. In Baltimore, Md., he learned the trade of shoemaker, which he afterward followed in Washington, in connection with a shoestore. But for fifteen years prior to his death he carried on a confectionery business on South Main street, Washington. In 1845 John Allen was united in marriage with Miss Melvina Moffat, a native of this county, and seven children were born to them, viz.: William, died young; Lydia, unmarried; Jennie M., married to Robert M. Gordon, of Waynesburg, Penn.; and Ella M., James H., Clark J. and Birdie M., all in Washington, Lydia, Ella, Birdie and Clark living together. In 1871, one evening while Mrs. Allen, the mother, was preparing to go to prayer meeting, the house was struck by lightning, and she was instantly killed in her forty-ninth year. At 5 o'clock in the evening of April 16, 1886, the father was taken ill with neuralgia of the heart, and at 10 o'clock, the same night, he expired. He was a large man, good natured and jovial, and had a very wide circle of friends. He and his wife were members of the M. E. Church, but in his later years he identified himself with the Methodist Protestant Church, in which he held office. Socially, he was one of the oldest members of the I. O. O. F. in the county, being one of the charter members of Lodge No. 81, Washington; he had taken all the Chairs, and for several consecutive years was a delegate to various Grand Lodges. Politically, he was an ardent Republican, from the time of the formation of that party.

James H. Allen received his education at the Union School in Washington, and when a lad of about seventeen summers entered the office of the Advance in the capacity of "devil." Two-weeks' revelry in that Arcadian employment showed the stuff young James was made of, and he very probably received prompt promotion; a few months later we find him "sticking type" in the job room, his banner bearing the aspiring device— "Excelsior." A year or more later the paper changed hands and name, simultaneously, its new title being Observer, and Mr. Allen was further promoted to foreman of the news room, a position he filled with characteristic ability for several years; he was also manager of the job room for some considerable time. On May 30, 1885, he launched into the world, for weal or for woe, the interesting and neatly gotten up, well-edited sheet, The Saturday Evening Supper Table, which has proven a marked success, and is steadily growing in patronage. At its birth it was a four-page 10x12 sheet, now it has sixteen pages, 10x14. "May its shadow never grow less!"

On January 29, 1890, Mr. Allen was married to Lillian H., daughter of W. A. Bane, of the firm of Bane Bros., Washington. Politically, our subject is a Republican, and in the spring of 1892 he was elected a justice of the peace in a Democratic township, polling the largest vote of any man on his ticket. Socially, he is a member of the Improved Order of Heptasophs, and is a charter member of the Junior O. U. A. M. Mr. Allen is a great grandson of Massy Harbison, who experienced a marvelous escape from the barbarity of the Indians in 1792, of which the following is a concise account:

Massy Harbison was born in Amwell township, Somerset Co., N. J., March 18, 1770. Her father, Edward White, was a Revolutionary soldier, who after the war (in 1783) removed to where is now Brownsville, this county. Here Massy lived with her father until her marriage, which event for some reason caused his displeasure, and Massy and her husband moved to the banks of the Allegheny, settling on the headwaters of Chartiers creek, where they did extremely well from 1779 till the breaking out of the Indian war in March, 1791, when they lost all their hard-earned possessions. In about a year thereafter her husband was appointed to the dangerous post of a spy, and ordered into the woods to watch the movements of the Indians; but nothing for a long time was seen of a nature to excite alarm. The Redskins frequently visited the house of John and Massy Harbison to receive refreshments and to lodge, and all the surroundings indicated peace and quiet. On the night of May 21, 1792, two of the spies, James David and——Sutton, came to lodge at the Harbison's house, and at daybreak of the following morning, when the horn blew at the blockhouse, the two men went out. Massy was awake at the time, but fell asleep again, and the first thing she realized afterward was that some Indians were pulling her out of bed by the feet. She then looked up and saw that the house was full of savages, each one having a gun in his left hand and a tomahawk in his right. She immediately jumped to the floor on her feet, with her young child in her arms, and while her assailants were busy plundering the house she made for the door and succeeded in getting outside with the one child in her arms, and another held by the hand, one little boy being still inside the cabin. By this time the blockhouse was alarmed by her screams, and a general fight ensued, during which the Indians beat a retreat; but before leaving the Harbison dwelling they dashed out the brains of the boy that was left inside, simply because he cried. Taking Massy and her two remaining children with them (one of the savages having claimed her as his squaw), the party marched to the top of the bank, where they made a halt in order to divide among themselves (thirty-two in number) the plunder which they had taken from the house. They then proceeded on their journey toward the mouth of the Kiskiminetas, Massy and her children being mounted on one of two horses which the Indians had in the meantime captured from her uncle, John Currie. When they arrived at the bank that descended toward the Allegheny, there appearing to be so much danger in descending it on horseback, Massy threw herself off the horse with her two children, and here the elder of the little boys beginning to cry, and complain of having been hurt, the Indians deliberately murdered him. At this horrible sight the mother fell to the ground in a swoon, her infant still in her arms, but after severely castigating her with rods the savages assisted her to rise to her feet. Again proceeding on their journey, crossing Little Buffalo creek at the very spot where B. Sarver's mill now stands, they finally arrived at an Indian camp at the Salt Lick of the Conequessing, about two miles above where is now the town of Butler. Here Massy and her baby boy were closely watched and barbarously treated until Monday following, when they moved her to another camp in the same valley.

Next morning, by a most heroic effort, and at the imminent risk of her own life and that of her babe, the heroine of this adventure succeeded in making her escape, taking a direction from where she knew by the sun her old home lay, and lying concealed from time to time in the woods, her couch by night being made of leaves she had gathered. Encountering innumerable perils, one night having a very narrow escape from recapture by an Indian who had succeeded so far in following up her trail, the courageous woman and devoted mother sped on her way, now in a homeward direction, till wet, weary and exhausted hungry and wretched, she found herself on the morning of May 27 at the headwaters of Pine creek, which falls into the Allegheny about four miles above Pittsburgh, though she did not then know where she was. After some wandering about she struck a trail on Squaw run, which she followed, and just as she was about to succumb through hunger, exhaustion and exposure to the weather, her wearied eyes were suddenly gladdened by the sight of an uninhabited cabin. Presently she heard the welcome sound of a distant cowbell, and on proceeding in the direction it appeared to come from, she presently desiered three white men on the opposite bank of the creek. Making her presence known to them by calling as loud as her weak condition would enable her, one of the men, James Closier, soon had her in his canoe, and ere long she found herself and infant in the willing hands of kind friends who gently cared for her and nursed her back to health and strength, and to her grief-stricken husband. The John Closier alluded to was one of her nearest neighbors, yet in the six days from the time of her capture by the Indians, she was so altered that he failed to recognize her either by her voice or countenance. The infant that shared with its mother the horrors and hardships of those six days, was John Harbison, who lived to the patriarchal age of ninety-three years, dying at Cedar Rapids a few years ago. Massy was a good rifle shot, and during the Indian fights at the block-house, she would take her rifle and bravely do her part in defending it. She died at Freeport, Penn., her husband having preceded her to the grave by some few years.

ROBERT W. DAVIS, M. D., a well known and prominent native-born citizen of Washington county, first saw the light in Hopewell township, October 19, 1832. He is a son of Samuel and Nancy (Hamilton) Davis, natives of Washington county, where his grand-parents died before he was born. They had a large family, all long since called to their last homes.

Samuel Davis, father of subject, was a farmer by occupation, and also kept hotel for many years. The Middletown road, which was laid out by the Government in 1814, was the chief thoroughfare in use for the conveyance of military supplies between Fort Redstone and Wellsburg during the war of that period, and this hotel was the only one between Washington and Middletown. Samuel Davis was married to Nancy Hamilton, who was descended from Scotch Irish ancestry, and they had seven children, as follows: John, who died in Kansas in 1888; William, who died in 1892, near Cambridge, Ohio; Hugh, in Ogle county, Ill.; Mary, deceased wife of John Caldwell; Samuel and Hamilton, both deceased, and Robert W. In 1864 the father died, the mother in 1873, aged seventy-six years.

Robert W. Davis was reared to manhood on his father's farm, receiving his primary education at the common schools of his district, after which he attended Washington and Jefferson College. He read medicine with Dr. John Russell Wilson, and attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, but his occupation has been chiefly farming. In 1855 the Doctor married Mary Ann, daughter of James Spriggs, of Washington, and by her had four children: James S Samuel, who died at the age of twenty years; Harry H., now living in Washington, Penn.; Robert W., on the farm in Canton township, and one that died in infancy, unnamed. The mother of these children died in 1869, and in 1871 Dr. Davis was united in marriage with Mrs. Susanna Coulter, of Allegheny county, Penn., the mother, by her first marriage, of two daughters, one now deceased, and one married to John Craig, of Keokuk, Iowa. By this last union Dr. Davis has no children. He owns a fine farm in Canton township, situated about two and one half miles from Washington, on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, and his home since his marriage has been on West Chestnut street, in the borough. Politically he was originally a Whig, then, on the formation of the party, a staunch Republican. He was formerly connected with the First Presbyterian Church, but is now a member and trustee of the Third Presbyterian Church.

JAMES C. ACHESON. No family can boast a prouder lineage, or are more worthy representatives of an honored race, than those citizens of Washington county who bear the name of Acheson. Their ancestors were originally natives of Scotland, who in 1604 moved to County Armagh, Ireland. In 1776 Sir Archibald Acheson became Baron Gosford, subsequently receiving the title of "viscount." The descendants of the family, who afterward emigrated to America, resided on the family estate at Glassdrummond, in County Armagh.

George Acheson, a lineal ancestor of the Washington county family, was born in 1724. He was married to Elizabeth, daughter of David Weir, a merchant of Belfast, Ireland, and she bore him seven children, viz.: George, John, Thomas, William, Hannah, Ellen and David. Of these children George and William died on the homestead in Ireland; the others all came to America and settled here. The father died in July, 1812, having been preceded to the grave by his wife July 29, 1808.

John Acheson came to America before the close of the Revolutionary war, and commenced trading; was also employed by the United States Government to furnish the National troops with supplies during the Indian wars. He died in 1790 (while crossing the Allegheny mountains on horseback), leaving a widow and two daughters in Ireland. In 1807 the youngest daughter came to America, and lived with her uncle David.

David Acheson, youngest son of George, and brother of John, was born in 1770, coming with his brothers to America in 1788, first locating in Philadelphia, Penn. He brought the following letter from the pastor of his father's church: "The bearer, David Acheson, intending to remove to North America, this, therefore, is to certify that he is a young man of sober and good conduct, and son of Mr. George Acheson, an elder of the Seceding Congregation of Market Hill, in the County of Armagh, Ireland. This is given under my hand this 30th of April, 1788. David Arnott, Minister." After arriving in America, David Acheson assisted his brother John in furnishing supplies for the United States army, continuing in that business until the death of John. Among the papers yet in possession of the family are accounts of mercantile trips made by the brothers, in 1790 and 1791, from Pittsburgh to New Orleans, also a letter written by the Spanish authorities (in that language) permitting David Acheson to transact business in their territory. He began the study of law with James Ross after the death of his brother, but did not continue it; then joined in business pursuits with his brother Thomas. They were largely interested in the tea trade at Pittsburgh and Washington. In 1795, 1797 and 1801 David Acheson represented Washington county in the State Legislature, having been elected by the Democratic party. Early in the year 1799 David Acheson was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel Young, of Philadelphia. She died February 27, 1800, leaving an infant daughter, Eliza Young (afterward Mrs. Woodward), who was reared by her grandmother in Philadelphia and died in Cleveland, Ohio. In November, 1802, he visited the old country, remaining about six months in England and Ireland. On October 31, 1805, he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of John Wilson, of Washington, Penn., a native of Ireland. They immediately made their home in Philadelphia, returning to Washington in 1815. The children of this family were born as follows: John (who died in 1833 in Arkansas), Alexander W. (who became judge, and died in Washington county), Catherine (deceased wife of William V. Davis of Lancaster, Penn.), David (died in 1826), Mary Jane (married to Joseph McKnight, of Pittsburgh, Penn., and died in 1843), Margaret, William (died in 1873, in Armstrong county, Penn.), George (studied law with his brother Alexander W. Acheson, and he and C. W. Slagle, of Washington, were both admitted to the bar in the spring of 1843, and they at once proceeded to Iowa, settling in Fairfield and entering partnership for the practice of law, which partnership continued for thirty-eight years, or until the death of George Acheson in the spring of 1881. Mr. Slagle died one year later. They were the oldest law firm in Iowa), James C. (of whom special mention is made further on), Ellen (wife of Rev. Dr. Brownson), Marcus W. (an attorney, was judge of district court of western Pennsylvania for ten years, in 1891 succeeding Judge McKennan as circuit judge), and David (living in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania).

After his return to Washington, Penn., David

Acheson erected his elegant home where Jonathan Allison is now living. Mr. Acheson entered business at Washington, but, some investments in real estate having failed, he soon retired from active life. In 1840, then over seventy years of age, he made another trip to Ireland, returning to America two years later. In 1848 he was seized with a paralytic stroke, but lingered until December 1, 1851, when death relieved him; his widow passed away August 2, 1872, aged eighty-five years. The following obituary notice appeared in one of the papers: "He was an accurate and close observer of public and political affairs as connected not only with our own Government, but with the prominent nations of Europe, of the diplomacy of which, as well as of their policy, there were but few private men of his day, retiring and unobtrusive as he was, who better understood or could more accurately delineate. His judgment and conclusions, which were always deliberate and well matured by his deep-thinking, strong mind, were valuable and very highly esteemed by those acquainted with him, whether in public or private life. Thus during the period of vigorous manhood he enjoyed a most extensive popularity and influence in the State of Pennsylvania particularly, and with many of her most distinguished individuals, in her political party history and government, he was on the closest terms of intimacy; hence his opinions and counsels were always much sought after and greatly valued. As a private friend and in social life, Mr. Acheson was a man of ardent and sincere attachments, and where personal effort or labor were needed he never faltered or shrunk by reason of apparent difficulty or threatened danger, ever ready and willing to serve his friends at whatever responsibility or personal risk by day or night, at home or abroad."

The surviving children of David and Mary Acheson, for the first time after a lapse of over thirty years, all met at the old homestead in Washington, on the occasion of the death of their mother. Her funeral took place August 1, 1872, and the day following they repaired to the graves of their parents, in Washington cemetery, and there agreed that they, and the survivors of them and the last survivor, would annually revisit the graves of their parents on October 31, the anniversary of their marriage.

James C. Acheson was born February 13, 1824, in Washington, Penn. He attended the common schools of his native borough, and also studied at college, but did not graduate. At the age of sixteen years he left home, and clerked for a time in a store at Pittsburgh, Penn., afterward one year in Wheeling, W. Va., in a similar capacity. In 1842 he returned to Washington, and the following year began clerking for his brother William, who had opened a grocery business in Washington. James

C. afterward became his brother's partner, and in 1863 bought the entire store, which he has since conducted. He was thrice married: first time April 20, 1847, to Elizabeth Wilson, who bore him four children, two of whom are now living: Mary (at home), and Anna (Mrs. Henry Dougan, of Washington). This wife dying in 1855, Mr. Acheson married, October 1, 1857, Mary E. Mahon, a teacher in Washington Seminary. She died in 1860, leaving two children, one of whom is now deceased, the other, Alexander M., being a civil engineer on the Texas branch of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad. For his third wife James C. Acheson married, September 1, 1863, Mary F. Bureau, granddaughter of an early French settler of Gallipolis, Ohio. Five children have been born to this last marriage, namely: Madeleine (Mrs. Frederick S. Rich, in Oil City, Penn.), Margaret B., Grace C., C. L. Valcaulon and Eleanor W., the latter four yet living at home.

Since the Kansas trouble, in 1856, Mr. Acheson has been a Republican, and during the war of the Rebellion the family were all Union men, some of them serving in the army. He is a F. & A. M., and at one time was district deputy grand master. In religion he is a member of and elder in the Presbyterian Church, and has served twenty-nine consecutive years as superintendent of the Sabbath-school. In municipal matters, he has served as a member of the borough council. Mr. Acheson's success in life is due to earnest effort, his whole time being devoted to the business in which he is engaged.

WILLIAM BUCHANAN CHAMBERS, treasurer of Washington county, and one of its most efficient, courteous and painstaking officials, was elected in 1890 to the position he so ably fills, his term expiring January 1, 1894.

John Chambers, father of subject, was born in South Strabane township, this county, September 6, 1813, and in early life learned the trade of blacksmith, which he for a time followed, but on coming of age he abandoned the anvil for the counter, embarking in mercantile business in Buffalo village. Here he remained till 1830, when he removed to Canonsburg and opened out a store for the sale of general merchandise, which he conducted up to the time of his death. He was twice married; first time to Miss Catherine, daughter of Josiah Ramsey, of South Strabane township, by which union there were children as follows: Martha, wife of Dr. W. G. Keady, a Presbyterian minister, of Greensboro, Ala.; Josiah R., who died in 1886 (his family are now residents of Washington county); John S., in Leavenworth, Kans.; Nannie H., widow of Merrick S. McCloy, of Canonsburg (she has one child, Walter L.); William B., of whom special mention will be presently made; and Dora A., wife of A. B. Galbraith, of Allegheny City. The mother of this family died in 1854 in Canonsburg, and Mr. Chambers married, for his second wife, Mrs. B. P. McConnell (nee Watson), a widow lady who had one child by her first husband, Antie, who was married to John Gamble, of Nottingham township. By Mr. Chambers' second marriage there is one child, Ida May, now living with the subject of this sketch at his home in Canonsburg. John Chambers was a Democrat, and had held borough offices; he died October 26, 1885, a member of the Presbyterian Church. His second wife died November 9, 1891.

William Buchanan Chambers was born in Canonsburg, Washington Co., Penn., August 11, 1850, and received his education at the common schools of that borough, afterward attending Washington and Jefferson College to the close of the freshman year. His vacations he spent in his father's store, gaining an insight into commercial routine, but soon after leaving college he moved to McDonald Station, same county, where he was engaged as clerk in store of J. D. Sauters, and here he remained five years. Thence he proceeded to Pittsburgh, and clerked in a grocery store there two years, for the Valley Milk Co., after which he came, January 1, 1880, to Washington to fill the position of deputy sheriff, under George Perritte, who was then sheriff of the county. Mr. Perritte he succeeded, being elected sheriff in 1882, and served three years from January 1, 1883, to January 1, 1886. At the expiration of his term he was appointed chief U. S. deputy marshal, under George W. Miller, marshal for the Western District of Pennsylvania, serving four years, and on the latter's removal, continued in office four months longer, under the present marshal, but being a Democrat, and the Government Republican, he was removed. He then returned to Canonsburg, where he remained unemployed until his election to his present incumbency, overcoming a nominal Republican majority of 1,800, the first Democratic treasurer elected in the past twenty-five years. Our subject is the only Democratic county official, Washington being strongly Republican. While a student at college, he was a member of the Phi Kappa Sigma Fraternity, and of the Philo-Union Literary Society of Washington and Jefferson College. His esteem and worth as a public officer were recognized at a banquet held by the Washington county bar, on his retirement from the office of sheriff, on which occasion Alexander Wilson, Esq., offered the following sentiment, which was unanimously accepted by the assemblage:

William B. Chambers, Esq.:—A faithful officer, fearless in the discharge of his duties, pleasant in his intercourse with his fellow citizens, kind and obliging to the members of the bar and officers of the court. He retires from the office of High Sheriff of Washington county with an honorable record for purity and integrity, and with the best wishes of all who have had official and personal intercourse with him.

JAMES GORDON SLOAN, M. D., one of the leading popular physicians of Washington county, was born at Frankfort, Beaver Co., Penn., January 18, 1811.

His paternal and maternal ancestors were from the North of Ireland. His paternal grandparents, James Sloan and wife, came from County Tyrone, Ireland, to Washington county, Penn., in 1801, and settled on a farm near West Middletown, in Hopewell township, where they passed the rest of their pioneer lives, dying at an advanced age. They were Presbyterians of the Covenanter school. Their children who reached the age of maturity were Jane (who died unmarried), Robert (who married, but had no children), James (father of our subject), Eliza (married, but had no children), and John C. (married, and had six children; he was prominent in politics, and represented Washington county in the Legislature; was also a prominent farmer).

James Sloan, son of James the pioneer of the family, was born on the old homestead farm of his father, in Hopewell township. He was twice married, first in 1832, to Miss Sarah Lindsey, by whom he had one daughter, who became the wife of R. C. McElvain, of Somerset township, Washington county, a cousin of Judge John A. McElvaine. Mrs. Sarah Lindsey Sloan dying one year after her marriage, her bereaved husband, for his second wife, was united in marriage in 1810 with Miss Margaret Gordon, by which union there were two children: James G., and Martha A., the latter of whom died at the age of nine years.

James Gordon Sloan was educated in the common school of Mordecai Hoge, in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., then attended the academy of Hon. John C. Messenger, at Hoge's Summit. In 1859 he entered Jefferson College, Canonsburg graduating therefrom August 7, 1862. On August 13, same year, he enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Capt. John Fraser, professor of mathematics in Jefferson College. Our subject served until the close of the war, having participated in the battles of Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Wilderness, Spottsylvania and Cold Harbor, and was present at the surrender of Gen. Lee to Gen. Grant. His credentials from his company, regimental, divisional and corps commanders—Capt. Bingham, Brevet Brig. Gen. Fraser, Gen. John C. Caldwell, Division Commander and Maj. Gen. W. S. Hancock—all testify to his faithful service and bravery as a soldier. At the close of the war he received an appointment in the Interior Department, Land Office Bureau, at Washington, where he remained four years. He read medicine with Dr. Johnson Elliott, of Washington, D. C., attended medical lectures at Georgetown College, Washington, D. C., and graduated in 1869. The Doctor first began the practice of his profession in Fayette City, Fayette Co., Penn., and in 1874 removed to Monongahela, where he has been actively and successfully engaged in the practice of medicine.

On July 5, 1866, Dr. Sloan was married to Miss Carrie M. Hamilton, who was born near Mimmstown, Washington Co., Penn., daughter of Alexander and Elizabeth (Bushager) Hamilton, who were members of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek, of which Mr. Hamilton was a ruling elder a number of years. Dr. and Mrs. Sloan have one daughter, Margaret Gordon, wife of Dr. W. W. Medill, a graduate of Washington College, now a practicing physician in Denver, Colo. Dr. Sloan is one of the pension surgeons for Washington county.

THE MURDOCH FAMILY trace their lineage to one John Murdoch, a native of Scotland, who came from Carlisle, Penn., to North Strabane township, Washington county, in 1778. His third son, Alexander Murdoch, was born in 1770, on the home farm near Carlisle, where his earliest boyhood was passed. He accompanied the family to Washington county, and when a young man purchased the Canonsburg mills, together with a large tract of land adjoining them. From these mills he loaded two large flat boats with flour and saddlery, landing them safely in New Orleans; then returned on horseback through the unbroken wilderness. In 1803 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Matthew Henderson, of Chartiers township. In 1809 he received an appointment, from the governor, as prothonotary of the court of common pleas of Washington county, serving in that office until 1819. Upon acceptance of this position he sold his property in Canonsburg, and, moving to Washington, in 1822 erected a house which is now a part of the "Hotel Main." He resided there until 1828, during which time he was engaged in mercantile enterprises, then purchased 400 acres known as the "Morganza tract," located two miles from Canonsburg. In 1828 he and his family moved to this place, and he died in 1836, his widow passed her last days in Canonsburg, where she was laid to rest in March, 1863, at the age of eighty three years. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom are named: Mary M., widow of Hon. J. L. Gow, of Washington; Mrs. Sarah B. Musser, of Nelsonville, Ohio;

Mrs. E. W. Wilson, of Moberly, Mo.; Anna, also living in Moberly, Mo.; and Alexander, a lawyer of Washington, Penn. The latter practiced law with his brother-in-law, J. L. Gow, and in April, 1861, received the appointment, from President Lincoln, as United States marshal of western Pennsylvania. After serving one term he was again appointed, remaining two years, and, in March, 1869, was selected, by President Grant, to again fill that position, which he resigned in December, 1872. His son, John H., is a lawyer and a credit to his father.

REV. JAMES HENRY SNOWDEN, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, of Washington, was born in Hookstown, Beaver Co., Penn., October 18, 1852. He is a son of William and Violetta (Thayer) Snowden, both natives of Hancock county, W. Va., whence they removed to Hookstown, Penn., and from there, in 1865, to Wellsville, Ohio, where they still reside. Mr. Snowden being engaged in the wall paper business.

The subject of this memoir received his primary education in the country school of his native place, and in the Wellsville High School. He early developed remarkable mechanical gifts, and while a lad constructed a small working steam engine, which he still keeps with pride. In his youth he worked in his father's cabinet making shop, and virtually acquired this trade. His deeper inclination, however, led him to seek a higher education. After teaching a year in the Wellsville common school, and preparing himself in Greek, he entered Washington and Jefferson College in the fall of 1872. Here he took high rank as a student, in his senior year won the debate on the annual contest, and graduated with the first honor of his class in 1875. In the fall of the same year he entered the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Penn., where he maintained his high scholarship, receiving two prizes of $100 each for superior proficiency in Hebrew, and where he graduated in 1878.

Mr. Snowden was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Steubenville, April 24, 1877. Having received a call from the church of Huron, Ohio, he was ordained and installed pastor by the Presbytery of Huron on May 6, 1879. In this charge he remained four years, when he accepted a call from the Presbyterian Church, of Sharon, Penn. After a successful pastorate of three years in this field, he accepted a call, in 1886, from the Second Presbyterian Church, of Washington, his present charge. His ministry in this important church has been remarkably blessed. During the last four years an average of nearly one hundred accessions a year have been added to its membership, which has grown during the present pastorate from 375 to 650 members, crowding the auditorium of the new church to its utmost capacity. This is now the largest church of any denomination in Washington county.

On August 1, 1878, Mr. Snowden was united in marriage with Miss Mary A. Ross, daughter of William and Abigail Ross, of Wellsville, Ohio. Three children have come to bless their home: Grace, born in Huron, Ohio, May 23, 1879; Roy Ross, born in Sharon, Penn., April 22, 1885; and Harold Winters, born in Washington, Penn., January 2, 1889.

Mr. Snowden has a fine library, and has read widely in modern science and English literature. His sermons are clear and logical, popular and practical, containing many short sentences and striking statements of truth, and abounding in illustrations drawn from literature and life.

WILLIAM P. CHERRY, sheriff of Washington county, was born May 8, 1839, in Mount Pleasant township. He is a grandson of Edward Cherry, who was a native of Scotland, having emigrated to Washington county at an early day.

Aaron Cherry, father of subject, was born on a farm in "Cherry Valley," Washington county, and learned the carpenter's and cooper's trades. When a young man he was married to Margaret, daughter of John Benward, of Lancaster county. Mr. and Mrs. Cherry began wedded life on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township. After raising a large family, they moved to Urichsville, Ohio, where he followed his trade in connection with farming, making a specialty of violins and other fine musical instruments. He was a member of the U. P. Church, and died at Urichsville, in 1875, at the age of sixty-five years. The old house is yet standing, and the mantels, which are in an excellent state of preservation, are fine specimens of his handiwork. A part of the home is owned by his brother Edward P., who died in December, 1892. Since then that portion has become the property of our subject.

William P. Cherry grew to manhood on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township, then learned the wagon and carriage making business at Hickory, Washington county. He first began business at Clokeyville, Washington county; then worked two years at Noblestown, being afterward in the employ of John Hallam, of Washington, for a time. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Thirty ninth P. V. I., under Col. Caldyer, of Pittsburgh. He took part in the following engagements: second battle of Bull Run, Harper's Ferry, Antietam, Fredericksburg and Gettysburg, his regiment having been badly broken during the last mentioned battle. At the battle of Mine Run, December 1, 1863, he was struck in the left breast by a minie ball, which passed through the lung and lodged in his back, where it has yet remained, and still causes him some trouble. In 1863 he was captured by the enemy, and first taken to Belle Isle, where he was confined three months, then to Andersonville prison, where he remained seven months, thence to Savannah, Ga., where he was exchanged and three months later went home on a furlough. Some time after he returned to his regiment, and remained until the close of the war. On December 25, 1865, he selected a life companion in the person of Harriet E., daughter of John and Mary McBane, who came from Scotland to Pittsburgh, Penn., where he died. To the union of William P. and Harriet E. Cherry four children were born, namely: Adelaide, who died in infancy; Birdie S.; Lillian, and William, a graduate of Washington Business College, and now assistant deputy for his father. In 1866 Mr. Cherry was foreman of the Penn St. R. R. line, occupying that position for some time. Mr. Cherry left Pittsburgh and moved to West Liberty, Washington Co., Penn., in 1869, where he worked as a journeyman; then opened a general carriage business at Sodom, Allegheny Co., Penn.; thence he moved to Houstonville, Penn., and conducted an extensive business for eight years; then moved to East Bethlehem township, and conducted business for seven years. In 1888 he was appointed deputy sheriff under George E. Lockhart, and in 1891 became sheriff of Washington county, which position he is now occupying. Sheriff Cherry has filled township offices, and is a member of William Harton Post, No. 549, G. A. R., at Centreville. He is also a member of the U. V. U., and of the I. O. O. F. In church relations he is identified with the Jefferson Avenue M. E. Church.

DR. BRADLEY MINTON. Among the representative thorough business men and wide-awake citizens of Claysville, this gentleman stands second to none.

He is a worthy native of the county, having been born in 1843, on a farm in Morris township, where his early life was passed. He received his education at the common schools of the district and at the high schools of the county. In 1862 he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Whittlesey, of Washington, this county, remaining under his able preceptorship several years, and when thoroughly prepared, commenced the practice of his profession in Lawrence county, Penn., where he remained seven years, and then removed to Waynesburgh, Greene Co., same State, and here continued practice until 1876, in which year he purchased a drug store in Claysville, the business of which has increased from year to year, till today it is unsurpassed, in quantity and quality of stock, in the county.

While a resident of Lawrence county, the Doctor was united in marriage with Mattie E. Gere, who died April 25, 1889, leaving no children, and on August 13, 1891, he was again wedded, on this occasion to Mary L., daughter of John R. Anderson, of Donegal township. Since becoming a resident of Claysville, Dr. Minton has been deeply interested in the growth and prosperity of the place, and has given material aid to all worthy enterprises. Since its organization, he has been identified with the Monongahela National Bank at Pittsburgh, and has been interested in the well-known drug house of L. H. Harris & Co., of that city. On the establishment of the First National Bank of Claysville, in April, 1890, he was elected president, a position he has filled until the present time with eminent satisfaction to all concerned. The Doctor has been a lifelong Democrat, and has always taken an active interest in the affairs of the party, having creditably served in several offices of honor and trust in the borough of Claysville.

JAMES SANSOM ALEXANDER, banker and member of the firm of Alexander & Co., third son of Joseph and Mary (Jones) Alexander, was born in Williamsport (now Monongahela) August 28, 1828. He was partly educated at Blake's and Hazzard's academies, in Williamsport, finishing his education at Washington College. He then entered his father's store as a clerk, eventually becoming a partner, and has since, through a long term of service, been thoroughly identified with the firm of Alexander & Co., in whose fortunes he has been an active and important factor.

On January 16, 1859, Mr. Alexander was married to Miss Susan Stoddard King, daughter of Samuel and Mary B. (Williams) King, of Dayton, Ohio. The father of Mrs. Alexander was a man of importance in his community, an elder in the First Presbyterian Church of Dayton, and was highly esteemed as a Christian and a gentleman. Part of Dayton is built on the farm he patented. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Monongahela. They have four children: Mary E., Harriet K., William H. (with Alexander & Co.) and Frederick K. (teller of the Fort Pitt National Bank, Pittsburgh).

The subject of this sketch has devoted himself mainly to domestic and business affairs. He has traveled considerably, and is a frequent visitor to the Eastern cities, where he has a large circle of acquaintances, but his pleasures lie chiefly in his family circle and in his library. In all matters pertaining to the practical progress of the community he takes an active interest; but valuing the independence of a private citizen, generally declines any public office, although he has served as clerk of the councils and as treasurer of the school board; he is now president of the board of deacons and trustees of the First Presbyterian Church. Mr. Alexander's life has been and is yet devoted to business; with unusual health, industry and ability he has for years given vigorous attention to the affairs of Alexander & Co., and is always to be found at the counter, ever ready and prompt to meet the demands of the times.

ALEXANDER. The first of the Alexander family in Washington county, of whom there is any record, was one Elias Alexander, who was born in 1680, and died in 1780. His son, Isaac, was born December 16, 1715. Isaac had one son, Joseph, born in Maryland July 9, 1765, and died in Ohio July 9, 1847. Joseph married Rose Ann Jones, also a native of Maryland, born October 17, 1765, and died in Ohio in 1850. She was a sister of William Jones, who lived near Ginger Hill, Washington county.

Joseph and Rose Ann (Jones) Alexander had nine children: Elizabeth (Betsy), Sally, Mary (Polly), Hannah, Joseph (of whom special mention will be made hereafter), Elijah, James S., Bela and Rose Ann. Of these Betsy and Polly married two brothers named Sheplar, ncles of Capt. Joseph Sheplar, of Rostraver township, Westmoreland Co., Penn. The Sheplars moved to northern Ohio on or near the Maumee river, about the year 1845, having previous to that time lived in Holmes county, Ohio. Elijah Alexander died at the age of nineteen, unmarried. Hannah married Benjamin Thomas, lived in Westmoreland county, and died August 9, 1863. James S. was married twice, his first wife being Miss Elizabeth Bailey (the name of second wife can not be given at present writing). His children by first marriage were: John Bailey, Drummond, Martha, James, Alvira, Julia, and a daughter who died in infancy. Of these children Alvira married James Mills, one of the editors of the Pittsburgh Post. Bela Alexander was born in Belmont county, Ohio, and married a Miss Barnes (both now deceased). Rose Ann Alexander married John Moseley (both now deceased).

Of this family the direct progenitor of the subjects proper of this memoir was Joseph (the fifth child), who was born at Ten-Mile Creek, Washington Co., Penn., April 1, 1795, and died at Monongahela June 20, 1871. On March 8, 1819, he was married, by Rev. John White, to Mary Jones (daughter of William Jones, of Washington county, Penn.), who died August 15, 1856. They had eight children: William Jones (of whom mention will be made farther on), Rose Ann (born March 5, 1822, married to Dr. Nelson A. Adams), Eliza (born in Westmoreland county, April 3, 1824, married December 28, 1846, to Capt. David B. Herron), Elijah Bascom (born in Westmoreland county, May 6, 1826, died June 29, 1827), James Sanson (mention of whom will be made farther on), Mary Eueline (born in Williamsport, now Monongahela, April 15, 1831, died October 5, 1889), Amanda Malvina (born at Williamsport April 29, 1833, died April 9, 1854), and Hannah Theresa (born at Williamsport December 31, 1835, died March 13, 1843).

The early life of Joseph Alexander was spent on the farm on Ten-Mile creek, later on a farm in Rostraver township, Westmoreland county. Subsequently the family moved to Barnesville, Ohio, where he received such education as the time and place afforded, and it is apparent that he profited by these opportunities, and was fairly well educated for his time and circumstances. During his life in Barnesville his father was interested in teaming and transporting supplies for United States troops, then engaged in the war of 1812. Joseph was then employed by his father as a teamster, and among his associates and companions was Tom Corwin, who became famous in after years as a statesman, serving as governor of Ohio, United States senator, etc. Corwin was employed by Joseph's father also as a teamster, the two boys occupying the same room. After marriage he settled on a farm in Rostraver township, Westmoreland county, where William, Rose Ann, Eliza and Elijah were born. In 1828 he moved to Williamsport (now Monongahela) and entered into the mercantile business, living there until the time of his death in 1871, with the exception of two years between April 1, 1829, to April 1, 1831, during which interval he resided in Cookstown (now Fayette City).

Joseph Alexander was prominently identified with the moral, social and business interests of Monongahela, serving frequently as a member of council, and school board. He was a member and trustee of the M. E. Church; was an original stockholder, and among the first managers of Williamsport Bridge Company. His long and honorable career as a merchant gave him a wide acquaintance in Washington and adjacent counties, and his frank and manly traits of character, as well as his uprightness and native kindness, won for him the esteem and affection of a large circle of friends. For a long period (since 1850) he was associated in business with his sons, under the firm of Alexander & Co., at first in mercantile and subsequently in banking business.

Joseph Alexander was progressive and enterprising in all his efforts; and in the various positions of honor and trust he occupied was always zealous and faithful. He was a member of the school board at the time of the building of the school-house on Chess street, now occupied as a primary school, and was earnest in advocating the importance of the new building which met with considerable opposition, giving much of his time and personal attention in superintending the erection of the building. He was also a member of the board of trustees of the M. E. Church at the time of the erection of the present edifice (as well as the edifice preceding it, which was erected in 1833), and although then advanced in years and in feeble health gave liberally and was active and earnest in his efforts in behalf of the movement. He was a man of uncompromising integrity and of strong convictions—fearless and aggressive in the expression of his opinions and unhesitatingly championing any cause which he believed to be right. He was one of the first to avow anti-slavery and abolition sentiments, at a time when such ideas were by no means regarded with favor. During the war of the Rebellion he was fervently loyal to the United States Government, and fiercely intolerant of any other sentiments. He died at the age of seventy six—after a life of honest purpose and honest industry, his declining years having been spent in comfort and ease amongst his children, six of whom were living, all in the course of honorable and successful careers; his sons following along the same lines of life that he had trod with ability and success, but with ampler means and more extended interests.

WILLIAM J. ALEXANDER, Monongahela, is the eldest son of Joseph and Mary (Jones) Alexander, and the senior member of the firm of Alexander & Co., bankers, Monongahela.

When the subject of this sketch was eight years old his father removed to Williamsport (now Monongahela), entered into the mercantile business and lived there until his death, with the exception of two years spent in Cookstown (now Fayette City). The education of William J. Alexander was such as was usually obtained at the common subscription schools of that day, and early in life (in 1836) he began his business career in Pittsburgh, under the employ of Andrew Pierce. However, his term of service in Pittsburgh was of short duration, for his father requiring his assistance in the business in Monongahela, he came home and entered his father's store, where the advantage of his energy and capacity were soon manifest. In the spring of 1843 he became the junior partner of J. Alexander & Son, which copartnership continued until the present firm of Alexander & Co. was organized in 1850, the style remaining unchanged since that date. In the early days of his business career his father, quick to recognize and acknowledge the son's practical business ability, and having firm faith in his sagacity and persevering industry, yielded to him the responsible management of the business from the time he was admitted into partnership. Since that date to the present time he has been actively engaged in business, and has been the recognized head of the firm of Alexander & Co., which under his lead has achieved its present success and enviable reputation, making fifty years of active business life. On November 14, 1844, William J. Alexander was married to Eliza Morrison, daughter of John and Margaret (Porter) Morrison.

Prior to the year 1864, the firm of Alexander & Co. conducted the dry-goods business in connection with banking. During that year the dry goods interests were disposed of, and the business has since been exclusively banking. The firm is now (January, 1893) composed of William J. Alexander, James S. Alexander and Joseph Alexander Herron.

While Mr. Alexander has given his earnest and active attention to his varied business interests, he has from his earliest manhood been more or less engaged in the promotion of every practical project for improving the material, moral and educational welfare of the community in which he has lived. He has been an active participant in the management of municipal and educational matters, and has enjoyed to a rare degree the esteem and confidence of his fellow-townsmen, as has been testified to, in numerous elections. In 1888, the unusual compliment was paid to him of the nomination as controller by both parties. He is now president of the Monongahela Gas Company; has been identified with the management of the Monongahela cemetery since the inception of the enterprise twenty six years ago; has been a member and officer in the First Presbyterian Church for nearly fifty years. Throughout the great Rebellion he was prompt and earnest in all his duties as a loyal citizen. He served as captain of Company G, Eighteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Militia of 1862 (an organization called out by Gov. Curtin to meet an exigency of the war), and served with his regiment on the borders of Pennsylvania and Maryland during the last days of the memorable campaign which closed by the repulse and defeat of the rebel forces under Lee at South Mountain and Antietam. Capt. Alexander's company was recruited in Monongahela, and was composed entirely of his neighbors and friends. There were eighty-two officers and men mustered into the United States service in Company G, etc., and of these thirty-three are known to be dead, with date and place of death; twenty-two are now (1893) residents of Monongahela; twenty seven reside outside of Monongahela, most of their residences known. The names of the survivors residing in Monongahela are Alexander, William J.; Boyd, Reese; Blythe, James; Blythe, John; Collins, Thomas; Corrin, Edward; Finley, J. Barelay; Graham, A. V.; Gibson, Henry; Linn, Dr. George A.; Lawrence, Hon. George V.; McCurdy, T. Stockton; McGrew, James; Patterson, John; Robinson,

While the subject of this sketch has traveled much, and is familiar with most points of interest in his country, his life and habits have been essentially domestic. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander have no children, but their family circle was enlarged and enlivened by the presence of the three brothers of Mrs. Alexander—Joseph, Andrew and Dr. M. P. Morrison. While the two former were practicing lawyers in Pittsburgh, yet most of their leisure was spent at their Monongahela City home, which being almost contiguous to the Alexander residence, during the life of the Morrison brothers their intimate relations and almost daily society made a family circle of congenial, cultivated and delightful intercourse.

In the pursuit of Mr. Alexander's well-known musical and literary tastes, he has accumulated a valuable library, to which is now added the collections of Joseph, Andrew and M. P. Morrison, all of whom were collectors of books, of cultivated intelligence and tastes. The collection now contains many rare and valuable old editions, and editions de luxe, besides old manuscripts of interest and value. From this collection it has been the pleasure of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander to donate to the Carnegie Library of Allegheny the rare and valuable edition of "Audubon's Birds of America." We refer to two of the many notices of this gift. The Pittsburgh Daily Post of September 3, 1891, says: "The arrangements were concluded on yesterday between W. J. Alexander, the well-known banker of Monongahela City, and Librarian Stevenson of the Carnegie Free Library of Allegheny, for the donation to the library of the most valuable single work, so far, which it has been the rare good fortune of the institution to receive. The work is the famous "Audubon's Birds of America." The donors are Mrs. William J. Alexander, of Monongahela City, and Miss Sarah H. Patterson, of Allegheny. The work presented is one of great value on account of its excellent preservation, fine condition, great scarcity and a demand that can not be supplied at even great prices. There are about 500 plates over 3x2 feet, and contain the life-size paintings of the largest birds. There are seven volumes quarto of the text 'as good as new.' Mr. Alexander refused all offers from the Carnegie Free Library, as well as all others, for the purchase of the work, preferring to donate it for the use of the public; and the generous gift will doubtless be appreciated by all." The Boston Transcript says: "The Carnegie Free Library in Allegheny, Penn., has become the fortunate possessor of Audubon's 'Birds of America,' the gift of Mrs. William J. Alexander, of Monongahela City. The work is one of considerable rarity and of great value, copies of the original edition selling at from $2,500 to $4,000. It is not generally known that the great naturalist's daughters live in the old homestead near Audubon Park, overlooking the Hudson. They were once possessed of considerable wealth, but it was lost through unfortunate investments, and they are now in somewhat straitened circumstances. Some of the big handsome plates from which Audubon's monumental work was printed are preserved in the Museum of Natural History in Central Park."

In conclusion, Mr. Alexander is still engaged in business, but has reached that period of life, when he must necessarily give less attention to details. By sound and conservative business methods, he has acquired ample means; and while business still demands some time and attention, the principal portion of his time is now spent at his home and in his library.

THE MORRISON FAMILY. The professional, social and personal history of Monongahela City would be incomplete without a sketch of the Morrison Brothers, whose personality has been so long familiar, and still so fresh, in the recollection of most of our citizens; and whose memory is so much revered and cherished by them.

They were the sons of John Morrison, who was born in 1789, near Londonderry, Ireland, whence he emigrated to the United States about 1811, settling near the Mingo Creek Presbyterian church. On February 29, 1820, he married Margaret Porter, daughter of Mathew and Elizabeth Porter, who resided on a farm about two miles from Williamsport (now Monongahela), Penn. A short time after their marriage they removed to a farm situated two and one-half miles above Elizabeth, Allegheny Co., Penn., on the Monongahela river. On this farm all the children of John and Margaret (Porter) Morrison were born. This farm was sold by Mr. Morrison in the spring of 1837, at which time he removed to Monongahela, Washington county, with his family, purchased real estate and made it their future permanent home. Mr. Morrison died October 16, 1837, aged forty eight years, leaving his widow (Margaret) with a family of six children, all of whom have passed to the other side, with the exception of Eliza, the eldest child, born January 11, 1821, and married to William J. Alexander, of Monongahela, November 14, 1844. Mrs. Alexander is the last living representative of her generation of the Morrison family.

Mrs. Margaret (Porter) Morrison (born November, 1798), after having lived to educate her family (excepting James Cust who died in infancy), and see them grow up around her to adult age under her own guidance and example, becoming useful and honored citizens, and members of society: enjoying their love and tenderness through a long and happy life, passed peacefully away, September 18, 1882, aged eighty four years. The children of John and Margaret (Porter) Morrison were as follows: Eliza, born January 11, 1821; Joseph Scott, born July 5, 1824, died April 20, 1886; Mathew Porter, born December 14, 1826, died November 10, 1885; Andrew Porter, born November 2, 1829, died November 5, 1890; Jane, born December 8, 1832, died February 17, 1871; James Cust, born September 15, 1835, died October 6, 1837.

JOSEPH SCOTT MORRISON graduated at Washington College, Washington, Penn., in the class of 1844; read law with Hon. T. M. T. McKennan; admitted to the Washington county bar 1847; shortly after became a member of the Allegheny county bar at Pittsburgh, Penn., where he practiced law up to the time of his death, April 20, 1886.

ANDREW PORTER MORRISON graduated at Washington College in the class of 1849; read law with his brother Joseph, and with Judge William McKennan, from 1852 to 1854. He was associated in the practice of law with his brother, Joseph S., at Pittsburgh, from 1854 to 1861. On May 1, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Corps; was made a corporal, and was promoted July, 1862, to be sergeant-major; was desperately wounded at the battle of South Mountain, September 14, 1862; was mustered out with his regiment May 12, 1864. He was historian of the Ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Reserves. At the dedication of the Gettysburg Monument, his address elicited high encomiums as a carefully prepared and accurate historical paper. After the war, Major Morrison resumed the practice of law, associated (as formerly) with his brother Joseph, until the death of the latter in 1886, afterward conducting the practice alone. Having been warned of the dangers of heart trouble, he gradually gave up his law practice, refusing new business, and rapidly closing up his docket, when suddenly overtaken by death. On September 11, 1866, he was married to Miss Rebecca S. H. Davis, of Allegheny. Residing in Allegheny, he and his wife became members of the North Presbyterian Church, then under the care of Dr. A. A. Hodge. After the death of his wife (born in 1839, died September 5, 1877) he returned to the old family homestead in Monongahela City, which was his earthly home until his departure for the heavenly, whither he was preceded by his home circle, except his greatly beloved sister Eliza, the wife of William J. Alexander, Esq. Major Morrison changed his membership from Allegheny to the First Presbyterian Church, Monongahela City, September 8, 1878. By the unanimous voice of his church associates he was elected a ruling elder, which office, after due consideration, he accepted, and was ordained March 31, 1889. Andrew P. Morrison was a man of the highest type; the moral atmosphere which surrounded him was pure, the example he set was helpful. His instincts were all gentle; his manner urbane; his friendship as true as gold; his career was that of honorable manhood, respected citizenship, unquestioned morality and professional integrity.

DR. MATHEW PORTER MORRISON. As a fitting sketch, we take the liberty to make the following extracts from a paper prepared by Rev. William O. Campbell, D. D., for a memorial volume of Dr. Morrison, late of Monongahela. He received his first academic training at home in the academy conducted by the Rev. E. S. Blake, and T. R. Hazzard, Esq. He was a graduate of Washington College in the class of 1847. Among his classmates were the Hon. James G. Blaine; John H. Hampton, of Pittsburgh; Alexander Wilson, Esq., of Washington, Penn.; Hon. William H. H. Pusey, of Iowa, and Dr. John H. Storer, of West Virginia. After leaving college he was engaged in teaching school for a short time at home. Having read a course of medicine with Dr. Samuel M. King, he attended a full course of lectures for two years at Jefferson College, Philadelphia, and received his degree of "Doctor of Medicine" in the spring of 1851. He subsequently attended special courses of lectures, and hospital practice, in Philadelphia and Boston. In May, 1851, he opened an office for the practice of his profession at the "Old Home" in Monongahela. Not long afterward he became associated in practice, as a partner, with Dr. R. F. Biddle. When the war of the Rebellion broke out, Dr. Morrison joined the Union army in the field, August 6, 1861, as assistant surgeon of the One Hundred and Second Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, Col. Rowley's "Old Thirteenth." He was promoted to surgeon with the rank of major September 12, 1862, and at the close of the war was mustered out June 28, 1865, being at the time surgeon of the Second Division of the Sixth Corps. His professional life covers a period of nearly thirty-five years of active and arduous practice—all, save the four years in the army, among his friends and neighbors in the vicinity of the "Old Home." Col. Hazzard, in The Republican, gave expression to the feelings of many hearts when he penned this tribute to his memory: "Of his worth as a friend; his judgment and sagacity as a physician; his learning as a scholar; his integrity and nobility of character in the walks of civil life; and of his devotion to his country as a soldier; his warm-hearted friendship; his stern adherence to right living and thinking; of the warm place he held in the hearts of the families he visited, both as physician and friend—of these things, we need not speak—they are the choicest memories of this sad hour in a thousand hearts. Dr. M. P. Morrison brought to his profession a mind thoroughly familiar with the principles and practice of medicine. He honored the profession in which he was eminently successful. His death brings a genuine sorrow, brightened only by the words which his lips framed almost with his last breath, 'Not my will, but Thine.'" Extract from a letter of Hon. J. G. Blaine: "It was a great surprise and personal sorrow to me. Though we have seen each other but twice since our graduation (more than thirty-eight years ago), I have a strong impression of his qualities of mind and heart, and a vivid recollection of his person. He was a gentle spirit—kind, considerate and generous—tenderly regarded by his class-mates. I always felt he had chosen wisely in his profession. I can well imagine that his ministrations in the sick room were a great solace to patients. To lose such a brother must be a lasting grief, and I tender you my sincere condolence."

JONES FAMILY. William Jones sailed from the port of Baltimore in 1769 (his son William being then six years old), and the vessel was never afterward heard from. The son, William Jones, was born May 3, 1763, at Ellicott's Mills, Md., and died March 14, 1863. He was married April 23, 1789, to Elizabeth McClung, who was born November 21, 1769, and died January 27, 1829. FORREST, ROBERT R., RICHARD R. and J. R., Washington. These gentlemen are descended from stalwart Scotch and English ancestors who came to America at an early date. The great grandfather, Johnson, was a Doctor of Divinity in the classic city of Edinburgh, Scotland, and some of his books are still in the possession of his great-grandson Robert R. Forrest. John Forrest, grandfather of the gentlemen whose names open this sketch, was born in Scotland, and was married in Edinburgh, the capital of that country, to Jean Johnson, who after his death came to America in 1839, and now lies in Allegheny cemetery; her husband died in London, England. The two brothers of this John Forrest emigrated, in the early part of this century, to America, the one coming to Philadelphia, Penn., the other proceeding to a southern port.

George Forrest, father of Robert R., Richard R. and J. R. Forrest, was born November 24, 1803, in Penrith, County of Cumberland, England, which county, being on the border, was for a long time claimed by Scotland. He was married June 12, 1826, in New Marylebone Church, Parish of Marylebone, London, England, to Alice Rhodes, who was born in the Parish of St. George, London, England, January 6, 1808, a daughter of Joshua Rhodes, a native of London, where he lived and died. In 1837 George Forrest and his brother Richard set out together with their families for America, and were six weeks crossing the Atlantic in a sailing vessel, which was reported lost. Landing at New York, and their destination being Richmond, Ind., they traveled by rail, canal and other modes to Allegheny City, where Richard's wife and two children died. The brothers then concluded to here remain. Richard, who was a marble cutter and sculptor, became foreman of the Wallace Marble Works, Pittsburgh, Penn. His last employer in the mother country had been Sir Francis Chantry, the eminent English sculptor, and he was in his employ at the time Allan Cunningham, the author and sculptor, was foreman of the establishment, and Forrest's duties consisted in the placing of statuary for Chantry. About the year 1747 George Forrest and his family moved to Canonsburg, Washington county, and two years later came to Washington borough, where he worked at his trade, tailoring, until about the time of his death, which occurred March 28, 1865, when he was aged sixty-three years. He was liberal of his means and charitably disposed; in politics he was a Democrat, in religion a Presbyterian; his widow was summoned from earth January 28, 1885, in her seventy-eighth year; she was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They were the parents of eight children—four born in London, England, and four in Allegheny, Penn.—Robert R. being the first of the family born this side of the Atlantic. They are as follows: Alice (Mrs. Boyle); Emma (wife of John B. Hallam); George; Jane (widow of Matthew Taylor), in South Strabane township; Robert R., of whom a sketch follows; Mary (wife of John Munce), residing in Washington, Penn.; Richard R. and J. R. (sketches of whom follow). George Forrest bought 300 acres of land, on part of which the city of Kittanning, Penn., now stands, intending to settle there, but the country proved to be so wild he sold it before going to Canonsburg.

ROBERT R. FORREST was born in Allegheny, Allegheny Co., Penn., October 12, 1840. He came to Washington, Penn., with his parents, and attended the common schools of the place until he arrived at the age of sixteen years, when he entered Hayes' Carriage Factory as an apprentice, remaining until the breaking out of the Civil war. He then proceeded to Wheeling, W. Va., where he was employed on Government work, chiefly in the constructing of ambulances, and he ironed the last twenty-five of that class of vehicle sent to the seat of war from Wheeling. In 1867 Mr. Forrest entered into partnership with James House, in the carriage-making business, in Washington, this county, putting up for the purpose the building now occupied by R. B. McClure & Son on East Wheeling street. The style of the firm was House & Forrest, but about a year after commencing operations, Mr. Forrest sold out his interest to Mr. House and embarked in the brickmaking business in South Strabane township, which he still carries on, it having now been in existence some twenty years. The first brick made on his place were used in the construction of the jail, and it has since supplied the brick for many prominent buildings, such as banks, seminaries, churches and private residences. He was also for a time engaged in contracting and building, in company with his brother, Richard R. In 1889 he commenced the erection of his own commodious house on the corner of Sumner avenue and Pitt street, one of the finest residences in the northern part of the city, and in November, 1890, moved into it.

On April 15, 1869, Mr. Forrest was married in Washington to Miss Sarah M. Hayes, daughter of Charles Hayes, and granddaughter of George Kuntz, both of Washington. Six children were the result of this union, only two of whom survive: Sophia and Alice, both living at home. Mr. Forrest and his family are members of the Second Presbyterian Church; politically he votes the Democratic ticket, and has frequently been solicited to accept office, but has invariably declined the honor. Well known and popular in the community, Mr. Forrest stands high in the esteem and respect of his fellow-citizens.

RICHARD RHODES FORREST, contractor and builder, also florist and proprietor of greenhouses, in Washington, was born April 14, 1844, in Allegheny, Allegheny Co., Penn. As will be seen, he was but a child when the family came to Washington. Here he received his education, being among the first pupils to attend the new Union schools. In 1859 he commenced to learn the trade of carriage body building with S. B. & C. Hayes, serving an apprenticeship of nearly four years; then worked for John Hallam in building spring wagons. In September, 1862, he enlisted in Company F, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, and they were encamped at a point near Chambersburg, Penn., at the time the Confederate army learned the name of Antietam. Afterward, August 31, 1861, he enlisted in the army, in the Fifth Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, Company F, was in at the death of the Confederacy, and was mustered out June 30, 1865. He became of age while in the army.

Returning to this county, he immediately resumed his trade, his first work being the building of a coach for James House, called the "Queen of the Road," which was run between Washington (Penn.) and Pittsburgh. Afterward he removed to the site where now stands the carriage factory of R. B. McClure & Son. Later he sold out to James House, who became a partner with his brother, Robert R., in the same line of business, and for them he worked a considerable length of time, constructing windmills, some sixty or seventy having been built. He then engaged with Hayes & Wilson, working on bodies for sewing machines, after which he became a partner for a time with E. J. Dye in contracting and building. He had previously put up many of the brick buildings in the borough, and on West Beau street he erected a house which in itself is a curiosity. He made the molds and the brick himself for this house, each brick having a panel on it. In 1878 he bought the property where he now resides, the grounds covering about twelve acres on the outskirts of the borough. Some eight years ago he commenced gardening, building greenhouses for the cultivation of both vegetables and flowers, and to day he owns the largest conservatory in Washington. On March 13, 1873, Mr. Forrest was united in marriage with Miss Theresa Mills, a native of Monongahela City, daughter of Andrew and Alice Mills, who both died in the borough of Washington. She had one sister, who married, and two brothers, Harvey and James, the latter of whom is now editor of the Pittsburgh Post. To Mr. and Mrs. Forrest were born three sons, all of whom died in early childhood. They are both members of the First M. E. Church of Washington, and in politics he is in sentiment a Prohibitionist, but votes independently and according to his own judgment.

J. R. FORREST, one of the prominent members of the bar of Washington county, was born in Allegheny, Allegheny Co., Penn., February 21, 1817. He began life a poor boy, having to earn by the sweat of his brow the means to secure even a limited education, at first, in the common schools of his district. Still, applying himself assiduously to work, he was enabled to take himself to the high school, from which he graduated, and he then attended Washington College three years. Our subject, having now completed his literary studies, commenced reading law in the office of Ruth & Hamilton, Washington, Penn., in which he remained three years, and in 1868 he was admitted to the bar. Mr. Forrest at once commenced the practice of his profession in the borough, and has since continued with eminent success. In February, 1865, fired with the spirit of patriotism, he enlisted at New Brighton, Penn., in Company H, Eighty-seventh P. V. I., which regiment was attached to the Sixth Army Corps. After participating in the fighting around Richmond and Petersburg, which ended with the capture of Lee, he was ordered with the Sixth Corps on a forced march to Danville, N. C., to cut off the retreat of Gen. Joe Johnston, and was present at his capture also. After the war closed Mr. Forrest was mustered out of the service in July, 1865. On February 21, 1871, Mr. J. R. Forrest was united in marriage with Miss Belle, daughter of the late Daniel Boyle, in his day a prominent stock dealer in North Strabane township, this county, and to this union have been born two children: Daniel B., now attending the sophomore class at college, and Earle R. Politically Mr. Forrest is a Democrat, and for the past ten years he has served as a justice of the peace. He has a strong penchant for literature, and is a writer in verse of recognized ability and versatility. The majority of his best efforts have not yet been published, but doubtless will some day be given to the world in book form. Two of his poems are here presented:

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Our Father who in heaven art,
 Look kindly on Thy wayward child;
 Help me to chose the better part
 And save me from the tempter's wiles.
 All hallowed be Thy sacred name,
 Thy kingdom here on earth be made;
 Fill all the earth with holy flame,
 Till sin's corrupting hand be stayed.
 In love and peace Thy will be done,
 In every land Thy praise be heard;
 Till all on earth, aye, every one,
 Doth read and ponder o'er Thy word.
 Give me each day my daily bread,
 Thy tender hand relieve my care;
 If Thou, who hath the ravens fed,
 Will help me, I shall have no fear.
 Forgive my debts as I forgive
 The ones who do me grievous wrong;
 As I let others, so let me live,
 And always in Thy faith be strong.
 Let no temptation lead astray
 The wayward passions of the soul;
 But guide me in the better way,
 And save me from my own control.
 Deliver me from evil tide,
 Save me from its dire distress;
 Open the gates of mercy wide,
 Where all is love and peacefulness.
 And when the light of earthly bliss,
 Fades from my weary closing eyes,
 May all the love that here I miss,
 Be mine renewed beyond the skies.
 Thine be the glory evermore;
 Thy holy faith my best endeavor;
 And when for me this life is o'er,
 Take me to Thee and Thine forever.

GATHERING HOME.

In this neglected, quiet spot,
 Mid shadows soft and drear;
 With tangled grass and creeping vines
 And running waters near;

The old home grim and silent stands—
 The fires, warm and bright,
 That cracked and blazed upon each hearth,
 Are dark and cold to-night.
 The winter's blast amid the trees,
 With low and solemn moan,
 Repeats the nightbird's mournful chant,
 Where once we gathered home.

I look upon the doleful scene,
 The time-worn ruined place,
 And fail to find amid the wreck
 One faint, familiar trace.
 It makes my heart o'erflow with grief,
 My tears I can't restrain,
 And o'er my bosom rolls a tide
 Of sorrow, grief and pain.
 The past doth flit before my mind
 Here once again I roam;
 And once again I hear the shout
 Of children gathering home.

Again I see my mother come
 To meet me at the door,
 And welcome home her romping ones
 When school and work was o'er.
 Again I feel the grateful warmth
 That beamed from every smile,
 When she would stoop to soothe our grief,
 Our little woes beguile.
 I hear again, with quickened pulse,
 Re-echo from each stone
 The happy, merry, gleeful laugh
 Of children gathering home.

Those children who have long ago
 Grown up to man's estate,
 And wandered out into the world,
 To strive with varying fate;
 That mother who, these many years,
 Mid shadows soft and still,
 Hath folded up her tired hands
 And sleeps upon the hill;
 That happy home, this crumbling wreck,
 Deserted, sad and lone,
 Repeat the legend, here no more,
 "Will we come gathering home."

No more within these crumbling walls,
 Where build the noisy birds,
 Will I behold my mother's form,
 Or hear her loving words.
 No more beneath this falling roof,
 Each widening gap doth tell,
 Will come again, with laugh and song,
 Those happy ones to dwell.
 No more, along these silent paths,
 Their merry feet will roam;
 But one by one—just over there
 They all will gather home.

HON. WILLIAM MONTGOMERY was born in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., April 11, 1819, and died in Canton township, April 28, 1870.

His father was William Montgomery, a native of Scotland, born in Ayrshire in 1792, and was a relative of Sir James Montgomery. He removed from Virginia to Washington county, Penn., in 1817, and the same year married Elizabeth

Yours truly
Wm. Hartgen

Kelly. He died in 1858 leaving two children: William and Martha Jane. Martha married J. F. Linville, and now resides in New Castle, Lawrence Co., Penn. They have one son, Montgomery Linville, M. D.

Hon. William Montgomery entered Washington College at an early age, and was graduated in September, 1839, under the presidency of Dr. McCaughy. He at once commenced the study of law under the late John L. Gow, as preceptor, and was admitted to practice at November term, 1841, his examiners and certifiers being the Hon. T. M. T. McKennan, Hon. Isaac Leet and James Watson, Esq. His rise at the bar was rapid and brilliant, and in a few years he took a high position among its leading members, enjoying to the last an enviable reputation, as well as an extensive and lucrative practice. In 1845 he was appointed district attorney by Gov. Shunk. In 1848 he received the Democratic nomination for State senator, but was defeated by a small majority. In 1854 he received the nomination of the same party for Congress, and during that year made some of the most powerful speeches of his life. In 1856 he was elected to Congress, and in 1858 was re-elected by a very large majority. His career in Congress was marked by several speeches of great ability, which placed him at once among the recognized leaders of the then dominant party.

Mr. Montgomery was known as the author of the "Crittenden-Montgomery Resolution" on the admission of Kansas to the Union. As a public speaker he possessed a power that would attract and hold the attention and raise the highest enthusiasm among his listeners. As a lawyer he had few peers, and his name is handed down to history as one of the most talented of the day.

In 1845 Mr. Montgomery married Matilda Duvall, of Washington county, Penn., and they had three children: Andrew Jackson, James and William. Of these Andrew Jackson married Martha G. Black, of Washington, Penn., and they now reside in Canton township, same county; they have two children, Elizabeth and George. James married Lillias Ritner, of Washington, Penn., and they now reside in Salem, Roanoke Co., Va.; they have one son, William Morgan. William, the youngest son of our subject, died in 1880.

GEORGE WASHINGTON MINTON, a prominent and well-to-do lifelong farmer and stock raiser, of Morris township, is a native of the same, having been born January 4, 1817.

His father, Philip Minton, who was a native of New Jersey, born October 6, 1782, came about the commencement of this century to Washington county, settling in Morris township, where he passed the remainder of his life, Indians and wild animals being at that time still numerous and troublesome. On January 21, 1803, he was married to Eunice Clutter, of Morrison township, by which union there were nine children, viz.: Rachel, Thaddeus, John, Sarah, Sophronia, Ruth, George Washington, Sarah Ann and Harriet, all of whom are now deceased except Sophronia and George Washington.

The subject of this memoir was married December 20, 1838, to Jane, daughter of Stephen Day, of Morris township, Greene Co., Penn., and the names and dates of birth of the children born to them are as follows: Sarah Philena, September 22, 1839; Bradley, July 25, 1842; Collins, October 30, 1845; Mary Edith, April 25, 1848; John, November 13, 1850; Stephen Minton, June 9, 1853; George Lowrie, May 22, 1856; Philip Leonard, May 29, 1858; Oliver Homer, April 29, 1859. Of these, Sarah Philena lives at home, unmarried; Bradley married Mattie Gore, of Lawrence county, Penn., who died April 25, 1889, and he then wedded Mary Anderson, of West Alexander (he is a druggist at Claysville); Collins married Miss Minerva Patterson, of Franklin township, this county, and after her death was united in marriage with Miss Mattie Grayble, of Akron, Ohio (he is a painter by trade); Mary Edith makes her home with her father, and is unmarried; John is a farmer in East Finley township, and is married to Sarah Riekey, of Richhill township, Greene Co., Penn.; Stephen is a farmer, and is married to Cora, daughter of Artemas Day, of Morris township; George Lowrie married Callie V. Webb, and after her death wedded Luella Doty (he lives in Nineveh, Greene Co., Penn., where he carries on a dry-goods store); Philip L. is married to Emma Sanders, and lives in Washington, this county; Oliver Homer lived only one year, dying April 29, 1860. The mother of this family departed this life December 20, 1888. Mr. Minton, in addition to carrying on general agriculture, has been considerably interested in stock raising, and at the present time has some ten horses on his place. He has been eminently successful, and is recognized as one of the best authorities on matters pertaining to agricultural pursuits. Politically he is a pronounced Democrat, one "dyed in the wool," and has served three years as school director.

WALTER L. WHITING. Among the well-known, progressive young business men of Washington, the subject of this sketch occupies a leading position. John Whiting, his father, was born in 1820, at Portsmouth, England, where he was educated and reared to mercantile business.

John, while yet a young man, came to America, and made a settlement in Washington county, at Washington, in 1812. In 1844 he married Margaret, daughter of Reuben and Elizabeth Turner, and the children born to this union were: Edwin (deceased), Sarah M., Mary E., William B., George E., John, Carroll C., Harry D., and Walter L. The family are members of the Protestant Episcopal Church. In politics Mr. Whiting is a Republican. For several years he has been engaged in mercantile business in Washington.

Walter L. Whiting, the subject proper of this sketch, was born at Washington, this county, January 13, 1862, and received a liberal education at the public schools. When a youth he entered the employ of William Smith & Son, the well-known merchants of Washington, remaining with them eleven years, during which time he acquired a thorough business training. In August, 1885, he received the appointment of assistant bookkeeper for the Citizens National Bank of Washington, and in 1890 was chosen cashier of the Farmers & Mechanics' National Bank, of the same place, which position he fills with eminent ability and complete satisfaction. On May 17, 1888, Mr. Whiting was married to Frances, eldest daughter of the late Edward Little, of Washington. Two children, Haven L. and Helen L., have come to bless their home. Our subject and wife are members of the Protestant Episcopal Church. In politics Mr. Whiting is a Republican.

Edward Little, born in 1837, at Silloth, England, married Eleanor, daughter of John and Mary Wales, of Carlisle, England, in 1861. The children born to them are Frances, Grace, Eleanor, Jane, Mary, Edward and Bessie. Mr. Little, wife and two children came to America and settled at Washington, Penn., in 1869. He was a contractor and builder of prominence here. Frances (Little) Whiting was born at Workington, England, August 30, 1864. Edward Little, her father, died July 27, 1885, and Eleanor Little, her mother, died March 7, 1891.

SAMUEL MAXWELL was born near Carlisle, Penn., October 23, 1776, and died October 9, 1865. About the year 1800 he purchased a farm in the vicinity of New Cumberland, W. Va. (then Brooke county, Va., now Hancock county, W. Va.), which was his home until his death.

Mr. Maxwell was very highly esteemed as a neighbor and a citizen. He was for over fifty years a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church, having been ordained to that office by Rev. Elisha McCurdy, in the church known as the "Three Springs," in the burial ground of which his body awaits the resurrection of the just. He was twice married: first to Miss Sarah Scott, by whom he had five sons—Scott, Smiley, John, Robert, William (who died in infancy)—and one daughter—Elizabeth, who became the wife of a Mr. Welsh, whose son, Rev. Josiah Welsh, was the founder and, until his death in 1877, the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Salt Lake City, Utah.

Mrs. Jane Fulton, a sister of the Rev. John McCluskey, D. D., and widow of John Fulton, of Florence, Penn., was Mr. Maxwell's second wife. They were married August 18, 1831. Mrs. Maxwell, by her first husband, was the mother of Rev. Robert John Fulton (a sketch of whom follows), a brilliant young clergyman, who died at Cumberland, Guernsey Co., Ohio, in 1855. The children of Samuel and Jane (McCluskey) Maxwell were William (born August 9, 1832, and died at Williamsburgh, Va., May 13, 1863), James McCluskey (a sketch of whom follows), and Joseph Henry, who is an extensive wheat grower near Dawson, Minnesota.

Joseph Henry Maxwell was born March 10, 1810. In the early history of the war of the Rebellion he enlisted in the First West Virginia Regiment (loyal), Col. Thoburn, commander, and continued in the ranks until the close of the war, refusing promotion and passing courageously through more than thirty pitched battles, fortunately receiving no serious personal injury, and only on one occasion a slight wound.

Robert J. Fulton was born in the northern part of Washington county, Penn., a son of John Fulton, a descendant of Robert Fulton, of steamboat renown. His mother was Jane McCluskey, a sister of the late Catherine (McCluskey) Herriott, who was the mother of William and John Herriott, well-known farmers of Mt. Pleasant township, of Miss Nancy Jane Herriott, of Canonsburg, and Mrs. Kate (Herriott) Ewing, wife of Rev. William Ewing, of the same place. Her son, James H., died some years ago at Lawrence, Kans. Mr. Fulton was one of the brightest men that ever enlivened a dinner party or social. He was considerably over six feet tall, of very slender but compact build. His manner was keen and surprisingly alert. Had he been a heavier boned man he might easily have been mistaken for a twin brother of Abraham Lincoln. He had dark complexion, small, black, sparkling eyes and a dense shock of very black hair. He was a man of exceedingly fine taste, and very few in the Presbyterian Church to day equal his scholastic attainments and oratorical powers. After teaching school in country districts for some years while a boy, he attended the celebrated academy at West Alexander, presided over for many years by his mother's brother, the far famed Dr. John McCluskey. Then after teaching in this school and reading a complete course in the classics, mathematics and theology under the tuition of

Dr. McCluskey, he was, after a most rigid examination, licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Ohio, whose members declared that he had stood a better examination than any candidate that had ever come before them. Mr. Fulton had no brother, but two sisters, one of whom, long since dead, was the wife of Samuel Phillips, of Chartiers township. She had three children: Fulton, Hibbert and Sophie C. J., the first being the editor and proprietor of the McDonald Outlook, the second a very popular and successful physician at Pittsburgh, and the third a well-known resident of Canonsburg. The second sister of Robert Fulton was Mary, wife of Rev. T. B. Van Eman, of Canonsburg, who died many years ago, leaving one son, John William, who is a Presbyterian minister and missionary at Geneseo, Kans. After having been licensed, Mr. Fulton was called to the Presbyterian Church at Cumberland, Ohio. A few years after he went to assist at a wonderful revival of religion in a neighboring church where he preached each day and each night for two weeks; then coming home preached on Sabbath to his own people an exceedingly impressive sermon from Micah vi: 9, and took pneumonia and fever that carried him off in a few days. Thus passed away one of the brightest spirits this county ever produced. Robert Fulton married Ruth Anna Lucas, who resides in West Alexander, Penn. They had one daughter, Kate, who married a Mr. Sproul, an attorney, who has for some years been engaged in one of the departments at Washington, D. C.

Rev. John McCluskey, D. D., was for over a quarter of a century the active and successful pastor of the church of West Alexander, Penn. At the age of thirty-three years he came to it, a licentiate from the Presbytery of Philadelphia, and was ordained by Washington Presbytery as pastor, October 8, 1828. Chester county, Penn., claims the honor of his birth, which occurred June 17, 1795, though the discipline of his youth came from Washington county, the future sphere of his labors. Jefferson College sent him forth in the class of 1822, adorned with her culture, and better still as a new man in the purpose of his life; for while an under-graduate he made his confession of Christ in the Chartiers Church, then under the pastoral care of Dr. John McMillan. Not a little of his mental development, before and after his collegiate training, came through his own efforts as a teacher, and the habit thus acquired increased and widened his influence throughout his pastoral work. He received his theological training partly under the instruction of Dr. Ezra Stiles Ely, of Philadelphia, and, for one year, in the Princeton Seminary. Dr. McCluskey was more a man of action than of severe study. His preaching was plain, Scriptural, sound and spiritual, abounding in illustrations from daily life. It was attended with steady ingathering to the communion of the church, and often with special revivals. He was pre-eminently a man of affairs, even at times taking the temporal as well as spiritual interests of his people into his care. Thus, under his influence, the general advancement of society kept pace with the progress of his church. He was a special friend of liberal education. He established the West Alexander Academy, and conducted it with much success and reputation during the pastorate, sending forth from its walls about fifty students who became ministers, besides many candidates for the other professions. He was also an active trustee of Washington College. Dr. McCluskey's resignation, April 15, 1854, in the fifty-ninth year of his age, was not for the purpose of inglorious ease, but rather for a change of work. After a year spent in the service of the board of education, he supplied the pulpit of the church of Neshaminy, Penn., and afterward that of Smyrna, Delaware, through a period of five years. In 1859 he founded a church school in West Philadelphia. In 1864 he established an institution at Hightstown, N. J., for the free tuition of the children of ministers, and especially of missionaries. Returning to Philadelphia in 1870, he acted for a time as associate principal of the Mantua Academy. The evening of his declining life was spent among friends at Wooster, Ohio. On March 31, 1880, in the eighty-fifth year of his age, his life work came to its end in Philadelphia, and he ascended to the upper skies. [From the "History of the Presbytery of Washington."]

His body was laid to rest in the old Neshaminy Cemetery at Hartsville, Penn., where, since, at his side was placed the body of his most estimable and greatly beloved wife.

REV. JAMES McCLUSKEY MAXWELL, D. D., was born in the vicinity of New Cumberland, Brooke Co., Va. (now Hancock county, W. Va.), August 1, 1837. He was baptized in infancy by Rev. John W. Scott, president of Washington College, at the old Three Springs church, where his father, Samuel Maxwell, had been many years before ordained a ruling elder by Rev. Elisha McCurdy. His mother was Jane McCluskey Maxwell, a native of Robinson township, Washington Co., Penn., and a sister of Rev. John McCluskey, D. D., well known in western Pennsylvania as a leading preacher and educator in his day. At Cumberland, Ohio, and at Miller Academy, Washington, Ohio, Mr. Maxwell was prepared for Washington College, where he graduated in 1860. The two years following he spent in the Western Theological Seminary, at Allegheny, Penn., going in the autumn of 1862 to Chicago, where, in the spring of 1863, he graduated from the McCormick Theological Seminary. Mr. Maxwell's student life was marked by faithfulness as well as brilliancy, and gave full promise of his subsequent successful and eminently useful career. He was licensed to preach the Gospel by the Presbytery of Zanesville at its session held at McConnellsville, Ohio, in April, 1862, and was invited, immediately after completing his theological course, to take charge of the Presbyterian Church at Fort Madison, Iowa, also to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church at Kirkwood, in the vicinity of St. Louis, Mo. The latter he accepted, and was in September, 1863, ordained a Gospel minister by the Presbytery of St. Louis, and installed pastor of the Kirkwood Church, which position he held until June, 1865, when he accepted a call to the pastorate of the Twelfth Presbyterian Church of Baltimore, Md. The two years which Mr. Maxwell passed at Kirkwood were the closing years of the war of the Rebellion, and in addition to his pastoral duties he gave attention to the physical and spiritual wants of the soldiers in the barracks, hospitals and prisons of St. Louis. He entered upon his labors as pastor of the Baltimore Church in August, 1865, and continued in that pastorate for nine years, when, on account of impaired health, he was advised by his physician to give up his work entirely for a year or two, or seek a field in which his duties would be much lighter; and in accordance with his advice he removed, in the fall of 1871, to the beautiful town of Belvidere, N. J., where he accepted a call to the Second Presbyterian Church, in the pastorate of which he continued for six years. On October 26, 1865, Mr. Maxwell was married in Hightstown, N. J., to Miss Gertrude A. Appleget, of that town, Rev. S. S. Shriver and Rev. John McCluskey, D. D., officiating. Mrs. Maxwell is a woman of rare natural endowments and broad culture, and she has ever, by her sweet, Christian spirit, and her efficiency and exceptional qualifications as a social leader and Christian worker, won a warm place in the esteem and affection of all with whom her position has brought her into contact. The kindly, generous and hospitable disposition of the husband has always met with the hearty sympathy and co-operation of the wife, so that the parsonage has ever and everywhere been noted for its delightful hospitality. Mr. Maxwell and his wife have been twice abroad: first for four months in 1877, visiting Great Britain, Holland, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland and France. The second visit abroad was made in 1880-81, including almost a year, and embraced Algeria, Spain, Italy, and, on the part of Mr. Maxwell, Egypt, Palestine, Greece, Constantinople, and, westward by way of the Black Sea, the Danube, Hungary, Austria, Venice, and over the Simplon Pass. During this tour Mr. Maxwell was correspondent of such well-known newspapers as the New York Independent and Tribune, the Interior of Chicago, and has since been a valued contributor to the Christian at Work and the Christian Union. In 1882 Mr. Maxwell became editor of the Presbyterian Observer at Baltimore, which position he held until the winter of 1885-86, much of the time supplying the Presbyterian Church of Harmony, Harford Co., Md., and was earnestly solicited to become pastor there, but, though the mutual attachment was very great between the people of that church and himself, he did not see his way clear to assume its pastorate. In the meantime he was called to the pastoral charge of the Presbyterian Church at Sweet Air, Baltimore Co., Md., and to that of Beaver, Penn., and also to the church of Monongahela City, Penn., which latter he accepted, and of which he is still the popular and beloved pastor. Dr. Maxwell is a preacher of rare power, fresh, vigorous and suggestive—a pastor of exceptional tenderness and devotion—an organizer of peculiar tact—a friend whom one values and a companion of whom one never tires. [By Rev. John R. Sutherland, D. D., of Pittsburgh]

THOMAS H. BAIRD. A conspicuous figure on the streets of Monongahela City, elastic in step, erect in carriage, of fine physical proportions, still in the prime of life, and, withal, remarkably well preserved, is the subject of this biographical notice.

Thomas Harlan Baird, his father, was born November 15, 1787, in Washington, Penn. He was the third son of Dr. Absalom and Susanna (Brown) Baird, the latter a daughter of John Brown, architect. When quite young he was sent to a Latin school, taught by one of the pioneer classical teachers of that day in Brooke county, W. Va. He was called home by the sudden death of his father, and his education from that time had to be completed by his own earnest efforts and scholarly tastes. He studied law with Joseph Pentecost, one of the most prominent lawyers of that period, and was admitted to the Washington county bar in July, 1808, before he had reached the age of twenty-one. In 1818 he was selected as president judge of Washington, Fayette, Greene and Somerset counties, and continued to hold the position until 1838. This commission bestowed upon so young a man, when the Washington county bar was quite noted for its able lawyers, was an acknowledgment of his legal ability. During the ten years in which he practiced law he was intently occupied in promoting by every means in his power, the growth and progress of his native town. Like his father, Dr. A. Baird, he was always among the first to assist, by his hardily earned money and indomitable energy, any enterprise for that purpose. In very many cases the credit due his indefatigable labors was given to others, who did not hesitate to assume an honor they had not earned, and were rewarded by political positions he could not contend for. He was, in 1814, one of the directors and stockholders in the Washington Steam mill & Manufacturing Company, in which he lost money and gained nothing. He was also one of the contractors on the National Road, with Parker Campbell and Thomas McGidin; his energy was unbounded in this work as in everything he undertook. The first survey made for the Chartiers Valley Railroad, one of the first railroads prospected, was made wholly at his expense; which fact was not learned until after his death, the information being given by the engineer who surveyed it for him. He was one of the commissioners appointed to raise stock for the Washington & Williamsport Turnpike Road, and for the Washington & Pittsburgh Turnpike Road. In 1813 Judge Baird, and Judge William Wilkins, of Pittsburgh, purchased the stock raised by the State for the Washington & Pittsburgh Turnpike. No dividends were ever paid the purchasers on this stock though it was kept as a toll-road for many years. The Monongahela Navigation Company, having failed in its many attempts to improve the navigation of the Monongahela river, at last succeeded in forming a practical slack-water navigation company, and among the many commissioners appointed to receive subscriptions to the stock, Judge Baird was numbered. Copies of speeches made by him all over the counties of Washington, Allegheny and Fayette, the numerous articles written for the newspapers, all show how much in earnest he was in his efforts to excite the interest of the people in this great work. He was also elected, in 1813, president of the board of directors of the Bank of Washington, an "Original Bank," as it was called. In November, 1818, Judge Baird conveyed the property of the bank to David Acheson, Alexander Murdoch and John Marshall, trustees. His judicial career has been the subject of very severe criticism and comment by his political enemies, and he was accused by them of judicial tyranny while he was on the bench. His great fault was that he had a very high ideal of the dignity of his office, and he resented an insult offered to himself when on the bench, as contempt for the majesty of the law, of which he was the official representative. He was a man who could not be bribed by flattery, or political offices of preferment. While on the bench his life was several times put in jeopardy, by men who resented his legal decisions when not given in their favor. An attempt was made by his enemies to have him impeached before the Legislature of Pennsylvania, for disbaring lawyers guilty of contempt of court, but they did not succeed, in spite of all their malignant and false accusations. Those who wish to ascertain the facts in regard to this case can consult the Legislative records of that day. In 1851 an article appeared in a Philadelphia newspaper, written in defense of Judge Baird at the time of his nomination as the American candidate for the supreme judgeship. It says, in regard to his impeachment: "It is well known there was nothing shown in the investigation that could affect the standing of Mr. Baird, either as a judge or a gentleman." Among the many charges brought against him, by his political enemies, when his name was mentioned for United States senator was that he was Pro slavery. This falsehood is denied by the same writer, whom we again quote: "Judge Baird in all the relations of life has been a law-abiding, consistent and benevolent friend of the colored race, not an Abolitionist, or Pro slavery, but an American. By one single decision of his, given when on the bench of Washington and Fayette, he discharged from slavery perhaps twenty thousand slaves. [See the case of Miller vs. Dwelling, 14 S. & R. p. 442.]"

Judge Baird was of scholarly taste, and not only well versed in all knowledge pertaining to his profession, but was also a fine classical scholar. His Greek Testament lay upon his study table, and not unopened or unread—busy though he might be and his Horace, Cicero and Virgil were so familiar to him that in conversation he had always an apt quotation ready to suit the subject under discussion. He had also studied Hebrew, and in the last few years of his life devoted much time in translating the Psalms of David, not for any purpose but his own pleasure. Judge Baird was not ambitious to acquire wealth or political power. His home was to him the dearest place on earth, and nothing could induce him to seek for pleasure or enjoyment out of its sacred precincts. After his retirement from the bench, upon which he was, much against his will or inclination, persuaded by influential friends to remain several years longer than he otherwise would, he practiced law at the Pittsburgh bar, where he was engaged only in important cases. In 1848 he retired to his much loved home, at Harlem, his country seat on the Monongahela river, where he had for many years spent his summers with his family and friends. In early life he was married to Nancy McCullough, by whom he had children as follows: Ellen B., intermarried with Dr. R. R. Reed, both of whom are deceased, leaving a number of children and descendants, residing in Washington, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, Penn.; Sarah A., who married George Morgan, but is now a widow residing in Washington, Penn.; Harriet N. Baird, who died recently at Washington; Mary, intermarried with Joseph N. Patterson, both now deceased, leaving a son, T. H. B. Patterson, a lawyer in Pittsburgh, and Nancy, wife of Rev. William B. McKibben, residing in Cincinnati, Ohio; Eliza, who was married to Robert Patterson, Esq., now a widow residing at Sewickley, Penn., having two daughters, Jane and Bessie, living with her, and one son, Thomas Patterson, Esq., who is practicing law in Pittsburgh, Penn.; Thomas H. Baird, subject proper of sketch; Margaret W. Baird, residing at Washington, Penn.; Jane R., who was married to Charles McKnight, now a widow, residing at Sewickley, Penn., has three sons, T. H. B. McKnight, Charles McKnight and Frank McKnight, and two daughters, Mary B. and Eliza; Susan C. and Emily G. Baird, who died in young womanhood many years ago.

Thomas H. Baird, whose name opens this sketch, was born in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., December 17, 1824. He received his education at the common schools of the borough, and at Washington College, from which he graduated at the early age of seventeen years; and, having decided on following the legal profession, commenced the study of law in his father's office in Washington. In February, 1846, he was admitted to the bar of Washington county, and at once commenced practice in partnership with his father, continuing (with the exception of a period hereafter referred to) until 1872, when he was elected district attorney, on the Democratic ticket in a Republican county, his opponent being John Aiken. During his term of service he was instrumental in securing the conviction of Briceland, for the murder, by shooting, of John Allenham. Briceland was found guilty after a lengthened trial, convicted, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. In 1850, when T. McK. T. McKennan was appointed, by President Fillmore, Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Baird was given the part of assistant chief clerk of the Census Bureau, and was later honored by an appointment as clerk in the Department proper. Part of his duties were to prepare and file all papers relating to appointments and removals of officers, and among them he found some demanding his own removal on political grounds. These he filed in the regular way, the Department yielded to the demand, and decided on his removal, and he wrote out his own dismissal and came home. One month afterward, however, he was recalled and promoted. Mr. Baird was ten years, in all, occupied in Government position at Washington, D. C., and then returned to Pennsylvania. For some three years we next find him practicing his profession in Pittsburgh, after which he was engaged a time in the coal business on the Monongahela river. In 1869 he opened a law office in Monongahela City, where he has since resided.

In 1819, while an attorney in Washington, this county, Thomas H. Baird was united in marriage with Maria L., daughter of Dr. Samuel M. King, who, in 1820, came from Fayette county, Penn., to Monongahela City, where he practiced his profession till his death in 1882. Two of his children are yet living in Washington county: Mrs. Baird and R. C. King, and two, Mrs. C. J. Mosely and Dr. C. B. King, are residents of Allegheny. Mr. and Mrs. Baird are the parents of two children, viz.: Frank E., an attorney at Charleroi, this county, and Maria Louise, wife of A. G. Mitchell, assistant engineer of the Monongahela division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, with residence in Monongahela City. The latter are parents of one little daughter, Maria Louise Mitchell. Socially, Mr. Baird is a member of the Royal Arcanum, and in church connection is a Presbyterian. In 1886 he was nominated by his party for Congress, but the county proved too strongly Republican for him on that ticket, and he was defeated. Mr. Baird is a great reader, and in his profession keeps himself up to the times, having one of the finest and most complete law libraries in the county.

JA. PATTERSON, M. D., was born in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., April 7, 1844. His paternal grandfather, a native of Ireland, when a young man emigrated to America, where he married. In the war of 1812 he enlisted in the American army, and was never more heard of, and his wife in the meantime died, having given birth to a son, who was named Harrison.

Harrison Patterson, father of the Doctor, was born in East Finley township, and was reared to the trade of stone mason, which he followed twenty years, but later took up farm life in his native township, where he is yet living at the age of eighty-one years. He married Grizzella, daughter of Daniel and Catherine Ross, natives of Scotland, who emigrated to the United States and became residents of Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Patterson settled on a farm where she died on Christmas day, 1881, at the age of sixty six years. The children born to them were as follows: William R., a butcher in Claysville; John A., subject; Mary A.; J. A. R., who died in infancy; Francis P., residing in East Finley township; one deceased in infancy; Henrietta, residing in East Finley township; Catherine G., a teacher in a mission school in Indian Territory; Josephine, who died at the age of two years; David W. and Harrison Newton, farmers in East Finley township. The father is still on the old place, where he has lived for the past fifty six years. For fifteen years he was a captain in the old militia, and is commonly called by the title of "Captain."

John A. Patterson received his education in the common schools and in the Millsburg Normal School. For six years he was a professional school teacher, in the meantime preparing himself for the medical profession. He read medicine with Dr. J. W. Kelley, of Claysville, and attended Jefferson Medical College during the winter of 1869-70; then practiced the profession four years at Zollarsville, after which he attended Ohio Medical College, graduating therefrom in the class of 1875; he is also a graduate in dental surgery. Returning to Zollarsville, he remained there until 1887, when he moved to Washington, where he has since enjoyed a highly satisfactory general practice in medicine. On October 18, 1875, Dr. Patterson was united in marriage with Miss Belle, daughter of Isaac Leonard, of West Bethlehem township, and they have one son, Guy E., born July 19, 1876. Politically the Doctor is a Democrat, and for twelve years he was school director in West Bethlehem township. He is a member of the Improved Order of Bephtasophis and of the Equitable Aid Union. He is now a member of the borough council.

MR. ALLEN, clerk of the courts of Washington county, is a grandson of Rev. Moses Allen, a prominent early settler of the county, who was born September 5, 1780, in Westmoreland county, Penn., and in his youth learned the trade of millwright, which he pursued diligently and successfully for some years. His classical education he secured at Jefferson College, and he studied theology with Dr. John McMillan. On June 23, 1807, he was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Ohio, and in November of same year was ordained and installed pastor of the united churches of Providence and Jefferson, in Greene county, Penn. In 1816 he received a call from the congregation of Raccoon, Washington Co., Penn., and was installed June, 1817, and continued to exercise the pastoral office for twenty-two years.

The Rev. S. C. Jennings, who had been associated with the Rev. Moses Allen for many years, in an address delivered at the "Centennial Meeting" of the Raccoon Church, spoke of the Rev. Moses Allen, second pastor of the church, as follows: "Tall in person, grave and sedate in manners. A preacher of ability, a great reasoner, logical and instructive, irreproachable in character, and diligent in catechising the youth. His pastorate extended over a period of twenty-two years. During this pastorate a new house of worship was built, which was of brick and capable of seating 600 persons. This building continued in use forty-two years."

In 1838 he left Raccoon, and was afterward pastor for nine years at Crab Apple Church in Ohio, and he died there January 16, 1847, aged sixty-six years. It appears from memoranda in his own handwriting that his labors were abundant. "I was pastor of Raccoons," he writes, "twenty-two years, during which I preached 2,685 times; administered the Lord's Supper seventy-five times; admitted to the communion of the church 324 persons; baptized fifteen adults and 558 children, and solemnized 190 marriages." He was a man of decided and positive character, of strong mental ability. He was a sound theologian, and is always spoken of as a very logical, instructive and forcible preacher. Mr. Allen was married, in 1805, to Catherine, the youngest daughter of Rev. John McMillan, D. D., who was the pioneer Presbyterian minister, and founder of the "Log Cabin School," which ultimately became Jefferson College, of Canonsburg, Penn. His watch, an old English "Bulls eye," which he carried until the case wore off, is in possession of subject. Ten children were born to this union as follows: (1) John Watson, born December 16, 1806, married September 29, 1835, Jane Patterson, and both are now deceased (their only son, R. P. Allen, was a justice of the peace in Sharon, Iowa; he married Annie Cleaver in 1863); (2) Eliza Williams, born August 21, 1808, was married March 11, 1836, to John Symington, and is now deceased (their only son, Allen Harper Symington, married Miss Ellen Mellyvaine in 1869; they reside in Cherry Valley, Mt. Pleasant township, Washington county, and have three daughters and one son); (3) John McMillan, of whom special mention is made further on; (4) Jane M., born October 2, 1812, died September 8, 1819; (5) Samuel Harper, born February 6, 1815, was married April 26, 1838, to Mary Wallace (he attended Jefferson College, Canonsburg, and Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; he practiced medicine over half a century, and is now living at Bakerstown, Allegheny Co., Penn.; he has two daughters: Lydia A. (Mrs. Gibson), in the city of Allegheny, where for several years he was a leading teacher in the public schools, and Kate, at home; an only living son, L. M., is a member of the Pittsburgh bar, with residence in Allegheny; an elder son, John Watson, died in the service of his country in the war of the Rebellion); (6) Catherine Blair, born April 2, 1817, married Thomas Morgan, April 19, 1836, and both died in Belmont county, Ohio, where several of their children now are, others being in the West; (7) Moses Coe, born December 20, 1820, married Ann Campbell November 2, 1843; they are both of Belmont county, Ohio, and now reside in Island Creek township, Jefferson Co., Ohio (they had six sons, three of whom died in early youth; the eldest one living married a Miss Crawford, in Jefferson county, Ohio, and they are now in Missouri; the other two surviving sons, William Vincent and Samuel Harper, are living with their parents); (8) Aaron, born February 9, 1823, in Washington county, married Ann Lyle in Belmont county, Ohio, and both died about the year 1877 (one son, John, married a Miss Pollock, another son, Moses Ray, married a Miss Armstrong, one daughter, Catharine, married a Mr. Dunlap, another, Belle, was wedded to a Mr. Pollock, and they all live in Belmont county, Ohio; another son, David Dinsmore, is a minister of the Presbyterian Church in Idaho, and Oscar, yet another son, died at the age of twenty years; (9) William McMillan, born April 11, 1825, died May 23, 1823, and (10) Sarah J., born March 5, 1829, died June 23, 1833.

John McMillan Allen was born July 11, 1810, in Greene county, Penn., and reared to agricultural pursuits, which he followed through life. In March, 1837, he married Margaret Ann Riddell, daughter of Rev. John Riddell, D. D., first pastor of Robinson Run Church, by the edge of Washington and Allegheny counties. To this union was born one child—Moses Riddell Allen—the subject of this sketch. This wife dying February 28, 1856, Mr. Allen married, for his second wife, Mrs. Margaret Ann Lockart, mother of ex-Sheriff Lockart, and one child came of this marriage, Annie Eliza, now the wife of J. A. Evans, an attorney in Pittsburgh, Penn. The father died in Burgettstown, July 15, 1860, and is buried in Raccoon cemetery; the mother died near Noblestown, Allegheny Co., Penn.

M. R. Allen was born July 19, 1842, in Harrison county, Ohio, and in 1859 removed with his father to Burgettstown, Washington county, and has since been a resident of the county. His education was received at the common schools and at Franklin College, New Athens, Ohio, after which he taught school in Washington county, Penn. For a time he carried on farming operations, also a mercantile business, and on August 2, 1881, he founded the Burgettstown Call, which he published till January 1, 1887, when, having been elected to the office of clerk of courts of Washington county, he sold the paper to the owner of the Enterprise (J. H. Cramer), since when the two have been consolidated with the title Enterprise-Call. Mr. Allen then removed to Washington, where he has since had his home, having been re-elected in 1890 to the office he holds.

On January 14, 1864, Mr. Allen was married to Ella M. Daugherty, of Burgettstown, daughter of John Daugherty (of the same place) and Abigail B. (Canon) Daugherty, daughter of Joshua Canon, and granddaughter of Col. John Canon, the founder of Canonsburg. Mr. and Mrs. Daugherty were the parents of five children: John Wesley, who died in 1878; Ella M. (Mrs. M. R. Allen); Jennie C., wife of W. B. Porter, of Burgettstown; Flora B., teacher in the East Washington public schools, and Asenath M., who died November 3, 1804. The father of this family, who was a wagon maker and carriage builder by trade, well known and highly respected, died in August, 1866; in April, 1877, the mother followed him to the grave, and they sleep their last sleep in the cemetery at Burgettstown. They were both natives of Washington county, the father born in Donegal township. To Mr. and Mrs. Allen were born six children, of whom the following is a brief record: John E. is with his father; Harper Riddell is his father's assistant in the office, and his special work now is preparing the new index of the Orphans' Court, from the organization of the county up to date; Wesley Hays is also assistant clerk with his father (he was married in 1891 to Miss Dora E. Mounts, of Washington county; one child—a daughter—Helen M., has been born to them); William, died September 11, 1881, and Effie, died August 28, 1881, both in infancy, aged eleven and seven respectively; Maynard Robert is attending Washington and Jefferson College, freshman class. Mr. Allen is a Republican in his political preferences, and has served as burgess of Burgettstown, also as clerk of council. In 1880 he enumerated the census of the First Precinct of Smith township. Since coming to Washington he has served as director of the Keystone Building & Loan Association, a local organization.

For three generations preceding our subject, the family has been Presbyterian in its religious affiliations and workers in the cause; it is, therefore, nothing of wonder that Mr. Allen and his entire family are followers and supporters of the same principles and creed. Mr. Allen is a member and deacon of Dr. Brownson's (First Presbyterian) Church of Washington, and is also a member of the Improved Order of Heptasophs, of Washington, having filled the office of "Archon" in the order since its organization. At the present time Mr. Allen is secretary of the school board of East Washington.

JAMES GLENN DICKSON, M. D., a resident for the past fifty years of Canonsburg, Penn., was born February 15, 1825, in what is now South Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn. His parents were William and Margaret (Glenn) Dickson.

Dr. Dickson traces his ancestry in a direct line through a period of over three hundred years, and the year 1893 enables him to look upon the faces of the tenth generation.

The earliest records, which have yet been obtained by Dr. Dickson, tell of one John Dickson, a merchant in Glasgow, Scotland, "a man of religious character and possessed of considerable wealth." This merchant with his good wife stirred up others to pray with and for them, that the blessing of a son might be given them, "vowing that if their petition was granted they would devote him to the service of the Lord." Such a son was the Rev. David Dickson, born possibly in 1591, probably as early as 1583, as the exact date can not positively be stated. He was educated in the University of Glasgow, where he became a professor in 1641, remaining in that position until 1651, where he accepted a similar position in the Edinburgh University. He was appointed minister to Irvine in 1618, and of him it has been said: "The Professor of Divinity at Edinburgh was truly a great man; the Professor of Divinity at Glasgow was a greater man; but the minister of Irvine was the greatest man of all." His repudiation of the Five Articles of Perth, as issued by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1618, won for him much persecution, as well as great honor. He was pre-eminently a scholar, a preacher, a worthy Scotchman, as his biography and writings show. In all there are seven works, the offspring of his master intellect, copies of three of which, with a sketch of his life issued by the committee of the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, are in possession of Rev. David Craig Stewart, of Hoboken, N. J., and were obtained of him recently in Edinburgh.

Wm. G. Dickson

Alexander Dickson, a son of Rev. David Dickson, wrote the dedication in 1664 to the English preface of his father's last work, calling it a child of his father's old age—the English translation of Latin treatise on the subject of the Conscience; his father having died in 1663, probably eighty years old, certainly not younger than seventy-two. Another son of Rev. David Dickson was John, who became a merchant in Edinburgh, Scotland; and this John established his sons David and George in mercantile business in Armagh, Ireland, as a branch of the Edinburgh house.

The records show that three sons of the Armagh merchant, George Dickson, came to America, including the family also of one of these three, that of Andrew, who had married a Seceder girl in Armagh previous to his emigration, and whose family record (Andrew's) is preserved in a Bible which gives the date of birth of each of his ten children, and the record of the marriage of nine of these. This Andrew Dickson, of the fifth generation thus far traced, was great-grandfather of Dr. James G. Dickson of the eighth generation.

The six elder children of Andrew Dickson were born in Ireland between the years 1734 and 1743, and the other four were born in America near Chambersburg, Penn., where their father had settled. The eldest of the four born in this country was Andrew, whose birth was in 1748, and who died in service in the Revolutionary army. The Bible containing Andrew Dickson's family record is now over one hundred and sixty years old, and is in possession of Rev. David French Dickson, of East Palestine, Ohio, a nephew of Dr. Dickson. Andrew Dickson's children were named: Hannah, George, Jean, James, Esther, Sarah, Andrew, Agnes, Mary Ann and John. George Dickson, the eldest son and second child in this family, was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch. George Dickson was born December 7, 1735, and died in the fall of 1817. He married, in 1770, Rachel McKee, then twenty-nine years of age, a daughter of James McKee, of Chambersburg, Penn. In the summer of 1772 George came to Black Lick creek (now in Indiana county), accompanied by his younger brother, John, and bought 400 acres of land. There they built a cabin, cleared what land they could during the summer, and then went back to Chambersburg for the winter. In 1773 they returned and cleared more, and in 1774 George moved his family into the cabin. He continued to clear and cultivate the land until 1778, when, in the greatest haste, they were obliged to flee upon receiving news of the Wyoming massacre and near approach of the hostile Indians. With his wife and their small children, James, Andrew and Agnes, all mounted upon two saddle horses, they summarily returned across the mountains to Chambersburg. In 1782 George and his brother John again visited their property in western Pennsylvania to find everything in ashes. Coming southward to Pittsburgh, suitable land was found and purchased by George Dickson, it being some 440 acres on the north branch of Miller's run, and purchased from one Thomas Reed, an early settler, who held it under a patent grant. John Dickson went further west into Ohio, where he married and settled near Poland.

The family of George Dickson numbered eight children—three sons and five daughters. These uncles and aunts to Dr. James Dickson were James, born January, 1772; Andrew, born May 27, 1775; Agnes, born February 27, 1777; Mary, born September 4, 1780; Rachel, born November 13, 1782; Hannah, born November 18, 1785; Elizabeth, born August 10, 1789; and William, the father of Dr. Dickson, born August 2, 1791. James, the eldest, married a Miss Frazee, and their family consisted of several daughters; James Dickson died in Cuyahoga county, Ohio. His brother, Andrew, also married a Miss Frazee, a sister of James' wife; Andrew died near DeKalb, Ohio, leaving a large family, chiefly sons. Agnes, the third child in George Dickson's family, died at the age of nineteen near Noblestown, Penn.; she had doubtless been named for her father's sister Agnes, the wife of Mr. Bryar, of Chambersburg. Mary, the fourth member of George Dickson's family, married Joseph Burnside, and resided near Canonsburg, where her death occurred at an advanced age, having for many years before her death been totally blind; her family numbered three daughters and one son, namely: Margaret Jane (recently deceased), the wife of Rev. David Thompson, D. D., of Monmouth, Ill.; Rachel, wife of John Foley; Mary Anne, now Mrs. Haslep, of near Monmouth, Ill.; and George Dickson Burnside, who died a few years since on his farm near Canonsburg. Rachel Dickson, the fifth in George Dickson's family, died near Scottsville, Penn., and was the wife of Solomon Irons; their family numbered six children, viz.: James, John, Rachel, William, Joseph and Andrew. Hannah, George Dickson's sixth child, became the wife of Andrew Henderson, and of their six children four were sons, named respectively: George, John, William and Ebenezer. Hannah Dickson Henderson died near Granville, Ill. The next younger sister was Elizabeth, the seventh child of George Dickson; she became the wife of James Stewart, and at her death which occurred near Clinton, Penn., left no family. The youngest child of the grandfather, George Dickson, was William, the father of Dr. James G. Dickson.

William Dickson was born in South Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn., in 1791. On the death of his father he came into possession of the homestead, and became one of the most successful farmers in his part of the country, one of his specialties being the rearing of fine-wool Merino sheep, his flock of such being the first introduced into his neighborhood. He was a man of exemplary piety, and honorable dealings with his neighbors. In the year of his father's death, 1817, he married, and was elected ruling elder, to fill the vacancy caused by his father's demise, in the Noblestown (Penn.) Associate (now United Presbyterian) congregation, which office he continued to fill until his death, which occurred March 18, 1872, in his eighty-second year. He resided all his life on the farm where his father had spent the last thirty-four years of his life. William Dickson was twice married, his first wife being Margaret Glenn, a daughter of James and Jennie (Buchanan) Glenn, who came to western Pennsylvania a few years subsequent to the arrival of William Dickson's parents. The Glens came from Lancaster county and settled in Westmoreland (now Allegheny) county, prior to 1800. Margaret Glenn was born in Lancaster county, Penn., in 1791. The marriage of William Dickson and Margaret Glenn occurred in 1817. Their children were as follows: Jennie Glenn, born August 21, 1818, died in infancy, May 9, 1819; Rachel, born July 18, 1820; George, born October 8, 1822; James Glenn, born February 15, 1825; Joseph, born December 10, 1826, died February 9, 1827; Mary J., born April 28, 1828; Andrew and William A. (twins), born June 15, 1831 (Andrew died in infancy, May 5, 1832). The mother of these children died November 18, 1852, at the age of sixty-one years. For his second wife William Dickson married, in 1857, Susan Aikins, who preceded her husband a little over two weeks in entering the Heavenly home, her death occurring March 1, 1872, and their remains repose in the cemetery at Robinson Run church, where are also the remains of William Dickson's parents.

Rachel, daughter of William Dickson, became the wife of Robert Potter, and with her two daughters, Maggie D. and M. Lulu, has resided near Noblestown since the death of her husband, July 16, 1887.

George Dickson, elder brother of Dr. Dickson, was married to Margaret French, daughter of Rev. David French, D. D., and her son, Rev. David French Dickson, has been mentioned earlier in this sketch. George Dickson's second wife was Eliza Glenn, who left no family at her death. In November, 1892, occurred the death of Annie Rankin, third wife of George Dickson. James Glenn Dickson is the next younger brother, and to present his lineage is the design of this sketch. Mary J. Dickson, a younger sister, married James Clark, and resided in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., until 1870, when they removed to Canonsburg, where her husband's death occurred December 18, 1885. Their family consisted of Nettie, who died in infancy; William Dickson Clark, whose wife (now deceased) was Mrs. Lizzie McKeown; Marguerite S., the wife of Culbert M. Greer; Anna Mary, the wife of Rev. David Craig Stewart; and James Addison Clark, who resides with his mother.

William A. Dickson, the youngest of his father's family, like his father, William Dickson, came into possession of the ancestral estate, where with his family he resided for many years until his removal to the McBurney farm near Midway, Washington Co., Penn. His wife was Elizabeth McBurney, daughter of Robert and Eliza (Welsh) McBurney. William A. Dickson's family of eight children are: Margaret, Elizabeth, Robert, Anna S., William, Agnes, Walter and Bertha. William A. Dickson has in his possession his mother's Bible inscribed as follows: "Margaret Glenn, her book, August 12, 1812," which also contains record of the birth of each of Dr. Dickson's sisters and brothers. The ponderous volume "Boston's Complete Works" is in possession of Rev. David F. Dickson, and contains the annals previously quoted of Dr. Dickson's grandfather, George Dickson's family.

Dr. James Glenn Dickson was brought up on his father's farm in South Fayette township, Allegheny county, and received his primary education at the subscription schools of the neighborhood, which was supplemented by a few terms at the public school, and instruction under the preceptorship of Rev. John M. French, pastor of the Associate Church at Noblestown; then in 1843 he entered Jefferson College, from which he graduated in 1847 under the presidency of Dr. Robert J. Breckeuridge, of Kentucky. In 1848 he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. J. V. Herriott, of Canonsburg, attending during the winters of 1849-50 and 1850-51 Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Penn., where in the spring of 1851 he received his medical diploma. In the summer of that year he commenced the practice of his chosen profession at Mount Jackson, Lawrence Co., Penn., remaining there one year. Then at the solicitation of his preceptor, Dr. Herriott, he returned to Canonsburg and entered into a partnership with him, which existed about two years, at the end of which time Dr. Herriott removed to Philadelphia, Dr. Dickson continuing the practice alone in Canonsburg. Upon the return of his old partner, after an absence of several years, Dr. Dickson again associated with him, but at the end of three years Dr. Herriott moved to Valparaiso, Ind., since when our subject has been alone in his professional practice. He has enjoyed an unbroken, most successful practice of over forty years in Canonsburg, a longer period than has fallen to the lot of any other physician of the place.

Dr. Dickson was married September 1, 1856, to Margaret H. Buchanan, who was born February 28, 1828, in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., a daughter of Alexander and Mary (Miller) Buchanan. Two children were born to Dr. Dickson and wife, viz.: Mary Jeannette and William Alexander, both living with their parents. William A. was married September 24, 1885, to Margaret Gabby Allison (daughter of Hon. Jonathan and Margaret (Gabby) Allison), whose death occurred September 6, 1886, followed six weeks later by the death of their infant daughter, Maggie Olive. On October 23, 1890, occurred the marriage of William A. Dickson and Mary Lizzie Martin, daughter of Dr. John W. and Elizabeth (Allison) Martin. Their infant daughters are Aneita Marie and Margaret Elizabeth, who, with their parents, are part of Dr. Dickson's household. The family are members of the United Presbyterian Church, the Doctor having united with it when it was known as the Associate Church. Politically, he was first an Old-line Whig, and, since the organization of the party, he has been a staunch Republican. The commodious family residence was built by the Doctor some eight years ago, on the corner of Pike street and Greenside avenue.

The years herein recounted bring the Dickson lineage through ten generations; of the tenth there are in direct line eight representatives, viz.: Three children of Rev. David F. and Annie M. (McCready) Dickson—George, David and Zetta; three grandchildren of Mary J. (Dickson) Clark, viz.: Clark and Lucile Greer, son and daughter of Culbert Means Greer and Marguerite S. (Clark) Greer, and Anna Mary, daughter of Rev. David Craig Stewart and Anna M. (Clark) Stewart; added to these the Doctor's two grandchildren, before named (Aneita Marie and Margaret Elizabeth), and the eight representatives of the tenth generation from John Dickson, of Glasgow, Scotland, are recounted.

The Doctor is wedded to his profession, and as he is by nature, as well as by education, eminently qualified for his, the most benevolent of all professions, he commands and enjoys the respect and confidence of his many patrons.

COL. CHILLION WASHBURNE HAZZARD, editor and proprietor of the Monongahela Republican, was born in Monongahela City, Penn., May 5, 1849, in the same house and in the same room in which his mother was born and married. He is a son of Hon. Thomas R. Hazzard and Harriet M. Hamilton, the former of whom was born in Chemung county, N. Y. The paternal ancestor of Thomas R. Hazzard was from the North of Ireland.

C. W. Hazzard was educated in the common schools of Monongahela City, and afterward attended an academy taught by Henry Lee, at West Newton, Westmoreland Co., Penn. Mr. Lee was formerly a professor in Washington College, and belonged to the celebrated Lee family, prominent in the Revolution, and some of whose descendants were leaders in the Confederate service during the Civil war. After completing his education in West Newton, he entered the Monongahela Republican printing office as an apprentice. His father purchased the newspaper plant, and admitted his son to a joint ownership. This he left, however, to accept a commission in the Twelfth Pennsylvania Reserves. He served through the war, and left the service a brevet major at the close of the campaign. He was in forty-two fights, including Drainesville (December 20, 1861), Mechanicsville, Gaines' Mills, Newmarket Cross Roads, Malvern Hill, Second Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg (where he was wounded), Gettysburg, Bristoe Station, Mine Run, Wilderness (seven days), Spottsylvania (his brevet reading "promoted for gallantry at Spottsylvania"), North Anna and Bethesda Church. He is specially mentioned in general orders for gallantry in action, as appears in the official records of the Rebellion published by Congress. In 1863 Capt. Hazzard was transferred from the line to the staff as Division mustering officer, and served in that capacity with Gens. Sykes, Crawford and McCandless. After the war he returned home and resumed the publication of the Monongahela Republican, of which he then became publisher and editor. On the formation of the National Guard of Pennsylvania after the war, Col. Hazzard was made

Assistant Adjutant-general of the Seventeenth Division, on the staff of Maj.-Gen. Thomas F. Gallagher, with the rank of colonel. On the reorganization of the guard, he was appointed on the staff of Gen. James A. Beaver, as a brigade inspector-general, serving as such until his chief was elected Governor of the Commonwealth. Col. Hazzard then relinquished his position in the National Guard. He has served in various military positions of a civil character: as president of the Washington County (Penn.) Veteran Association; is one of the managers of the Gettysburg Battlefield Memorial Association; is secretary of the Pennsylvania Reserve Veteran Association; was elected Commander of the Department of Pennsylvania, G. A. R., at Reading, January 30, 1880, and has been several times chairman of the committee on resolutions in the National Encampment, of which body he has attended every encampment since the organization of the G. A. R., except that at San Francisco, Cal. He has been somewhat in demand as a speaker on G. A. R. occasions, and has delivered over two hundred addresses in its interests. As a newspaper man, he has been thirty-nine years a printer, during thirty years of which he has been editor. He has been secretary of the Editorial Association of Western Pennsylvania, Virginia and Eastern Ohio since its organization. He was made postmaster of his native city almost immediately after leaving the service, and resigned on the day when Mr. Cleveland was first inaugurated. He was the first State president of the Patriotic Order of the Junior Sons of America, and for six years published its official organ, a monthly journal called the Junior's Friend. In 1880 he established the daily edition of the Monongahela Republican, now in the twelfth year of its existence. He is a prominent Freemason, and has taken all of the degrees to the thirty-third, Sir Knight twenty-second, and is a member of Syria Temple, Mystic Shrine. He served for four consecutive years as Grand Regent of the Royal Arcanum of the State of Pennsylvania, and is at this writing Supreme Vice Regent of the Order at large.

Col. Hazzard was united in marriage with Miss Mary B. Goff, and they have two children: De-Veron, a student at Washington College, and Harriet H. Col. Hazzard is ably assisted in his editorial office by Miss Jane King, who promises to be one of the brightest newspaper writers in the State. He was secretary of the Monongahela Valley Agricultural Society, and one of the directors in the Monongahela Driving Association. He is a trustee, on behalf of the State, of the California Normal College, and a trustee of the Monongahela Memorial Hospital. Col. Hazzard has two brothers: Joseph De V., an orange grower in Florida, and T. L. Hazzard, M. D., professor of physiology in the Western Pennsylvania Medical College, at Pittsburgh. Mr. and Mrs. Hazzard attend the First Presbyterian Church at Monongahela City.

N N. PATTEN, M. D., is a physician of large practice and wide reputation, one who has earned his success in life, beginning when a boy on his father's farm, in the endeavor to climb the ladder of life. He is a native of Pennsylvania, born in Union township, Washington county, January 11, 1847, a son of William (a farmer) and Isabella (Porter) Patten, the latter of whom was a sister of Mrs. Morrison (mother of Mrs. Alexander, of Monongahela City). They were the parents of nine children, of whom the following is a brief record: one son died in infancy; Matthew is a farmer in Iowa; Martha and Elizabeth are both residents of Union township, this county; Mary is the wife of Thomas Estep, and lives in East End, Pittsburgh, Penn.; William J. is a farmer in Kansas; Sarah Belle lives in Union township; Newton N. is the subject of this sketch; J. Alfred is in Union township. The father died in 1886, aged eighty-seven years four months; the mother is yet living, aged eighty-eight years seven months.

N. N. Patten received a liberal education at the common schools of his native township, which was supplemented with a course of study at Elder's Ridge (Penn.) Academy. Subsequently he entered Washington and Jefferson College, from which he graduated in 1869. He then commenced the study of medicine in Monongahela City with Dr. M. P. Morrison, a cousin, and attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, which granted him his degree of M. D. in 1873. Dr. Patten at once commenced the practice of his profession in Pittsburgh, Penn., which he followed there with eminent success for a period of ten years; then for three years was the head physician at the Pittsburgh City Farm, Homestead, Penn. In 1886 Dr. Patten removed to Monongahela City, where he has since been in the general practice of his profession, his ride being a very wide one, his skill as a physician, and his courteous and social manner as a gentleman, having made him extremely popular, and surrounded him with hosts of friends. The Doctor in politics is a Republican; in church connection, a Presbyterian.

J OHN F. COOPER, cashier of the People's Bank of Monongahela City, was born December 7, 1847, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., on the farm which he now owns and occupies, and which was the property of his father before him.

One of the earliest settlers in what is now Fallowfield township was Frederick Cooper, a native of Germany, who emigrated to this country prior to 1770, and first settled in Frederick county, Va., where he lived until 1771. On April 20 of that year he came to this region, which was yet a wilderness, and purchased from Andrew Devore "one certain tract or parcel of land lying on the north side of the Monongahela, and bounded by lands of Paul Froman and James Devore." A peculiarity about the description of the said tract of land was that the quantity was not mentioned. He retained this tract of land about a year, and sold it to Abraham Miller in April 1772. At that time the boundary dispute between Pennsylvania and Virginia was raging, both provinces claiming jurisdiction over this region. Bedford county had been erected March 9, 1771, and the inhabitants of the Monongahela Valley were called upon to pay their shares of the taxes to maintain the county government. And the majority of these having come from Maryland and Virginia, and being doubtful, in the absence of an established western boundary, whether they were living under the government of Pennsylvania or that of Virginia, resistance to the collection of these taxes followed. On this account much ill feeling and turbulence prevailed, and continued for some years, steps being finally taken by the two colonies, in 1780, for a permanent settlement of the boundary contention, and the jurisdiction of Virginia was withdrawn. Washington county was erected March 28, 1781.

When Frederick Cooper first came here, he left a wife and three children—John, Mary and Elizabeth—in the East. Owing to the feuds, discords and litigations amongst the inhabitants of the contending jurisdictions, because of the boundary controversy and the resultant inability of the settlers to make adequate defense against the Indians who had again become troublesome, he sold his land to Abraham Miller in 1772, and returned to the East, remaining there several years. His wife having died, he married Elizabeth Kyle, returned to this county with his family, and purchased 287 acres of land which had been warranted on April 17, 1769, to Jacob Froman, and surveyed under the name of "Wrangle." The warrant was returned to Frederick Cooper December 27, 1784, and he lived upon this land the remainder of his lifetime. From one of a series of historical sketches of early families written by Dr. J. S. Van Voorhis is gleaned the following: Of the children of Frederick Cooper, Catherine became the wife of Thomas Ward, who built the first house in Belle Vernon; Margaret married John Roland, and both died near Wooster, Ohio; Abraham removed to Guernsey county, Ohio; Frederick owned a farm in the "Dutch settlement," and was the father of Samuel and F. K. Cooper, all now deceased; Rebecca became the wife of Daniel Jacobs; George removed to Ohio; Valentine lived and died (a very aged man) on the original Cooper homestead at the mouth of Maple creek, a farmer and distiller by occupation.

The names of the children of Valentine Cooper were Jackman, Washington, Jehu, Frederick, Elizabeth, Nancy, Narcissa and Josiah C. Of these, Jackman died in Upshur county, W. Va.; Washington has special mention further on; Jehu removed to Marshall county, Ill.; Frederick was a school teacher, and died in 1852; Nancy married Newton Van Voorhis, and both are now deceased; Elizabeth became the wife of Apollon Speers, who lived in Allen township opposite Belle Vernon; Narcissa married Martin Weaver, and removed to Huron county, Ohio; Josiah C. is still living, and is a practicing physician in Philadelphia.

Washington Cooper, second son of Valentine, always remained a citizen of Fallowfield township, where he was born. He was twice married, first to Sarah A. Thompson, by whom he had five children: Margaret A., Mary E., Sarah A., Narcissa and Malinda J., all now deceased. Mr. Cooper's second wife was Ruth A. Graves, who was born in 1815 in West Pike Run township, this county, a daughter of John and Ann Graves, Quakers, who came from near Wilmington, Del., and settled in West Pike Run township, Washington county, where they purchased a farm. They were regular attendants of the Friends' meeting house, a short distance from their residence, and were universally respected. Five children were born to them, viz.: Albina, who married Josiah John, a Quaker, and they resided in Pike Run township; Jehu, who married and after his wife's death moved, with his two children, to Marshall county, Ill.; Taylor, who married Susan Borom, and lived on the homestead farm in Pike Run township; Ruth A.; and Mary A., who married Ellis Johnson, and they afterward lived in Stark county, Ohio (he died in his one hundredth year, and she lived to a ripe old age; the late Hon. James G. Blaine was a pupil of hers). The children born to Washington and Ruth A. (Graves) Cooper were five in number, as follows: John F., our subject; Eli M., who was born in 1849, and died in 1889 unmarried; Charles J., deceased in infancy; John V., a farmer in Fallowfield township, owning a place of 106 acres, a portion of the old homestead (he married Jennie V. Wilson, and they have four children living); and Annie A., wife of William West, a farmer in Sumner county, Tenn. The father died in October, 1866, aged sixty-six years; the mother resides with her son John F.

John F. Cooper attended the common schools of his township, which were above the average of country schools, in the meantime assisting his father on the farm. In 1881 he was elected register of wills for Washington county, and re-elected in 1884, serving two terms. At the expiration of his term of office, in 1888, he returned to the farm, where he remained until January 1, 1891, when he assumed the duties of cashier of the People's Bank of Monongahela City, he having been elected to that position in December, 1890. On January 19, 1871, Mr. Cooper was united in marriage with Miss Sarah J. Crow, who was born in Fallowfield township, this county, a daughter of Benjamin and Susan (Thompson) Crow. Squire Crow was born in Washington county, and was a farmer and carpenter, also a justice of the peace a number of years. Mrs. Crow was born in Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. John F. Cooper had born to them seven children, viz.: Frederick F., clerk for the Catsburg Coal Co.; Olive R., Alice C., Frances J., George W., Ethel E. and Charles McIlvain. The mother died January 23, 1888. She was a member of the M. E. Church, Mr. Cooper of the Presbyterian Church. He resides with his children on the old homestead farm, which he owns, four miles southwest of Monongahela City, on the Brownsville road in Fallowfield township. The farm comprises 113 acres, and he raises thereon grain and stock.

WILLIAM BOYLE HOUSTON. The Houston family of Canonsburg, Washington county, are descended from the family of that name in Lancaster county, same State, who emigrated from Scotland to Ireland and thence to this country, settling in Lancaster county, Penn. We quote the following from "The Encyclopedia of Contemporary Biography of Pennsylvania:"

"The Houstons of Pennsylvania come of a race noted for its physical and mental strength. They trace their lineage far back into the days of chivalrous Scotland, when the destinies of the land of heath and heather were dominated by the tyrannical Edward I of England. The Houston came into existence during the life of the valorous Wallace. Its origin, however, goes back to the time of Sir Hugh de Pavinan, the Laird of the Lands of Kilpeter in Strathgrief, and comes in a direct line through the oldest sons down to the present time. The baronetcy is now held by George Ludovic Houston, of Johnstone, Renfrewshire, Scotland. The younger sons of the original family migrated from their native land to the North of Ireland, in the early part of the seventeenth century, and are now scattered through the Counties of Antrim, Tyrone, Donegal and Londonderry. From them came that branch of the family that settled in Lancaster county, Penn., between the years 1725 and 1730, and from the Lancaster county Houstons, branch out the Houstons of Virginia and Tennessee, and the famous Sam Houston of Texas, the hero who battled with Santa Anna, and who was the first president of the Republic."

The following is from the "History of Lancaster County:"

"The Houstons of Lancaster county, Penn., are the descendants of John Houston, who had six sons and two daughters born at the farm immediately facing Gap Station on the Pennsylvania Railroad. The sons were Daniel, John, William, James, Thomas and Samuel. The daughters were married, one to Rev. Alexander Proudfit, the other to Mr. John Johnson. Both daughters had large families. The five elder boys (Samuel was too young) were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, and with the exception of James, who was killed at Paoli, fought through the war. After the war Daniel went to Franklin county and afterward to Washington county; William went to Trumbull county, Ohio; Thomas went to Rockbridge county, Va. The youngest son, Samuel Nelson, remained in Lancaster county, Penn. He was distinguished for his splendid physical manhood. After graduating from Burlington College he gave his attention in his early years to the study of materia medica and pharmacy. But he did not repress the martial nature which was within him, for he became an active member of Capt. Shippen's troop of horse in Lancaster county, and took part in the war of 1812.

"Dr. John Houston, the second son, studied in the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated in 1766. He studied medicine with Dr. Shippen, of Philadelphia, and began practice in York county, Penn., then a frontier town. In 1773 he married Susannah Wright, of Columbia. He entered the Revolutionary army as a surgeon. His eldest brother, Daniel, also a Revolutionary soldier, moved from Lancaster county to Franklin county, where he remained a short time, then moved to Washington county, settling in the neighborhood of Cross Creek township. His son, Daniel, born in Franklin county, was a man of more than ordinary intelligence and executive ability, a worthy representative of the Scotch-Irish Covenanters. He was tall, broad-shouldered, erect and possessed of great strength. He early engaged in buying and shipping wool, flour and pork; loading boats with flour and wool at the mouth of Cross creek, and boating to New Orleans. Few people have any idea of the courage, endurance and strength required to make such a trip. There were no canals or railroads. The river was full of malaria, and the channels were not marked as now; worse than this, he was compelled to guard against robbers and murderous savages—both white and red—on the return walking back. Mr. Houston made many trips of this kind, and was always successful. He had the confidence and respect of all. He was gentle and severe, firm and unchangeable when satisfied he was right; he had a mind for equity, and was chosen executor and guardian by many of the best families, both alone and as an associate with others. The Rev. James I. Brownson informs us he knew Daniel when he (Rev. James I. Brownson) was a boy. He says: "Daniel Houston was a man of strict integrity, possessed of great mental and physical strength, of a fine face and presence, strong in his likes and dislikes, a firm friend and generous to those worthy his confidence." Daniel Houston and Dr. Brownson's father were friends, and were also administrators for the same estates. Daniel Houston was opposed to slavery and was, no doubt, connected with the underground railway, but he had his own views. Dr. Brownson asked him if he was going to the Abolitionist meeting at Pittsburgh; he said: No! he was in favor of colonization. His religious views were the same as his ancestors, and he always adhered to the Seceder Church. At Houstonville a Seceder church was erected on a lot given by David Houston, his son, on the Daniel Houston farm. This church is still standing, in the possession of their son, William B. Houston. Daniel Houston was one of the organizers of the old Franklin Bank of Washington, Penn., now known as the First National; was the largest stockholder, and at one time president of the bank. He was also a trustee of Jefferson College, Canonsburg. Daniel Houston was progressive and public-spirited. When the Chartiers Railroad was projected many years ago, Daniel Houston took great interest in it and subscribed some $6,000 to help put it through. The company that then had charge of the work failed, however, and the enterprise remained in a dormant condition for many years. Finally, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company offered to complete the road on condition that the people would take stock to the amount of $250,000. D. C. Houston (son of Daniel) at once took hold of the project, subscribed liberally himself, and worked untiringly to induce people to take stock and secure the road. Owing to his efforts and the confidence the people had in him, $87,000 was secured.

"Daniel Houston married Miss Betsey Clark, who was born on the old homestead farm of her father in Canton township, now owned by Samuel K. Weirick. She was a daughter of David and Hannah Baird Clark [Baird was originally Bard, and was Scotch]. David Clark was born near Mercersburg, Franklin Co., Penn., and was a son of James Clark and Nancy (Reed) Clark; they were of Scotch descent. James Clark was born in the North of Ireland, and came with his brother, Thomas, to Pennsylvania. Thomas settled in one of the southern States. James Clark was married in Lancaster county, Penn. Daniel Houston was a great reader, and while his early opportunities for obtaining an education were limited, he made the most of these opportunities and became a careful, safe and successful business man, and was universally trusted and respected as an upright, honorable man. Rev. David Riddle, president of Jefferson College (of which Daniel Houston was a prominent trustee), preached his funeral sermon, and in recounting his many sterling qualities as a friend, citizen, neighbor and business man, said: "You might as well try to move the Alleghany Mountain from its base as to shake the integrity of Daniel Houston." Daniel Houston and wife, Betsey (Clark) Houston, had three children - one son and two daughters, David, the son, being the only survivor, the girls dying in childhood.

"David Houston was born on the old farm of his father in Independence township, was educated in the common schools and at Jefferson College; in early life engaged in mercantile pursuits, but later retired from mercantile life and looked after the estate inherited from his father, who was a large landowner. For many years David Houston was a director in the First National Bank of Washington. He was a resident of Canonsburg at the time of his death, which occurred May 27, 1888, when he was in his seventy-third year. He was a public spirited, charitable, generous, whole-souled Christian gentleman, was active in his efforts to secure the location of the Chartiers Valley Railroad, and for many years, and up to the time of his death, a trustee of Washington and Jefferson College, a trustee of Jefferson Academy, president of the Oak Spring Cemetery Company, and held other positions of trust. Mr. Houston and his father served continually as directors of the First National Bank of Washington, Penn., from its organization; and the discharge of their duties was marked by a regularity in attendance, by uniform courtesy to other members of the board and by a watchful care over the interests of the institution. The funeral services of Mr. David Houston were held in the Chartiers U. P. Church, of which he had for many years been an honored and worthy member. His liberality in the church and his charities to those in need are well known. No one in trouble or need appealed to him in vain. He was always ready with sympathy and something more substantial when needed. In 1840 he married, at Washington, Penn., Miss Louisa Bell Sweitzer, who was born in Brownsville, Penn., a daughter of Dr. Louis Sweitzer, of Doyles town, Bucks Co., Penn., who graduated from a medical college in Paris, France. He and his wife had children as follows: William, who became associated with a dry-goods firm of Philadelphia, Penn. (he afterward went to California, where he engaged in the mercantile and real estate business on his own account, and in which he was successful; he contracted a fever, and while convalescing started for Philadelphia, but died en route, and was buried at sea; Dr. Louis, Jr., who became a physician and practiced medicine at Claysville, Washington county; Alonza B., who, previous to his emigration to Gonzales, Tex., acquired the profession of law and medicine, after which he spent some time in the military academy at West Point and was classmate of Gen. U. S. Grant (he had been a member of the National Congress of Texas from the county in which he was a resident at the time of his death, and he enjoyed the undivided confidence and esteem of all who knew him; he died aged thirty three years and some months); Mary A., who married Samuel Wise, of Vincennes, Ind.; Elizabeth, who died young; Emma, who married, January 24, 1836, Col. Marmatel Boyle, a nephew of Gen. Boyle, of Kentucky (she was considered one of the most beautiful women of her day; they had two children one son who was a prominent judge, of Vincennes, Ind.); Cecelia L., who was married September 19, 1837, to John Imbria, of New Castle, Penn., and they had two sons, prominent business men of Philadelphia, Penn.; Louisa Bell, wife of David Houston; Harriet, who was married to John Vowell, of Washington, Penn; and two children: Louis Sweitzer Vowell, a druggist of Washington, Penn., and Bossie, wife of F. O. Graper, of Toledo, Ohio. David Houston and wife had six children—three sons and three daughters: Miss Elizabeth, of Canonsburg; Mary wife of Rev. W. F. Brown, D. D., also in Canonsburg; Louis Sweitzer, who died aged twenty-four years; William Boyle, executor of the estate, Canonsburg; Harriet, who died unmarried aged twenty-two years, and Daniel, who died in childhood, aged three years." Immediately after the death of Daniel Houston his son David took possession of the farm, and in 1871 divided a large portion of it into lots, which were soon sold, and now a thriving town, named Houstonville, is seen, where a few years ago were cultivated fields. The remaining part of this farm is now in the possession of Mr. W. B. Houston, and thus continues to bear the family name. The first survey of lots of Houstonville, was made by Thomas H. Johnston, and the first house was built by Mr. A. T. Haft in 1871.

JAMES GIBSON HART, the subject of this sketch, was born January 2, 1807, on Muddy run, Adams Co., Penn. Looking back from that date, beyond three generations, history holds closed doors to the chronicler of all, or any, of the manners, customs, sayings, doings, facial expressions, or physical build, of that branch of the Hart family who subsequently settled in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn.; and within that limit, indeed, held open doors only, to deal out material scantily that only the ground timbers of a history have been vouchsafed to future generations. Therefore, very little is known, save that Nathaniel Hart (1), tired of the thralldom and despotic rule of kings and queens, and notwithstanding Columbia was then in her infancy, yet, rocked in the same cradle, was the Goddess of Liberty and Freedom, the vital principles of future America, the very pulse of the young nation, and while at that period there could be no conception of the magnitude of the benefits and blessings that was to be unfolded to a future people, yet he saw with a prophetic eye the glorious privileges of Independence in the land of the free, and said: "Their land shall be my land, their God my God." Consequently, in about 1730, he sailed from fair Scotia's shores to the fairer shores of America.

His journey ended when he pitched his tent on Muddy run, Adams Co., Penn. Nothing is further known of his family, except two sons, Nathaniel (2) and Micah. The last named afterward settled near Norwich, Ohio (date not known). In 1769 Nathaniel Hart (2) married Margaret Monteith, and lived on Muddy run, Adams county, Penn. In that home were born four children: David, in 1770; Jane, in 1773; Margaret, in 1782; Mary, in 1785. Of these, Jane married John Kerr, lived and died near Gettysburg, and had four children. Margaret married Nathaniel Paxton, in 1804, and removed to Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., in 1812. The numerous Paxton families throughout the northern part of Washington county, Penn., and parts of Ohio, are descendants of Nathaniel and Margaret (Hart) Paxton. Mary came with her sister Margaret in 1812; in 18— she married Smith McCollough, of Pigeon Creek. But to return to Nathaniel Hart (2). He died in 1787, on Muddy run, Adams county; his wife, Margaret (Monteith) Hart, died in 1785, leaving the four children, orphans. When David was eleven years of age he assumed the entire management of the homestead, and cared as a father for his three sisters. He married Sarah Paxton (sister of the above-spoken-of Nathaniel), still remaining on Muddy run until the spring of 1807, when he and his estimable wife, feeling the advantages and future welfare of their family demanded removal farther west, sundered the strong ties that bound them to their childhood's home, and when James Gibson, their third child and the subject of this sketch, was seven weeks old, started on their journey, coming through on horseback, and arriving in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., about the 1st of April, the floors of their dwelling being all under water the night they arrived. In this home they lived and died. Six children were added to their family after removal to Washington county, making nine by first marriage as follows: Andrew, born in Adams county, in 1803, died in Canonsburg, Washington county, August, 1861; Jane, born in Adams county, 1805, married Henry Newkirk, removed to Ohio, died in 18—; James Gibson (our subject), born January 2, 1807, the last child born in Adams county; David, the first child born in the new home, in 1809, died in Ashland county, Ohio, March 30, 1872; Maria Hart Fergus, born in 1811, died in Washington January 30, 1888; William, the youngest son by first marriage, born 1819, is still living in the eastern part of Washington county, Penn. (Dates of birth and death of the remaining three of the nine are not known to the writer). But just when youth was buoyant with hope, and life replete with bright promises, death claimed their two sons, John and Paxton, and daughter Sarah. It was then the father was made to feel deeply that "In sorrow's cup flashed bitter wines," and that his "House was left unto him desolate," as about the same time his wife was taken from him, dying in 18—. In 18— he married Mrs. Margery Butler, to whom were born three children: Margaret Hart Ker, who resides in Monongahela, Penn.; Eliza Hart Hosac, living in Scenery Hill, Penn., and Dunning Hart, the present owner of Lowland Stock Farm, Washington county, Penn. He too was left, as was his father, at the age of sixteen, the care of his mother and two sisters, his father dying October 1, 1852. His second wife, Margery, died January 2, 1871, and, now, after these long years, the writer feels prompted to add a few words to his memory, not to eulogize, but simple unvarnished truths. He was a man of no ordinary intellect, a thorough Bible scholar, his character unimpeachable, distinguished for uprightness and sterling integrity; he had an indomitable will, a characteristic inherited from the Scotch-Irish race, and which has been transmitted all along the line, neither friend nor foe could swerve him from what he considered the line of duty; yet allied to this unyielding will was a keen discriminating judgment, and soundness of decision, generous, gentle and kind, traits that made him a safe counselor and guide, and secured for him the esteem and confidence of an extended community. In short, he was a just man who feared God and wrought righteousness, and was eminently useful in his day and generation, both in the church and in the world.

J. G. Hart

This brings us to James G. Hart, the subject proper of our sketch, who, as before said, became a resident of Washington county, Penn., from Adams county, in the spring of 1807, when he was seven weeks old. He remained in the home nest until eighteen years of age, when self reliance (the strongly marked trait of his character) asserted itself, and he determined by energy and industry to be self-sustaining, and provide a resting place for old age; consequently he engaged with Robert Moore to learn the trade of carder and fuller. Having finished his trade, he started in business for himself, in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., manufacturing goods of different kinds and grades. He was always awarded the first premium for the extra quality and texture of his broadcloths, and other goods put on exhibition at what was then known as the "Cattle Show," at Washington, now our Agricultural Fair, and he manufactured the first piece of broadcloth ever exhibited at a Washington county fair.

In 1831 he married Isabell Mollitt, still living, and following his trade in West Pike Run township until, 1838, he removed to Centreville, a village six miles west of Brownsville, where he engaged in the dry goods business. His wife Isabell died in 1840, leaving four children, as follows: David Mollitt, their eldest son, with his family resides at this time in Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn., was married twice; his first wife, Miss Pera Rex; his present wife, Miss Lissa S. Wilgus. Maj. James P. Hart, his second son, married Miss Lide J. Aiken, of Washington, Penn.; was treasurer of Washington county in 1868 and 1869; he with his family reside in Washington, D. C. Lizzie J., the only daughter by this marriage, married Chancey R. Dever; they, and their only child, James Hart Dever (the first grandchild), are living in Washington, Penn. John T., the youngest child, died while in the army at Cumberland, Md., April 27, 1864. In 1842 he married Margery Gregg, by whom were six children; he pursued the dry goods business successfully until 1848, when, feeling that the future welfare of his family demanded an extension of his lines, he, when his sixth son, Brit Hart, was seven weeks old (same age as he himself was when he came from Adams county), removed to a farm in West Bethlehem township, one mile from what was then Hillsboro, now Scenery Hill.

He took a deep interest in the questions and political issues of the day. His own community ever found him an ardent friend and benefactor to all worthy objects, a strong advocate of education; but his "pet" was the common-school system, and he zealously fed and nurtured its growth and improvement in his county. It was years ago that, when the president of the board of directors (teachers being sent to him to be examined), knowing his unfitnes, he with others conceived and agitated the question not only of teachers being examined by a county superintendent, but proposed other measures for the improvement of the system. He eagerly watched its life and growth, and hailed with pleasure the advancement and stage of perfection it had attained in his day.

Politically, in the beginning he was an Old line Whig; in the turning of the wheel a staunch Republican; and was chairman of the first committee that met in Washington, to organize the Republican party. He was, in 1856, elected associate judge, with Jacob Slagle as colleague, and was re-elected in 1861 with Robert Dinsmore as colleague. It was due to the suggestions and efforts of Slagle and himself that the barbarous custom of withholding food from jurors, until their decision was given, was done away with; they looked not only upon the cruelty, but the desecration of principle as well. He was a devoted friend to the soldier and his cause, giving aid and comfort when and where he could. But the crowning efforts of his life was in his sacrifices, counsels and life work for his family. In that relation he lived exalted from the unwavering confidence reposed in him by his own children. They knew beyond a doubt that he in all things lived a life that was above a shadow of suspicion. In the dark hours of sorrow and affliction he was their Anchor, and when their life-boat seemed to be almost engulfed by the grim waves of death dashing against it, and though tempest-tossed himself, yet he was the stay, strength and comfort of his children. He gave to them that restful feeling, that, if "Father is at the helm all will be well" so far as an earthly hand can do. Death came so often, and took from him some loved one. His second wife, Margery, died June 2, 1855, leaving six children. Her youngest child, Ard, died October 1, 1856. Soon the death-cloud that before had darkened the home of his father, David, rose again and settled with sombre gloom over his own home, by taking two sons, Thomas and Samuel, and daughter, Sarah, to the spirit land, just when life was sweetest, leaving only two surviving children by his second marriage: Hon. Brit Hart, who in December, 1874, married Miss Priscilla D. Lacock, of Scenery Hill, Washington Co., Penn., and who was, in 1884, elected to the Legislature; and sister Annie E., who, in October, 1872, married Thomas Ross (they both with their families now reside in Washington, Penn.). Mrs. Jane B. Hopkins, of Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn., his third wife, died in March, 1890. In closing this sketch of the life of James G. Hart, no more fitting tribute can be offered to his memory than that "As the father so the son," a Christian firmly adhering to the Calvinistic faith, a man of unblemished character. Firm and unyielding, though not without charity, the promptings of duty always found him sure and steadfast, of sound judgment and decision. After a long lingering illness, which was borne without a murmur, he closed an active and useful life July 5, 1885.

The war record of the Hart family, who served in the war waged against secession and slavery is as follows: Two sons of David Hart (2); William, who served in an Ohio regiment; Dunning, his youngest, who served in the One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., was wounded at the battle of Gettysburg. William's two sons, Emmet and Leander, the latter losing his life at Averill's raid. Andrew's son, David, of Canonsburg, a member of Company A, Ringgold Cavalry, was wounded in an engagement at Cedar Springs, Md. James G. two sons: Maj. James P. Hart, of Washington, D. C., captain of Company A, Ringgold's Cavalry, afterward promoted to major, and John T. Hart, member of same company, who died in Cumberland, Md., April 27, 1864. David Hart, Jr., of Savannah, Ohio, was a member of the Twenty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

THE SHARP FAMILY. In the year 1749 William and Mary Sharp, of Scotch Irish ancestry, left their native land to seek a home in the New World. They first located in the State of South Carolina, where their son Isaac was born April 13, 1750, and the family afterward moved to Virginia.

Isaac Sharp remained with his parents until after attaining his majority, and then left the paternal roof, coming to Greene county, Penn. He located near Waynesburgh, following surveying and school teaching. In those days wild hogs, deer, turkeys and bears roamed the forests; and many times the young pioneer stealthily crept past bruin, who was enjoying a feast of young pork, fearing that he might relish a human morsel as dessert. About the year 1777 he was united in marriage with Mary Woolverton, who was born April 22, 1761, daughter of John and Abigail Woolverton. In the year he was married Isaac Sharp took the following oath: "I do hereby certify that Isaac Sharp hath taken and subscribed the oath or affirmation of allegiance and fidelity, as directed by an Act of General Assembly, intitled: 'An Act to oblige the free male inhabitants of this State, above a certain age, to give assurance of allegiance to the same, and for other purposes. Witness my hand and seal this 13th day of September, 1777. John Morrow." The following letter, written in 1776, is yet preserved as a souvenir:

My dear and affectionate son, I am glad to inform you we are in good health at present, blessed be God for His unspeakable favors. Hoping with all sincerity and ardent affection, you are in the same healthful condition. I received a letter from you this day dated October 27 (eleven months after), which gave me much satisfaction to hear of your bodily health, and it the more added to my joy to hear that you are still teaching school. Dear child, consider well, that while you are employed for your bodily support, see that your mind be employed for the welfare of your soul; for if we should gain the whole world, and lose our souls, what advantageth it us? Neither be ye conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, that you may know what is the will of God concerning you. Abstain from all evil company, lest you be partakers of their evil deeds. Seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all other things shall be added unto you. Keep yourself, my dear child, unspotted from the world. You know my advice to you when we last parted, concerning these associations, which I expect you to keep in obedience to me, as you may readily conclude, I would in no wise advise you to your hurt. We are talking of going to South Carolina again next spring. John's son John, who lives there was here, but I hardly think we will go. Be sure to miss no opportunity of writing to me. I would be glad to see you, and having nothing more to write, I remain your affectionate mother.

Isaac and Mary (Woolverton) Sharp settled on McNarlin's run, about three miles northwest of Waynesburgh, Penn., where seven sons and six daughters were born to them: John, born in 1779; Thomas, born in 1781; Abigail (Mrs. John Knight), born in 1783; Mary (wife of William Sharon), born in 1786; Rachel (married to David Congar), born in 1788; William, born in 1790; Isaac, born in 1792; Rebecca (wife of Ephraim Coruin), born in 1794; Margaret (Mrs. Thomas Largely), born in 1796; Darby Woolverton (deceased in 1807), born in 1798; Zachariah, born in 1800; Bittia (Mrs. Samuel Smith), born in 1802; and Manaen, born in 1805. [The above dates are taken from a Bible published in 1793, the property of the father of these children.] Isaac Sharp was a man of medium size, fair complexion and thin features. He was a pioneer school teacher by profession, being known throughout the country as "Old Master Sharp." Much of his life was spent in surveying, he having been among the first to own the necessary instruments and follow that vocation in Washington county. In his chosen work he had a rare opportunity to judge of the value of vacant lands, and wealth was within his grasp had he but seized it in time. He entered into an agreement with one Timothy Ross to make surveys, Ross promising to furnish the money to secure the patents. Their united efforts gave fair promise of success, but just at the critical point Mr. Sharp unfortunately yielded to an old weakness, and became a victim to the use of strong drink. This proved fatal to their enterprise, for, although in the main a temperate man, he was addicted to a periodical habit, and while in the power of its grasp another made use of his lost opportunity. Although weak in this respect, Isaac Sharp was an intelligent man, and the affection of his children is evident from the fact that each of those who have had sons of their own have named one in memory of their father. He died in October, 1830, and was buried in the old cemetery at Waynesburgh, by the side of his wife, who had preceded him August 26, 1822, in her sixty-first year.

Of the sons born to Isaac and Mary Sharp, as above mentioned, the following is a brief record: John and his wife (Elizabeth) passed their lives in Ohio; Thomas and his wife (Unity) were early settlers of Ohio, where they reared a large family (he was justice of the peace); William and Ruth moved West; Isaac was married to Eliza Nailor, who bore him seven children, namely: John, William, Isaac H., Rebecca, Mary J., Rachel and Maria (the parents resided in Millsborough, Penn., where the father followed the latter's trade; he was a sound logician, and in politics a Democrat); Manaen was a farmer by trade, and passed his life in Indiana (one of his children was drowned in a tan vat); he died at the age of thirty years.

Zachariah Sharp, the fourth son of Isaac and Mary (Woolverton) Sharp, was born near Waynesburgh, Greene Co., Penn. When eighteen years of age he became an apprentice to one William Hartford, a blacksmith of Fredericktown, Washington Co., Penn., serving his full time, and afterward working a few months for wages. After leaving his employer the young man began business for himself and erected a small shop near Curry's run, Carter's creek. A few months later he was wedded to Elizabeth, only daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Yoder, residents of Fredericktown. The parents were Germans, and called themselves Pennsylvania Dutch. The father was a skilled potter. Mr. and Mrs. Sharp resided on Carter's creek about four years after their marriage, then moved to the village of Amity, Penn., where he followed his trade for many years with untiring industry, also teaching many young men in the trade. In those days everything had to be made in a slow and laborious fashion, the sickle and broad hoe being pounded out in the same way as the finest nail. In those days a person who brought a young horse to be shod for the first time was expected to meet his social obligations in a rather peculiar but most suggestive manner. A quart bottle of whisky, called the "colt's tail," was brought by the owner of the animal, and when the horse was shod the men were "switched in the face" by their favorite beverage—a pioneer observance of the modern "treating" custom now in vogue among different social circles. Zachariah Sharp finally abandoned the blacksmith's trade and became one of the leading country merchants of the community, afterward adding a small farm and several tenant houses to his store. Business prospered for a time, but the constant confinement was more than he could endure, and he began to long for a change. In 1855 certain mill property depreciated in value and Mr. Sharp incurred a heavy expense in its purchase. He attempted to repair and manage the old mill, but times were hard, money was scarce and interest was high, and soon, in this unfortunate experiment, the savings of many years had vanished like a mist before the sun. He was a total abstainer, positive in opinions, and usually following his own counsel. In politics he was a Whig, an ardent advocate of protective tariff and a warm admirer of Henry Clay, also favoring the United States Bank. Although never aspiring to political honors, he was nominally the postmaster for many years, the actual incumbent being a maiden lady, to whom he gave all the proceeds. He was an admirer of Jack Downing's letters, was fond of reading (owning a good library), and, like his relations, was a great hunter and a very skillful marksman. In religion he worshiped with the Presbyterian denomination, but was very liberal in his views. After an illness of but three days' duration he was called to rest from the labors of a long and busy life on September 19, 1874, in his seventy-fourth year. Mrs. Sharp was a kind and industrious companion, an affectionate and true mother, a zealous and devoted Christian. Possessing a cheerful, trusting disposition, that person was vile indeed for whom she could find no word of praise. After months of severe pain, caused by a fall, she passed over the river October 14, 1881, in her seventy-eighth year. Of the children of this family, the following is a brief record:

Mary Ann was born in June, 1824, near Carvers creek, Penn., and remained at home until the others had all left the paternal roof. She was then married to James Hughes, of Amity, this county, who died some years ago, and the widow is now residing near Washington borough with her brother Manaen. She has been a very active member of the Presbyterian Church for many years, and is now sixty-nine years of age.

William Woolverton Sharp was born January 16, 1826, in the old village in this county, where he grew to manhood. He was a fair scholar, fond of reading, and his penmanship was remarkably clear and graceful. He taught school during the winter months, attending college in the summer season, and reading medicine with Dr. Matthew Clark. In 1847 he was married to a Miss Margaret Sharp, of Washington county (who was no relation to his family). He died several years ago, and the obituary, written by his friend and comrade, James P. Sayer, reads thus:

Dr. Sharp occupied a high position in his profession, his apt mechanical ability enabling him to perform difficult surgical operations with ease. In the sick room he was prompt and careful. In September, 1862, when the war cloud was darkest, he was commissioned as assistant surgeon of the One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I. In March, 1864, he was promoted to surgeon of the Eighteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Cavalry, with the rank of major. His arduous duties in the campaigns of 1864-65 told rapidly on his health and physical strength. He resigned his commission in March, 1865, and sought the quiet of home. Partially recovering his health, he resumed the practice of medicine at Amity, this county, where he continued to reside until his death. During the year 1858 the Doctor made a public profession of his faith in Christ, and united with the people of God. His special work was in the Sunday school, and his natural ability to illustrate the lesson with blackboard exercises was truly wonderful. We predict the impressions made upon youthful minds by his crayon work will outlast the argumentative and impassioned appeals of those who failed to use the simpler methods that are most effective. In his business as well as in his professional and religious work, he was a man of method. He did nothing carelessly, and in his work there was no room for rubbish. He never fully recovered his health after his return from the army, and during the winter of 1882-83 he contracted a heavy cold, which settled on his lungs. No man ever made a more methodical and determined resistance to disease than did he during the spring and early part of summer, fighting it inch by inch with Christian fortitude. He left no remedy untried to regain his strength, yet when he knew further resistance was futile, he met death only as a true Christian can, confident of his trust in God, and having met his found rest, leaving bright testimony for the encouragement of those whom he loved. In the quiet of the closing hours of Sabbath, August 5, 1883, his comrades with whom he had mingled in war and in peace, in the presence of the bereaved family and friends, laid him to rest in the old churchyard, where his body shall rest until in response to his dying invitation, the loved ones shall meet him in the morning in the presence of God.

Jacob Yoder Sharp, son of Zachariah and Elizabeth (Yoder) Sharp, was born July 16, 1828, on the old homestead, this county. Although named for his maternal grandfather, he resembled his grandfather Sharp in personal appearance, having a fair complexion and slender form. He was a diligent student and was ranked with older pupils, but his strength was too frail to support the brilliant mind, and brain fever resulted from too intense application. He died in his fourteenth year, in 1842, leaving the memory of a dutiful, affectionate son, and a pure-hearted youth, of whom no praise could be truthfully termed an exaggeration.

ISAAC SHARP (namesake of his grandfather, who died soon after the birth of this grandchild) was born December 16, 1830, in Amity, Amwell township, this county. An amusing anecdote is told of his birthplace, and transpired at the time of his birth: A Mr. Dow was lying next to the roof in a certain house of Amity, just recovering from the effects of an oversupply of intoxicating beverages. Suddenly a gust of wind lifted the roof from above him, when the inebriated gentleman was heard to observe: "That's right, good Lord, scourge Amity but save Dow, he's only a boarder." Years afterward, while visiting in Charleston, Ill., Isaac Sharp met a Mrs. Wright who had known him in infancy. She described him at that period of existence as a "horribly ugly baby," but complimented him on having at last become a more comely specimen of humanity. In boyhood he was bashful among older people, but his mother used to say that Isaac was the most troublesome of all her mischievous children. In early life he learned the tanner's trade, following that business in Amity, Penn. On March 5, 1851, he was married to Lavina (daughter of Abner and Mary Bane), who bore him three children: Mary Flora (married to James P. Sayer), Lindley Bane (married to Grace Walters) and Lizzie Ann (deceased at the age of six months).

In August, 1862, Isaac Sharp enlisted as a volunteer in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I. The first duty of this regiment was to guard the North Central Railroad west of Baltimore, and in December, 1862, it was ordered to join the army of the Potomac. On December 20 they arrived at Falmouth, just too late to participate in the battle of Fredericksburgh. From the time of his enlistment until the latter part of March, 1863, Isaac Sharp never missed a roll call or failed in duty, though often detailed for picket duty (a most arduous task in freezing weather). In March he had a severe attack of erysipelas, which disabled him until May 1, when he shouldered his traps and joined in the march to Chancellorsville. Wearied and worn, they arrived on the field at 9 p. m., on the evening of the third day of the month, and the next morning they took an advanced position facing toward Fredericksburg. At this point a dispute arose between the leading generals. Hooker had given repeated orders to Couch to fall back, but the advantages of the position were so apparent that Hancock and Warren both advised Couch to stand his ground. Warren went to Hooker and explained the matter, which resulted in an order issued at 2 p. m. for Couch to hold the position till 5 o'clock. But Couch had begun his retreat, and said: "Tell Gen. Hooker he is too late, the enemy is now on my right and rear, and I am in full retreat." The regiment moved to a position to the left of the former place, and there passed the night in range of the enemy's batteries. The Confederates kept up a constant fire, but the Unionists were on too high ground, and before an attack could be made had again moved. While making coffee at the Chancellor House, they were ordered out on double quick to repel an attack made where the Wilderness road turns down the hill. After this they were moved to the left brow of the hill, facing the river, and began throwing up trenches. Meantime a terrible artillery engagement was being waged, of which the following is an accurate description given by Capt. C. L. Linnton, commanding:

What wild eyes and blanched faces there were when the shells and solid shot came in from the right and rear of us! Orders coming to "about face, left in front," we advanced to the plank road in rear of the Chancellor House to support a battery. The Fifth Maine had opened fire, to which the enemy replied so rapidly and accurately that almost all the horses and men were killed or wounded. Only two of the artillerists remained at their posts. While there the Chancellor House was seen to be on fire, a detail from Company F was made to remove the wounded therefrom. All this time the shot and shell were coming so thick and fast that it seemed one could not take his nose from the dirt lest he would have his head blown off. A call for volunteers was made to save the guns of the Fifth Maine battery. Upon looking back, whom should we see but our division and brigade commanders, Gen.

W. S. Hancock and Gen. Nelson A. Miles. A moment later came our corps commander, hat in hand, and hair streaming in the breeze. The call for volunteers was responded to by a rush from Company D, and a few from one or two other companies, through the concentrated fire of thirty guns, into a storm of shot and shell, in the face of Jackson's men infused with victory, and saved every gun. Myself and Corporal I. Sharp in the rush, both grasped the limber of one of the guns at the same time and on either side. With superior effort we succeeded in raising it a few inches from the ground, when a solid shot or shell passed between us and under the limber. At that instant Sharp gave down, and I thought he was done for, but was rejoiced when Corporal Sayer and others lay hold to see him straighten up again. He had let down on account of the immense weight we were lifting. A corporal of the battery procured a rope, and we soon had the gun moving from the scene of action. The force attached was not sufficient to make fast time. Try as we did, we stuck once or twice when running against dead horses.

Not having fully recovered from former sickness, over exertion brought on disease, and after remaining in the regiment a few weeks, Isaac Sharp was sent to the general hospitals at Columbia, D. C., Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. On June 1, 1864, he was discharged from the service, on account of physical disability. On his return home he found the tannery closed, and unable to engage in physical labor followed mercantile life, removing in 1871 to Washington borough, Penn., where he is yet living surrounded by numerous friends. His character is best illustrated by the history of his life, and his aspirations are fitly expressed in his own words: "My life may not have been entirely void of some good. Be that as it may, it is of small importance to me, if at last my omissions and commissions are cancelled and a clear title to the mansions of glory given me."

Cephas Dodd Sharp, son of Zachariah and Elizabeth (Yoder) Sharp, was born June 21, 1834, in the old stone house at Amity, this county. When a young man he came to Washington, Penn., working as a clerk until the war opened, when, fired with patriotic ardor, he bade farewell to his affianced and laid aside the vocations of peace for the panoply of war. He was among the first to volunteer for the three months' service, and enlisted in Company E (commanded by N. Magiffin). For a time they were employed in guarding rail roads, and then he returned home with zeal dampened by the harsh experiences of field life. But he possessed the true spirit of a warrior, and in 1862, with several friends, once more volunteered his services. This time he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., and participated in the engagements of that regiment until his death. He was in the battle of Chancellorsville, and was one of the martyrs who fell at bloody Gettysburg. On July 2, 1863, he joined in that desperate charge across the wheat fields which cost so many lives. A bullet passed through both of his thighs, and at the same instant another lodged in one of his knees, the latter proving fatal. He fell and soon after received another terrible shot which paralyzed him for a time. Regaining consciousness, he supposed a ball had passed through his breast, but found a minie ball deeply imbedded in the pocket Bible which was carried in his breast pocket. Night threw her mantle over the bloody tragedy as the dying soldier lay where he fell among the others. Listening, he heard the familiar voice of Bedan Bebout in prayer. He spoke, and they succeeded in dragging their bodies together. Isaac Lacock and Charles Cunningham, also wounded, heard the conversation and joined the group. Slowly, painfully, the night passed on, and morning found them helpless in the hands of the enemy. They hired rebel soldiers to carry them to a place of greater security, and at midnight on July 5, were found in a Mr. Cunningham's barnyard. Lacock and Cunningham survived, and Bebout and Cephas were soon freed from pain. The last words uttered by Cephas were: "Oh, God, cut me loose, let me go." The Bible and bullets are kept as sacred relics of that terrible night by his brother Manaen Sharp.

MANAEN SHARP was born October 22, 1837, in Amity, this county, and in childhood was an independent, rather self-willed boy, but very careless in dress. One suspender was as good as two in his estimation, misplaced buttons were forgotten, and his boots were soon run down at the heel—in short, he was an original character. He was so fond of hunting that his older brothers gave him the nickname of "Nimrod." On one occasion he caught a live rabbit, and notifying the boys to bring their dogs, prepared to have an exciting chase. Each boy held a dog, while Manaen with his rabbit advanced some distance, then freeing the animal, gave chase, the other boys and dogs following with pandemoniac yells and whoops, and the chase was on. It was brought to a speedy and unexpected terminus—a large bulldog that had never seen a rabbit joined in the chase, but he was in pursuit of higher game, and catching the young leader by the leg, gave him a lasting souvenir of that rabbit chase, which the "Squire" carries to the present day. The official title of "squire" was bestowed upon him during an election, when the boys held a juvenile "congress" in a tailor shop, and a journeyman tailor coming in just as the returns were made out, published the story.

On April 8, 1858, Manaen Sharp was united in marriage with Sarah A. Bebout, who has borne him three children: James N. (married to Sarah Ellen Dagg), Ada (Mrs. George McCollum) and Annie (at home). After his marriage Mr. Sharp farmed for a time, and in 1861 enlisted in Company B (M. Zollars, Capt.), Eighty-Fifth P. V. I., Joshua

B. Howell, commanding. During the winter of 1861-62 the regiment was quartered at Fort Good Hope, Washington, D. C. He took part in the siege of Yorktown, and the battle of Williamsburgh, and in September, 1862, was discharged at Philadelphia on account of disability. Returning home he entered mercantile life, carrying on business successively in Amity, Beallsville, Amity and Washington. He has prospered in business life, having overcome the careless habits of boyhood, and is now carrying on a furniture establishment in Washington, Penn., with his son James N., as junior partner. In 1856 Manaen Sharp united with the M. P. Church, of Amity, Penn., with which his family is also connected. He is a member of the G. A. R., and in politics was formerly a Republican, but is now voting the Prohibition ticket, and has been nominated for Assembly, also as county treasurer. He owns a handsome brick dwelling, equipped with all modern improvements, situated just north of Washington borough.

Elizabeth Jane Sharp, daughter of Zachariah and Elizabeth (Yoder) Sharp, was born in 1840, in Amity, this county. In early womanhood she became the bride of James A. Bebout. Her husband enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., and was killed July 2, 1863, at Gettysburg, in the charge across the wheat field, and no one knows his burial place. The heart-broken widow toiled for herself and two little ones until they were old enough to care for themselves, when her strength gave way, the needle fell from the nerveless hands, and she died a victim of consumption. She was a true Christian, modest and retiring in disposition, and deeply mourned by her friends.

Nancy Maria Sharp, daughter of Zachariah and Elizabeth (Yoder) Sharp, was born in January, 1843, and in early life gave her hand and heart to William Kelley, the village blacksmith. He followed his trade in Amity for several years after their marriage, then moved to a small farm situated on the line between Washington and Greene counties. They have had eight children.

ZACHARIAH D., youngest son of Zachariah and Elizabeth (Yoder) Sharp, was born April 11, 1845, in Amity, this county. In January, 1872, he was married to Paulina Gaus, who has borne him two daughters: Lillian and Elizabeth. After his marriage Mr. Sharp traded in country produce for some years, then moved to Washington, Penn., and engaged in the lumber business, also running a planing-mill. In religion he is a member of the Presbyterian Church, of which he was formerly an elder, and in politics is a supporter of the principles advocated by the Prohibition party. In personal appearance he is of a dark complexion and a slender form.

DR. JOHN B. DONALDSON, a physician of Canonsburg, is a descendant of David Donaldson (I), who lived in County Antrim, Ireland (near Castle O'Neil), until June 6, 1771, when, with his son David (II), he sailed for America, and settled in Cecil county, Md. In 1792 David (II) moved to Washington county, Penn., where the family has since resided. He was the father of eleven children—eight girls and three boys—Robert, David (III) and William. The latter moved to Allegheny county, Penn., and died there in 1863. He had three sons: Henry, William and David (IV), the latter of whom was the father of the subject of this sketch.

David Donaldson was born in Allegheny county, Penn., and coming to Washington county, attended Jefferson College, Canonsburg, graduating in 1845. He began to practice his profession in West Virginia, and then moved to Allegheny county. He was married to Ellen, daughter of John Boyce, who died in 1881, aged seventy-five years. To David and Ellen Donaldson five children were born, viz.: John B., Annie M., Ulysses, Robert and Harry. After their marriage, the parents resided in Allegheny, thence moving to Bridgeville, where the father died of heart disease November 20, 1883, while in a buggy, on his way to visit a patient. The wife and mother had died in 1872 of typhoid fever. The father was an active Republican in politics; in church matters he and his wife were Presbyterians.

Dr. John B. Donaldson was born in August, 1848, in Marshall county, W. Va. His early education was obtained in the common schools, and he afterward attended the old Bethel Academy in Allegheny county. He then read medicine with his father for some time, and in 1872 graduated from the Cleveland Medical College. He commenced practicing at Pittsburgh, Allegheny county, where he remained for one year, then moved to Bridgeville, and in 1878 settled in Canonsburg, this county, where he has continued to practice his profession, giving special attention to diseases of the throat and nose. On October 31, 1872, he married Elizabeth Foster, daughter of Walter Foster, of Pittsburgh, Penn., the ceremony taking place in Bridgeville, where the bride's father then lived. The following children have been born to their union:

Walter Foster, Nellie Boyce, Maria S., John Paul, Samuel Foster and David Halsey (David VI). In politics Dr. Donaldson is a Republican; in 1888 he was elected to the State Legislature, and has also served in various minor offices. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in religious faith is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

HON. JAMES MURRAY CLARK, who has been a lifelong resident of Washington county, was the only issue of David and Eliza J. Clark, and was born under the parental roof in Hopewell township, March 7, 1828. When he was but an infant, his father died, and from about that time until 1841 he lived in Cross Creek village. Thereafter, until the fall of 1887, his domicile was at Homeside, near the village of Candor. For five years his home has been in Canonsburg.

On January 28, 1851, he was married to Miss Margaret A. Clark, and of their union there are four children: Kate E. Clark, wife of Rev. Samuel E. Elliott, D. D.; Romaine Pauline Clark; Murray S. Clark, and William Baird Clark, M. D.

The first representative of the family in America was his paternal and maternal great grandfather, James Clark, a native of Ireland, who with a brother Thomas landed in the early part of the eighteenth century. Thomas settled in the South. James married Nancy Reed, of Lancaster county, and settled on land near the site of Harrisburg; thence he moved to "Clark's Fancy," which embraced the ground whereon Upper Strasburg was built, near Clark's Gap, Cumberland county. Subsequently he acquired a farm near Mercersburg, whereon he died, leaving issue: David, married to Hannah Baird; Thomas, to Jane Caldwell; John, to McDowell; Rebecca to John Taggart; Mary, to Jeremiah Rankin; James, to Mary Murray; Nancy, to David Humphrey; a daughter, to Joseph Smith, and a daughter, to David Elder. The father of this family, about the year 1789, bought two farms in Washington county, one, in what is Canton township, now owned by Samuel K. Weirich, and the other in Robinson township, whereon his sons John and Thomas in turn settled.

David Clark was born February 4, 1755, in Cumberland (now Franklin) county. His wife, Hannah (Baird), was of the vicinity of Carlisle. Their children were all born at the Clark homestead in Canton township, and were as follows: David, married to Eliza Johnston Clark; Esther, married to Rev. Joseph Stockton; James, to Jane Henderson; Nancy, to David Larimer; Betsy, to Daniel Houston; Mary, to Paul Anderson, and Jane and William, who died in tender years. The father of these died in Hopewell township June 2, 1821, and was interred in the cemetery of North Buffalo Associate Presbyterian Church, whereof he was a ruling elder.

His son David, father of the subject proper of this article, was born February 28, 1800. On April 1, 1827, he married Eliza Johnston Clark, a daughter of James and Mary (Murray) Clark, of Franklin county. David died in Hopewell township November 30, 1828. His widow was married November 1, 1841, to William Clark, of Robinson township. She died November 7, 1812, and January 31, 1881, her husband was laid by her side in the cemetery of Raccoon church.

JESSE Y. SCOTT, M. D., one of the leading and most successful physicians in Washington county, is a native of the same, having been born November 13, 1848, in Fallowfield township. His paternal great-grandfather entered the American army at the age of seventeen and served throughout the Revolutionary war. He was at Valley Forge during the memorable terrible winter in that struggle. All the members of his father's family, excepting himself, were killed by Indians immediately before he joined the army. Grandfather Scott was a native of America, and died in Rush county, Indiana.

Joseph A. Scott, father of Dr. Scott, was born in Washington county, Penn., October 6, 1806, and his entire life was devoted to agricultural pursuits. In 1835 he went to Peoria, Ill., and there married Miss Eliza Sheplar, a native of Washington county, Penn., whom he brought back to his Eastern home on horseback, and they settled on a farm in Fallowfield township, this county, which was owned by her father. They were the parents of nine children, as follows: two that died in infancy unnamed; Peoria and James Addison, both of whom died in youth; Joseph Clark, who was killed October 31, 1881, at the age of twenty-six by a tree falling on him while riding in a wagon along with two other young men; Henry S., at Bentleyville; Smith F., at Beallsville; Margaret M., wife of W. H. Miller, of Washington; and Dr. Jesse Y. The father died February 17, 1881, at the age of seventy-five years; the mother May 15, 1892, aged seventy-seven years.

Dr. Scott received a thorough rudimentary training at the common schools of his native township, which was supplemented by a course in the Southwestern State Normal School at California. In 1870 he commenced reading medicine with Dr. J. H. Leyda, of Bentleyville, later attending the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, where he graduated with honorable mention in 1875. He then commenced the practice of his profession. He practiced two years in Centreville (this county); at Pittsburgh, one year; at Bentleyville, eleven years, and at Washington, now nearly four years. On June 16, 1881, Dr. Scott married Ella S. McLean, of Beallsville, daughter of ex County Commissioner Henry B. McLean. He and his wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the Improved Order of Heptasophis; politically he is a Republican.

JOSEPH CLARKE, SR., was born in 1738, in Chester county, Penn., and spent his early life there, engaged in farming. About 1780 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Lynn, and soon afterward the young couple located on Government land three miles southwest of the present site of Washington, Penn., on land now owned by Cornelius Clarke, a grandson. This is said to have been the second farm located southwest of Fort Catfish, and perhaps the first within the present limits of South Franklin township. The whole country was a dense forest, and here they erected their log cabin and established a home. The woods were teeming with wild animals, some of them dangerous to encounter; and a few friendly Indians still claimed the hunting grounds. Occasionally traveling bands of hostile Indians would frighten them, and on several occasions they were compelled to take flight on horseback during the night to find shelter in Fort Catfish, which had been erected for the protection of the early settlers. Only men of nerve and daring could meet the requirements of settling in the forest. On one occasion, Mr. Clarke and a neighbor were traveling on horseback, when on the farm belonging to the heirs of J. G. Stream (deceased) their dog attacked a large bear. The men had no fire-arms with them, but each prepared a heavy club, and in this way killed the ferocious animal. Mr. Clarke was a Seceder, or member of the Associate Church, and took an active part in the church work of the day. He died in April, 1829, aged ninety-one years. His wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Clarke, died February 4, 1857, aged ninety-three years. Their children were Elizabeth (Mrs. Archibald Brownlee), Sarah (Mrs. William Johnston) and Joseph.

JOSEPH CLARKE, whose portrait is here presented, was the son of Joseph and Elizabeth Clarke, and was born near Washington, Penn., July 23, 1787. His education was limited to the old-time subscription schools during a few months in winter. Yet by diligent application he became a fair English scholar. On April 14, 1814, he was united in marriage with Catherine, daughter of Daniel Andrews, of the same locality, and their children were Adeline (Mrs. James McDonald), Mary (Mrs. Elisha Ely), Hervey H., Cornelius, Ann Eliza, Catharine (Mrs. James Pease, formerly Mrs. Samuel T. Brownlee), John G., Sarah J., and Harriett (Mrs. John Baird). In 1830 he removed from the home farm to the one now occupied by his son John G., and there spent the remainder of his useful and busy life. Mr. Clarke began life when farming was not very remunerative, farm productions being very low for want of markets. There was no home market, and means of transportation were very poor. Mr. Clarke soon engaged in stock raising, and drove cattle to the Eastern cities for sale. He afterward extended his business, by buying stock, not only in his own neighborhood, but in the new States of Ohio and West Virginia. He also engaged for a few years in pork packing, and placed a team on the National road to transport his products to Baltimore and other eastern cities. About the year 1820 he purchased some imported Saxony-Merino sheep, at what was then regarded a most extravagant price, and was ridiculed by neighbors for his purchase. In order to increase funds, he sold before leaving home a favorite riding horse for $60. One of his neighbors asserted that he would not have given the horse for a ten-acre field full of such sheep. However the purchase proved to be the foundation of his fortune. He took great interest in the care and improvement of these sheep, and really made it his life work. His flock assisted very much in giving Washington county the reputation it had, at that time, of producing the best and finest wools grown anywhere.

Mr. Clarke was a leader in his day, taking an active part in public affairs. In school matters he was much interested. Before the adoption of our present school system it was sometimes difficult to establish a subscription school. This work often fell to Mr. Clarke, and in some cases where difficulties met him, he became responsible for the teacher's wages, always maintaining that the schools must go on even if it should cost him more than his proper proportion. Mr. Clarke became a member of the Presbyterian Church in early life, and for a long term of years held the position of Ruling Elder in the congregation of East Buffalo. Politically he was a Whig, taking an active part in the politics of his section. He was industrious and enterprising, and fortune smiled on his labors. He accumulated considerable property, and at the time of his death was owner of over one thousand acres of land in his immediate neighborhood. He died January 27, 1856, aged sixty-nine years. Mrs. Catherine Clarke died September 15, 1878, aged eighty-four years.

JOHN G. CLARKE, a prominent farmer of South Franklin township, is the third son of Joseph Clarke, whose portrait is here presented. He was born January 24, 1829, near Washington, Penn., on the farm patented by his grandfather, Joseph Clarke, Sr. He received a liberal and solid education at the district schools of the neighborhood, and at Washington and Jefferson College. On May 26, 1853, Mr. Clarke married Sarah H., daughter of Samuel Clokey, Esq., of Clokeyville, Washington Co., Penn., and soon after settled on the beautiful farm, where they now reside. When a young man he took an active part in the formation of the new township of Franklin, was chosen a school director at the first election, and assisted in re-districting the new township. Being an ardent friend of public schools, he was continued in the board from year to year, and served as secretary for a long term of years. Soon after the incorporation of the Upper Ten Mile Plank Road Company, he was elected to membership in the board of managers, and in 1872 was elected president of the board, and has continued in that position ever since, a period of over twenty years. Mr. Clarke is an extensive grower of fine wool, and has given much attention to the improvement of his flocks. He has become known as an advocate of tariff on wool, and has published several newspaper articles on that question. He served as president of the Washington County Wool Growers' Association for several years, and was twice sent to Washington, D. C., to represent the interests of that association. In 1886 he had the honor of making the only farmers' address in defense of tariff on wool before the Committee on Ways and Means. It was extensively published in both city and local papers, and was freely commented on, and pronounced by all an able presentation of the case. In politics Mr. Clarke is a Republican; having been born and brought up in the Whig party, and holding very decided anti-slavery views, he naturally fell in with the Republicans at the formation of the party. In 1886 he was nominated for a seat in the State Legislature, and elected by a majority in advance of the ticket. In the House he soon became known as an active, attentive member, making it a matter of conscience to attend promptly to all business coming before that body. Being a farmer, he took special interest in all bills in which farmers were interested. He was appointed on the Agricultural Committee, and gave his influence in favor of the Bill to Equalize Taxation; the Bill for the Improvement of the Public Roads; the Bill for the Increase of State Appropriation to the Public Schools; and against the repeal of the Oleomargarine law.

Mr. Clarke is an ardent churchman, and he and his family are members of the United Presbyterian Congregation, of Washington, Penn. He was elected to the office of ruling elder in the congregation of East Buffalo when but twenty six years of age, and again to the same position in the congregation of Washington, Penn., in 1864, and has acceptably filled the position ever since. He is the father of ten children—seven sons and three daughters. He has lived a very busy life, and while giving his principal care and attention to his family and his farm, he has still evinced a deep interest in public enterprises, and is ever found in the front ranks of Washington county's enterprising and loyal citizens.

HERVEY HINDMAN CLARKE, the oldest living representative of the Clarke family in Franklin township, is a native of that county, having been born November 3, 1820, the eldest son of Joseph and Catherine (Andrews) Clarke.

His boyhood and youth were passed on the old home place, and his education was received in the schools of the neighborhood, supplemented by a thorough course of training at West Alexander Academy and at Washington College, where he showed considerable ability. He was graduated in 1841, read law with Hon. T. M. T. McKennan, and was admitted to the bar, but did not practice. In April, 1848, he married Margaret L., daughter of Archibald Brownlee, of Buffalo township, and he and his youthful bride then settled on the farm where they yet reside. The names of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Clarke are as follows: Clara V. (married to James Ely, and living in Marion county, Kans.), Edmund H., J. Addison (both of Washington county, Penn.), Frank, living in Anderson county, Kans.), Hervey H., Ella M. (Mrs. Henry Rudy), Earnest B. (living in the State of Washington); and Ethan (who died at the age of four years).

Mr. and Mrs. Hervey H. Clarke were among the charter members of the Second Presbyterian Church of Washington, Penn., of which he is an elder and has repeatedly served as trustee. Politically he was originally a Whig, and since the formation of the Republican party he has been an active member of the same. He has never sought party preferment, and has uniformly declined political honors, his time having been assiduously applied to the multitudinous duties of the farm, but has served as justice of the peace and also filled the office of school director for many years. Mr. Clarke's home place consists of 250 acres of prime land largely improved by his own industry and good management. The dwelling, a handsome and commodious brick edifice, stands an unimpeachable witness to the cultivated taste of the man who built it—Mr. Clarke himself; while the yard is adorned with many elegant trees planted by his own hand over forty years ago—the seal of industry and prosperity being stamped upon everything pertaining to the place.

CORNELIUS CLARKE, the second son of Joseph and Catherine (Andrews) Clarke, was born in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., November 21, 1823.

His boyhood days and early youth were passed in assisting his parents in the improvements of the home farm, and in attending, during a few months, in the winter season, the old fashioned subscription school of the neighborhood. The school-house in those days was an old, dilapidated building, with an uninviting exterior, the interior being furnished in a very rude and primitive manner. The seats for the scholars consisted of simple slabs supported by pegs, the floor being made of puncheons, far from being closely jointed. The writing desk was a slab resting on pegs which were inserted into the wall, and placed so high that the younger scholars could barely reach it; while the fireplace, located at one end of the school room, was of generous and comfortable amplitude.

On October 21, 1851, Mr. Clarke was united in marriage with Marjory, daughter of John Wilson, and the children born to this union are: Alice, Joseph J., Fannie (Mrs. E. Horn), Almeda (Mrs. David McNairy), Emma, Catherine (Mrs. James Magill), Cornelia and John W. On November 24, 1870, Mr. Clarke married, for his second partner in life, Eliza Lyons, of Beaver county, Penn. In politics Mr. Clarke was originally a Whig, and since the formation of the party has been an active Republican. In church connection he was first an adherent of the Presbyterian congregation at East Buffalo, but on the organization of the Second Presbyterian Church he united with it. His farm consists of 250 acres of highly cultivated land, having thereon many improvements, and the present large and comfortable two-story brick residence was built in 1857. "Omnia vincit labor" may be correctly given as Mr. Clarke's motto, for hard work and good management have placed him in the front rank of Washington county's most prosperous citizens.

REV. WILLIAM H. LESTER. If this honored gentleman's right to a place among the representative men of Washington county may not rest upon his birth, it is well established by his continuous and useful life as a pastor of one of our leading Christian congregations, and his devotion as a citizen to the best interests of the community. His descent is from a Puritan ancestry, which, coming from England, settled near Stonington, Conn., in the early history of the country.

David Lester, the grandfather of Dr. Lester, belonged to a branch of the family which established themselves at Easthampton, L. I., about the time of the American Revolution. About the close of that war he was married to Lois, daughter of Deacon David Tallmage, and so became the father of ten sons and four daughters, all of whom lived to mature life.

Richard Lester, the youngest but one of these fourteen children, was born in 1796, and in 1817 was married to Sarah F., daughter of Esther and Gordon Havens, of a Welsh family, which as early as 1665 settled on Shelter Island, N. Y. In this marriage, the fifth American generation of the Havens family was represented, five children crowned it, and of these the youngest but one, was William H., the subject of this sketch. His father was a farmer by occupation, and for many years a member of the Presbyterian Church of Bridgehampton, L. I., prior to his death in 1879. His wife had been called from him by death thirty-six years before, when their son, the future minister, was but a lad, but the memory of a sainted mother's piety and instruction was among the effective instrumentalities which determined the course of his life.

After the usual studies of the common school, a year of classical study under his pastor, Rev. Amzi Francis, and another at Southampton Academy, our young student entered Amherst College, Massachusetts, in the autumn of 1845. He was graduated from that institution in 1849, after which he taught in the academy at Southampton for two years, before commencing his theological studies. He entered Princeton Seminary in 1851, and was there a student until 1854, having been licensed to preach in January of that year by the Presbytery of Albany. A visit in the spring following, by invitation, to the Church of West Alexander, Penn., soon after the resignation of Rev. John McCluskey, D. D., closing a pastorate of twenty-six years, resulted in a unanimous call to Mr. Lester by that church to become its pastor. Accepting this call, he was ordained and installed by the Presbytery of Washington the following October, and thus commenced a relation which has continued in happiness and usefulness unto this day. In the interval between the call and installation, in August, 1854, the young minister was married to Miss Julia Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas B. and Harriet R. Hand, of Bridgehampton, L. I. The bride of twenty-four years had been thoroughly educated, first in the select school of Mrs. Sophronia Burnett, and then at Mount Holyoke Seminary for three years under the sainted Mary Lyon. She, too, rejoices in the memory of a pious ancestry of many generations, running down through two and a half centuries on American soil. Her father, a Christian and ruling elder, died in 1872, her pious mother following in 1888, and side by side they sleep in the cemetery at Bridgehampton, waiting the Resurrection.

The tender conjugal tie dating with the pastoral relation, has extended in a parallel line with it through thirty-eight years of happy home life and of mutual support in the work of the Lord. Of the three children of this marriage two remain at the parental home: Nathaniel Talmage and Hadassah Elizabeth, the latter of whom is a graduate of Washington Female Seminary. The eldest, William Hand Lester, followed his father into the ministry, and consecrated his life to the work of a foreign missionary. He was graduated from Amherst College in 1878, also from Auburn Theological Seminary in 1882. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Cayuga, 1881, and ordained by the same in the following year. He then sailed for Santiago, Chili, which has been ever since the scene of his missionary labors. The wife, Sarah M. Anderson, who accompanied him to the mission field, died in July, 1884, leaving an infant who bears his name. He was again married in 1887, this time to Miss Carrie M. Fields, daughter of the late Rev. A. B. Fields, who, together with their two children—Sarah and Robert McElery—brightens his home and cooperates in his work. The writer of this sketch is quite familiar with the life-work of Dr. Lester as the pastor of an important church, and quite as familiar with the sensitive modesty which keeps him from public proclamation of what he has done for the Master. He has behind a record of nearly four decades of wise, earnest evangelical efficient service, among a people of intelligent appreciation, with and for whom he labors both in and out of the pulpit in unabated strength. Coming to them without ministerial experience, at a time of division and bitterness incident to the agitation of the slavery question; when the church, whose care he assumed—itsself divided by the line which separated the free from the slave States of the Union—was depleted by the formation of a rival organization, he was confronted with discouragements to be overcome only by the utmost fidelity, guided by the greatest prudence and patient endurance, under the stimulus of a holy consecration to Christ. This church like many others has suffered largely from emigration. Many years ago the drift was to the newly settled parts of the West. In later years it has been to the large towns and cities. The academy, also, which had flourished for many years under his predecessor's oversight, had come to a crisis of depression, and, under the advanced methods, and spirit of the times, demanded a different management. It is no wonder, therefore, that the first year of the pastorate was burdened with the serious question of continuance. But this question was settled by the Lord, by a gracious outpouring of the Spirit upon the church, which united and encouraged the people, and brought seventy converts to the Lord's table, two of whom became ministers, and several ruling elders. Another work of Divine power in 1861 added greatly to the membership, as well as to the beneficence and praying force of the church. Other special ingatherings occurred in 1869, 1875 and 1889. But the steady progress which comes from the Divine blessing upon thorough and steady Gospel preaching and faithful pastoral work has been a distinctive feature of this church in these years. There have not been more than two or three communion seasons without additions to the membership. The Sabbath-school, prayer-meetings, pastoral visitations, and all the accustomed agencies have been kept up, and happy pastoral relations, a united people, and church strength have been the fruits. While emigration has annually removed families and members in considerable numbers to other places and churches, the loss has found its compensation in the wide diffusion of benefits from the common center. In no direction has the influence of this beloved pastor been greater than in the introduction of young men into the ministry, not only during the few years of the academy's continuance after his settlement, but ever since, as occasion offered, by private instruction. Fifteen ministers, including two foreign missionaries, have gone forth from the pastorate into the work of the Lord, to extend and perpetuate its power.

During all these years Dr. Lester has been regarded by ministerial brethren, and by the churches, as one of the active and reliable of the members of the Presbytery of Washington, ever vigilant and efficient in the management of ecclesiastical affairs. One element operating toward all these happy results deserves special mention. It is the work of a devoted wife. Mrs. Lester, ever active in all the duties of her sphere, until failing health made her a confirmed invalid, has since, in the seclusion of her home, by her polished and consecrated pen wielded an effective influence through the churches of the Washington Presbytery. She was one of the organizers of the Presbyterian Female Foreign Missionary Society, and has through years of its effective work been its faithful corresponding secretary. She has each year written to every mission helped by the Society, and from the return letters made her report, which has been one of the enjoyable features of the annual meeting.

The aim and life-work of this couple has been to promote the spiritual interests of the church and the advancement of Christ's cause.

REV. JOHN S. MARQUIS, D. D. The family of which this gentleman is a worthy representative is one of the oldest of Cross Creek township. They are descendants of French Huguenots, who fled from France on account of religious persecutions, and settled in Ireland.

In 1720 William Marquis and Margaret, his wife, together with their son Thomas and daughter Mary, emigrated to this country from Ireland, and settled in Frederick county, Va., near Winchester. It is believed that some of the children of this family remained in Ireland. Some years after their parents came to America, Thomas Marquis married Miss Mary Colville, and Mary Marquis married John Wilson, and died shortly after. Thomas was the father of seven children—four sons and three daughters—named as follows: William, James, John, Thomas, Elizabeth, Sarah and Anne. Thomas Marquis, the father of these children, was killed by the falling of a limb of a tree, whilst gathering corn. His children were brought up under the direction of his brother-in-law, John Wilson, who was a school teacher, and a religious man, consequently they were carefully educated, both secularly and religiously.

William Marquis, son of Thomas, married Miss Elizabeth Vance, and reared a large family, most of whom came to this county, but afterward moved to Ohio. Hon. William Vance Marquis, ex-licentiate-governor of Ohio, is a great-grandson. James Marquis married Miss Mary Vance, a sister of the wife of his brother William, and his family, which was large, came to this county, but afterward went to Ohio. John Marquis, the third son of this family, was the first of the name to settle in this county, and was one of the first settlers of Cross Creek township. He was born June 10, 1750, and married Miss Sarah Griffith, of Frederick county, Va. He settled, in 1774, on a tract of land for which he obtained a warrant February 23, 1786, and afterward received a patent. This tract was called "Marquesata," and contained 421 acres, and allowance, embracing the farms now owned by H. C. Anderson and Robert Anderson, and a part of the farm of Richard Wells, called the "Mason" farm. For some time, on account of the Indian raids, he was obliged to keep his family in Vance's fort, while he tried to clear his farm. Once, while in his cabin, he heard the report of a rifle close at hand, and going out he saw a party of Indians killing his hogs. On seeing him they immediately gave the war whoop and rushed down upon him. It was a race for life, and although the Indians were so close to him at the start that he heard their footsteps in pursuit, yet he outran them and arrived in safety at Vance's fort. He was noted among the scouts and backwoodsmen as a fleet runner, and he was a man of strong and decided character; for many years was an elder of the Presbyterian Church of Cross Creek. He died February 25, 1822. He raised a family of nine children—six sons and three daughters, viz.: Thomas, John, Mary, Sarah, Edward, Robert, James, Anne and William, of whom Thomas married Nancy Marquis, his cousin, and they had a large family; John married Elizabeth Taggart, and they spent their days on a farm in Jefferson township, now owned by their son James T. Marquis (Rev. John A. Marquis, pastor of a Presbyterian Church at Greensburg, Westmoreland Co., Penn., is a grandson, and Mrs. Rev. J. B. Lyle, of Scottdale, is a granddaughter); Mary Marquis married Hon. Joshua Robb, who was for many years an associate judge of the courts in Logan county, Ohio, and he represented that county in the State Legislature for several terms (Hon. Judge T. M. Robb, of Lima, Allen Co., Ohio, and Hon. Vance Robb, of the same county, also Hon. James Smith Robb, M. D., of Logan county, Ohio, were their sons); Sarah Marquis married John Nelson, and lived near Bellefontaine, Logan Co., Ohio (they had a family of eleven children); Edward Marquis was twice married, first to Margaret Marquis, and then to Elizabeth Newell (he had several children; his home was near Mt. Vernon, Knox Co., Ohio); Robert Marquis was also twice married, first to Hannah Van Nordstrand, and afterward to Mary Stevenson (his children, all of the second marriage, were Newton, Rev. John S. Miles and Robert, of whom Newton married Mary Patterson, daughter of Hon. William Patterson, and granddaughter of Gen. Thomas Patterson, of Cross Creek; he died when a young man); Rev. John S. Marquis, D. D., married Margaretta Bryant McConaughy (he was for seventeen years pastor of Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church in this county; his home is now in Washington, and he has supplied the church of Lower Ten Mile at Amity, Penn., for nearly seven years). (Prof. J. S. Marquis, principal of Brainerd Institute, Chester, S. C., and Hugh McConaughy Marquis, S. K. of the B. & O. R. R. Works at Glenwood, Penn., are grandsons of Robert and Mary (Stevenson) Marquis); Miles Marquis died young; Robert Marquis was twice married, first to Jane Patterson, daughter of James Patterson, and granddaughter of Gen. Thomas Patterson, and his second wife was Elizabeth Scott (they now reside in Caldwell county, Mo., and have a family of seven children—four sons and three daughters).

James Marquis, fifth son of the pioneer John, married first Nancy Roberts and afterward Nancy Elliott (he died in Knox county, Ohio; Mrs. Rev. N. C. Helfrich, of Plymouth, Ohio, is his daughter); William Marquis (sixth son of John) married Elizabeth Adams, and lived near Tiffin, Seneca Co., Ohio (Mrs. Rev. Solomon Cook of that county is his daughter); Anne Marquis (third daughter of John) married Isaac Morrison, and they lived near Bellefontaine, Ohio. The children of John and Sarah (Griffith) Marquis were noted for their musical talents and fine musical voices. Dr. John Stockton told the writer, that Robert Marquis had the finest musical voice of any man he ever heard sing.

John Marquis and his brother Thomas (afterward Rev. Thomas Marquis), in company with some others, pursued a band of Indians, which had made a raid into that neighborhood, in 1776, murdered one woman and took captive another woman (Reynolds) and child. They came upon the Indians just at daybreak, as they were making a raft to cross the Ohio river opposite where is now Mingo Junction, on the Pan Handle Railroad. Seven of the eight Indians were killed, and one man of the pursuing party. The families of James T. Marquis and of Rev. J. S. Marquis, D. D., are the only descendants of John and Sarah Marquis now residing in this county.

Rev. Thomas Marquis, the fourth son of Thomas and Mary (Colville) Marquis, was born in Opequan Valley, Va., in 1753; was married March 5, 1776, to Jane Park, and some time after came to Washington county. He settled on a tract of land for which he took out a warrant February 23, 1786, and afterward obtained a patent. This tract was called "Marrigate" and contained 417 acres, and allowance. The tract embraces one of the farms now owned by Richard Wells, the farm of the Bebout heirs, and a part of the Perrine tract. Afterward, by deed dated August 27, 1794, he purchased from Alexander Wells, of Cross Creek, and Nathan Cromwell, of Baltimore, a tract of 500 acres, embracing lands now owned by Hon. J. S. Duncan, John Lee, a tract (called the "McConnell" farm) now owned by W. C. Lee, and a part of the farm of Rev. J. S. Marquis, D. D. His family was obliged to live for a time in Vance's fort, owing to the incursions of the Indians, and while there he was converted under the preaching of Rev. James Power, D. D. By the advice of Revs. Smith and Dodd he commenced preparation for the ministry. His classical education was obtained at Canonsburg Academy, and he studied theology under the direction of Rev. Dr. McMillan and Rev. Joseph Smith; was licensed to preach the Gospel by the Presbytery of Redstone at Dunlap's Creek, April 19, 1793. He soon received three calls—from Bethel and Ebenezer, Ten-Mile, and Cross Creek. He was a natural orator. The tones of his voice were so musical that he was called the "Silver-tongued Marquis." He was pastor of Cross Creek Church for about thirty-three years. While on a visit to his son-in-law, Rev. Joseph Stevenson, he was attacked with fever, dying of same September 27, 1827, and was buried in the cemetery of Bellefontaine, Ohio. He had a large family of children, and his descendants are scattered far and wide. Rev. John M. Stevenson, D. D., one of the secretaries of the American Tract Society, at New York, Rev. James E. Marquis and Rev. Thomas Marquis Newell were grandsons. Rev. W. S. Marquis, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Rock Island, Ill., is a great-grandson, and Mrs. Patton, wife of Rev. Dr. Patton, president of Princeton College, Princeton, N. J., is a great-granddaughter. Only one of the daughters of Thomas and Mary (Colville) Marquis (Anne) came from Virginia to this county; she married Maj. James Park, who was killed by the Indians on a farm now belonging to the heirs of Josiah N. Scott, Esq., in Jefferson township, this county. The other daughters married in Virginia—Sarah married John Vance, and lived near Holstein, Va.; Elizabeth married Daniel McCauley, and remained in Virginia.

There were some others of the name of Marquis who lived in this county, and were cousins of the children of Thomas and Mary (Colville) Marquis. George Marquis was one of the first bench of elders of Cross Creek Church. Samuel Marquis also lived near to Burgettstown, and John also lived in the same neighborhood. If these were first cousins of John and Rev. Thomas Marquis, as they claimed, William Marquis, who came from Ireland in 1720, must have left other children in Ireland, who came to America at a later period; and this appears most likely to be the case as all these parties came from near Winchester, Va., to this county.

STEVENSON FAMILY of Washington county. Among the first settlers of Somerset township, this county, were two families named Stevenson, the one of English, the other of Irish descent. Of the latter, Joseph Stevenson and Margaret, his wife, emigrated from Ireland and settled in Letterkeuney township, Franklin Co., Penn., at an early period in its history. They had two sons. The elder one of the two was killed by the Indians, along with several others, whilst harvesting his wheat, and his two children, with a hired girl named Jennie Harper, were taken prisoners. The younger of the two children, a son, was afterward murdered, having his brains dashed out against a tree; the other, with the hired girl, was taken to Canada, but afterward exchanged and returned home. She was married to Zachariah Spriggs, and they removed to a farm near to West Liberty, Ohio Co., W. Va. Afterward they made their home in Wheeling, where she and her husband died. The "Spriggs House" in Wheeling was named for her husband, and the proprietors, the Yarnell Brothers, were her grandsons.

John Stevenson, the other son of Joseph Stevenson, was born in 1729, and for many years made his home in Cumberland county, Penn., where he was married, first to a Miss Mitchell, by which union he had two sons, named Joseph and George. His second wife was Jean McCombs, and their children were Mary, Robert, John, James, Margaret, Elizabeth, Jane and Anne. In 1781 he removed to Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., and settled on a tract of land bought from Philip Whitten, containing 320 acres. He lived on the part of the farm now owned by Samuel B. Weir. Afterward selling this farm, he purchased the tract of land now owned by Andrew McCarrell, and the heirs of Hon. Thomas McCarrell in Mt. Pleasant township, this county. Having divided this farm among his children, he removed to one he owned near Cross Creek village, and which is now in the possession of Hon. J. S. Duncan and John S. Lee. He died at the age of ninety years, and is buried in the cemetery at Cross Creek village, where his second wife is also buried, having departed this life at the age of eighty-six years.

Joseph Stevenson, the eldest son in this family, was in the Revolutionary army under Gen. Washington, and was with him the night he crossed the Delaware river in the ice with his army, and fought the battle of Trenton the following morning. He married Miss Mary Espy, and removed to Washington county some years after his father had come out. He made his home in Canonsburg, where he died, and he is buried in the cemetery at Chartiers Church. His children were as follows: Josiah Espy (who was a physician for many years at Kittanning, Armstrong Co., Penn.), Joseph, Marianne, Maria, George Espy and John Mitchell. Rev. A. Russell Stevenson, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Schenectady, N. Y., is a great-grandson of Joseph Stevenson.

George Stevenson, the second son, was also a soldier in the Revolutionary war, serving under Gen. Washington at the battle of Brandywine. At the close of the struggle he came to the home of Zachariah Spriggs, near West Liberty, W. Va., and whilst in the field plowing corn he was taken prisoner by the Indians under the leadership of that renegade white man, Simon Girty. He was compelled to carry a heavy iron kettle, lashed to his bare back, all the way to Canada. He was also at the same time suffering from a severe gash in the forehead, made by an Indian striking him with a tomahawk at the time of his capture. Three years and five months passed before he was exchanged as a prisoner of war. He married Catharine McCombs, and lived for a time at what is now known as Hunter's Mill, on Harmon's creek in Hanover township. He afterward removed to Knox county, Ohio, where he died. The names of his children are as follows: John, George, Martha, Thomas, Eliza and Jane. Rev. George Graham, of Clarksville, Iowa, is his grandson.

Mary Stevenson, the eldest child by the second marriage, was twice married, first to Joseph Nelson, by whom she had two sons, James and John; after the death of this husband she was married to Rev. John McPherrin, who for many years was the pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Butler, Penn. Their children were as follows: Amelia, Samuel, William, Clark, Ebenezer, John, Anderson, Josiah and Mary, of whom Amelia was married to Hon. Walter Lowrie, for many years secretary of the board of foreign missions of the Presbyterian Church, and Rev. John C. Lowrie, D. D., LL. D., the senior secretary of the same board, and Rev. Walter M. Lowrie, and Rev. Reuben Post Lowrie, both missionaries to China (now deceased) were her sons.

Capt. Robert Stevenson, the eldest son of John Stevenson, Sr., by his second marriage, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and belonged to a company commanded by Capt. McConnell, of Cumberland county, Penn.; he was also in the war of 1812, as captain of a company; he assisted in the building of "Fort Stevenson" near Sandusky, Ohio, and the fort was named in his honor; he married Miss Mary Teeters, and came to Washington county at the close of the Revolutionary war; afterward he moved to near Salem, Columbiana Co., Ohio, where he died; he was a member of the Legislature of that State at the time of his death. John Stevenson, Jr., son of John, Sr., was also a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and a member of the company commanded by Capt. McConnell; he settled first in Somerset township, this county, on a farm now owned by the Whiteley heirs, afterward in Mt. Pleasant township, on a farm now owned by James Buchanan, Esq., and lastly in Cross Creek township, on part of a farm now owned by Hon. John S. Duncan; he packed on horseback over the mountains to the first store in Washington its first lot of goods; he died June 13, 1847, aged eighty six years, and is buried in the cemetery at Cross Creek village; his wife was Mary McCombs, and their children were: John, Margaret, Jean, Mary and Malcom McCombs, all of whom died unmarried except Mary, who married Robert Marquis, and she leaves to survive her two sons: Rev. J. S. Marquis, D. D., who for many years was pastor of Pigeon Creek Church (of which his grandfather had been one of its members at an early date of its history), and Robert Marquis, now of Caldwell county, Mo.

James Stevenson died young and unmarried, and is buried in Pigeon Creek cemetery. Margaret Stevenson married John Cratty, and became the mother of two children: Keziah and John Stevenson; Keziah married Robert Curry; a grandson, Robert Curry, Jr., Ph. D., was the founder of "Curry University" at Pittsburgh, was for a time assistant State superintendent of public schools in Pennsylvania, and afterward State superintendent of public schools in Nebraska. Elizabeth Stevenson married John Stevenson, a son of the Stevenson family who were of English descent, of Somerset township; they lived on a farm now owned by the McCorkle heirs near to Pigeon Creek Presbyterian church; their children were Jane, Joseph, John, Maria, Elizabeth, Mary, Margaret, Emily, Frances and James Edgar, who became a Presbyterian minister, and died at Tallahassee, Florida.

Jane Stevenson married John Graham, of Cross Creek, and their children were Henry, Robert, John, Mary, James, Ebenezer Stevenson, Margery, Elizabeth, Joseph, Thomas Smith and Anne; Ebenezer Stevenson Graham became a Presbyterian minister, and was for some years pastor of Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church; he died at Tampa Bay, Fla. Anne Stevenson, the youngest member of this family, married Col. John Vance, of Cross Creek, and her children were John, Anne, David, Jane, Joseph and Julia A.; her son Joseph was a lawyer by profession, and was a member of the bar at Mt. Vernon, Knox Co., Ohio; in the Civil war he was the colonel of a regiment in the army of Gen. Banks, and was killed in the battle of Red River, Louisiana.

HON. GEORGE S. GRAHAM, M. D., represents an old and prominent pioneer family, whose first settlement was made in Cross Creek township, Washington Co., Penn., in 1776.

Henry Graham, the earliest pioneer, of this family, of whom we have any authentic record, was a native of Chester county, Penn., where he was married to a native born lady, and, moving to Washington county, settled in Cross Creek township, on the waters of Cross creek, before the Indians had left that part of the county. He died in 1827, leaving one son, John, married to Jane Stevenson, whose parents were also early settlers in Smith township. The following children were born to the union of John and Jane Graham: Robert, who moved to Knox county, Ohio, where he lived to old age; Henry, who went to Ohio; Thomas, now a resident of Mt. Gilead, Ohio; John, living in Knox county, Ohio; Joseph, who followed farming in this county, and resided on the old homestead in Cross Creek township; Rev. E. S., of whom a sketch follows; Ann, wife of Dr. Boyd Emery, both deceased in Somerset township, this county; Mary, deceased when young; Jane, who died in early youth; Margery, Mrs. Murray; and Elizabeth, wife of James Walker. Of these, Thomas and Margery are yet living. The father always resided on the farm in Cross Creek township, where he died in 1830. The Grahams were active Whigs and influential citizens; they were zealous members of the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church, which they assisted in founding.

Rev. E. S. Graham was born in Cross Creek township, this county. He received his elementary education in the rate schools of the day, then attended Cross Creek Academy, and finally took a thorough course at Jefferson College, graduating therefrom in 1831. In 1837 he was installed as pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Pigeon Creek, Washington county, where he remained until 1842.

proving a very popular minister. After preaching in a heated school room on one occasion, he caught a cold which terminated in bronchitis, and he then took a trip to Florida in search of health, residing at Tampa Bay for several years; he died in 1846. In the early part of his ministry he had married Sarah, daughter of John Johnson, who was born near Washington, Penn., and died a few years after her marriage, leaving four children, viz.: John J., a farmer of Washington county, who moved to Kentucky, thence to Knox county, Ohio; Hannah J., wife of James Morrison, of Mercer county, Penn.; George S., whose name opens this sketch; and Sarah E., Mrs. James Maxwell, of Mercer, Penn., all now deceased except our subject.

George S. Graham, son of E. S. and Sarah (Johnson) Graham, was born December 26, 1839, in Somerset township, this county, and received a limited education in the common schools. At an early age he began working with a farmer named Stevenson (of Somerset township), and also lived for some time with Dr. Boyd Emery, of Somerset township. He then resided in Morrow county, Ohio, with an uncle, Thomas Graham, remaining there for some time, but wishing to secure a more extensive education finally returned to his native county, and entered Cross Creek Academy (where his father had also been a student), remaining in that institution one year. He then took a three-year's course at the Bethany Academical Institute, under Dr. Marshall, afterward entered Jefferson College at Canonsburg, Penn., where he was a student at the beginning of the Civil war. Young Graham enlisted Sunday, April 27, 1861, in Company D, Tenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Reserve Corps. He was mustered in at Harrisburg, Penn., thence proceeding with his regiment to Washington, D. C. His regiment was attached to the First Army Corps, under command of Gen. McDowell, and was later attached to the Fifth Corps, serving through the Peninsular campaign. Our subject served in all the campaigns, marches and engagements of his regiment during his term of engagement. Their first engagement was at Drainesville, Va.; he remained in active service until his regiment was mustered out June 12, 1861, when he received an honorable discharge, and returned to his native county. After the war our subject began the study of medicine, and entered Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, graduating March 10, 1866. In the following June he came to Florence, Hanover township, this county, where he has ever since practiced his chosen profession. On September 22, 1868, he was married to Sallie J. Tucker, who was born September 15, 1846, a daughter of David and Sarah (Watt) Tucker, of Hanover township. The following children have been born to their union:

John T. (deceased), Lemuel F., David S., Charles S., Bertha M. and Thomas C. They have had excellent educational advantages. Dr. Graham has been a leading physician of Hanover township for many years and enjoys an extensive practice throughout the county. Politically he has for years been a leader of the Republican party in Hanover township, and has never missed an election since his residence in this county. In 1884 he was elected to the Legislature, serving during 1884-85. Dr. and Mrs. Graham are active members of the Presbyterian Church, and he is a member of the Session.

JOHAN D. BRADEN, of Washington borough, was born in Chippewa township, Beaver Co., Penn., November 21, 1826. John Braden, Sr., his father, was a native of County Fermagh, Ireland, born at a town called "Five Mile Town," near Enniskillen.

His father (the grandfather of John D. Braden) was James Braden, and his grandmother, Margaret Howe, was of English parentage. They raised a large family in Ireland, and said Margaret died and was buried there. The grandfather, James Braden, with his entire family, came to America some time about the year 1789; John Braden, Sr., having grown up to manhood, became the owner of a farm near Youngstown, Ohio, and resided on the same until the breaking out of the war of 1812 with Great Britain, when he joined the army and served therein until the close of the war. After the war John Braden, Sr., was married to Katherine McEntyre, daughter of William McEntyre, who was a native of Scotland, and in early times had migrated to this country, settling at Hagerstown, Md. John Braden and his wife Katherine, after their marriage, removed from near Youngstown, Ohio, to Chippewa township, Beaver county, where they lived for over fifty years, having born to them a large family, amongst whom was John D. Braden, the only one of the family who resides in Washington county.

John D. Braden, the subject of this sketch, after several years' attendance at Beaver Academy, located in the town of Beaver, Penn., came to Washington in 1849, and entered the junior class at Washington College, which, later, was consolidated with the Jefferson College. Mr. Braden graduated from this institution in the summer of 1851, and at once commenced the study of law in the office of Hon. George S. Hart, who at that time was District Attorney for Washington county, and subsequently was elected Judge of the Courts of said county. Mr. Braden was admitted to the Bar of Washington County in 1853, and from that time to the present has practiced his profession with a fair show of success, standing at all times in a position with those in the front rank at the Bar. On November 11, 1851, he was married to Miss Anna C. Ruple, the youngest daughter of Col. James Ruple, Sr., deceased, and to them have been born a large family, as follows: Rebecca, intermarried with D. J. McAdam, Professor in Washington and Jefferson College; John McIntyre Braden, who is a member of the Bar in this county, since 1879, and has attained a prominent position in the ranks of the legal profession, enjoying a large and lucrative practice; Alfred Goodrich Braden, a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, and for the last eight years the successful Principal of the schools in the borough of Washington; George W. Braden, who is by profession a photographer, and follows that business in said borough at the present time; Lillie M., who teaches a select school in said borough; Ernest Braden, who died December 21, 1891; James Paul Braden, who is a student at the before-mentioned college; Anna and Kate Braden, who reside at home with their parents. There were also two other children, Arthur and William, who died in their infancy. In politics Mr. Braden has always been a Democrat, and at all times ready and willing to do his best for the advancement of the principles of his chosen party. He never held office, except School Director and Member of the Council, and also Presidential Elector in the Cleveland and Harrison campaign in 1892, which ended in a manner entirely satisfactory to the subject of this sketch.

ALFRED G. BRADEN, principal of the public schools of Washington, was born October 16, 1858, in Washington, Penn., a son of John D. Braden, Esq., and Anna Ruple Braden. At the high school of his native town he received a thorough general educational training, and he then entered Washington and Jefferson College, where he pursued a four years' course of reading and study in classics, etc.

Mr. Braden's first business experience after leaving college was as civil engineer for the Pittsburg Southern Railroad Company, in which capacity he served one year, and then was with the Chartiers & Youghiogeny Railroad Company in similar service two years. In 1884 he accepted the appointment of principal of public schools of Washington, which position he occupies with credit to himself and the satisfaction of all interested. To the management and improvement of the schools Mr. Braden has given his entire time and attention, and by his assiduous efforts, coupled with those of an able corps of assistants, has elevated the educational institutions under his charge to a high degree of excellency.

On July 21, 1886, Mr. Braden was united in marriage with Ida Mann, daughter of John H.

Hall, of Wheeling, W. Va., son of Stewart Hall, of County Tyrone, Ireland, son of John Hall, Esq., of Essex, England, and Irene Zane Howell, daughter of James Howell, of Scotland. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Braden are as follows: Irene Howell, Alfred Goodrich and Ida Rebecca. Politically Mr. Braden is a Democrat, and in religion he is a member of the M. E. Church, in which for some years he has taken an active interest.

GOLIN M. REED. Alexander Reed, grandfather of the subject of this memoir, was a son of Robert Reed, who had graduated at Edinburgh, Scotland, and was a minister of considerable repute and high standing in that country; but was called to Ireland to preach against the Arian heresy then creeping into the Presbyterian Church. The church Robert Reed established at Manor Cunningham, in County Donegal, Ireland, had at one time, it is said, as many as a thousand communicants, and his children and grand children have been the sole occupants of the pulpit for over one hundred and fifty years. Alexander Reed's brother, Thomas, and his mother's brother, Alexander Cunningham, had settled in the town of Washington, Penn., some time before the advent of Alexander Reed, who came in 1791, from Donegal, Ireland. The death of his brother, just mentioned, occurring soon after Alexander's arrival in Washington, he became sole proprietor of the store now occupied by his grandsons, Colin M. and Alexander (brothers), and records show that he was in business in 1791. He became much interested in developing the agricultural resources of the county, and from time to time purchased a considerable amount of real estate. In 1821 he bought a flock of imported Spanish Merino sheep of Alexander Wilson, of Philadelphia, began the business of fine-wool growing, and was the first to send wool to the Eastern market; he lived to see Washington the finest wool-growing county in the United States, with a million sheep on her hills and meadows. He was also among the first to introduce the best breeds of English horses and cattle into this part of the State. In 1826 he sent silk-worm eggs to George Rapp, of Economy, the founder of the Economite Society, who gave them to his granddaughter, and it was not long before both Mr. Rapp and his granddaughter made their appearance in Washington, on a certain fair day, arrayed in suits of handsome black silk, the manufactured product of that gift of silkworm eggs. This was in reality the beginning of the silk factory at Economy, which was in operation some thirty or forty years. In the charter of Washington College, Alexander Reed was one of the trustees, as well as of the Female Seminary. He aided in establishing, and was president of, the Franklin Bank of Washington (which became, in 1864, the First National Bank) from its foundation in 1836; he was treasurer of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington from its organization, in 1809, till his death, a period of twenty-seven years. He was president of "The Moral Society" of Washington borough, which was formed April 14, 1825, its object being the suppression of vice and immorality. In fact, in all projects and enterprises tending to the advancement of the interests of town or country; in all the institutions devoted to the promotion of the cause of education, morals or religion, he was prominent, active and efficient. His regard for truth, equity and honesty was the foundation of the universal confidence reposed in him. In all the varied and multiplied transactions of nearly fifty years, his truth and integrity were never impeached, and he was never engaged in a lawsuit. Mr. Reed was an A. F. & A. M., and a member of Lodge No. 54, Washington, which dropped out of existence about the time of the war of 1812. In his political sentiments he was a Whig. He died in September, 1842.

In 1799 Alexander Reed was united in marriage with Janet, daughter of Rev. Colin McFarquhar, of Inverness, Scotland, who came to this country during the Revolutionary war, and for thirty years preached in an old church that is yet standing in Donegal, Lancaster Co., Penn. The children born to Alexander and Janet (McFarquhar) Reed were: George, Eliza, Colin M., Robert Rentoul, Alexander and Sarah; the last two dying in infancy; George died at the age of twenty eight years, and many cherished hopes for a brilliant future were buried with him; Eliza was called from earth while on a visit to Philadelphia, just in the bloom of womanhood; Colin M. has special mention further on; Robert Rentoul, also has special mention below; Janet Reed died in 1818, and Alexander Reed married Isabella Lyon, daughter of Samuel Lyon, of Carlisle, widow of William Hoge, of Washington, and a sister of Hon. James G. Blaine's grandmother; she lived until June, 1868; Alexander Reed died in September, 1842.

Dr. Robert Rentoul Reed, son of Alexander and Janet (McFarquhar) Reed, was born March 12, 1807. He graduated at Washington College in 1824, studied medicine with Dr. LeMoyné, and graduated from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. In 1848 he was nominated for Congress in the district then composed of Washington and Beaver, and represented the district in 1849 and 1850. He was a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature in 1863 and 1864. In all benevolent enterprises Dr. Reed was always foremost. For a number of years he acted as vice-president and afterward as agent of the Pennsylvania Colonization Society, in which philanthropic enterprise he rendered most efficient service. For thirty-six years he was a consistent member of the First Presbyterian Church, and during seventeen of these years he was a ruling elder, and for twenty-six years was superintendent of the Sabbath school. In 1830 he married Eleanor, eldest daughter of Judge Thomas H. Baird, and their children were: Ann Eliza, Alexander, Thomas, Janet, George, Eleanor, Isabel, Robert, Colin, William, Joseph and Charles. Only four of these twelve children are living: George, Colin, William and Joseph. Dr. R. R. Reed died December 14, 1864; his widow June 25, 1892.

Alexander Reed, born near Washington September 28, 1832, graduated from Washington College in 1851, and Western Theological Seminary in 1856. He was a Presbyterian minister, an eloquent and attractive preacher of the Gospel. Princeton College conferred the degree of D. D. on Dr. Reed in 1865. His first charge was Octorara, one of the long-established churches of the Presbytery of Chester, from 1856 to 1864. From there he went to the Central Church of Philadelphia, and remained until 1873. He then went to the South Church of Brooklyn, and resigned this charge on account of ill health. He then went to Europe with his family for a year (having been abroad before for the summer of 1869), and when he returned from Europe he became pastor of the Central Church of Denver, Colo., where he lived until he died, November 18, 1878. He had six children: Elizabeth, Eleanor, James Watson, Robert Rentoul, Mary Morgan and Alexander. Of these, Elizabeth died when an infant, and Alexander in March, 1889, aged eleven years. The widow of Alexander Reed lives in Washington with her daughter, James Watson, in Denver. Robert in Pittsburgh. Thomas Baird Reed was an eminent physician in Philadelphia. He was born October 23, 1834, graduated at Washington College in 1852; was medical student with Dr. Blackburn, and graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. He was resident physician in the Pennsylvania Hospital from 1859 to 1861. During the Civil war he was a surgeon in the Pennsylvania Volunteers from 1862 to 1865. On October 23, 1867, he married Mary G., daughter of Archibald Campbell, of Carlisle, Penn., and they had four daughters: Elizabeth, Eleanor, Marie and Janet, three of whom are living; Marie, the third daughter, died February 22, 1893. Dr. Thomas D. Reed died April 1, 1891. George W. Reed is in business in Pittsburgh; he was in the Civil war. He married Matilda McKennan, daughter of Hon. Thomas McKennan, and sister of Judge McKennan. They have had twelve children: Robert, Thomas, Baird, Alexander, George, William, Clark, Eleanor, John, Matilda, Joseph and Frank, all living except Alexander and Frank, who died in infancy. Colin graduated from Washington and Jefferson College in 1869. In 1874 he married Lida Lord, of Mississippi, and they had six children: William, Robert, Richard, Eva, Lida and Colin, of whom Richard died in infancy. Lida Reed died in 1885, and Colin afterward married her sister, Louisa Lord. William was educated at Washington and Lafayette College. He married, in 1875, Mary McKnight, of Pittsburgh, and they had six children: Margaret, Eleanor, Katharine, Thomas, Mary and William, of whom Eleanor, Mary and William are not living. Mary, wife of William B. Reed, died in September, 1889. Robert Reed died in the army at Georgetown, D. C., July 16, 1863, of typhoid fever. Joseph is the editor of Arthur's Home Magazine, and lives in Philadelphia. All the daughters died when quite young, and Charles when an infant.

Colin M. Reed, Sr., was born in Washington, Penn., November 28, 1801. He was prominently identified with the business interests of Washington. His father, Alexander Reed, was the first president of the Franklin Bank, which was organized in 1836. Colin M. was elected to the same position in 1852, and held it until the same institution was organized in 1865 as the First National Bank, of which he was elected president, and held the office without intermission until his death. In 1855 he was made a director of the Hempfield Railroad Company, and continued one until it was merged into the Baltimore & Ohio. From 1811 he was a trustee of Washington Female Seminary, and one of the largest stockholders. For many years he was a trustee of Washington and Jefferson College and until his death. He was a member of the first board organized in 1843 for the management of the common schools of Washington. He was for years president of the Washington Gas Company and of the board of trustees of the Washington Cemetery. During our Civil war he acted as treasurer and general agent for Washington county in behalf of the Christian Commission. He was also very much interested in the temperance cause, and in the Bible Society. He was a trustee of the First Presbyterian Church, and served as treasurer for twenty-seven years. He was not a politician in the sense that he sought office, but was always very much interested in the success of the Republican party.

In 1835 he was united in marriage with Mrs. Ritner, widow of Lieutenant Ritner, U. S. army. She died in March, 1837, leaving a daughter, Mary, now the wife of Henry Laughlin, of the firm of Jones & Laughlin, of Pittsburgh. In 1842 Mr. Reed married Sarah E. Chapman, of Massachusetts, sister of Maj. William Chapman, and the children of this marriage were Isabella, Laura, Helen, Alexander, Colin M., Jr., Robert, Ethelind and Alice. Of these Isabella married William Copeland, of Pittsburgh, and both have been dead many years; Laura is the wife of James R. Clark, and is now living in Mandan, N. D. (They have three children: Colin, Anne and Isabel). Alexander graduated at Washington and Jefferson College in 1871, and is in business with Colin M. Reed, Jr.; Alice married John L. Dickey, a prominent physician of Wheeling, W. Va.; Alexander and Ethelind are unmarried; Helen and Robert died in early childhood. Colin M. Reed, Sr., died January 12, 1888, his wife August 7, 1892. He served as treasurer of the First Presbyterian Church at Washington twenty-seven years.

Colin M. Reed, Jr., was born and educated in Washington. In 1871 he married Ada Brownlee, of Iowa, who was educated at Washington Female Seminary. She was a daughter of Samuel Brownlee and Katharine Clark, and a granddaughter of William Brownlee and Joseph C. Clark, both men prominently identified with the wool growing industry. Colin M. and Ada B. Reed had six children, five of whom are living: Katharine, Harriet, Charles, Alexander and Colin; the second child in infancy. Colin M. Reed is a director in the First National Bank; a trustee of the Washington Female Seminary, and trustee of the First Presbyterian Church.

ISAAC W. MITCHELL is one of the best known business men of Washington, and partner in probably the oldest grocery house in the place. He is descended from a Scotch-Irish family, who in an early day emigrated from the North of Ireland to this country, making a settlement on Short creek, in West Virginia. Alexander Mitchell, paternal grandfather of Isaac W., by occupation a farmer, was a native of West Virginia, where were born to him five children, all deceased.

Zachariah Mitchell, father of subject, grew to manhood at the place of his birth, and was reared to agricultural pursuits, which he followed until 1853. In 1844 he married Miss Ann, daughter of George and Jane (Wilson) Baird, of Washington, Penn. This Baird family were of Scotch ancestry, the first to come to America having been John Baird, who was born in Scotland about the year 1730, and crossed the Atlantic with Gen. Braddock in 1755. His only son, Dr. Absalom Baird, was the first of the family to come to Washington, which was in 1786; he served in the Revolutionary war, first as ensign and afterward as assistant surgeon. He was the one who trepanned Gen. Anthony Wayne's skull, which had been struck by a musket ball at the storming of Stony Point, N. Y., on the night of July 15, 1779. After coming to Washington, Dr. Baird built a house which, but little changed, still stands, and during the visit of the French king, Louis Philippe, to the United States at the close of the last century, the royal exile was entertained for some time in this house. Dr. Baird died October 27, 1805, the result of a fall from a horse. One of his sons, George, became the grandfather of our subject. He was born in Kennett Square, Penn., in 1785, was educated at Washington Academy and for a time was a tutor. Afterward he embarked in mercantile pursuits in Washington, in which he continued until his death, November 1, 1860, the present business of his son, A. Todd Baird, having been established by him. At the age of twenty six (1811) he became sheriff of Washington county; was also a member of the Legislature, filling an unexpired term. He was married October 25, 1811, to Jane Watson, who bore him fourteen children—seven sons and seven daughters. In 1852 Mr. and Mrs. Zachariah Mitchell removed to Missouri, where the latter died August 28, 1853, the mother of five children, viz.: George B. (deceased); Alexander, treasurer of the Mutual Savings Bank of Wheeling, W. Va.; and Martha B., Isaac W., and James K., cashier of the Dime Savings Institution of Washington, all residents of Washington. After the mother's death the father went to Texas, and there made his home until 1865, in which year he returned to Missouri, where he died March 20, 1882.

Isaac W. Mitchell was born in Wheeling, W. Va., February 19, 1851, and was but two years of age when brought to Washington, where, at the common schools of the borough, and at Washington and Jefferson College, he received his education. His chosen vocation as his life work, which vocation he followed two years in Iowa and three years in Chicago, Ill., but on account of failing health he returned to Washington in 1871. In 1885 he engaged with his uncle, Mr. A. Todd Baird, in the grocery business which he has since successfully conducted. On November 1, 1882, Mr. Mitchell was married to Miss Sarah R. Hill, of Blairsville, Indiana Co., Penn., daughter of Rev. George Hill, D. D., pastor of the Presbyterian Church, and president of the board of trustees of the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Penn. To this union four children have been born: Eleanor Baird, Georgia Hill, Harriet Todd and Marthine B., of whom two, Georgia and Harriet Todd, are deceased. Our subject is a busy man and has filled and is filling various offices of trust, among which may be mentioned: borough councilman, treasurer of Washington and Jefferson College, treasurer of the Y. M. C. Y., treasurer and director of the Washington Glass Company, director of the Gas, Electric Light & Power and Tyler Tube & Pipe Companies, and of the Farmers & Mechanics National Bank. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church of Washington, and in 1891 was sent to Minneapolis as a delegate from the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor.

JMORGAN MAURER, M. D., of the Homoeopathic school of medicine, is one of the leading and busiest physicians in the borough of Washington. He was born in Pottsville, Penn., on October 21, 1818, a son of F. H. and Anna M. (Morgan) Maurer, the former of whom is now a resident of Denver, Colo.; the latter died in the spring of 1880. The Maurer family are of German descent. Mrs. Maurer was a daughter of Joseph Morgan, of Schuylkill county, Penn. Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Maurer had a family of eight children, of whom the subject of this sketch is the only one living in Washington county; he has one brother—Howard M. Maurer, and one sister—Anna M. Maurer in Philadelphia, one sister—Kate A. Bassett in Sheldon, Iowa, and two brothers—John L. and George F. Maurer—in Denver, Colorado.

J. Morgan Maurer was two years old when his parents moved with their family to Baltimore, Md., and here he received a liberal common-school education. He commenced the study of medicine in 1871 and during 1873, '74, '75, attended the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia, from which he graduated. After this he practiced a short time in Baltimore, then in Pottsville, till September, 1877, when he came to Washington. There being at that time no Homoeopathic physician in the town, he had to work his way into practice, by demonstrating (against no inconsiderable amount of prejudice) the real merits of the Hahnemann system; and his remarkable success is shown by an almost unparalleled professional record, and the general verdict of the community among whom he practices. The Doctor makes a specialty of the diseases of women and children, and his ride for a long time extended throughout the entire county, but of late years he has to a considerable extent given up country practice.

In March, 1887, Dr. Maurer was married to Miss Susan Jane, daughter of William H. and Jane E. (Jones) Taylor, of whom mention is made elsewhere, and one child has blessed their union.

Late F. Mrs. Maurer is a member of the First M. E. Church of Washington. Dr. Maurer is a member of the Episcopal Church of Pottsville, Penn., and socially he is connected with the I. O. O. F. and Jr. O. U. A. M. He has been extensively interested in the development of the oil fields in and around Washington county.

WILLIAM I. McCLEARY—This widely known dentist is descended from rugged Scotch Irish ancestry, his grandfather, Thomas McCleary, having, at an early day, emigrated to America from the mother country after his marriage in England with Mary Lum, a native of that country.

They settled in Virginia, and had the following family: James, Jane (married John Fowler), John (deceased when young), Eliza (married James Carr), Sarah (married John Fowler), William, Ewing (married Mary A. McGee), Thomas (twice married, first time to Kate Pryor, and after her death to Mary McGrew; he was a Methodist minister for over forty years, and a recognized leader in the community), Martha (Mrs. Lewis Carter) and Julia (Mrs. James Reed). The father of this family was both an agriculturist and a cooper, and after coming to Virginia he passed his days on a farm in Brooke county. In politics he was a faithful Democrat, and in religion a devout member of the M. E. Church.

William McCleary, father of the subject of this sketch, was born February 18, 1805, near Winchester. His father removed to Brooke county, Va., where he was reared and educated, and learned the trade of cooper. On reaching his majority (the farm being small and the family large), he left the parental roof for the purpose of carving out his own fortune, and being of a delicate constitution, he was obliged to look for such work as he was best able to perform. He taught school, took trading vessels down the Ohio, etc., and after a time he engaged to drive the stage then being run between Washington and Wellsburg. After driving for some months on this route, he secured employment as driver of a mail coach on the Cumberland road. Under this engagement he first drove from Hillsboro to Claysville, afterward from Washington to Wheeling, and during a portion of the time into Ohio. He drove in all about eighteen years, sometimes two, sometimes four, and on special occasions even six horses. During his career he was associated with men, most of whom are now forgotten, and many a tale would he tell, in after years, of the excitement when the opposition lines were competing for public patronage, and when the orders to the drivers were "to make the time or kill the horses" (ten miles an hour); also of the not infrequent runaways, one of which well deserves to be perpetuated in history. "Mr. McCleary was driving a large black team from Triadelphia to Wheeling. On coming to Wheeling hill he threw the rubber bar down, but the blocks jumping out, the bar struck the off wheel horse, which sprang forward, and in an instant the team became unmanageable and in full flight. Reaching the culvert at the foot of the hill, the coach turned over, hind end foremost, threw the driver in a hog wallow, and tumbled the passengers and mail around generally. Finding no one hurt, and the horses all gone, he ran for the postoffice to have them bring their wagon and get the mail in on time; for if he failed to get the mail to the office at the right time, he was liable to lose his position. Only one horse of that team was ever fit to be hitched again, and two of them were killed outright in the disaster." Mr. McCleary lived in Claysville six years; then, when Col. William Hopkins was commissioner of the road, he took charge of the tollgate near West Alexander (at which time the tolls often amounted to as much as $100 per month), and lived there nine years. It was not uncommon in those days for twenty or more stage-coaches to be in full view at one time, so great was the traffic. After leaving the toll gate, Mr. McCleary moved to East Finley township, and settled on a farm purchased of George Enlow. Later he bought three other tracts of land, two in this county, and one in West Virginia, all valuable. William McCleary was married January 17, 1836, to Susan G., a daughter of Thomas Wilkison, of Hillsboro, Penn. Their children were Thomas J., James C., John E., Mary J. (Mrs. Robert Bell), Sarah E. (Mrs. Porter McCarrell), William L., Martha L. (Mrs. John Donely), Francis M., Lewis C., Martin L. (deceased) and Caroline A. (Mrs. William Wachter). The father died April 3, 1882, all his family being with him in his last moments, except one daughter who had died in her thirtieth year. He was essentially a self-made man, having started in life with naught save his industrious hands and a willing heart, and when he was called from earth his estate was valued at $50,000. He was an exemplary man in all respects, of unquestioned integrity and truth, a lover of home with its quiet cares and enjoyments. For many years he was a consistent member of the Baptist Church at Pleasant Grove, East Finley township, in which he held the office of deacon; in politics he was a pronounced Democrat, holding at different times various township offices.

William L. McCleary, the subject proper of this memoir, was born May 23, 1848, in Donegal township, his education being received at the public schools of the district. At the age of nineteen he came to Washington borough, and entered the dental office of Dr. Samuel Fulton, where he remained in the study of dentistry two years, and then opened an office for the practice of that profession, in Uniontown, Fayette county, whence, after a residence of four years, he returned to Washington. On November 3, 1875, he was married to Mary E., daughter of S. M. Brinton, of Allegheny county, and to this union seven children were born, viz.: Mariana L., William M., Sarah E. (deceased), Ruth G., Elizabeth B., Homer B., and Esther B. The ancestors of the Brinton family of Allegheny county came from England at an early day, settling in West Chester, Penn., and the grandfather of Mrs. McCleary moved thence to Allegheny county, making his home on a farm in the Turtle Creek valley, where he died. He was a member of the Society of Friends. S. M. Brinton, father of Mrs. McCleary, was born in eastern Pennsylvania. He came with his parents to Allegheny county, where he followed agricultural pursuits all his days. He was twice married, first to Elizabeth Donley, who bore him one child Robert. His second wife was Mary McGrew, a native of Westmoreland county, and by this union were born: S. M., Jr., William M., Mary E., M. H. and Sarah J. (Mrs. J. Howard Clark). Mr. Erinton died on January 16, 1890. In religion he was a member of the Society of Friends, and in politics was first a Republican, later a Democrat. Dr. McCleary is a member of the Baptist Church, and is at present serving as trustee. In politics he is purely independent; voting according to his judgment for "the right man in the right place." Aside from his profession he has divers interests, such as oil and gas speculations, as well as various farming interests. He is a member of the People's Light & Heat Company and of the Tyler Tube Works.

REV. MATTHEW HENDERSON was born in Fifeshire, Scotland, in 1735, graduated at Glasgow, studied theology, and was licensed to preach in 1756. Ordained in 1758, he was sent to America. Soon after his arrival he settled as pastor of the Associate Church at Oxford, Chester Co., Penn., and remained at Oxford until 1781, when he became pastor of Chartiers and Buffalo churches in Washington county, Penn., being the first minister of that denomination to settle west of the Alleghany mountains. He remained with this people, teaching and preaching the Gospel, until called to his rest October 2, 1795. A falling tree caused his death. He was married to Mary Ferris, and to them were born ten children, namely: Matthew, Mary, John, Ellen, Elizabeth, Ann, Ebenezer, Joseph, Robert and Jane. Matthew was a minister and married Miss Patterson; Mary married Samuel White, a farmer; John married Isabella Russell; Ellen married Samuel Murdoch M. D.; Elizabeth married Alexander Murdoch; Ann married Rev. Thomas Allison; Ebenezer was a minister and married Miss Noble; Joseph was a physician; Robert married Elizabeth Russell, and Jane married James Clark, a farmer.

Robert Henderson, who married Elizabeth Russell, lived on a farm in Chartiers township, and to them were born seven children: Matthew, Andrew, Ebenezer, Alexander, John, Mary and Robert. Their eldest son, Matthew, was born December 1, 1803, in Chartiers township, was married February 11, 1829, to Mary Hutchinson, and lived here until 1853, when they moved to Mercer county, Penn. In 1859 they moved to Lawrence county, Penn., and returned to Washington county in 1885. Mrs. Mary Henderson died in Lawrence county, January 1, 1877. To them were born six children: John H., Elizabeth R., Robert A., Martha J., Frances M. and Harriet A. John H. married Nancy Hammond, who died, and he married Emma C. Robinson. By his first wife he had four children: John Allison, Margaret, William and Alexander. The latter died at the age of nineteen. Elizabeth R. married Robert J. Harper, and to them four children were born: Anna M., Elizabeth H., Ella (now deceased) and Eva O. G. Robert A. married Mary Ellen Blair, to whom three sons were born: Frank B., Audley C. and William A. Martha J. remains single. Harriet A. died December 17, 1881. Frances M. married Rev. John Weir, has two daughters: Mary H. and Margaret B. Rev. John Weir died May 28, 1873. He was a preacher in Canada. In politics Mr. Matthew Henderson was a Whig, and is now a Republican. In religious faith he is a member of Chartiers United Presbyterian Church.

THOMAS MAXWELL POTTS has been a resident of Canonsburg since early in 1870. He is a thorough American, being able to trace every line of ancestry (with perhaps a single exception) to progenitors upon American soil for two centuries and longer, embracing English, Welsh, German, Dutch, Swedish and French original settlers. He is a descendant of the old Cheshire (England) family of Potts, through a branch who had settled in Montgomeryshire, Wales, where they embraced the religious views of George Fox and William Penn.

On account of the religious persecution of the time, David Potts and one or two brothers migrated to Philadelphia county, Penn., about 1690. In 1694 David Potts married Alice Croasdale, who with her parents had come over with William Penn in 1682. Their third son, Daniel, born in 1697, married Sarah Shoemaker in 1721. Their son, Samuel, born in 1723, married Ann Ashmead (nee Rush) in 1751. Their son, James, born 1752, married Sarah Wessel in 1777. Their youngest son, Thomas Jefferson Potts, was born in 1798, and married Margaret Carter in 1835. The subject of this sketch was the eldest son of this marriage, having been born February 17, 1836, in Chester county, Penn. The other original paternal ancestors of Mr. Potts, in America, were: Thomas Croasdale, Peter Shoemaker, Isaac Opden Graef, Jacob Isaacs Van Bebber, Capt. John Rush, Bryan Peart, Henry Stirk, Edward Eaton and John Wells, of Pennsylvania, and Wessel Evertzen, Claes Jansen Stavast, Cornelis Van Tienhoven, Guylen Vinge and Claes Claeszen Bording, of New York. Among the first American ancestors on his mother's side, may be mentioned Jeremiah Carter, William Clayton, Edward Bezer, Walter Marten, Joseph Bushal, William Cloud, John Butler, John Fisher, John Hough, William Bean and Hance Piettersen, of Pennsylvania and Delaware.

Mr. Potts spent his boyhood upon his father's farm in Chester county, Penn., receiving his education in the schools of his neighborhood, and at the State Normal School in Millersville, Penn. From 1857 to 1866 he taught school at Greenwood Seminary, Millville, Columbia county, and at the academy in Dowingtown, Penn. In 1866 and 1867 he was principal of the public schools of Bellville, Ohio. From 1866 to 1877 he had an interest in the retail hardware business at Bellville, Ohio, and at Canonsburg, Penn. He has held a number of local offices. In 1867 he was mayor of Bellville, Ohio, and subsequently a member of the Bellville school board. At Canonsburg he has served a number of terms as chief burgess, and as a member of the town council. He has served some thirteen or fourteen years as a school director, and since 1888 has been a justice of the peace. In politics he is a Republican, and in religion a Presbyterian, being a ruling elder and superintendent of the Sabbath school of the First Presbyterian Church of his adopted town. In 1870 he established the first permanent printing office in Canonsburg, and in 1872 founded the Canonsburg Herald, which he edited and published until 1888. This paper, under his charge, was edited with great care and considerable ability, and became a power for good in the community. In 1888 he disposed of it to the present publisher. For many years he has been an amateur antiquarian and genealogist, and has collected a large amount of valuable family history of Pennsylvania and New York families. In 1877 he published "A Short Biographical Sketch of Maj. James Potts," a small bound volume of about eighty pages. In 1883 he issued a "Bi-Centenary Memorial of Jeremiah Carter, etc.," containing about 300 pages. He has now in press a volume entitled "Our Family Ancestors," which promises to be a very valuable work to genealogists. It will embrace sketches of some fifty families, tracing each from the settlement of the first American ancestor. The material for all of these works has been gathered from original sources. He has been a corresponding member of the New England Historic-Genealogical Society since 1887, and has been president of the Canonsburg Library Association since 1880. Mr. Potts has attained some distinction in Fraternal societies, being a Past Grand and a Past Chief Patriarch of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and a Past Regent of the Royal Arcanum. As an Odd Fellow, he has served as a deputy grand master of Washington county, and has been a representative in the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania many times. He has also been a representative in the Grand Council, R. A., of Pennsylvania.

On March 22, 1860, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Miller, daughter of Reuben and Sarah (Baker) Miller, of Chester county, Penn. Mrs. Potts can trace quite an honorable and numerous a lineage as her husband, being a direct descendant of the following early settlers of Pennsylvania and New Jersey: Gayen Miller, Dr. Patrick Henderson, Jacob Kirk, Francis Hobson, Henry Mitchell, Richard Gove, John Stackhouse, Thomas Pearson, Thomas Stevenson, Samuel Jennings, Joseph Baker, Richard Woodward, William Edwards, John Ingram, Henry Hayes, Thomas Cox, John Buzby, Archibald McNeill, Richard Few, Francis Stanfield, John Bently, Joel Baily, and others. Mr. and Mrs. Potts have had born to them the following children: (1) Reuben Claude, who married Clara B. Fife in 1882, and resides at Parkersburg, Penn.; (2) Thomas Pliny, now a theological student; (3) William Baker and (4) Mitchell Miller, merchants at Canonsburg, and (5) Louis Maxwell, a student in Washington and Jefferson College.

WILLIAM DENNEY, M. D., one of the established and most successful physicians of Washington, is a native of the State, born in Jefferson, Greene county, October 28, 1851.

John Denney, his great-grandfather, came to America from England at an early date, settling in Greene county, Penn. In his native land he was a tailor by trade, but in this country he followed agricultural pursuits, and at the time of his death was the owner of a considerable estate. His son, William, grandfather of Dr. Denney, married Elizabeth Blackledge, and some time in the "forties" they moved to Missouri, where they died of malarial fever. A brief record of their children is as follows: Enoch Harvey has special mention further on; Simon died in Missouri; John is a resident of Marion, Ohio; Benjamin is a practicing physician in Waynesburg, Penn.; George also resides at Waynesburg; William died in Missouri; Hannah is the wife of a wealthy farmer named R. Colony, in Johnson county, Iowa; Mary is married to a Mr. Keefer, and lives near Montezuma, Iowa; Grace is married, and resides near Tiffin, Johnson Co., Iowa.

Enoch Harvey Denney, father of Dr. Denney, was born near Jefferson, Greene Co., Penn., in 1820. By occupation he was a carpenter, cabinet maker and undertaker. In politics he is a Republican, for many years served as school director, and has been elected a justice of the peace six times. In 1880 he married Mary, daughter of Evan and Nancy (Fulton) McCullough, who lived and died on Castile run, in Greene county, Penn. The McCullough family have been prominent in educational matters in Iowa. The sisters Jane, Rachel and Margaret organized and have since conducted Mount Pleasant (Iowa) Female Seminary. Jane and Margaret are graduates of Washington Female Seminary, and Rachel of the Steubenville (Ohio) Seminary. The only brother was Col. John Fulton McCullough, who, at the age of eighteen years, entered the United States army as a private in Company F, First P. V. C., but on account of his father's death, in 1861, received his discharge and returned home. In 1862 he organized Company A, One Hundred and Fortieth Pennsylvania Reserves, and returned to active service; in 1864 he was promoted to major of the regiment, and was afterward commissioned colonel of the One Hundred and Eighty-third P. V. I. He was mortally wounded at the battle of Cold Harbor early in June, 1864, and died on the field. To Enoch H. and Mary (McCullough) Denney were born children as follows: William, Isabella (wife of David Bell, of Morgan township, Greene Co., Penn.), Anna N. (wife of M. S. Smalley, president of the First National Bank of Hiawatha, Kans.), and Evan M., in the employ of the Southwestern Pipe Line Company, at Morgantown, W. Va. The mother departed this life on Christmas day, 1878, aged fifty-four years; the father is still living in Greene county.

William Denney, the subject proper of this sketch, received his primary education in and near his native village. In the fall of 1864 he went to Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, where he studied for four years in Mt. Pleasant Seminary, under the direction of his uncle, Rev. E. L. Belden, who was principal of that institution. He then entered the Wesleyan University of Iowa, where he studied for about two years. In 1870 he returned to his native town of Jefferson and engaged in school teaching, which vocation he followed in different parts of Greene county until 1876. He then entered regularly upon his medical studies which he had been pursuing during vacation in teaching, in the office of his uncle, Dr. B. W. Denney, of Garard's Fort, Greene Co., Penn. He afterward entered Miami Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio, in which he took the progressive course, and from which he graduated in the spring of 1879. In June of that year he established himself in Claysville, where he remained until December 1, 1891, when he moved to Washington and has since continued in the active practice of his profession, in which he has met with gratifying success, being professionally and socially highly esteemed in the community. On March 3, 1881, the Doctor was united in marriage with Lucinda, third daughter of John and Sarah Bell, of Morgan township, Greene Co., Penn., and they have two children: John McCullough and Mary Bell. Politically Dr. Denney is a Republican, and has held various offices of trust. He served as supervisor in the Eleventh Pennsylvania District, in connection with the eleventh decennial census of the counties of Washington, Greene, Fayette, Beaver and Somerset. He is a member of the Americus Club of Pittsburgh, Penn., and in religious faith is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington. Dr. Denney is prominently identified with the Masonic fraternity, being a member of the lodge, chapter and commandery at Washington, Penn., and a member of Syria Temple, Pittsburgh.

CHAMBERS, "JUDGE" JAMES C., one of the most esteemed and honored residents of Amwell township, ranks among its first citizens. His grandfather, James Chambers, emigrated from the shores of "Green Erin" to America in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and in 1797 located in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., on Bane's fork of Ten-Mile creek. He and his wife died on the old farm, the parents of six children.

James Chambers, son of this brave old pioneer, at the age of eleven years emigrated from Ireland to Amwell township with his parents, and two brothers who came with him died on the farm where J. W. now lives. James learned and followed the trade of carpenter in Washington borough, and was here united in marriage with Mary, daughter of John Dodd, who settled on the farm now owned by D. T. Morgan, and owned a house where the Citizens' Bank now stands in Washington. In 1803 he (Mr. Dodd) went on a voyage down the Mississippi, and on his return was shot by Indians. When he fell his horse ran with the saddle bags and papers, by which means he was identified as John Dodd. Mrs. Chambers died in November, 1814, and Mr. Chambers afterward married Sarah Hastings, who died in 1867. Mr. Chambers was called from earth in February, 1862. He was a major in the militia, and more of a military man than a politician.

"Judge" James C. Chambers was born January 11, 1812, in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., on a lot south of where the David hardware store now stands, and afterward lived on East Maiden street. He grew to manhood on the old farm, and remained there until thirty years of age. His school privileges were of a very limited character, and in his case (to quote his own words) "proficiency in the 'three R's' was the synonym for a 'full-fledged graduate.'" On November 10, 1835, he was married to Miss Mary Hughes, and their union was blessed with nine children, as follows: Mary A. (married to T. J. Nichol), residing in Washington county; John (married to Martha Moninger); Margaret, deceased wife of John F. Terrel; Warren (deceased at the age of nine years);

J. C. Chambers

Ellen, married to Richard Fitzwilliam, of Washington county; Sarah, married to Joshua Dickerson, of Franklin township, this county; James C. (deceased in his ninth year); Clarinda (married to Samuel C. McLean, and living in Franklin township), and William (who died in his twenty first year). In 1839 Judge Chambers removed to Morris township, where he remained fourteen years. In February, 1854, he came to his present home in Amwell township, where his wife died February 27, 1891, at the age of seventy-three years.

In politics Judge Chambers was for many years one of the most active men in the county, originally as an uncompromising Whig, afterward as a member of the American party, and he was one of the "Committee of Ten" appointed to sit in convention for the purpose of organizing the Republican party in Washington county. This convention was held in the "Fulton House," Washington, March 18, 1856, the platform being occupied by Whigs, Americans, and kindred others whose leanings were toward the Republican phase of politics. The president on this occasion was James G. Hart, the vice-presidents being J. Clark Chambers, John Hayes, John Johnson, Francis Fitzwilliams, David Walker, T. J. Odenbaugh, Joshua Wright, W. H. McNary and Samuel J. Crothers; the secretaries were: Craig Ritchie, E. L. Christman, Joseph Welsh and Thomas Miller. Of late years the "Judge" has practically retired from political life, but he never fails to assert his rights as an American citizen at the polls. In 1866 he was elected associate judge for Washington county, his official term coming to a close at the end of five years. On same date (1866) Judge Acheson was elected presiding judge, and our subject is the only elected associate judge now living in Washington county. So highly satisfactory, and with such a degree of integrity and strict impartiality, had he discharged the duties of his responsible position, that at a meeting of the members of the bar and officers of the court, held in the court-room November 17, 1871, resolutions were passed bearing testimony to the high regard in which the retiring judge was held. The proceedings were presented in open court, and Judge Acheson directed them to be filed and entered on record, as so requested in one of the resolutions.

On the occasion of the eightieth anniversary of Judge Chambers' birth, about sixty of his friends gathered at his home, and as a token of the high regard he commands in the community, and substantial evidence of the unbounded respect in which he is held, he was made the recipient of several valuable presents.

The Judge, in 1835, was commissioned a captain in the cavalry. He has been a member of the Disciple Church fifty years, and has served as elder in the same four decades. He is in the enjoyment of good health, and now, as his life draws near the close, he has the friendship and esteem of all who have been associated with him in his earlier years of vigorous action, as well as of those who have but recently met this honored hero of so many conflicts in which he has won the laurel wreath of victory.

[Many of these facts have been taken from the records, and are known to be authentic.

MURRAY.—This family in Washington county, of whom William M. and J. W. Murray are worthy representatives, is descended from one of the Dukes of Athol (Scotland), a son of whom, Lord Murray, having become involved in a political conspiracy against the reigning monarch, was compelled to seek safety in flight. It was no easy task, however, to elude the vigilance of his pursuers, especially as a price was placed upon his head, but friends devised a means of escape for him, novel if not risky. It is a historical fact that they placed Lord Murray inside an empty hogshead, then headed it up, being careful to leave some apertures for the admission of air, carted him a considerable distance to a convenient seaport (where was, fortunately, a ship about to sail for America), got their "freight" on board, one or two of the friends accompanying "it," and as soon as the vessel was well out to sea, they liberated the contents of the cask, and set the cooped up scion of a noble house on deck, once more a free man. Ultimately they reached the shores of America in safety, where the hero of the adventure was no more enquired after by the English Government. In this country Lord Murray married and had a family of children, but the names of all are lost except that of Nicholas, the direct ancestor, in America, of the subject of this memoir. This Nicholas Murray, who was a sea captain nearly all his life, married, in April, 1775, Temperance Bond, of Baltimore, Md., and the names and dates of birth of their children are as follows: Nicholas, April 16, 1776; Benjamin, October 8, 1778; Ruth, October 25, 1781; William, March 1, 1784; Christopher, October 26, 1786; Charles, March 7, 1792; Kizia, September 23, 1789, and Sarah, December 11, 1794. The father of this family died April 10, 1812, the mother April 20, 1828.

William Murray, third son of Nicholas and Temperance (Bond) Murray, was reared in the State of Maryland, where he was married to Nancy Roberts, and their children were Samuel, Nicholas (professor in Washington and Jefferson College), Hanson, Elzy, Charles and William. At an early day Mr. Murray migrated to Virginia, and made a settlement near West Liberty, Ohio county, in that State, becoming a prominent agriculturist. He was one of the first members of the Presbyterian Church at West Liberty, and in his political sympathies he was a lifelong Democrat.

Charles Murray was born in Ohio county, Va., in 1814, where he was educated. He was there married to Elizabeth J., daughter of William Reed, of that State, but a native of Scotland, whence he came when a young man to America, making a settlement in what is now West Virginia, at that time a wild, uncultivated region. He there married Martha Ashinghist, of Washington county, Penn., and the children born to them were Ellen (Mrs. William Brackenridge), Nancy (deceased wife of Elijah Moore), Oliver, Elizabeth J. (Mrs. Charles Murray), Margaret (Mrs. James McMurray), William (deceased), Catherine (Mrs. James H. Brackenridge). Mr. Reed followed farming all his days, in which he met with success. He was a strict Presbyterian, and a member of the Three Ridge Church at West Alexander, Penn.; in politics he was a Democrat until the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion when he became a Republican. He died in Ohio county, Va., about 1861, and is buried in West Alexander cemetery by the side of his wife, who departed this life in 1861. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Charles Murray settled on a farm in Ohio county, W. Va., where they passed the remainder of their days, dying, the father January 10, 1860, the mother May 30, 1874, at the age of fifty-two. They were consistent members of the West Alexander Presbyterian Church, and in politics Mr. Murray was a Whig until the formation of the Republican party, when he enrolled himself under its banner. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Murray were William M., J. W., Oliver E. and Hanson E. (twins, Hanson being deceased), Johnston R. (in Wheeling, W. Va.), Oliver E. (merchant in Wheeling, W. Va.), Alfred N., Charles F. and Joseph L. (all three deceased), and Elijah T. (in Ohio).

WILLIAM M. MURRAY, a prosperous merchant of West Alexander, was born in Ohio county, W. Va., the eldest son of Charles Murray. He was reared and educated on the home farm, and on August 11, 1862, he enlisted in Company D, Twelfth West Virginia Infantry, and was then sent to the Shenandoah Valley with his regiment, where they fought in Sheridan's campaigns. They took part in the principal engagements, and were sent to the front at Richmond, where they remained until the close of the war. Mr. Murray then returned home. In 1871 he formed a partnership with his brother John, and they conducted a general store at West Alexander, for eight years when another brother, O. E. Murray, entered the firm; the latter soon afterward sold his interest to Mr. Valentine, who is now the partner of Mr. Murray.

They have a large store, and are very successful. William M. Murray was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander Ruth, and they have two children: Eva Belle and Charles Ruth. Mr. Murray is an active and valuable member of the Republican party. He and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church, to which he is a liberal contributor.

J. W. MURRAY was born April 21, 1845, in Ohio county, W. Va., where he was reared and educated. On August 11, 1862, he enlisted in Company D, Twelfth West Virginia Infantry, his brother William M. having enlisted in the same company on the same day. (William M. never missed a day's duty in three years, and he brought home the same gun he had carried out). This regiment was first attached to the army of West Virginia, and was stationed at Clarksburg, W. Va., whence it was sent to Winchester, Va., where it participated in the battle there June 13 and 15, 1863. The Union forces were driven back, and our subject and his comrades afterward took part in the battle of Gettysburg, July 1 to 3, following, after which they participated in all the skirmishes, etc., in the Shenandoah Valley, including the famous "Hunter raid." While charging the works at Piedmont, W. Va., June 5, 1864, Private J. W. Murray was wounded in the right arm, above the elbow, by a ball (which he still carries), in consequence of which he was incapacitated for duty for three months, at the end of which time he rejoined his regiment. On December 19, 1864, the regiment was transferred to the army of the James, in which it served until the close of the war. At the siege of Petersburg, Va., Mr. Murray was in the famous charge on Fort Gregg; was in the chase after Lee's forces when the latter were outflanked, and was present at their surrender. On May 9, 1865, the war having ended, he was mustered out of the service, June 16, 1865, returned home and took up the Arcadian pursuit of an agriculturist, which he continued until 1871, when he entered into partnership with his brother William M., in a general merchandise business at West Alexander, this county. In July, 1891, he came to Washington, and entered into partnership with J. L. Carson as pension agents, also in real estate and loan business, and after April 1, 1893, the firm will be Rodgers & Murray. On August 14, 1875, J. W. Murray was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of James P. Chambers, of Donegal township, and three children were born to them: James E., Arthur E. (deceased) and Alford L. Mr. Murray is a member of the Second United Presbyterian Church of Washington, Penn.; in politics he is an active Republican, and takes a live interest in every measure tending to the advancement of his adopted city and the county at large.

WINFIELD McILVAINE, of Taylor & McIlvaine, one of the prominent law firms of Washington, is a native of Somerset township, born January 30, 1856. He is the eldest son of S. B. McIlvaine, a substantial farmer and one of the leading citizens of the eastern part of the county. His mother's maiden name was Catherine Hill, a very extended family name in the southwestern quarter of the county. Their other children are Arabelle, married to William M. Irwin, and now a widow; Ella Laverne, intermarried with Josiah Thomas; Lena, U. G., Julia, and Edwin L.

The subject of this sketch received his first educational training in the public schools. Later he attended Caunonsburg Academy for two years, and in the winter of 1876-77 taught in the public schools of Somerset township. In the fall of 1877 he entered the sophomore class of Washington and Jefferson College, and in June, 1880, was graduated with honors from that institution. Previously, in June, 1879, he had registered as a law student with his cousin, now the Hon. J. A. McIlvaine, president judge of the Forty-seventh Judicial District of Pennsylvania, completing his legal studies under his direction. The two years immediately following his graduation were spent partly on his father's farm, recuperating his physical powers, and partly in teaching. In the fall of 1882 he entered politics, serving as secretary of the Republican County Committee during the campaign of that and the three succeeding years. At June term, 1883, he was admitted to the bar of Washington county. In the fall of the same year he purchased from E. F. Acheson an interest in the Washington Observer, and from 1886 was manager of the paper. During all this time, he still took an active part in politics, and his paper was the recognized exponent of Republican principles in Washington county. In October, 1890, however, he sold his interest in the Observer to his partner, Mr. Acheson, and, on January 1 of the following year, entered into partnership with J. F. Taylor in the general practice of the law, at Washington. In religion Mr. McIlvaine is a Presbyterian, being a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington. On October 19, 1892, he married Miss Elizabeth S. Stewart, daughter of the late Galbraith Stewart, of Washington, and they now reside on Wade avenue.

RICHARD WAUGH. The Waugh family have been in Pennsylvania at least one hundred and fifty years, and came west from Adams and Cumberland counties. Richard Waugh was born December 3, 1796, on a farm, now owned by W. W. Dinsmore, on the road from Buffalo to West Middletown. He grew to manhood on a farm now owned by James Hanna, near Independence. Mr. Waugh was a grandson of David Boyd, an officer in the war of Independence, whose thrilling story is mentioned in Crumrine's "History of Washington County." Throughout life he was noted for his energy and indomitable perseverance. In 1823 he married Eliza, daughter of John Moore, who owned 600 acres of land embracing what is now known as "Waugh's Mill." Mr. Moore inherited part of this tract from his father, who bought it from Lawrence Van Buskirk. Both Van Buskirk and his wife were killed by the Indians, the wife in 1792 and the husband in 1793.

Immediately after his marriage, Mr. Waugh removed to what is now Brooke county, W. Va., and purchased from his father in law the old frame mill, one of the first operated in that part of the country. This mill stood just where the bridge reaches the south bank of Buffalo creek, after you pass through the first tunnel in going from Wellsburg. Some time before Mr. Moore had attempted to pierce the hill called "the backbone," for a mill race, but the enterprise was abandoned for some years. Mr. Waugh completed this work, and the race is used to this day, as it affords the best water-power in the county. He built two mills, each using a tunnel for a race, and, with these mills, he turned out as much as 10,000 barrels of flour in a year, besides manufacturing all his own barrels. He also did a large amount of country work.

He was a man of enterprise, both public and private. He made, at his own expense, two tunnels for the Wellsburg & Bethany road, both of which are still in use. By these works and the bridges he constructed, generally at his own charges, he greatly shortened and improved the roads of his adopted county. No man, before or since, in his section did so much for the improvement of the roads. More than half of his life was passed in Washington county, and, as much of the grain for his mills was purchased from the farmers in that section, he was well-known throughout the county. The old mill books show that much of the wheat brought only 37½ cents a bushel, and flour but $2.50 per barrel. Mr. Waugh was also a farmer and stock grower. Although he began life in narrow circumstances, at the time of his death he was owner of more than 2,000 acres embracing some of the best lands in Brooke county. Part of this land extended from a point below Waugh mill for two miles along the pike toward Bethany. He also owned a steam flouring mill in Lagrange (now Brilliant), Ohio. He was an active member of the Presbyterian Church, and his liberality is still remembered. He offered Dr. John McCluskey a farm of 100 acres if he would consent to settle as pastor of the Lower Buffalo Church. It is said that he would make up whatever was lacking in the pastor's salary, after the other subscriptions had been made. His death occurred at the early age of forty eight, and, when his career is considered, it is surprising to learn that for fifteen years before his decease he had been a confirmed invalid. He left the reputation of a conscientious, upright man and public-spirited citizen.

JOSEPH WAUGH, the fourth son of the above, was born in Brooke county, Va., in 1835, and received his education in the common schools, West Alexander Academy (under Dr. John McCluskey), Washington College, and the Western Theological Seminary. He graduated with honor from college in 1857, and from the Theological seminary in 1860; was licensed to preach by the Washington Presbytery in 1859, and ordained by the Presbytery of Mississippi in 1860. For one year, until the outbreak of the Civil war, he preached near Natchez, Miss. His decided Union sentiments brought him North. He then taught two years in Washington College, and two years in the Steubenville Seminary, after which he took charge of the Hollidaysburg Seminary, being its first principal. Here he continued eleven years, and, with the assistance of his devoted wife, made it one of the leading institutions of its class in Pennsylvania. It is still a flourishing school. On account of ill health Mr. Waugh was forced to relinquish his educational work, and retired to a farm in Delaware, where for several years he was interested in fruit growing, and still reads the reports of the peach crop with occasional anxiety.

The subject of this sketch married, April 12, 1864, Miss Arabella S. Todd, sister of A. M. Todd, Esq. She was a native of Kentucky, daughter of the Rev. Andrew Todd and Catherine (Wilson) Todd. Mrs. Waugh was a lady of unusual intelligence and accomplishments, whose life was marked by a special spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion to duty. As vice principal of the Hollidaysburg Seminary, she made many ardent friends, and her character and noble life made themselves felt upon all with whom she came in contact. Fourteen years before her death she received injuries by being thrown from a carriage. From these she never recovered, but bore her suffering with marked patience and resignation, and continued her works of kindness and devotion to the very day of her death, which occurred January 21, 1892. In 1889 Mr. Waugh returned to Washington, Penn., and has since made it his home. He is treasurer of Washington and Jefferson College, does some insurance business, occasionally writes for the papers, is an Independent in politics, and is suspected of having some leanings towards free trade.

ALONZO LINN has been for many years a professor in Washington and Jefferson College, and is worthy of more than a passing notice in the pages of this biographical record.

This highly esteemed educator is a native of Pennsylvania, born September 26, 1827, in Butler, Butler county. His father was Dr. George Linn, a prominent physician of Butler. He was a native of New Jersey, but removed in early life to Crawford county, and there lived on a farm with his widowed mother. When a young man he served as a soldier in the war of 1812, having taken the place of an older, married brother, who was drafted. Afterward he studied his profession, practiced for some time in Kittanning, but finally settled in Butler, where he was much esteemed as a good physician, and an upright citizen, taking an active part in all that promoted public morals and religion. He died in the prime of life in 1881. His wife was Elizabeth Gibson, born in Paisley, Scotland. She was a woman of great intelligence and force of character. After the death of her husband she removed to Allegheny county, in the neighborhood of Monongahela City, and there lived with her three children: Alonzo, Hannah (Mrs. Thomas Manown), and George A. She survived her husband fifty-seven years.

The subject of this sketch, prepared for college at Blake's Academy, in Monongahela City, and was graduated from Jefferson College in 1849. In his career at school and college he attracted the notice of his companions and instructors as a person of unusual ability and great aptitude for the acquisition of knowledge. He was modest and retiring, but, notwithstanding, always somewhat prominent for excellence. After leaving college he entered the Western Theological Seminary, at Allegheny, and completed its course, and was licensed by the Redstone Presbytery in 1854. From the seminary he went to the La Fayette College as tutor, served a year, and was promoted to be Adjunct Professor of Mathematics. He resigned this position, and for a short time was principal of an academy in New Brunswick, N. J. This again he left to enter upon a professorship in Jefferson College, in 1857. At the time of the consolidation of Washington and Jefferson Colleges in 1869, he removed to Washington, and here in addition to being a Professor he was made Vice-President of the college. In all these busy years he has maintained a uniform reputation as an educator, as a teacher and a scholar. He received the degree of Ph.D. from his own college, and that of LL.D., from La Fayette.

On November 17, 1858, Prof. Linn married Rebecca E., daughter of Abram Fulton. Their children are four sons: George S., a druggist in Monongahela City; Andrew M., a lawyer in Washington, and Harry H. and Charles F. The Liums and the Fultons for many generations have been Presbyterians, even before their forefathers came from the North of Ireland.

JAMES B. KENNEDY, register of wills for Washington county, is descended from rugged Scotch ancestry, and is a grandson of David Kennedy, a weaver, who came to America from the "land of the mountain and the flood" in 1818, making his first home in his adopted country in Philadelphia.

One of his sons, Peter, came, in 1826, to Washington county, from Steubenville, Ohio, where he was first married, there being four children living by this union. Mr. Kennedy's second wife was Mrs. Frances (Anderson) Doyle, of Steubenville, whose father was a soldier of the Revolution at Valley Forge. She had one son by her first marriage, William J. Doyle, of Washington. By Mr. Kennedy's second union there are children as follows: John H., deputy sheriff of this county; James B., our subject; Benjamin K., living at Steubenville, Ohio, in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; Peter G., Margaret O. and Mary F., living at Washington. The mother died in 1876, at the age of fifty years, the father on January 2, 1890, in his eighty third year, and was buried in Washington cemetery by Post 120, G. A. R., Department of Pennsylvania, of which he was a member. He was a most patriotic Union man at the time of the war of the Rebellion, and, although aged fifty-five years, his military ardor was fired to such enthusiasm that he enlisted in Company K, Eighth Pennsylvania Reserves, and served eighteen months in McClellan's Peninsular campaign. He commanded the company at Drainesville and participated in the affair at Richmond. He was injured by a falling limb of a tree which was knocked off by one of the enemy's shells.

James B. Kennedy was born in Washington, Penn., September 6, 1840, and was educated at the common schools, which he attended until he was fourteen years old, when he was apprenticed to the printing business in the Examiner office, serving at this four and a half years; then, in 1859, he commenced to learn the trade of a bricklayer with James Hamilton, and was so engaged when the first gun of the war of the Rebellion was fired at Fort Sumter. On April 15, 1861, at a meeting of the citizens of Washington, in response to Lincoln's call for 75,000 men, Mr. Kennedy was the first man here to offer his services to the Government. He enlisted in Company E, Twelfth P. V. I., Col. David Campbell commander, and his first duty was protecting the Northern Central Railroad near Baltimore, Md. At the end of three months he was discharged, and on August 31, 1861, he re-enlisted, this time in Company A, One Hundredth P. V. I. ("Roundheads"), of which he was appointed fourth sergeant and was promoted to first sergeant. Mr. Kennedy took part in all the engagements of his regiment up to and including the siege of Knoxville, when at the assault on Fort Sanders, November 29, 1863, he was shot in the neck and cheek and knocked off the parapet, being badly hurt by the fall. He lay in the hospital at Knoxville until March following, when his father came for him and took him home. He suffered much, and his life was in great danger, as erysipelas had set in and he was quite blind part of the time; in fact he still suffers from the effects of his wounds. Being unable, on account of his hurts, to follow his trade, bricklaying, he resumed the printing business, and was given the position of foreman in the office of the Examiner, of which paper A. H. Ecker and David F. Patterson were editors; was afterward foreman in the office of the Cumberland Presbyterian, a journal published at Waynesburg, Penn.; then worked on the Washington Observer. On January 16, 1879, he was appointed mail messenger on the Hempfield railroad, making trips from Washington to Wheeling, and when the B. & O. Railroad Co. took that road and extended it to Pittsburgh, Mr. Kennedy's route was also increased. This position he held until the election of Cleveland, and, being a Republican, he resigned, as he believed that "to the victor belong the spoils," and his health being much impaired, he retired June 6, 1885. On November 8, 1887, he was elected register of wills for three years, his opponent being A. C. Morrow, a Democrat. He was re-elected in 1890, to serve to January, 1894. On October 15, 1867, he married Mrs. Sarah J. Martin, daughter of Josiah Rawhouser, of Hartford county, Md., who died August 14, 1892, aged eighty-two years. This union was blessed with two children: Fannie H., clerking for her father in his office, and Carrie B., who died in her seventh year. Mr. Kennedy was at one time assistant burgess of Washington borough.

He was commander of W. F. Templeton Post, No. 120, G. A. R., Department of Pennsylvania, and is also quartermaster; he is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and of the Methodist Protestant Church. On May 29, 1891, was unveiled, at Knoxville, Tenn., a monument to the memory of Isaac R. W. Garrettson and Aaron Templeton, two members of Company A, 100th P. V. I. ("Roundheads"), who were killed at the time of the attack and repulse of the Rebels on Ft. Sanders, November 29, 1863. William H. Underwood, present postmaster of Washington, Penn., and our subject were wounded at the same time. Ed Memard Post, G. A. R., of Knoxville, Tenn., performed the dedication ceremony, Mr. Kennedy being the only surviving member of Company A who was present.

John H. Kennedy learned the weaver's trade, and when the war broke out served draft notices in Washington county. He has been a deputy sheriff under Sheriffs Smith, Work, Hemphill, Lockhart and Cherry; also worked for a time with Sheriff George Perritt. Mr. Kennedy conducted a grocery business in the county for several years, also served as postmaster at Zollarsville for some time. Before the war he was a Democrat, but since that time he has affiliated with the Republican party. In religious faith he is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. When a young man he was united in marriage with Minerva Cox, who has borne him four children, viz.: John, Flora, Donnetta and Millie A.

JONATHAN ALLISON. Prominent among the foremost of Washington county's most prosperous and progressive citizens stands this well-known and highly respected gentleman. He is a native of the county, having been born February 3, 1828, in Chartiers township, his ancestry being traceable to a family who left Scotland for the North of Ireland during the period of religious persecution in their native land.

James Allison, grandfather of our subject, was a native of Ireland, whence he emigrated to Maryland, locating in Cecil county, and thence on October 26, 1773, moved to Washington county, Penn., having purchased from Thomas Moffatt of Cecil county a tract of wild land in Washington county containing 560 acres. This tract Moffatt had acquired by squatter's right, and the first patent for same was made out to James Allison; the farm is now owned and occupied by his grandson, Jonathan Allison. Here the grandfather set to work to carve out a home for himself and family, and great were the hardships he endured and many the dangers he encountered in his herculean task of converting a forest wild into a smiling fruitful farm. Indians and wild animals were numerous and oftentimes aggressive, and many a night did this old pioneer watch with his trusty rifle for the bloodthirsty savage and not less ferocious marauding wolf. In fact, after his first visit to his tract of land the Indians were so hostile that he had to beat a retreat, betaking himself to the "Forks of Yough," as the confluence of the Youghiogheny and Monongahela rivers was then called, but, in 1771, he returned to his new home in strength, some twenty families accompanying him, among whom were the Bradfords, McDowells, Parks, Scotts, etc. As a haven for the families to retreat to in times of danger, they here built themselves a blockhouse or fort, in which they lived one year, and then erected log cabin, so that they might have individual homes, and here they endured the many hardships and privations incident to pioneer life, and which were particularly distressing in the northern part of the county. The old frame house, built by James Allison in 1788 or 1789, is still standing in a remarkably good state of preservation.

James Allison was married to Miss Jane, sister of David Bradford, who was prominently connected with the "Whiskey Insurrection" in Pennsylvania, and by this union eight children were born as follows: William, who moved in 1834 to McDonough county, Ill., where he died; James, for fifty years an attorney at Beaver, Penn., now deceased, but whose descendants still reside there; John, who in 1834 went to Illinois, where his descendants are yet to be found; George, who was a merchant in Pittsburgh, Penn., where he died; Thomas, father of Jonathan; David, killed when a youth by kick of a horse; Mary, married to Rev. McIlroy, of New York City, and Rachel, married to Dr. George Craighead, of Washington county. Mr. Allison was a very prominent citizen in his day, having been associate judge of the courts of Washington county in 1786-'87-'88, and in 1789 a member of the Supreme Executive Council at Philadelphia, during which incumbency he voted for the abolition of slavery, the question having, in some connection, been brought up in that council, and thus he became one of the first Abolitionists in the county. He was one of the first ruling elders in Dr. John McMillan's church in North Strabane township, one of the first Presbyterian Societies organized in the county. For years he was a trustee of Jefferson College, and strongly advocated the union of the two colleges, Washington and Jefferson.

Thomas Allison, son of this honored pioneer, was born in 1780, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., where he grew to manhood on his father's farm, helping to clear it of timber and brush. In 1817 he married Mary, daughter of Richard Johnson, of North Strabane township, and ten children came to brighten their pioneer home, viz.: Jane (deceased), James (now in Chartiers township), William and Richard (both deceased), Thomas (in Chartiers township), Jonathan (subject of sketch), David and Joseph (both in Chartiers township), Uriah (deceased), and Mary (in Chartiers township). Of these, James served five years in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment, P. V. I.; he was made a prisoner at Gettysburg, and held by the enemy two hours, but on account of his having rheumatism was released. The father of this sturdy family died October 21, 1849, at the age of sixty-nine years; the mother, who was a "mother in Israel," a thorough home woman, beloved by all for her many noble traits, passed from earth in 1884, at the patriarchal age of eighty six years. Mr. Allison was a most exemplary man, hardworking, thrifty and scrupulously conscientious. He was a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church, and a trustee of the Chartiers congregation.

Jonathan Allison, whose name opens this biographical memoir, received his rudimentary education at the common schools of his district, and at the age of seventeen years entered Jefferson College, remaining two years, when, owing to the death of a brother, he returned home and engaged in farming, which he has for the most part followed through life. After his marriage he bought of William Hopkins a farm of 148 acres, situated about one mile from the place of his birth, and here remained eight years, when he purchased a part of his grandfather's old farm, from the Andrew Allison estate. Here it was that a hundred years ago, while excavating the land for drainage, grandfather Allison discovered the first coal found in Washington county, some of which he dug up for blacksmith's use, and sold at 25 cents per bushel, after hauling it many miles; but not till long afterward was it used for house fuel. Andrew Allison had mined coal for some time, not as a regular business, however; but when in 1872 the Chartiers Valley Railroad was built, Jonathan Allison opened the mine on a large scale, developing it to its fullest working capacity, and sending the product to the lake ports, even as far as Chicago, besides supplying the borough of Washington and other places with the bituminous mineral. From 1873 to 1891 he employed about fifty men at the mine, and shipped over a million bushels per annum; but in 1891 he sold the concern out to J. V. H. Cook & Sons, of Canonsburg, Penn., and retired from the coal interests. In 1887 Mr. Allison removed to the "Old Acheson Homestead," in Washington, where he now resides. On April 7, 1857, Jonathan Allison and Margaret Gabby were united in marriage. She is a daughter of William and Margaret Gabby, the former of whom was a farmer of Franklin township, where he died; the latter is still living in Washington borough, at the advanced age of eighty-three years, in fair preservation, but blind for the past five or six years. To Mr. and Mrs. Allison were born the following named children: Mary, deceased when a child of four years; Maggie, who died in Canonsburg, was married to William Dickson, of that place; Albert, a farmer in Chartiers township; Thomas, in the Citizens' National Bank; Edward and William (twins), the former of whom is attending the Medical College at Pittsburgh, the latter was drowned in 1881, when coming from school, by falling off a foot-log laid across a creek; and John, Ralph and Jennie, all three at home, attending school.

Mr. and Mrs. Allison are consistent members of the First Presbyterian Church, in which he is a deacon. Politically he was a Whig, up to 1856, but since has been a staunch Republican. For twelve years he served as school director, being first elected the year he cast his first ballot; was a justice of the peace from 1872 to 1873, but resigned in order to accept the position of representative to the State Legislature to which he had been elected in the fall of 1872, and in which he served with eminent ability for two terms. Through some condition of politics, Hon. Mr. Allison was the only representative from Washington county in the State Legislature at that time. Since when, however, there have been two. For a couple of years he was a burgess of Washington borough, during which period the town was greatly improved in many respects. Mr. Allison was one of the original stockholders, in 1886, of the Citizens' National Bank, and is now one of its directors.

JOHAN P. CHARLTON, junior member of the firm of Hart & Charlton, proprietors and publishers of the Washington Democrat, was born January 5, 1812, in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. His father, John Charlton, was reared to manhood in the Keystone State, and was here married to Maria, daughter of Peter Grounds, a native of Germany, who emigrated to America and made his home in the New World in North Strabane township, where he was a farmer and blacksmith up to the day of his death. He was a Whig in politics, and in church connection a Lutheran; he and his wife are now sleeping their last sleep in Washington German cemetery. The children born to John and Maria Charlton were Samuel R., John P., Joseph G., William J., Henry, Mary, Margaret and Thomas J. Mr. Charlton carried on a general store in Washington for some time, and during the later years of his life followed the huckstering business, his residence being alternately at Washington and Canonsburg. He died in 1853, and his widow died at Canonsburg, January 27, 1893, aged eighty-six years. She was a member of the Christian Church.

John P. Charlton received his education at the common schools of the neighborhood of his birth-place, and at the age of fourteen entered, as "devil," the office of the American Union in Washington, Penn., but after one year's experience there he found employment with Christman & Clokey, with whom he remained one year, at the end of which time he became a "typo" on the Washington Review. While in this last office, young Charlton, in 1864, warmed by a spirit of patriotism, laid aside the stick and took up the sword in defense of the Union. He enlisted in Company K, Third Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, which battery was assigned to the army of the James, and was most of the time stationed at Fortress Monroe. While here our subject was detailed to work in the Government printing office at Norfolk, Va., where he remained nine months and then rejoined his regiment. He was mustered out November 5, 1865, returned home, and after a brief rest resumed the peaceful art of printing in the office of the Cumberland Presbyterian at Waynesburgh, Penn. Coming to Washington, he worked on the Reporter, then under the management of Moore & Armstrong, for three years. In 1869 he was nominated for the office of recorder of deeds of Washington county, and elected on the Democratic ticket; at the end of the term he was candidate for re-election, but was defeated. Mr. Charlton we next find assisting in the management of the "Valentine House," a leading hotel in Washington, Capt. Hugh Keys being then proprietor. In 1873 he was appointed deputy sheriff under Sheriff William Thompson, which incumbency he filled with characteristic ability for three years. In 1876 he was nominated for sheriff of Washington county, but was defeated, and soon after the death of Mr. Thompson he took charge of the "Fifth Avenue Hotel" at Pittsburgh, in the capacity of administrator. After conducting this hostelry nine months he returned to Washington, where he was employed as foreman in the office of the Democrat, at that time under the management of A. H. Ecker, who died in February, 1881. In June, same year, a partnership was formed between our subject and Alexander Hart; under the firm name of Hart & Charlton, they purchasing the entire business and plant of the Democrat, which paper they still own and publish.

On April 11, 1866, Mr. Charlton married Mary C., daughter of John and Susan Wolf, and the children born to their union are named respectively John S., Susan C., Ella M., Gertrude and David M. Mr. Charlton's political predilections are ably and undisguisedly illustrated in the columns of the Washington Democrat.

BOYD CRUMRINE, one of Pennsylvania's prominent men and whose name in Washington county is as "familiar as household words," is a native of the county, having been born on February 9, 1838, in East Bethlehem township, on the farm first occupied by his grandfather in 1800. He was a son of Daniel and Margaret Crumrine, and, as will be presently seen, with the exception of a great grandfather on the maternal side, who was an Englishman, George Rex by name, his blood is all German, from the upper Rhine.

From 1682 to 1776 Pennsylvania was the central point of emigration from Germany, France and Switzerland. For the first period of twenty years, that is until 1702, not over two hundred German families arrived, and those settled principally at Germantown and other localities near Philadelphia. But the period from 1702 to 1727 marked an era in early German emigration, and between forty and fifty thousand persons left their Fatherland. Queen Anne of England, desiring to fill up her American colonies without depleting the British kingdom, caused copies of a book to be distributed throughout the Palatinate in Germany—having her portrait as a frontispiece, and the title in gold letters, on which account the book was called "Das Golden Buch"—to induce the Palatines to come to England in order to be sent to the Carolinas, or to others of her American colonies; and it is said that in 1708 and 1709 thirty-three thousand Germans left their homes on the Rhine for London. Of this large number it is said that seven thousand, after having suffered great privations, returned half naked and in despondency to their native country, ten thousand died for want of sustenance or medical attendance, and other causes, and the survivors were sent to America.

In 1727, during the time of Governor William Keith, German immigration had so much increased that it was feared that Pennsylvania was becoming "a foreign country;" and a regulation was established by the provincial government requiring that foreigners on their arrival should subscribe an oath of allegiance to the kingdom of Great Britain and of fidelity to the proprietaries of the Province. All persons over sixteen were made to sign this oath, and when they could not write, their names were written for them and attested by a clerk. By this means the names of over thirty thousand German and Swiss immigrants into Pennsylvania between 1727 and 1776, when the colonies separated from the mother country, have been preserved. These lists are still to be seen in the Department of State at Harrisburg, and the attention of one who examines them will be attracted by two things to be observed: (1) Every ship's list of passengers, almost, was headed by the name of the pastor who was leading them as a flock into the wilderness; (2) Excepting a very small percentage of the whole number, every name is written in German, evidently the writer's autograph, and generally in the clear hand of a good penman. From these lists I. Daniel Rupp made up his "Collection of Thirty Thousand Names of Immigrants," published a few years since in Philadelphia.

In this collection of thirty thousand names there are but two "Krumreins." On September 11, 1732, "the ship Pennsylvania, John Stedman, master, from Rotterdam, last from Plymouth," landed with "seventy three males above sixteen, women and children of both sexes ninety-eight, in all one hundred and seventy one." In this list is the name of "Hans Michael Krumrein." On September 5, 1748,

"the ship Edinburgh, James Russell, master, from Rotterdam, last from Portsmouth," landed with one hundred and twenty-seven persons; and in this list of names is that of "George Lenhart Krumrein."

Hans Michael Krumrein, after having resided in the neighborhood of Philadelphia until after 1741, passed westward into Northampton and finally into Centre county, where some of his descendants still live, others having passed on into Ohio. George Lenhart Krumrein went into Baltimore county, Md.; afterward, perhaps, into Georgia, returning to Maryland at a later day. In 1800 George Crumrine, a grandson of George Lenhart Krumrein, it is believed, passed from Baltimore county, Md., over the Alleghenies into the valley of the Monongahela, and settled upon a farm in East Bethlehem township, Washington county. One of his sons, Daniel Crumrine, was born upon the same farm. He married Margaret, the daughter of John Bower, Esq. The Bower family was of Swiss German origin, and came west from the Juniata Valley in 1796.

The boyhood of Boyd Crumrine, the son of Daniel, was passed upon his father's farm, and during the winters of 1854-55 and 1855-56 he attended the Bridgeport schools, Brownsville, Penn.; and in the spring and summer of 1856 he was a student at Waynesburg College. In September of the latter year he was admitted to the Sophomore class of Jefferson College, Canonsburg; and at the beginning of his second term he was permitted, at his own request, to drop into the Freshman class, in order that he might lay a better foundation for a complete classical course. With that class he continued till his graduation, on August 1, 1860, when he divided the first honor of his class of over fifty men with Mr. Roland Thompson, of Milroy, Penn., and delivered the Greek salutatory on commencement day. Through the whole course he was a diligent student and a vigorous thinker, doing nothing by spurts, producing level work and square work always, and striking the highest grade-mark in nearly every recitation. At the beginning of the junior year Prof. John Fraser formed what he called his select class, embracing all the juniors who graded above ninety, to whom he offered special instruction in mathematics and general literature. The class consisted of Mr. Crumrine and four others, who met at night for two years in the Professor's chambers, where, as a reward for mastering a dozen extra volumes of higher mathematics, the privileged five were regaled, often into the "wee sma' hours," by the best thoughts and noblest sentiments of the man, who, as a teacher, stands without a rival and without a peer in the memories of his pupils. One year before graduation Mr. Crumrine chose the profession of law, and entered upon it with

Hon. John L. Gow, of Washington, Penn., as his preceptor, to whom he recited once a week during his senior year in college. The first year after graduation he taught a select class of young ladies at Canonsburg, continuing his law studies at the same time. On the twenty-first of August, 1861, he was admitted to the Washington county bar.

The war of the Rebellion interfering with his purpose to begin legal business in the West, in the following November he enlisted in Company B, Eighty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was made quarter-master sergeant of the regiment. After spending the winter of 1861-62 in the trenches at Washington, he was discharged in order to accept a commission as first lieutenant in a brigade of Eastern Virginia Volunteers then forming, but soon after his commission was received the Government issued an order discontinuing all recruiting service and disbanding all uncompleted organizations. This made him a citizen again; and, returning home he opened, in May, 1862, an office in Washington, Penn., and began the practice of law, in which he has continued ever since with sufficient business always on hand to keep him steadily occupied. Of his own efforts he wrote to the class historian for the reunion in 1885: "I have tried to keep my little boat trimmed neatly, and to trim it myself and after my own way. My sole ambition has been to do as well as I could what has been set before me. The law, to me, has been a very jealous mistress, yet, as a relaxation and a mellowing of the lines of toil, which otherwise might have been hard to me, I have been a rider of hobbies, one after another, always with the reservation of the liberty of changing them at my own will and pleasure; philosophy at one time, then entomology, the microscope, and, of late years, history and philosophy."

In 1871 Mr. Crumrine compiled the "Rules of Court of Washington County;" in 1872-75 he prepared "The Pittsburgh Reports," legal cases of the several State courts not elsewhere reported, in three volumes octavo. In 1878 he published "Omnium Gatherum, or Notes of Cases for the Lawyer's Pocket and Counsel Table," of which the edition is now exhausted. In 1882 he composed a large part and edited the whole of "The History of Washington County," a quarto of one thousand pages, small type, published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., of Philadelphia.

Mr. Crumrine is a Republican in politics, but has never sought political preferment. His tastes are altogether literary and professional. He was given the degree of Master of Arts by Jefferson College in 1863. From 1865 to 1868 he was district attorney for Washington county, and in 1870 was appointed deputy marshal of the United States for the Western District of Pennsylvania, to compile the Social Statistics of that district for the Ninth Census. After this temporary employment outside of his profession, in matters in which he had great interest, he confined his work to his practice until April, 1887, when, without solicitation on his part, he was appointed, by Governor Beaver, State Reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania; and, accepting the appointment as one suited to his tastes and experience, he had published at the end of his term in May, 1892, thirty-one volumes of Pennsylvania State Reports, which seem to meet with the approval of the bench and bar of the State. Secretary of State Charles W. Stone, in response to a letter concerning these reports, wrote in 1889 as follows: "Mr. Crumrine is making a model reporter, and his work is held in very high estimation by the bench and bar throughout the State. He is improving the style and methods of reporting, and is exceedingly faithful and painstaking in his work. The profession generally appreciates this fact, and also the promptness in the publication of his reports, and their improved typographical execution. You cannot speak too highly of his official efficiency." He has also been the recipient of many other well-merited compliments, written and verbal, from members of both bench and bar, of all phases of politics, which it would be superfluous to here reiterate. Indefatigable in his work, he is a lover of it. In the winter of 1891-92, when Mr. Crumrine's name was presented to President Harrison for an appointment as United States district judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania, among many letters in his favor from judges and lawyers of the State, the justices of the Supreme Court joined in a letter to the President which was such as to make Mr. Crumrine feel more than comfortable, even when he failed to receive the desired appointment. At the general election in November, 1891, he was chosen a member of the constitutional convention, provided for by the act of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania passed June 19, 1891. However, a majority of the electors of the State voting against the convention, it was not held. At the date of this writing his name is being mentioned as a candidate for the office of Judge of the Supreme Court.

On the day following that on which he was made a Bachelor of Arts, Mr. Crumrine was married to Miss Harriet L., daughter of George A. and Jane B. Kirk, and they have had four children: Ernest Ethelbert, Louisa Celeste, Roland Thompson and Hattie J. Of these, Ernest E. is a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, and is partner in his father's law office; his wife is Gertrude, the daughter of Rev. Dr. J. F. Magill, of Fairfield, Iowa, and they have one child, a son. Louisa was educated at the Washington Female Seminary, and is now the wife of J. P. Patterson, Esq., of the Pittsburgh bar; they have one child, a daughter. Roland T. and Hattie J. both died young. Mr. Crumrine is stalwart in form, turning the scales at over two hundred pounds, and is as fine a specimen of physical manhood as the eye needs wish to look upon.

[The foregoing sketch is for the most part compiled from "A Biographical Album of Prominent Pennsylvanians," published at Philadelphia in 1889.

JOSEPH RANKIN McLAIN, a citizen of Claysville, was born January 8, 1828, in Cross Creek township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of William and Margaret (McClelland) McLain.

The family are of Scotch-Irish descent, the great-grandfather, William, having come to this country from the North of Ireland at a very early day, settling in Adams county, Penn. Two of his sons, who were civil engineers, assisted in locating the dividing line between Maryland and Pennsylvania, and his son, John, grandfather of Joseph R., was born about the year 1740, in Adams county, Penn., where he was reared to manhood and educated. When he had reached maturity he set out for the then "Far West," arriving finally about the year 1770, in Washington county. Here he married Hannah Marshall, of that county, after which they at once made their home on a farm near Canonsburg, where they remained some few years. The children born to this pioneer couple were: Joseph (who was in the service of the Government for the suppression of the Whiskey Insurrection, and died in the service), Mary (Mrs. John Rankin), William, Hannah (Mrs. John Hayes), and John. The father of this family died when he was yet a comparatively young man. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church.

William McLain, their second son, was born in Chartiers township, this county, June 23, 1779, and was reared to manhood in that township. He was a great lover of books, and, although he had no school facilities (the death of his father imposing on him hard work on the farm from early boyhood), yet, by close application to study, he overcame what appeared to many insurmountable difficulties. At the age of nineteen he commenced teaching, continuing in same for thirty years, and proving himself at once an apt scholar and skillful teacher, besides leaving an impress on his scholars not readily forgotten. On March 4, 1806, he was married to Agnes Fink, who bore him two children: John, born December 21, 1806, and Samuel A. (who became a minister of the Gospel), born July 23, 1808. John lived with his father until 1846, when he bought a farm in East Finley township, and resided there until his death, March 13, 1890; he was a zealous worker in the Church, and gave liberally toward its support. The mother of this little family dying August 21, 1808, Mr. McLain married, November 7, 1811, Margaret, daughter of Thomas McClelland, of this county, and to this union the following children were born: Agnes (now the deceased wife of James Sawhill, also deceased), born August 8, 1812; Hannah (now deceased wife of Ira Blanchard, also deceased), born January 14, 1814; Mary, born November 1, 1816; Martha (deceased wife of Rev. Alexander McCarroll, D.D., also deceased), born September 21, 1818; Thomas (deceased in childhood); Margaret (Mrs. Robert McKahan), born February 15, 1822; William (died in childhood); Eliza J. (deceased wife of James Wright, also deceased), born February 11, 1826, died July 10, 1857; Joseph R. (subject of this sketch), and Sarah (widow of of Hon. A. K. Craig, deceased), born December 7, 1830. Mr. McLain remained in Chartiers township until 1817, when he removed to Cross Creek township, then in 1830 purchased a farm in Buffalo township, on which he made his home until 1866, in which year he removed to Claysville, where he died March 2, 1872, at the patriarchal age of ninety-three years; on April 1, 1875, his wife followed him to the grave. In politics Mr. McLain was a Democrat until 1828, when he became a Whig, remaining so until 1850, and then voted the Free soil ticket until 1860, after which he was a staunch Republican until the day of his death. For many years he was a justice of the peace. He and his family were adherents of the Presbyterian Church, of the Session of which he was a member for forty years.

Joseph R. McLain received a liberal education at the schools of his locality, and was reared to the practical life of a farmer. On November 27, 1849, he was married to Susanna, daughter of James Ralston, and to this union the following named children were born: Loretta Mary (deceased wife of John M. Gamble), W. J. E., Maggie (wife of Dr. J. N. Sprowls), John A., Joseph M. (now deceased), David C., Susan, Rebecca, and George W. Mr. McLain resided in Buffalo township from 1830 until 1856; then moved to Claysville, but two years thereafter purchased the home farm in Buffalo township, to which he removed, remaining there until 1866, when he bought a farm in Donegal township, and there he had his home until 1872, in which year he came to Claysville, where he is yet residing. After this he was engaged in the general mercantile and wool business until his retirement in 1888. When about the age of seventeen years, he commenced teaching school, in which he continued eighteen consecutive winter terms.

Mr. McLain, in politics, was first a Whig, and since the formation of the party has been an active Republican. He has been elected to and served in various important offices. In 1867 he was elected a jury commissioner of the county, holding the position one term; in 1876 he was elected to the Lower House of the State Legislature, serving in the sessions of 1877-78. In 1878 he was again a candidate, but was defeated by Finley Patterson, by fourteen votes. In 1886 he was elected to the State Senate, serving four years. He was a school director for Buffalo and Donegal townships and the borough of Claysville. Mr. McLain and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church, and since 1883 he has been a member of the Session of the Claysville Presbyterian Church.

JHOWARD CRAMER, editor and proprietor of The Enterprise-Call, Burgettstown, is a son of E. V. and Susan (Weight) Cramer, and was born June 8, 1856, at Spruce Creek, Huntingdon Co., Penn.

The history of the family, of which this gentleman is a conspicuous and honored member, began with Isaac Cramer, who was born near Millville, Gloucester Co., N. J., in 1786. He was the second child in a large family, and was of English descent, his father having emigrated to this country some time before, the exact date not now being known; but, at any rate, there is evidence that he served as a soldier in the American army during the Revolutionary war. In 1807 Isaac Cramer married Mary Van Eman, who was born in 1783, a daughter of John Van Eman, a farmer, also of Millville, N. J. Her parents had emigrated to this country from Wales. After marriage Mr. Cramer learned the trade of an iron molder. He was drafted and served through the war of 1812, and after the close of that struggle he moved to Cumberland county, N. J. In 1832 he went to Lancaster county, Penn., fourteen miles southeast of Lancaster city. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cramer, of whom the following is a brief record:

(1) Wilson was born in 1809; married Roxanna Speelman, in Monmouth county, N. J.; they emigrated to Lancaster county, Penn., a year or two later, and in 1843 located in the neighborhood of Johnstown. Eleven children were born to them, a majority of whom and their descendants are still living in that locality; two sons were badly wounded in the Civil war. (2) Eliza Ann was born in 1814, and married Isaiah Hopkins in 1826. They afterward settled in Jefferson county, Penn.; fourteen children were born to their marriage. (3) Luke, born 1813, was married, in 1834, to Eliza Trimble, of Lancaster county, by whom he had eleven children; their descendants are now living in that neighborhood; two sons were killed in the war of the Rebellion. (4) Isaac, born 1815, married in 1837, Rebecca Hunt, of Lancaster county; moved to Philadelphia, where they lived and died; they had three children. (5) Mary, born in 1817, married in 1835, William Stimeatts, of Cumberland county, N. J., and they settled in Maryland, near Sykesville; they had seven children. (6) Sarah, born 1819, married, 1835, William Holland, of Virginia; moved to Virginia where they lived a number of years, and finally returned to Pennsylvania, and settled near Reading; five children were born to them. (7) Eli V., born in 1821, will have special notice further on in this sketch. (8) Joseph, born in 1823, married about 1846, Elizabeth Garner, of Lancaster county, and moved to Baltimore, but at the outbreak of the Civil war they returned to Pennsylvania and settled near Reading; they had three children. (9) David, born in 1825, was married in 1848 to Mary Harrison, of Philadelphia; they settled in that city. The former is still living there; Mrs. Cramer having been dead a number of years; their family consisted of three children, two of whom are now living. (10) Isaiah, born in 1827, married, about 1850, Elizabeth Gray, of Philadelphia; they also live in Philadelphia; two children were born to them. Isaac Cramer, Sr., the father of this family, died at the home of his son, Eli V., in 1857, aged seventy one years; Mrs. Cramer passed away three years before at the same age.

Eli V. Cramer, born in 1821, was married, in 1855, to Susan Weight, at Spruce Creek, Penn., who died in 1865. She was the second of nine children born to John H. and Barbara (Zimmerman) Weight, both Germans. John H. Weight was the eldest of four brothers and several sisters. His father came from Germany and settled in Berks county, Penn., where John H. was born in 1807; he died at Altoona, Penn., in 1887. In 1866 Mr. Cramer married, for his second wife, Mary J. Stein, eldest daughter of Richard and Jane Stein, of Blair county, Penn. By his two wives Mr. Cramer had seventeen children—five by the first and twelve by the second. He is now living at Grant, Indiana Co., Penn. Mr. Cramer was an active participant in the two Know-Nothing riots in Philadelphia. In 1847 he enlisted as a recruit to the regular troops, and served for sixteen months in the Mexican war, in Gen. Scott's army. During the invasion of Pennsylvania by the rebels in the Civil war, he went out at the call of Gov. Curtin, and remained until the critical period was past, but saw no active service. Those of his children who have arrived at maturity are: J. Howard, the subject proper of this memoir; Wilson T., a farmer, married and living in Huntingdon county, Penn.; Mary and Martha (twins) (Mary is the wife of Mahlon Cryder, a clothing merchant of Tyrone, Penn.; Martha is married to E. L. Butler, of Altoona); Harry, an iron molder, is married to Amanda King, and they are living at Grant, Penn.; R. H. is a printer in Burgettstown, Penn.; Jesse H. is a printer in Pittsburgh, Penn.; W. A., a lumberman, and Victor E., an iron molder, are both living at the paternal home. It will be noted that this family has been represented in all the wars of this country since the emigration of the regular stock. The great-grandfather of the present generation was in the Revolutionary war; the grandfather in the war of 1812; E. V. in the Mexican war, and a number of the present generation in the war of the Rebellion. Isaiah also served in the Civil war, and experienced the horrors of Libby Prison. A singular fact in the history of the family is that the seven sons of Isaac Cramer, Sr., were iron molders, and the three daughters married iron molders. It will also be observed that they literally obeyed the Scriptural injunction to "Multiply and replenish the earth."

J. Howard Cramer, at the age of eighteen, commenced to learn the printing trade in the office of The Times, Curwensville, Penn., afterward finishing same in the office of the Raftsmen's Journal, at Clearfield, same State. In 1879 he moved to Pittsburgh, and worked for a while in the job printing establishment of Myers, Shinkle & Co; then went to Mansfield, Penn., and worked in The Item office for nearly two years. The proprietor of The Item, C. Knepper, had established a monthly paper at Burgettstown, named The Enterprise, and in August, 1881, sold it to Mr. Cramer, who immediately commenced the publication of a weekly edition. On January 1, 1888, Mr. Cramer bought The Call from M. R. Allen, and consolidated the two journals under the name of The Enterprise-Call, which is now a widely read and prosperous paper. In 1882 J. Howard Cramer was united in marriage with M. Jennie Row, of Clearfield, Penn., daughter of S. J. Row, who for thirty years was the editor and proprietor of the Raftsmen's Journal, the Republican organ of Clearfield county. To Mr. and Mrs. Cramer have been born four children, viz.: Amelia S., Ruth R., E. Kate (dead) and Charles H. Cramer.

REV. HENRY WOODS, D. D. This well known educationist is a native of Missouri, born in Marion county, July 2, 1838. He is of Irish descent, his great-great-grandfather having emigrated from his native land, Ireland, to America, making, in 1730, a settlement in Chester county, where he carried on farming.

Andrew Woods, great-grandfather of our subject, was born, reared and married in Chester county, whence he moved to Virginia, where he died. Two of his children were named Andrew and Archibald, of whom Andrew was born in Botetourt county, Va., near Charlottesville, and received his education at the public schools of the period. When a young man, he left the paternal roof and made a settlement in Wheeling (now in West Virginia), at that time a fort and trading post, and for a number of years he carried on farming. He married Mrs. McCullough (née Mitchell), widow of Major McCullough, an Indian fighter of considerable repute. On one occasion, the Indians having succeeded in surrounding him, he made a leap with his horse over a precipice that has since been known as "McCullough's Leap." The children born to this union were Jane (who married Rev. James Hoge, the pioneer minister of the presbytery of Columbus, where he preached for over half a century), Andrew, Samuel, Margaret (Mrs. Dr. Martin L. Todd), Robert, Alfred, and Ann (Mrs. Dr. Archibald Todd). The father of this family was a member of the First Presbyterian Church, of Wheeling, of which he was one of the founders and one of the first elders. In politics he was a Whig of the old school.

Andrew Woods, father of Henry, was born June 17, 1793, in Wheeling, Va. (now W. Va.), and, at the schools of the place, such as they were a hundred years ago, he received a liberal education. In 1821 he was married to Rebecca, daughter of James Brison, of Pittsburgh, and their children were James B., of New Orleans, La.; Oliver, deceased; Luther, in St. Louis, Mo.; John, in San Diego, Cal.; Archie, in St. Louis, Mo.; Andrew Alfred, in New Orleans, La.; Henry, and Francis M., pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Martinsburgh, W. Va. After marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Woods removed to Belmont county, Ohio, where he was engaged in milling and farming for some years. In 1837, they first moved to Marion county, Mo., returned to Belmont county, Ohio, in 1839; but in 1844 removed to Missouri and there died, the mother in 1851, the father in 1873. They were members of the Presbyterian Church. In politics, Mr. Woods was a Whig originally, but during the period of the Civil war he became identified with the Democratic party.

Rev. Henry Woods, whose name heads this sketch, attended school in his native State part of the year, and when fourteen years of age he entered the academy at Morgantown, W. Va., where he remained three years, and then entered the junior class of Washington College, from which he was graduated in 1857. After this he taught at Morgantown, W. Va., two years, at the end of which time (in 1859) he entered the Western Theological Seminary, at Allegheny, from which he graduated in 1862. He received the degree of D. D. from Westminster College, in 1879. Mr. Woods now entered the pastorate, his first charge being the First Presbyterian Church of Steubenville, Ohio, of which he remained pastor for five years, or until 1867, when he accepted the professorship of ancient languages in Washington and Jefferson College. In 1869 the departments of Instruction were rearranged and he was appointed to the chair of Latin. Professor Woods has ever since been connected with this institution, and partly to his untiring efforts is to be credited the high standard which the college has attained, in the classical department, among the prominent educational institutions of the country. On June 15, 1863, Rev. Woods was united in marriage with Mary L., daughter of Hon. John Hoge and Ellen (Blaine) Ewing, of whom considerable mention is made elsewhere. Seven children have been born to them, three of whom died in early childhood; the survivors are: Margaret, now a missionary in China, married to Rev. William B. Hamilton; Mary; John E., in Pittsburgh, and Frances H. For the past twenty-two years our subject has served as pastor of the East Buffalo Church, in Buffalo township. In his political predilections he was formerly a Whig; but since the organization of the Republican party has been identified with it.

JONAS ELY, M. D., although one among the comparatively young men in professional life, has reached an eminence for scientific attainments as well as thorough scholarship that is attained by few even of those who have devoted a long life of patient toil in the work of their profession. He is a native of Greene county, Penn., born March 2, 1853, near Waynesburg, in Whiteley township. His ancestry were of Germany, from which country the great grandfather emigrated at an early day to America; on the voyage he was so ill that at one time he was thought to be dead and was about to be cast into the sea, when signs of life were discovered in him, happily in time to save him from a watery grave. Jonas Ely, grandfather of our subject, came to Washington county from Berks county, Penn., when a young man, and followed farming and stock raising in Franklin township; he married a Miss Euphen Wilson, and they both died in Greene county, same State.

George Ely, father of Dr. Jonas Ely, was born in Washington county, Penn., September 5, 1818, and was married to Mary Warriek, also a resident of Washington county. After their marriage they moved to Greene county, same State, where they made their home, having born to them seven children—four sons and three daughters. They were both members of the M. E. Church from early life, and were zealous, conscientious Christians. Mrs. Ely passed away December 29, 1887, aged sixty-two years. She died as she had lived, leaving testimony behind that her work was well done. Mr. Ely is still living, and has been one of the successful farmers and stock raisers of that county. He has more than an ordinary mind, and has characteristics worthy of example, always living up to the "golden rule." He was frugal, industrious, patient and upright in all his dealings. He has the respect and esteem of all who know him. A neighbor made the remark to an attorney, when riding past Mr. Ely's farm, that if all men were like him we would have no use for lawyers.

Dr. Jonas Ely was reared on his father's farm. He received his education at select schools and Waynesburg College, studying all the branches required there for graduation. However, from the age of fifteen his ambition was to become a follower in the footsteps of Hippocrates and Galen, and all his spare time he assiduously devoted to the private study of medicine till 1853, when he entered Cincinnati Medical College, from which he graduated in the class of 1857 at the head of his class. In March of that year he came to Washington, this county, and commenced the practice of his chosen profession, in which he has been deservedly successful. On December 25, 1873, Dr. Ely was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob and Jane Schriver, of Greene county, Penn., where the former is a successful farmer. To this union two children have been born: John R. and Tillie S. The Doctor has been a member of the M. E. Church since the age of sixteen years, and has been steward in the same for some time.

JAMES S. STOCKING. The family, of which this gentleman is a worthy representative, are on his paternal side of Holland Dutch ancestry who came to America at an early date, and on the maternal side are descended from "Mayflower" Pilgrims who established a settlement near Worcester, Mass. James Phillips, a lineal descendant of the latter, came in 1800 to Washington, where he died. He had several sons, one of whom, James, was in the Mexican war, and was killed at Pueblo. The father of these sons was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch.

Julius Stocking, father of James S., was born near Auburn, N. Y., was educated at the subscription schools of his day, and learned the trade of weaver. In 1835 he came to Washington, where he was engaged in trading and speculating, but later moved to Rockport, Ind. In 1836 he was married to Mary, daughter of James Phillips, above referred to, and a native of Washington county, Penn. To this union were born the following: Alfred, now in Ohio; Mary, wife of William Jenkinson, of the firm of R. & W. Jenkinson, in Pittsburgh; and James S. The father died in 1870, aged sixty-eight years, the mother in 1874, at the age of fifty four years.

James Stevens Stocking, the subject proper of this memoir, was born December 4, 1839, in Washington, Penn.; attended the public schools until twelve years of age, when he began to make his own living, but found time to acquire a good education by self teaching. At President Lincoln's first call for volunteers, for three months, he enlisted in Company E, Twelfth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served for the term of enlistment; re-enlisted in the One Hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers ("Roundheads") and served two years and eight months; re-enlisted as a veteran for three years, and served thirteen months, making in all full four years' service in the Union army; lost an arm at Hatcher's Run, October 27, 1864; entered the army as a private, and was mustered out as first lieutenant; was appointed U. S. storekeeper in 1871; was unanimously nominated by the Republican County Convention of 1872 for clerk of courts, and was elected, receiving 5,465 votes to 4,818 for Samuel Ruth, Democrat, and running 171 votes ahead of his party's candidate for governor; was re-nominated without opposition in 1875, and re-elected, receiving 5,152 votes to 4,702 for W. C. Scott, Democrat, and running 235 votes ahead of the Republican candidate for governor; was one of the editors and proprietors of the Washington Observer from October 17, 1879, to October 17, 1882, when he sold his interest in the paper on account of ill health; was appointed postmaster at Washington by President Arthur in February, 1885, and served twenty months, when he was removed for being a Republican; was nominated and elected to the Assembly in 1888; re-nominated and re-elected in 1890, as a Republican. On November 1, 1891, without solicitation, he was offered and accepted the position of assistant chief and superintendent of the seed room in the Seed Division of the Agricultural Department at Washington, D. C., where at present he is located.

On January 4, 1866, Mr. Stocking was married to Miss Elizabeth Hallam, of Washington, Penn., a sister of the well-known Hallam Bros., and she bore him three children: Hugh, Harry (deceased) and Mand, and died of smallpox February 2, 1881. On March 17, 1883, our subject married Mary Josephine, daughter of James Robinson, of Coshocton, Ohio, and great-granddaughter of Gen. Robinson, of Revolutionary fame, who made a settlement in the Muskingum Valley, where he took up a U. S. grant of 3,000 acres; he was captured by Indians, made to run the gauntlet, and was actually tied to the stake to be burned alive, when he was rescued by Logan, the Mingo chief. At the age of twenty-four Mr. Stocking lost his arm, as above related, and in his twenty-fourth year his son, Hugh, lost his left arm by being caught in a power printing press. In 1884 Mr. James S. Stocking engaged in the real-estate business, and laid off an addition to Washington, Penn., known as "Kalorama." In 1887, in connection with B. F. Hassum, Esq., platted and sold another addition, named "Woodland." In 1888, in connection with James Kuntz, Jr., L. McCarroll and E. F. Acheson, he platted and sold the Weaver farm, under the name of West End, and in 1889, in connection with the same parties, he platted and sold the Shirks Grove property. Woodland, West End and Shirks Grove additions are now consolidated into a borough, and is known as "West Washington."

FRANCIS HANLIN. The Hanlin family have for almost a century been identified with the progress and development of Hanover township. They have assisted in the advancement and support of the schools and churches, and all other enterprises which have served to place Hanover township in its present position with the magnificent galaxy of townships contained in Washington county, Penn.

The present generation of this family trace their ancestry to four brothers, William, John, James and Alexander, who were children of Alexander and Nancy (Stewart) Hanlin, and natives of County Tyrone, Ireland. The father dying in County Tyrone, the family, consisting of the widow, four sons and three daughters (Elizabeth, Nancy and Jane), came to America in 1792. Their first location was in Lancaster county, Penn., where the sons engaged in various kinds of employment. Energy and health formed their sole capital. One daughter, Nancy, was married in eastern Pennsylvania, and there passed her days. Between 1795 and 1800 the other members of the family came farther west, locating on the waters of Buffalo creek, in Washington county, on the "Lawton Farm." The brothers continued to work in partnership until the beginning of the present century, when James purchased land near Paris, Hanover township, this county, and followed the river, making trips to New Orleans. He was married to a Miss Mills. William, John and Alexander jointly purchased, of one Charles Campbell, a large tract of land near Harmon's creek, in Hanover township, this county, to which they moved. William was affianced to Anna, daughter of John Fulton, of Hanover township, and his wedding day was set, but he died before the marriage was consummated. John Hanlin was born in 1771, in County Tyrone, Ireland, and in 1823 married Nancy Hanlin, a distant relative, and a native of Ireland. Her parents came to America, locating at Steubenville, Ohio, leaving their infant daughter with an aunt in Ireland, with whom she crossed the ocean when but two years of age.

Alexander Hanlin was married in 1805 to Elizabeth Scott, who was born February 14, 1780, in Ireland, and when only two or three years of age was brought to America. Her father, Franklin Scott, was one of the first settlers in Jefferson township, this county, first locating there about the time of the Revolution. He was obliged to flee from the country to Ireland, was married, and again crossing the Atlantic settled in Jefferson township, Washington Co., Penn., where he died. After the marriage of Alexander Hanlin, the land belonging to the three brothers was divided, and he received the southern part of the tract, residing there until his death. He was a consistent member of the Episcopal Church, to which he contributed liberally, his wife being identified with the Methodist Episcopal Society. Although possessing no property when he landed in America, by energy and toil Mr. Hanlin accumulated a good property. In politics he was first a Whig, then a Republican. He died at the advanced age of ninety years, his wife dying eight years before him, and they were buried in the cemetery of Tucker's Church.

Their children were: Alexander, killed accidentally by a cider press, born January 1, 1806; William, deceased in Carroll county, Ohio, born August 20, 1807; Francis, whose name opens this sketch; John, a farmer of Hanover township, born February 3, 1812; James (deceased), born February 17, 1814; George (deceased), born March 28, 1816; Stewart, a miner (died in California), born March 2, 1818; Charles, a farmer of Jefferson township, born September 26, 1820; Grant, a farmer and miller of Hanover township, born October 28, 1823; and Eliza Ann (unmarried), born January 30, 1826. The town of Hanlin, a station on the P. C. C. & St. L. R. R., is named from the four Hanlin brothers, one of whom was the father of this family.

Francis Hanlin, son of Alexander and Elizabeth Hanlin was born April 16, 1810, in Hanover township. He was reared on his father's farm, and attended the subscription schools of that period. In 1839 he was married to Ruth Criss, who was born in 1821, in Hanover township, a daughter of Jacob and Hannah (Ritenhouse) Criss. To this union three daughters were born, namely: Nancy (Mrs. Pressly Boyd, of Columbiana county, Ohio), Hannah (unmarried, living at home) and one daughter, who died in infancy. The mother died many years ago, and on November 20, 1849, Francis Hanlin selected as his second wife Betsy Lyons, a daughter of James and Sarah (Steen) Lyons. The children of this marriage were born as follows: Sarah (deceased wife of Samuel Jackson), Stewart

(a farmer of Hanover township), Mary (Mrs. Frank Ferguson, of Colliers, W. Va.), James (of Irondale, Ohio, was one of twins, the other of whom died at birth), Elizabeth (Mrs. John Stephenson of Hanover township), an infant daughter (deceased), and Letitia (deceased wife of Samuel Work). In 1845 Francis, Haulin and his brother John purchased a part of "the Davis farm" in this county, which was divided, and the brothers located on adjoining farms, where they have since lived. Francis Haulin has been a lifelong farmer, and has passed over eighty-two years of a most industrious life. As a result he has accumulated a valuable property and is an extensive landowner of Hanover township. On July 6, 1890, Mrs. Haulin passed away and was buried in Tucker's Church cemetery. For many years he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he has held numerous offices. In politics he has always voted with the Democratic party. Notwithstanding his advanced age Mr. Haulin is comparatively a vigorous and well-preserved man.

JOHNSON LEE GENEALOGY.

CHARLES E. BEACH (deceased) was born in East Bloomfield, N. Y., January 31, 1819, a son of Chauncey, who was a son of Chauncey, who was a son of Amos, who was a son of John, who was a son of John, who was a son of Thomas, a native of England.

In 1639 there came from England three brothers—Richard, John and Thomas—who settled in New Haven, Conn., where Thomas, in 1651, married Sarah, daughter of Richard Platt, and of their children one son, John, was born October 19, 1655, and died in 1709. John Beach had one son, also named John, born October 15, 1690, in Wallingford, Conn., who in 1738 moved to Goshen, same State, where he died May 9, 1773. On August 8, 1715, he was married to Sarah Taylor, who died, leaving one son, Barney, and John Beach then married, February 22, 1717, Mary Roys, to which union one son, Amos, was born January 28, 1724. Amos Beach married, December 24, 1746, Mary Rich, and their son Chauncey was born in Goshen, Conn., November 11, 1748, and became the grandfather of the subject of this sketch.

Chauncey Beach received his education in his native town, and was reared to the milling business, which he followed many years. He remained in Goshen until 1801, when he removed to West Bloomfield, N. Y., where he died May 13, 1825, a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. In politics he was a Federalist originally, and during the later years of his life a Whig. On December 24, 1772, he married Catherine Alvord, who was born November 21, 1750, and the following record of their family of children gives the names and dates of birth: Erastus, June 3, 1775; Olive, May 5, 1777; Lucy, October 6, 1778; Ambrose, August 14, 1780; Abram, May 12, 1782; Elisha, June 23, 1783; Theron, July 9, 1785; Catherine, June 29, 1787; Chauncey, May 5, 1789, and Nathaniel, October 26, 1791.

Chauncey Beach, father of Charles E., was born in Goshen, Conn., where he received the earlier part of his education, and, as will be seen, was about twelve years old when his parents moved with their family to West Bloomfield, N. Y. After leaving school he learned the trade of cabinet maker, but abandoned it to take up that of his father, milling, which, having mastered, he carried on in West Bloomfield until 1836, when he moved to Parma, N. Y., thence to Ohio, to a place now known as Kent. There he remained seven years, at the end of which time he went to Painesville; then after a few years he proceeded to West Cleveland. At the latter place he resided but six months, when he moved to Akron, and thence, after three years, came to Monongahela City, all the time engaged in the milling business until old age compelled him to retire from active work. On August 19, 1813, Mr. Beach married Matilda Eggleston, of West Bloomfield, who became the mother of four children, viz.: Catherine, born August 2, 1814; James W., born October 2, 1816; Charles E., born January 31, 1819, and Cordelia, born August 29, 1821. The mother passed from earth July 21, 1866, the father May 19, 1870. He was a Whig until the change of the party was consummated, when he became a Republican.

Charles E. Beach was educated at the public schools of his native town—proving a deep and diligent student. When a young man he entered his father's mill, and remained there several years. In 1847 the family moved to Monongahela City, Penn., where he and his father bought the flouring mill, but in 1867 sold it, and then, in company with his father, bought an interest in the lumber yard and planing mill in Monongahela City, now owned by Blythe & Co. On account of poor health he sold his interest in 1876, and retired from business. On September 23, 1858, he married Emma Pierce, and the children by that union were Matilda E., M. Edith and Amanda S., of whom the first and last named are deceased. The mother of these children died January 1, 1866, and March 29, 1870. Mr. Beach was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Heslep. One child, Nellie, was born to them. Our subject was a staunch Republican in his political views, and was recognized as a leading and enterprising man in the community. His widow is still a resident of Monongahela City.

Thomas Heslep, father of Mrs. Elizabeth Beach, was born in Chester county, Penn., in 1801, a son of John Heslep, a native of the same county, who married a Miss Grant, and had by her several children, of whom the following names are obtainable: Robert, John, George and Thomas. John Heslep came to Washington county at an early day, and purchased a farm in Carroll township where he died. He was a Whig in politics, and in Church connection a Baptist. Thomas Heslep was reared partly in Washington county, partly in Pittsburgh. He married Margaret McCormick, of Pigeon Creek, and they then settled on a farm in Somerset township, where he died in 1860; his wife is also dead. He had two children, Elizabeth (Mrs. Charles E. Beach) and John. Mr. Heslep was first a Whig, afterward a Republican, and in church connection he was a sound Presbyterian.

DR. W. H. ALEXANDER, a rising young physician of Washington county, is a grandson of Joseph Alexander, whose father, Samuel, was born in Ireland, whence, in 1763, he emigrated to America, locating at Chadd's Ford, Chester Co., Penn. He was married to a Miss Wilson, who bore him three children, and in 1785 they moved to Allegheny county, same State.

He patented 360 acres of land, lying two miles from Bridgeville, Penn., and both he and his wife died on this place.

Joseph Alexander, son of Samuel, was born in 1766, on the home place at Chadd's Ford, Chester Co., Penn., and in 1807 was united in marriage with Elizabeth West. The following year he bought and moved upon 140 acres in North Strabane township, this county, and died there March 23, 1828. The wife and mother passed away in 1869, leaving the following children: Mary (wife of James Mahood), Samuel (married to Mary Van Eman), Elizabeth (Mrs. John Dixon, of Milan, Rock Island Co., Ill.), Joseph W., West, and Susan (wife of William McQuail, a farmer of North Strabane township).

Joseph W. Alexander was born April 5, 1815, on the home place in Canonsburg, and from earliest youth was an earnest, vigorous student. His inclinations and natural ability soon led him to choose the medical profession as his life work. He entered Jefferson College in 1835, taking a full course with the exception of Greek. In 1838 he entered the office of Dr. Leatherland, and there studied medicine, at the same time teaching school. In 1840 he completed a thorough course at Jefferson Medical College, and then began to practice his profession in Eldersville, Washington Co., Penn., thence moving to Hillsboro, where he remained several years. On June 18, 1844, he was united in marriage with Mary Ann, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Morrison) Horner. On August 6, 1861, Dr. Alexander passed the State Medical Examination, and in January, 1862, passed the examination as a surgeon. He was appointed surgeon of the Twenty-sixth P. V. I., serving three years, and after the battle of Fair Oaks was made surgeon of the Eighty-fifth P. V. I., then served in the same capacity with the Fifteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, in the army of the Cumberland, until mustered out June 21, 1865, at Nashville, Tenn. He was physician of the Morganza Reform School for many years, and passed the latter portion of his life in Canonsburg, enjoying an enviable reputation as one of the most distinguished physicians of Washington county. In August, 1885, he lost his wife, who had borne him children as follows: Laura (deceased), Elizabeth (wife of Thomas Yates), Margaret (Mrs. James F. Ray), Joseph H., Lola and William H. Dr. Alexander was originally a Whig, uniting with the Republican party upon its organization; was chairman of the first county convention, and served as a member of the Legislature in 1853. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, serving as elder for many years. The influence of Dr. Alexander will long be felt in the community where much of his life work was accomplished. He passed to rest April 20, 1892.

W. H. Alexander, a son of the eminent physician above mentioned, was born in Canonsburg, Penn. He is a worthy representative of his honored father, whose unfinished work it has become the sacred duty of the young physician to take up. W. H. Alexander entered Jefferson Medical College at the age of twenty two years, and, graduating in 1885, commenced practice with his father in Canonsburg. He is a staunch Republican, working earnestly for the success of his party, and is undoubtedly destined to become as distinguished in his chosen calling as was his father.

JAMES WATSON In recording the names of the prominent and influential citizens of Washington county, our list would be incomplete were to be omitted the name of this, in his lifetime, well-known eminent attorney.

James Watson was born in Canonsburg, Washington Co., Penn., a son of John and Mary (Miller) Watson, both of whom died in Canonsburg. They were the parents of six children, of whom only one survives, a daughter, Mrs. Miller, now living with her son in law, Mr. Haft, in Houstonville, this county. Our subject received his primary education at the common schools of his native town, after which he attended Canonsburg College, from which he graduated. Immediately after graduation he came to the borough of Washington and commenced the study of law in the office of Thomas McKennan, under whose preceptorship he studied until he was admitted to the bar in 1833. Soon afterward, Mr. McKennan being admitted to Congress, Mr. Watson was received into partnership with him in the practice of law, and during his absence our subject had complete charge of the office and business. His entire legal life was at the Washington county bar, and at first his practice was a general one, but later in life he would take no criminal cases. On April 15, 1875, Mr. Watson passed from earth at the age of sixty-six years. He was a member of the United Presbyterian congregation of Washington, and in politics he was a Republican. On January 15, 1835, he was married to Miss Maria Woodbridge Morgan, daughter of George and Elizabeth Aldrich (Thompson) Morgan, and ten children were born to them, viz.: Elizabeth Thompson, living with her widowed mother; Mary Baynton, widow of Rev. Alexander Reed, late of the Presbyterian Church (she resides in Washington, Penn.); George (deceased); Jane Gilman, living in Allegheny; David Thompson, a prominent attorney of Pittsburgh; Matilda, wife of A. G. Happer, in Washington, Penn.; James, an attorney in New York City; William Morgan, partner with his brother, David T., in law business, in Pittsburgh, and two that died in infancy. Mrs.

Watson still resides in Washington. She is a member of the First Presbyterian Church.

George Morgan, father of Mrs. James Watson, was born in 1780 in Princeton, N. J., a son of Col. George Morgan who was married in Philadelphia to Miss Mary Baynton (daughter of a merchant of that city), by whom he had children, John, Ann, George, Thomas and Maria. Col. George Morgan came with his family to Washington county, settling on land in North Strabane township, said land being a portion of what is known as the "Morganza tract." Col. George Morgan died in 1810, his wife surviving him fifteen years, and they were both buried in the family ground at Morganza, and afterward removed to the cemetery at Washington, Penn. Their son George was educated at Princeton (N. J.) College, and came west in 1796, after he had finished his studies. He married Elizabeth A., daughter of David Thompson, of Delaware, in which State the daughter was born, and the young couple then settled on the old farm at Morganza, on which they resided many years. The family of children born to them were as follows: David T. (deceased), Mary B. (deceased wife of Rev. William McCombs), Elizabeth McKennan (deceased wife of Luther Edgerton, of Marietta, Ohio), Nancy Gibbs (widow of William D. Morgan, and now living in Washington, Penn.), Maria Woodbridge (since Mrs. James Watson), George (deceased), Matilda Bowman (first wife of William D. Morgan, of Washington), Dr. William McKennan (deceased), and Lauretta Thompson (residing at Washington). The father died suddenly while on his way home from a visit to Ohio, the mother passing away several years after, in Washington, at the age of seventy years. The family is one of the best known and most highly connected in the county.

MUNSON POST was born in the State of New Jersey. He married and lived in Essex county, where he reared a large family, and thence removed to Washington county, Penn., settling in Morris township about the year 1781. He brought his family and household effects in wagons, and they were several weeks on the way. One incident of their journey has been handed down to the present generation, which is about as follows: They brought two or three cows with them, the boys of the family taking turns driving and herding them. When they camped for the night the cows were milked night and morning, and as they moved on, the jostling of the wagon churned the milk, thus saving the time and labor of churning the milk. Politically Mr. Post was a Democrat, which is largely the characteristic of his descendants. Just what his religious faith was, is not known.

but he is supposed to have been a member of the Church of England.

Jeremiah Post, son of Munson Post, was born in Essex county, N. J., September 10, 1769, and at the age of twelve years came with his father's family to Washington, Penn. He received a limited education, and in January, 1794, was married to Martha, daughter of Dr. Charles Cracraft, and she bore him four children: William, Deborah, Charles and Joseph. For his second wife he married, October 25, 1804, Mary, daughter of Abraham Enlow, who resided in East Finley township, this county, and their children were Martha, Jemima, Martin, Jesse, Luke, Sarah, Mary A., James R. and Phoebe. Mr. Post for a short time after he was married lived on a small farm which he owned near what is now Van Buren, which he sold and then bought the home farm, it being a part of a tract of land called "Content," situated on the headwaters of Ten Mile creek, owned by Dr. Charles Cracraft, where he afterward resided. Politically he was a Democrat; in religious faith he was a Cumberland Presbyterian, and was one of the charter members of the Bethel C. P. Church. He died June 1, 1848, and was buried in the Bethel cemetery; his wife died November 30, 1854, and rests beside him.

William Post, son of Jeremiah Post, was born November 12, 1795, and grew up on the home farm. He married Miss Margaret, daughter of Benjamin Lindley, of Morris township, and they live in different parts of Washington and Greene counties, also in northern Ohio. They reared a large family of children. He was a farmer by occupation at the time of his death, which occurred January 2, 1866, on the farm owned by his son B. L. Post in Donegal township, where he was then living; his remains were buried in the Bethel cemetery near Van Buren. His wife followed him to the grave in March, 1884, and her remains rest by his. Their son B. L. Post, of Donegal township, is an enterprising and successful farmer. Deborah Post grew up on the home farm, and was married to John, son of Luke Enlow, of East Finley township. They lived for many years on the home farm where the Pees brothers now reside, it being his father's farm. They reared a large family, and migrated to southern Illinois. Mr. Enlow was a millwright by occupation, but after they removed he engaged in farming which he carried on successfully as long as he lived. Mrs. Enlow was something over seventy years of age at the time of her death; her remains rest near her western home. Charles Post was brought up on the home farm, and learned the millwright's trade with Charles Cracraft, and worked at same for a number of years. He married Miss Elizabeth Bryant, and then went to Allen county, Ohio, where he purchased a farm, built a mill thereon, and engaged in farming and milling which he carried on until overtaken by the infirmities of age. They reared five children, four of whom are settled near their old home at Spencerville, Allen Co., the fifth being settled in Jasper county, Mo. Mr. Post in politics was a Republican, in religious faith a Methodist Episcopal; he died at his home March 28, 1884. Joseph Post when a young man engaged in mercantile business. He married and lived near Batavia, Ohio, and reared two children: Samuel P. and Mary E., who became the wife of Hon. Darnell, of Van Wert, Ohio. Mr. Post died when comparatively a young man; his widow is at present residing with her daughter at Van Wert, Ohio.

Martha Post became the wife of George England, of East Finley township, and was the mother of two children, Samuel, and Mary A., who became the wife of G. W. Craft, of Morris township. Mrs. England died when about thirty-one years of age. Jemima Post married John, son of Elliott Enlow, and they lived on his father's farm near the Stony Point M. E. church in East Finley township. Their family consisted of four daughters and one son—John M.—an enterprising furniture dealer in Claysville. Mrs. Enlow was an exemplary member of the M. E. Church at Stony Point; she died May 6, 1883, aged seventy-five years, and her body rests beside that of her husband in the Stony Point cemetery. Martin Post was born June 22, 1809, and passed his youth on the home farm in South Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., receiving his education in the common schools. He married Miss Rebecca, daughter of Hugh and Ruth Montgomery, of East Finley township, and they had three children: Sarah M. (deceased), Mary E. and John M. They began life on the home farm where they passed the rest of their days. Mr. Post was a successful farmer, which occupation he followed as long as he lived. He was a great reader, and kept himself informed in most of the leading topics of the day. Politically he was a Democrat; in religious faith he was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; he was one of the charter members of the Bethel C. P. Church. On February 2, 1840, he was ordained ruling elder of the above-named church, and from his ordination until his death he was clerk of the Session—a period of some forty-five years. One of the leading characteristics of his life was his great desire to always be right and do right. He died January 30, 1885, and his body was laid to rest in the Bethel cemetery, by that of his father and mother. After his decease his widow lived on the home farm until her death, and she managed the farm successfully, being a woman of great perseverance and energy. She also was a member of the Bethel C. P. Church. She died February 23, 1892, in her seventy first year, and was buried beside her husband. Their daughter Mary E. resides on the home farm. John M. is a prominent farmer and business man of East Finley township, and is a justice of the peace in said township. Jesse Post was born December 2, 1811; he married Margaret Dickerson, of Morris township, and after living for a number of years in East Finley township, at what is known as Post's Mill, he removed to Washington county, Ohio, and purchased a farm near Beverly, where he engaged in farming. They had no children. He died July 11, 1879; his widow is still living. Luke Post was born August 13, 1843. He married Martha McKoy, of East Finley township; was a farmer by occupation; in politics a Democrat, and in religious faith a Cumberland Presbyterian. He died October 29, 1875, and was buried in the Stony Point cemetery; his wife is still living, and is now the widow of Richard Mounts, of Donegal township. Sarah Post died when about twenty one years of age, unmarried; Mary Ann became the wife of John Finley, of East Finley township, and was the mother of seven children, namely: Jeremiah P., Sarah J., James M., John A., Phoebe M. (deceased), Robert C. and William B. The parents lived in East Finley township. The mother was truly a Christian woman, and as to her good qualities her neighbors could testify. Her kindness has relieved many of the hungry poor of her community. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church of Claysville. She died December 8, 1877, and her body rests in the Claysville cemetery. James R. Post died in infancy. Phoebe Post was born September 5, 1823, and became the wife of Cyrus Sprowls, of East Finley township. They began life on the old home farm now owned by Mrs. Simeon Sprowls, and they had three children, two of whom are living: Jesse P. and Mary A. Mrs. Sprowls was an exemplary member of the Bethel C. P. Church. She died July 31, 1849, and was buried in the Stony Point cemetery. Her husband lived many years after her decease. Their son, J. P., is a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, now at Salem, Ill.; Mary A. is the wife of Jacob Rockey, of Burnsville, this county.

A M. TODD, a prominent attorney at law in Washington, was born September 23, 1842, at Jacksonville, Morgan Co., Ill., a son of Rev. Andrew Todd, who was a native of Flemingsburg, Ky. The grandfather of our subject, who was also a Kentuckian, married there, and had a numerous family.

Rev. Andrew Todd, father of the subject of these lines, received his primary education at the public schools of his neighborhood, which was supplemented with a course of study at Washington College and at Jefferson College in this county, graduating from the latter in 1817. He then entered Princeton Theological Seminary, where he graduated, after which he resided for a time in Flemingsburg, Ky., and finally moved to Jacksonville, Ill., where he passed the rest of his days, dying at Monticello, Fla., September 2, 1850. Mr. Todd was married to Catherine, daughter of John and Catherine (Cunningham) Wilson, the former a native of Ireland, the latter of Scotland. Mr. Wilson, who was by trade a cabinet maker, came to Washington county at an early day and made a permanent settlement. The children born to Rev. Andrew and Catherine (Wilson) Todd were Arabella (Mrs. Rev. Joseph Wanh) and A. M. In politics Mr. Todd was a Whig.

A. M. Todd attended the public schools of his native town, and at the age of fourteen entered Washington College, this county, where he graduated in 1861. On completing his literary studies he entered the law office of David S. Wilson, in Washington, where he remained until 1868, when he was admitted to the bar of Washington county. Mr. Todd was married in 1874 to Annie, daughter of Joseph Mason, a native of Steubenville, Ohio. To them were born two children, Catharine, who died in infancy, and Elizabeth M. In politics Mr. Todd is a Republican, prominent in the party. At the formation of the Bar Association of Washington county in September, 1892, he was unanimously chosen president of that body.

MICHAEL G. KUNTZ, who, like his brother James W., is one of the oldest and most respected residents of Washington borough, first saw the light of day February 11, 1820, in an old log house which stood on a piece of land that has been in the possession of the family for a great many years.

His grandfather, Michael Kuntz, a laborer by occupation, came, unaccompanied, in 1788, from Lancaster county to Washington county, and bought land where now stands Brady's jewelry store, in Washington. Here he built a cabin, but on account of the Indians, his family did not come out until May, 1790. Michael Kuntz revisited Lancaster county, but returned and died here in 1793 (he was a Freemason of high standing). His widow, who afterward married Joseph Price, survived him until about the year 1835, when she was called from earth at the advanced age of ninety-three years. She was his second wife, and there is a record of two children by his first marriage, John and an older brother, who was a carpenter. To his second union four children were born, of whom we find the names of George H., Jacob, Sophia (Mrs. George Byrker, formerly of Washington) and also another daughter, a Mrs.

Reddick, all now passed away. They came over the mountains on pack horses, across which were thrown saddle-bags, made of homemade linen, and when the little boys were tired walking they were placed in the pockets of these saddle-bags.

George H. Kuntz, born in Lancaster county, Penn., January 25, 1785, was about six years old when brought to Washington. Here he lived at the same place over fourscore years, dying July 18, 1870. He was a hatter by trade, and in 1810 opened a factory at Washington, where hats were made by hand. This business he continued until 1844, when he retired. In 1818 he married Elizabeth, daughter of James Wisbey, of Washington, and seven children were born to them: Michael and James W., both at Washington; one that died in infancy; Brady, a physician, who died at Washington, March 26, 1863; Sophia, who married Charles Hayes, and died at Washington in 1854; Philip, who also died at Washington, December 18, 1873, and Stephen, who died in April, 1891, at the age of fifty six years. The father was called from earth July 18, 1870, at the age of eighty-six years (he was a Jacksonian Democrat, and for a time served as borough treasurer; was a Freemason, having been initiated in 1824); the mother died April 21, 1884, when eighty-four years old.

Michael G. Kuntz received his education at the public schools of his native place, remaining under the paternal roof until he was eighteen years of age, when he proceeded to Wheeling, W. Va., in order to learn the cabinet making trade. On completing his apprenticeship, he returned to Washington, where for a time he worked for Thomas Bryson, and at journey work, until 1844, when he opened a shop in Washington for his own account. This he conducted until April, 1856, when he embarked in the gents' furnishing business, which he has since continued, having been located at his present stand over twenty eight years. On October 16, 1844, Mr. Kuntz was married to Miss Eliza Jane, daughter of John Ruth, who came to Washington from Maryland at an early day, dying here. This union has been blessed with six children, viz.: George B., in his father's store; Mary Jane, married to Robert McBrury, and now keeping house for her father; James Jr., in the real-estate business at Washington; Elizabeth, wife of John M. Morrow, of Washington, and John R., a drug gist of Washington. The mother died April 19, 1886, at the age of sixty-three years. Mr. Kuntz has been a lifelong Democrat, and has not failed to poll his vote for fifty years, his first Presidential vote being cast in the fall of 1814, when he had to walk sixteen miles for that purpose. He joined the L. O. O. F. at Washington, and in February, 1813, became a charter member of Lodge No. 51. His present home is on South Main street, where he has resided for the last sixteen years.

CHARLES B. WOOD, M. D., a prominent physician and surgeon of Monongahela, is a son of Samuel A. Wood, a native of Virginia, whose family were of English birth. Samuel A. Wood was married to Lucy M. Curl, of Virginia, whose mother was a relative of Chief-justice Gibson, of Pennsylvania.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Wood were: Joshua G., an attorney of Topeka, Kans.; Thomas S., who died in 1892, was principal of one of the Allegheny schools; Louis M., an architect of Denver, Colo.; Charles B., whose name opens this sketch; Mary G., living in Brownsville, Penn., and Lucy, deceased. The parents are now living in Brownsville, Fayette county, retired from active business. Both are members of the Presbyterian Church.

Charles B. Wood was born at Brownsville, Fayette county, Penn., where he passed his youth. He attended Oberlin College for four years, then read medicine with Dr. W. S. Duncan, of Brownsville, and completed his studies at the University of Pennsylvania, from which he graduated in 1876. He practiced at Monongahela for ten years, then attended the Polyclinic of New York, and in 1889 took a course in special studies at the Polyclinic Hospital and Wills Eye Hospital, Philadelphia. In 1887 he married Carrie, daughter of Hon. George V. Lawrence, of Monongahela. One son, Lawrence, blessed their union. Dr. Wood has given special study to the eye and ear, but is a general practitioner, and since 1881 has been surgeon for the Pennsylvania Railroad. He is what every true physician must be, enthusiastically devoted to his calling. His reputation is not confined to this domain, however, for Dr. Wood is equally a favorite in social and business circles, where his original ideas and store of information are ever fully appreciated. In politics he is a Republican, "born and bred," and has served as a member of the school board of Monongahela. He is a member of the American Medical Association; Pennsylvania State Medical Society; National Association of Railway Surgeons; and Washington County Medical Society.

SQUIRE HENRY B. McLEAN, a well-known, popular and successful citizen of this county, was born in Fayette county, Penn., May 19, 1822. The McLean family came to Fayette county in an early day, where the grandparents died many years ago. Alexander, a brother of John McLean, the grandfather, served his county and party as register and recorder for many years. The grandparents had a family of seven children, all of whom are now deceased.

John McLean, father of subject, was born in 1771. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, serving as captain of a company from Fayette county.

He was a surveyor and farmer by profession, and in early life was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of John Jackson, of Washington county, Penn. The family finally settled on a farm in Fayette county, where Mr. McLean died in 1831, at the age of sixty years. His widow afterward became the wife of John Gattenby, of Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn. She died in 1872, having borne to her first husband a family of eleven children: James, Samuel, John, William, Robert, Henry B., Clarissa, Helen, Sarah, Mary Ann and Margaret, of whom John, Mary Ann and Henry B. survive. A few moved West, and they were widely scattered, our subject being the only one who settled in Washington county.

Henry B. McLean attended the log cabin school of the day, the walls of which were decorated with pegs, whereon were placed whips of all sizes, tending to strike terror into the juvenile heart. Sometimes a stick, happening to be more convenient to the hand of the irate pedagogue, was thrown at the head of the offending urchin. He resided on the farm until eighteen years of age, when he began life for himself in Washington county, first learning the carpenter's trade of James Rogers (deceased) and a brother in law. After serving a three years' apprenticeship, he followed his trade ten years, beginning work at 4 o'clock in the morning and closing at 8 in the evening, receiving in payment the munificent salary of $1 per day. On May 19, 1847, Mr. McLean married Mary Ann, daughter of Samuel Rogers, who came from Maryland in 1820, and died on Squire McLean's farm a few years ago, at the age of sixty eight years, the mother having passed away some years before. In 1852 our subject bought the farm he now owns, upon which an old log house was then standing. By hard work he continued to improve this home until a comfortable income was secured, and in 1867 erected a dwelling house. While working on this building, he fell from a high scaffolding, striking his head on a stone, and crushing his ribs. He was senseless for over a week, and has never fully recovered from the terrible accident. Squire McLean has attained the prominent position he now occupies in Washington county by years of untiring industry, and deserves the most sincere and hearty commendation. His marriage has been blessed by one daughter, Sarah Ellen (Mrs. J. Y. Scott, of Washington, Penn.). In politics he was a Democrat until 1856, when he became a Republican. He has served in all the township offices, also filling the position of county commissioner for one term, and has acted as justice of the peace for fifteen years, being especially fitted for the latter office, for he has always been a peacemaker. Mr. and Mrs. McLean are members of the M. E. Church. She has a brother, John A., living in Baltimore, Maryland.

A C. SAMPSON (deceased) was born February 15, 1828, in Allegheny county, Penn., near McKeesport, a son of Thomas and Anna (Coon) Sampson, the former of whom, a native of Ireland, came to America at an early day. Their children were Mary (Mrs. Oliver Evans), A. C., Harvey, Margaret, William, John and Letitia. Thomas Sampson was a farmer and manufacturer of sickles, and also conducted a flouring mill. He was a zealous member of the Long Run Presbyterian Church.

A. C. Sampson received a liberal education at the public schools in the vicinity of his birthplace, proving an apt and diligent pupil. In his early manhood he embarked in the insurance business, which he followed with marked success during his lifetime, being general agent for Western Pennsylvania Co. He was three times married: first to Margaret Williams, then to Fannie Moore, and lastly to Letitia S., daughter of James Manown, of whom special mention will presently be made. The children by the first wife were Nancy, and one that died in infancy; by the second, two that died in infancy; and by the third, five children, viz.: Anna K. (deceased wife of Dr. Boyd, also deceased), Sarah M., Letitia S. (who married Edwin Brubaker, and died, leaving one son, Henry S. Brubaker), A. C. and Harriet L. The father of these children died May 19, 1872. After his first marriage, he came, in 1853, to Monongahela City to reside. Mr. Sampson was a progressive citizen, a typical self made man, than whom none in the county enjoyed higher respect and esteem. He was the first president of the People's Savings Bank, Monongahela City, and was one of the active, solid business men of the place. Politically he was a working member of the Republican party; socially a F. & A. M., he held a high degree in the fraternity; in religion he was a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church.

James Manown, father of Mrs. A. C. Sampson, was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1781. His father, Richard Manown, a native of the same county, married a Miss Smith, who bore him children as follows: James, William, John, Richard and Elizabeth (Mrs. Robert Bailie). The family came to America in 1798, the voyage occupying fourteen weeks, and from New York, where they landed, they proceeded to western Pennsylvania, making a settlement near Round Hill Church, in Westmoreland county, where they followed farming. They were members of the Episcopal Church. James Manown, was, as will be seen, seventeen years old when he came with his parents to America. He had been well educated in his native land, and on his arrival in the New World he learned the trade of carpenter and builder which he followed for some years. On December 6, 1808, he married Mrs. Cassandra Elliott, a daughter of David Devore, and the widow of George Elliott, by whom she had two children: Burnside and Patience (Mrs. Benjamin Davis). David Devore (the grandfather of Mrs. Letitia Manown Sampson) came from New Jersey in 1787, with his wife Elizabeth Harvey. He and his brother, Moses Devore, purchased, in 1788, 250 acres of land, lying opposite Monongahela City, which land was then in Westmoreland county, now Forward township, Allegheny county, paying 50 cents per acre with interest from March 1, 1771, agreeably to an act passed by the Assembly in 1784. David Devore was granted license to ferry from his home on this property to the mouth of Pigeon creek, afterward known as Parkison's ferry. He died in 1789, leaving a widow and one child, Cassandra. His widow some years afterward married Major Scott, and to her was born one son, William. After the death of Mr. Scott his widow made her home with this son at Vincennes, Ind., where she died in 1820. Cassandra Devore married George Elliott, who was drowned off the ferry while trying to rescue his son Burnside. James Manown married Mrs. George Elliott, and resided on the farm near the ferry which James Manown bought from Moses Devore. The ferry belonging to his wife, James Manown afterward bought at sheriff sale the Parkison interest in land and ferry, and carried on the ferry until the Williamsport bridge was built in 1836. On this same farm now live James Manown's oldest son, Franklin, with his two sisters, Mrs. Harriet Moore and Sarah Manown, also James Moore, son of Mrs. H. Moore. James Manown died May 21, 1873, his wife having preceded him to the grave in 1860. They were the parents of the following named children: Eliza (Mrs. Asher Van Kirk), Franklin, Nancy (Mrs. John Thickield), Cassandra (Mrs. Alfred Thickield), James (a physician, now of Kingwood, W. Va., married to a Miss Armstrong), Harriet (Mrs. James Moore), Sarah, and Letitia S. (Mrs. A. C. Sampson). Mr. Manown was an influential Democrat and a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. He was a remarkably enterprising man, one whose influence for good was felt in the community, and he took a deep interest in educational and religious matters. For several years he served as a justice of the peace.

HON. JOHN A. McILVAINE, president judge of the courts of Washington county, composing the Twenty-seventh Judicial District of Pennsylvania, was born in Somerset township, said county, April 13, 1843, a son of William and Matilda McIlvaine. His paternal grandfather was Greer McIlvaine, who removed to Somerset township from the eastern part of the State in 1788 or 1789.

The early education of the subject of this memoir was obtained in the common schools of his township, and September 19, 1860, he entered the junior preparatory department of Jefferson College, at Canonsburg; but, by doing double duty, and being aided by a fine natural ability, he was admitted to the Freshman class of the college at the beginning of the fall term of 1861. Graduating in 1865, he was awarded the second honor of his class (consisting of thirty-six members), and delivered the Latin salutatory on commencement day. The class of 1865 was the last class graduated at Jefferson College before its union with Washington College, forming thereafter Washington and Jefferson College, at Washington, Penn.

Immediately after graduation Mr. McIlvaine entered as a law student with Hon. Boyd Crumrine, at Washington, Penn., and was admitted to the bar at August term, 1867. For two years after his admission he was engaged as a clerk in the office of the county treasurer, and then went to Kansas, locating at Wichita. While at that place he held the office of clerk of the district court for one year. In July, 1872, he was called home by the illness of his father, and, a favorable opportunity offering, he soon afterward opened a law office in Washington, Penn. During the years 1872 and 1873 he served as secretary of the Republican County Vigilance Committee. Becoming a candidate himself, in 1874 he was elected district attorney for Washington county for the usual term of three years, and at the end of this term was re-elected for a second term. Upon retiring from that office, at the end of his six years' continuous service, he received most favorable commendation from the public press for the manner in which he had discharged the duties of his office. One of the leading papers of his county, of opposite politics, said of him: "Mr. McIlvaine has been the chosen officer to represent the people in all criminal prosecutions in this county for the past six years, and we but echo the sentiment of all conversant with the facts when we say that he has discharged the trust with great ability and fairness. He is a hard worker, and always had a knowledge of the facts, and was fully prepared to present them in a methodical and convincing way. Although a vigorous prosecutor, he was fair; and no defendant had just cause to complain of any undue advantage having been taken of him."

During his term of office as district attorney, Mr. McIlvaine formed a partnership in professional business with Mr. M. L. A. McCracken, and the legal business of the firm became large and lucrative. This partnership continued until 1886, when on November 4, of that year, Mr. McIlvaine was elected president judge of the Twenty-seventh Judicial District, for a term of ten years. On account of the development of his native county in the production of oil and natural gas, his term of office as judge, up to the date of this writing, has had a large and varied increase in the amount and character of the legal business to be transacted; but it is the opinion common to all that the Judge has been equal to the demand made upon his ability and strength, and not only has the business been promptly transacted, but transacted in such a way as to be very satisfactory to both lawyers and clients. The cases in which his rulings and decisions have been reversed in the supreme court have been comparatively few in number.

On December 17, 1871, Judge Melvaine married Miss Ada C. Shaw, of Philadelphia. He served in the National Guard of Pennsylvania, as adjutant of the Tenth Regiment for two years. He is a ruling elder in the Second Presbyterian Church. He has a beautiful and pleasant home in East Washington, with every comfort and convenience for himself and wife, about him, save one—the presence of children. He is free from all ostentations of pride, is genial and affable in his manner, and is always ready to bestow a favor, to speak a pleasant word, and to do a kind act.

RITTENHOUSE CRISS was born September 17, 1817. He was a son of Jacob Criss, whose father, John Criss, emigrated from Germany and settled on a tract of land containing 349 acres called "Hermitage," situated on Harmon's creek, in Washington Co., Penn., at what is now Haulin Station, which became his permanent home. He had a family of six sons: William, Jacob, Henry, John, Nicholas, and George, also a daughter Sarah, who became the wife of Samuel Wright. The father of these passed away at an advanced age. He was one of the first pioneers, and a highly respected citizen. He was buried in the Bethel M. E. Churchyard.

Jacob Criss, son of John, was born May 15, 1778, and on November 25, 1799, was married to Hannah Rittenhouse, who was born April 6, 1781. Thirteen children were born to this union, all of whom (except one) grew to manhood and womanhood and married. Eight of these children were sons and five daughters. After his marriage Mr. Criss bought and settled on a part of the home farm which his father had owned. This farm is now owned by the heirs of his son, Rittenhouse Criss. He died in 1845 aged about sixty-eight years, and was buried beside his wife in the Bethel graveyard. Of the thirteen children of Jacob Criss, but one is living at the date of this writing, February, 1893, the youngest son, Mr. Jacob Criss, of Colliers, W. Va., aged about seventy-three.

Rittenhouse Criss, seventh son of Jacob and Hannah (Rittenhouse) Criss, was born on the home farm, and passed his youth in agricultural pursuits. In 1844 he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Fink, who became the mother of four children, two sons and two daughters. In 1853 the mother and three youngest children were stricken down with typhoid dysentery and died. The eldest and only remaining child grew to womanhood, and married John D. Robison. She died two years afterward, aged nineteen years. Mr. Criss afterward married Miss Eliza J. Stewart (a cousin of his first wife), by whom he had eight children, namely: Stewart W., Elmore R., both of Colliers, W. Va.; Charles L., of Pittsburgh, Penn.; Robert W., of Colliers, and Nicholas R., Mary M., Anna R. and Hallie B., who reside with their mother on the home farm. The father was long a member of the Methodist Protestant Church of Eldersville. He died suddenly of heart trouble, December 4, 1882, in the sixty-fifth year of his age, and was buried in the Eldersville cemetery. Mr. Criss always lived on the farm on which he was born.

Eliza J. Criss, widow of Rittenhouse Criss, was born in Brooke county, W. Va., August 10, 1835. She was a daughter of Robert Stewart, whose father, Samuel Stewart, emigrated from Scotland and located on Robison's run, Washington Co., Penn., and there was united in marriage to Elizabeth McCarty, a lady of Irish ancestry. Of the children born to them six lived to maturity, namely: Charles, George, John, Robert, Sarah and Mary, all now deceased, leaving numerous descendants scattered through different parts of Ohio and Pennsylvania. Robert Stewart was born September 10, 1810, and received his education in the common schools which he improved by a course of general reading. He was married to Miss Margaret Wilson, a resident of Washington county, born in November, 1812. Of the eight children born to them, seven are living, Mrs. Criss being the eldest. Robert Stewart died in September, 1876, his wife in 1855.

MRS. AGNES MILLER. Of the eminent families in Washington county the name of Miller has for many years represented a race noted for patriotism, energy and intelligence.

In 1784 or 1785 James Miller emigrated from his home in County Tyrone, Ireland, to Chester county, Penn. A few years later he removed to Washington county, then a wilderness, and took out patents for over one thousand acres of land, embracing that now owned by his descendants John, James and Andrew Miller, of Mt. Pleasant and Chartiers townships. In 1811 Thomas Miller followed his brother to this country, bringing with him his family, consisting of his wife, Margaret, and their children—two sons, three daughters and one daughter-in-law, viz.: Thomas, Andrew (married), Margaret (who married a cousin, John Miller), Sarah (married to Thomas, a brother of John Miller), and Mary, who remained unmarried. In March, 1812, Thomas Miller bought the tract of land named in its patent "Peace and Plenty."

This farm, which became the Miller homestead, was inherited by Thomas Miller, Jr., who was in his twenty fourth year when he came to America. He married, after coming to America, his cousin, Margaret Miller, who died within a year. His second wife was Elizabeth Brown, who died, leaving him one daughter, Margaret (now Mrs. James K. Hamilton, of Brownstown, Ind.). His third choice was Catherine Shaw, who came to this country with her family in 1818 from County Donegal, Ireland. She bore him seven children: Thomas, Elizabeth, Sarah and Jane (twins), Mary (who married Rev. I. N. White, of Fairview, Ohio), Catherine and John Monteith. All are now deceased, except Elizabeth, who now lives in Avalon, Allegheny Co., Penn. (She had been a most devoted daughter to her parents in their old age.) Thomas Miller devoted himself to farming and sheep raising, making a signal success in that business. He was a devoted Freemason, and in politics was a Democrat, stumping the county for Polk's election. He was a member of the old Seceder Church, in Mount Pleasant township. He died December 23, 1877, in his ninety-second year. He divided his estate among his children.

John M. Miller was born March 18, 1842. At the age of fourteen years he was sent to Elder's Ridge Academy, then to Jefferson College, Canonsburg, from which he was graduated in 1861. He then entered his name as a law student in Philadelphia, but was obliged to return home and take charge of the old homestead. On September 13, 1866, he was married to Miss Agnes White, daughter of W. S. White, now of Canonsburg. Of their children, five—three sons and two daughters—are living.

Mr. Miller's prosperous career as a farmer is well known among his fellow-Pennsylvanians, among whom his position as a prominent stock raiser was well established. He enjoyed a national reputation as a breeder of North Devon cattle. At the time of his death he was president of the American Devon Cattle Club; vice president of the Spanish Merino Sheep Breeders' Association; a member of the State Board of Agriculture, and a member of the Western Pennsylvania Agricultural Association. He was a farmer who loved his vocation and his home, improving not only the land but the stock buildings and methods of farming. In other business pursuits he was equally successful, his enterprising spirit prompting him to look beyond the immediate profit of a transaction, and to estimate the general advantages to be obtained therefrom. He was a man of the strictest integrity, doing business only upon an honorable basis, which fact, combined with his ability and good judgment, brought him deserved success and made him a recognized authority in business matters. Politically, he was a Democrat, but, though interested in public questions, was averse to political preferment. He served for many years as justice of the peace, and in other township offices. He was deeply interested in the public schools, spending much of his time in planning for their improvement.

On the morning of May 14, 1888, he was stricken with apoplexy, and at one o'clock of the same day he passed away, seemingly without any pain. Mr. Miller was possessed of a fine appearance and of a hearty, genial manner, which, with his generous disposition, won him friends innumerable. His heart and hand were ever open to the cry of suffering, and, his sympathies aroused, he gave with a liberality not warranted by his resources. In brief, when he was laid to rest, the entire community, no less than his kindred and intimate friends, mourned the loss of a public benefactor, a true Christian and an upright, honorable business man.

Mrs. Miller still retains the old farm in Mount Pleasant township, but in September, 1890, came to her present home in Washington borough, in order to give her children better educational advantages.

JOHAN AIKEN. Joseph Aiken, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, came to this country from Coleraine, County Londonderry, Ireland, near the beginning of the present century. He was a Scotch-Irish Presbyterian, his ancestry having been driven over from Scotland at the time of the persecution.

Four brothers came, first stopping in Adams county, Penn.; then one settled and died in Lawrence county, Penn., another removed to Harrison county, Ohio, and two remained in Washington county, Penn., one in the northern part and Joseph in Canton township. The one last named was a linen weaver. He died in 1843, and was buried in North Buffalo churchyard. He had ten children, of whom William was the eighth. William learned the tailor's trade with Charles Hawkins in Washington, Penn., whom he served as an apprentice from the age of fourteen until he was twenty-one. He started in business first at West Liberty, W. Va., but soon moved to Short creek, Jefferson county, Ohio, where he remained many years. He is still living in a warm, heartsome old age, on his farm at Coolville, Ohio. He first married Nancy Daugherty—the eldest of twenty-one children—at West Middletown, Penn., in 1813; and several years after her death became the husband of Maggie Stollar, whose father belonged to the family of that name in West Finley township, in this county.

John Aiken, the eldest of twelve children of William, was born in West Liberty, W. Va., February 7, 1814. When he was a few weeks old the family moved to McKee's Factory, Jefferson county, Ohio. After he attained sufficient age he worked at farming during the summer and attended school in the winter, until August, 1862, when, at the age of eighteen, he enlisted in the Union Army, in Company D, One Hundred and Twenty-Sixth O. V. I. During the first nine months he served at Cumberland, Md., and Martinsburg, W. Va., when the regiment became a part of the Third Corps, Army of the Potomac, and later of the Sixth Corps. He served as private, corporal and sergeant. On September 18, 1861, when he was serving in this regiment under Gen. Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley, he received from the War Department a commission as first lieutenant in the Twenty-Ninth U. S. C. T., with an order to report for duty in the Army of the Potomac. He remained, however, with the old regiment for several days, and participated in the battles of Opequan, September 19; Flint Hill, September 21; and Fisher's Hill, September 22. On September 28, he started to join his new regiment, into which he was mustered October 10, 1861, at Poplar Grove Church, Virginia. This regiment then formed a part of the Fourth division of the Ninth Corps. It was afterward transferred to the Twenty-fifth Corps, in the Army of the James, in front of Richmond. Ten days after he was mustered in, he was placed in charge of and was the only officer in the company. From that time until he was mustered out in December, 1865, excepting a few days, he was in command of a company in this regiment. In the early part of 1865 he passed the requisite examination, and was recommended for promotion to a captaincy. He was informed that the commission was ordered, but as it was so near the close of the war he never received it, and, consequently, was not mustered. He was in the campaign that ended in, and was present at, General Lee's surrender. He was in twelve battles and many skirmishes, but was never wounded. In January, 1866, Mr. Aiken became a student in Washington and Jefferson College, and remained there two years; at the end of which time he began the study of law with Alexander Wilson, of Washington, Penn., and was admitted to the bar there, December 13, 1869, since which time he has devoted himself exclusively to the practice of his profession. He was elected a ruling elder in the First Presbyterian Church in Washington in February, 1883, and was commissioner to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Omaha, Neb., in 1887, serving as a member of the judicial committee of that body. The chief glory of his civil life, however, is in the relation of teacher in the Sabbath school of the First Presbyterian Church since March, 1866, and from 1874 of the Students' Bible class, whose average annual enrollment has been about fifty. Over one hundred and twenty-five representatives of this class have gone into the Christian ministry. He is a director of the Washington Refining Company, also of the Washington Fire Insurance Company, the First National Bank of Washington, and a member of the Board of Trustees of Washington and Jefferson College.

The subject of this memoir was married to Jennie Blaine in December, 1869, in East Bethlehem township, Washington county, and from this union there have come five children: Mary, attending the Western Female Seminary at Oxford, Ohio; Blaine, a student at Washington and Jefferson College; Rose, also at the Western Female Seminary, at Oxford, Ohio; and Ella and John, in the Union School of Washington. Mrs. Aiken's father, Matthew Blaine, lives at Beallsville, Penn. His father, Leonard Blaine, was one of the old-time Scotch Irish "School Masters." He did good service in the line of his profession for many years in the eastern end of this county.

WILLIAM HOSACK PAXTON, of the firm of Paxton Brothers, a highly respected citizen of Canonsburg, is a descendant of one of the oldest families in Washington county, Penn.

John Paxton, grandfather of subject, was a native of York county, and came to Washington county in 1782. He married Martha Paxton, also a native of York, who, when a child, crossed the mountains on horseback, in coming to Washington county. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Paxton settled in Chartiers township, where they died. The children born of their union were: Thomas (who married Miss Jane Mills), Eliza (who married John Nesbit, and lived on a farm in Chartiers township, where she and her husband died; they had no children), Isaac, Samuel (who married Miss Harsha, by whom he had two sons and one daughter) and John.

John Paxton, father of subject, was born in Canton township, September 10, 1810. He worked on his father's farm until about sixteen years of age, and then went to Washington, Penn., where he learned the saddle and harness trade, which he followed exclusively until 1856, when, in partnership with Matthew Wilson, he engaged in butchering and stock dealing. He was a man of more than ordinary ability and energy, traits of character that manifested themselves at an early date. When a small boy, he, in company with a sister, raised a crop of oats, threshed them with a flail, and carried them on horseback to Washington, where they sold them. Money was scarce in those days and strict economy was practiced, one pair of shoes being made to last a year. Mr. Paxton married Mrs. Elizabeth (Wilson) Power, a widow, and daughter of Henry and Jane (Dill) Wilson. By her first marriage Mrs. Power had two daughters, Margaret and Anna Power. Margaret Power married Thomas Bell. He went to California in 1852, during the gold fever, and died there in 1855. To this union was born one daughter, Anna. Mrs. Bell, after her husband's death, lived with her stepfather's family until her death, which occurred June 6, 1889. Anna Power married David Hart, and they made their home with William and Oliver L. Paxton, in Canonsburg.

Henry and Jane (Dill) Wilson, parents of Mrs. John Paxton, lived on a farm in South Strabane township. They were members of the Presbyterian Church. Four sons and two daughters were born to them, viz.: Dill (a farmer by occupation, who married but had no children), Matthew (who learned the saddle and harness trade with his brother-in-law, John Paxton), Thomas (who graduated from Jefferson College, studied for the ministry, graduated in theology, became a Presbyterian minister, and married Miss Margaret Sanders, of Baltimore, and by her had two sons, Morris and Calvin D., both of whom are Presbyterian ministers), Samuel J. (who graduated from Washington College and at Allegheny Theological Seminary, and was for many years, and at the time of his death, professor of theology in Allegheny Theological Seminary; he had one son and two daughters, viz.: Robert D., a lawyer in Allegheny county, unmarried; Catherine and Jane, both of whom are married), Jane (who married Louis Guthrie a tailor of Moundsville, W. Va.), and Elizabeth (who was first married to Mr. Power and afterward to John Paxton).

Mr. and Mrs. John Paxton were members of the Presbyterian Church. He died December 24, 1890, at the age of eighty-one. Mrs. Paxton was born December 10, 1809, and died October 29, 1858. Their marriage was blessed with seven sons and two daughters, a brief history of whom follows: (1) Wilson N. Paxton graduated from Jefferson College in 1836, went South as a teacher, and after returning to Canonsburg, Penn., read law. He was admitted to the bar of Allegheny county, and practiced his profession in Pittsburgh. In 1862 he enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served three years as second lieutenant. He was taken prisoner at Gettysburg on the second day of the fight, carried to Libby Prison, and remained there and at other prisons twenty months. He was promoted to the captaincy of his company, and is now in the pension office at Washington, D. C. He married Miss Emily J. Newkirk, but has no children. (2) Thomas Paxton is engaged in the butcher and cattle business. He enlisted in Company D, Tenth Regiment, P. R. V. C. Reserves, in April, 1861, and was killed at Spottsylvania, May 9, 1864, being shot through the bowels while doing picket duty. He was never married. (3) Martha Jane Paxton died January 24, 1890, unmarried. (4) John R. Paxton graduated from Jefferson College with honors. At the time of the commencement of the Civil war, in 1861, he was in the junior class at college. He enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Captain Frazier, of this company, was professor in Jefferson College. At the close of the war Mr. Paxton came home and re-entered Jefferson College, where he graduated. He then entered the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny, graduated there, and also at Princeton Theological Seminary. He married Miss Mary L. Lindsay, of Allegheny. His first charge was Churchville, Maryland, from there to Harrisburg, and then to Washington, D. C. He is now minister of the West Presbyterian Church, New York City. His marriage was blessed by four children, of whom one son and one daughter are now living. (5) William Hosack, subject of our sketch. (6) Oliver L. Paxton, who was born March 23, 1848, and educated in the common schools. He is engaged in buying and shipping stock, in partnership with his brother, William Hosack. (7) Mary E. Paxton married Rev. W. F. Conner, a Methodist minister, of Johnstown, Penn. To them have been born two daughters, Mabel and Bessie. (8) Matthew H. Paxton was born in 1854. He entered Jefferson Academy, and completed his education at La Fayette, Penn. He was appointed assistant paymaster of the Government under Maj. Keefer, and traveled over the Northwest and Southwest. He was married in Walla Walla, Wash., and was stationed for a time in Newport, Ky., but disliking to travel, he resigned his position as assistant paymaster, and located in Walla Walla, where he has been elected county assessor and appraiser three times, and where he owns land and is engaged in the real estate business.

William Hosack Paxton, the subject of this biographical sketch, was born March 9, 1846, in Canonsburg. Politically, he is a Republican. Mr. Paxton ranks among the prominent business men of Canonsburg, and is highly respected both in social and commercial circles.

REV. GEORGE McDONALD, the leading character in this sketch, was born February 25, 1825, in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., near West Alexander.

George McDonald, his grandfather, was a native of Scotland, from either Rosshire or Sutherlandshire, and related to Flora McDonald, the heroine of two dynasties and two continents. [Flora McDonald in her youth saved the life of the last of the Stewarts. She afterward emigrated to North Carolina. Her husband and son being made officers of the Highland Regiment raised for the defense of their King, she gave her five sons and son-in-law for the cause, accompanied them to camp, and encouraged them to fight for their King.] George McDonald's ancestors were the Lords of the Isles off the west of Scotland for centuries before these islands became subject to the king of Scotland. Grandfather McDonald was twice married: first to Miss Gordon, and they had one son William. After the death of his first wife, he married Barbara McDonald, the result of which marriage was two sons, John and George. He (grandfather) immigrated to America in the good ship "Janet," in 1773, and located on the Potomac near Mount Vernon. After the close of the war for Independence, he with his family crossed the Alleghanies, and purchased a farm on Chartiers creek, near the present county home. Here his son John was born. There he remained from 1780 to 1792, when he purchased and moved to a farm in East Finley township, south of Claysville, where he passed the remaining years of his life. He was a most devotedly pious man, and active in the building up of the church in his region. A Presbyterian of the regular Scotch type, and among the founders of the Presbyterian Church of West Alexander, he never let worldly affairs interfere with his religious duties. Not only was he punctual in attendance on the means of grace, but watchful for the peace and prosperity of Zion. He was known as the "Scotch singer," and often led the people in the service of song. He died November 25, 1811, and was laid to rest beside his wife, who had preceded him, in the church burial ground at West Alexander.

John McDonald, son of George, was born in 1788, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., but in early life went with his parents to their new home in East Finley township. In his early manhood he married Margaret Byers, of the same county, daughter of Thomas and Margaret (Shannon) Byers, the former of whom was a son of Samuel Byers, who was born in Chester county, Penn., where the connection had resided for generations. Samuel was there married to Jane White, and their children were: William (who settled near Maysville, Ky.), Samuel, James, Thomas Ebenezer (of Mercer county), Andrew, Nancy and Rachel. Samuel Byers, Sr., came west from Chester county in 1777, and located on a farm near Canonsburg. He was a staunch Presbyterian and did good work in planting the church in that region. Thomas, the son, with his wife was most courageous in battling with danger in their new home in East Finley, because of the attacks of Indians. The following are the names of their children: John, a physician; Sarah, wife of Adam Wylie, M. D.; Thomas, a farmer, married to Margaret Hamilton; Jane, wife of David Stewart, Margaret, wife of John McDonald; Anne, wife of Andrew Yates; James, a farmer, married to Mary Stevenson; Nancy, wife of John Brice, a farmer; Rachel, wife of Hugh Wilson, a merchant; Samuel, a farmer, married to Anne Wilson, and William, also a farmer, married to Rebecca McCurdy, and then to Miss Thorn. One son and five sons-in-law were ruling elders in the Presbyterian Church. Thomas Byers was a vigorous farmer and a prominent business man. He was a bright example of Christian piety. In 1813 he was installed an elder in the Presbyterian Church of West Alexander, which office he filled with great acceptance, being called the peacemaker of the Session.

John McDonald after marriage remained four years on the old home farm in East Finley township. At that time he purchased a farm in Donegal township, south of West Alexander, where he passed the remaining years of his life. The following are the names of their children: Thomas (deceased), Barbara (wife of Thomas Frazier, Esq.), Mary S., Eliza J., George, John McC., Thomas, William and Rachel M., all three deceased. Mr. McDonald was always in keeping with the advance of the age, and being a friend of liberal education, gave all his children favorable opportunities for mental culture in the academy at West Alexander. He often filled offices of trust in the community. After the death of his wife in May, 1867, he moved to West Alexander, remaining there till his death, December 11, 1868. But his example in the church shone most conspicuous. He made profession of his faith in early life. In 1828 he was elected an elder, and about the same time Sabbath-school superintendent, both of which offices he filled forty years. Of him his last pastor (Rev. W. H. Lester, Sr., D. D.) writes: "He was a wise counselor and a man in whom the pastor could safely confide; warm-hearted and true in his devotion to the church; a faithful student of the Word of God, and prompt in the discharge of Christian duty, he will long be remembered by the people as a truly devoted and pious man. His Godly life was an ornament to religion. His most special gift was prayer. He loved the Savior and the church; but in prayer he excelled. He would take the congregation in the arms of his faith, and lay them down at the mercy seat for a blessing.

His words were so plain and Scriptural; his tones so simple, childlike and tender, it could only have been the Spirit making intercession. Deeply moved himself, he deeply moved others. He was pre-eminently a man of prayer. He gave his only two surviving sons to the ministry."

Of each of the sons the following is a brief record: Each (of the sons) labored on the farm with their father till entering their life work, as opportunity afforded, he being a vigorous farmer. They both were educated in the West Alexander (Penn.) Academy, in the branches belonging to the college course, and each labored with their father on the farm. Rev. George McDonald, after having completed the classical course pursued in college, at West Alexander Academy, engaged for some years in teaching in the public schools, and afterward taught two and a half years in the academy of West Alexander. During this period he commenced the study of theology under Dr. John McCluskey, his pastor, and completed the course of study under Rev. William H. Lester, D. D., Dr. McCluskey's successor. In April, 1857, he was licensed to preach the Gospel by the Presbytery of Washington. Soon after licensure he received a call to the Presbyterian Church of Beallsville, Ohio, where he continued to labor more than twenty-five years, giving a portion of his time to the churches of Woodfield and Powhatan, Ohio. In the winter of 1883, he received and accepted a call to the church of Upper Ten Mile, Prosperity, Penn., and continued his labors till May 20, 1890. Since his resignation of the pastorate at Ten Mile he resides at West Alexander, and is interested in evangelistic work, not feeling sufficiently vigorous to assume the full responsibility of the pastoral work. Mr. McDonald was married, May 20, 1858, to Martha S. Blayney, of West Virginia. The following is a brief account of their children: Nannie Maggie is the wife of Elmer Ellsworth Miller, a merchant of Beallsville, Ohio (she graduated from Steubenville Female Seminary in 1879); John M., a physician, was a student of Washington and Jefferson (Penn.) College (afterward he attended Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and graduated in April, 1885; he is married to Ada C. Baker, of Barnesville, Ohio, and they now reside in Columbus, Ohio; he is a Presbyterian and a Republican); Rev. Charles H. graduated from Washington and Jefferson College in the class of 1886 (the same year he entered Union Theological Seminary (N. Y.), from which he graduated in 1889, was licensed and ordained in 1889, and went under commission of the Board of Home Missions to Alexandria, S. Dak., where he labored two years. Early in 1892 he received and accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Congregational Church of Woodbridge, N. J. He was married November 21, 1892, to Mary M. Bell, only daughter of James R. and Mary C. Bell, of West Alexander); Mary Elizabeth, the youngest, has attended the Washington Female Seminary (she is still at home with her parents, and is giving considerable attention to music). Like the parents the children all take great delight in music, and are blessed with great power of voice. Mr. McDonald being an instructor of music, led the choir of the old home church for several years.

Of him another friend (Rev. W. H. Lester, Sr.) writes: "Mr. McDonald's ministry was marked by faithfulness in labors, and witnessed precious ingatherings. Thoroughly evangelical in spirit, and Biblical in his pulpit ministrations, his aim has been the conversion of souls and the building up of Christians in the faith. He has also been a self-sacrificing and faithful pastor, thus making full proof of his ministry. Seldom was his seat vacant in the church courts. In each of the congregations to which he ministered, he left the testimonials of a truly devoted minister of the Gospel." And yet another friend thus says of him: "Rev. George McDonald inherited (as did also his wife) the sturdy character of their Scotch and Scotch-Irish ancestry, and in early life received careful religious training. At the age of twenty-one he made profession of his faith in Christ. At nineteen years of age he entered on his classical course in West Alexander Academy, and after completing the full course of study, he was for some time actively engaged in the public school department; later was for two years and a half a teacher in the West Alexander Academy. In 1853 he commenced the study of theology under Rev. John McCluskey, D. D., licensed by the Presbytery of Washington in 1857, and was ordained by the Presbytery of St. Clairsville in April, 1860. Soon after licensure he took charge of the congregation of Beallsville, Ohio, of which he was the installed pastor till April, 1883, giving for most of that period a portion of his time to the congregations of Woodfield and Powhatan as stated supply. In 1883 he was called to the church of Upper Ten Mile, Penn., where he labored more than seven years. He now resides in West Alexander, his native place, with his noble wife, who has always been a source of strength and comfort to him in his work. They were both fine singers, and led the choir of West Alexander Presbyterian Church for a number of years. Their musical talent was valuable to them, especially in the Sabbath-school, where they were always prominent and active, he as superintendent and Bible teacher, and she in charge of the infant department, until the loss of her hearing compelled her in later years to give up the work she so dearly loved. She had peculiar tact for winning and interesting little ones, and was never more at home than when surrounded by her little flock. Her memory will always be green in the hearts of the many she had taught, who will see her no more in this world. Her faithful sowing will cause many, besides her children, to rise up and call her blessed. Mr. McDonald was accustomed to instruct, free, the Sabbath-school and any others who wished, in music, and thus was instrumental in having exceptionally good singing in the school. He was also very successful in training for special exercises, and had much executive ability. Always deliberate, being firm in his convictions and of unalterable purpose, with careful outlook, he seldom failed to accomplish what he undertook.

"His ministry was richly blessed with signals of Divine approval, by several revivals occurring under his pastorate. The influence of his preaching and example was for righteousness, in building up a moral, God-fearing and Sabbath-loving people. Several ministers have gone out from under his pastorate. His labors, particularly in his first field, were arduous and exposing, but were performed cheerfully in honor of Him whom he served. The seed thus faithfully sown will bring forth fruit to be gathered by other reapers. He still takes delight in Evangelistic work, and rejoices in any opportunity to do service for the Master. He has been a faithful and unobtrusive minister of Christ, and is regarded universally, by those who know him, with marked esteem and love."

Rev. John McClusky McDonald, after completing his academic studies, entered the Northwestern Seminary of Chicago, Ill. (now the McCormick Theological Seminary), from which he graduated in April, 1866; was licensed April 13, 1865, by the Presbytery of Chicago; was ordained at Beaver Dam by the Presbytery of Winnebago, June 27, 1866. He has been a home missionary; labored at Winneconne (Wis.), Algona (Iowa), Wayneville (Ill.), Carleton, Belvidere, Hubbell and Hopewell Church (Neb.), and Ulysses and other points in Kansas, the last named being his present field of labor. He has been faithful in sowing the seed, and been cheered by the ingathering of precious fruit. Mr. McDonald was married April 25, 1871, to Janet Percy, of Ogdensburg, N. Y., and they have been blessed with six children: George Arthur, Kenneth Percy, Gilmer Byers, Raymond April, Rosmond May, and J. McClusky (the last named being deceased). Mr. McDonald takes a deep interest in public affairs. In politics he is a Republican, and, like Scotch-Irish generally, he could be nothing else but a Presbyterian.

with sixteen sons, came from the shores of Erin to those of Columbia, and established a new home in Washington county, Penn., where she died. One of the sons, Patrick Miller, bought, in 1810, the first piece of land in Hopewell township, where he carried on farming the remainder of his life, dying in 1830. He was the first superintendent of the Upper Buffalo Presbyterian Sabbath-school. He was married to Margaret Templeton, and they had children as follows: Thomas, of whom mention is made further on; Margaret, wife of Col. McNulty; Hannah, married to James Montford, of Washington county, which family is extinct (James Montford, son of James and Hannah, was captain of the company in which our subject served during the Civil war, and afterward he was appointed assistant assessor of Internal Revenue); Eliza, married to Rev. James Marquis; Mary, who never married, and Matthew all deceased.

Thomas Miller, on leaving school, attended Washington College and Indiana University, graduating from the latter institution in 1831, when he went to Lexington, Ky., where he taught school for a time, and then moved to Missouri, having been persuaded to proceed thither by a prominent Missourian, James S. Rollins, who had been a fellow student of his at both the college and university. Here Mr. Miller founded a school which afterward developed into the University of Missouri, at Columbia, Mo. On account of impaired health he set out on a trip to Mexico, but died on the Plains, and was buried in New Mexico, at Round Mound.

Matthew Miller, father of our subject, was a farmer by occupation, and in 1838 was married to Mary McNulty, by whom he had two children, Julius P., and a daughter that died in infancy. In 1843 the father died at the age of thirty years, and the mother married again, the result of this second union being three children; she died March 23, 1890, aged seventy-six years, and is buried in Washington cemetery.

Julius P. Miller was but four years old when his father was called from earth, and in the following year (1844) he was taken to West Middletown, where he attended the common schools, subsequently taking a course at an academy in West Virginia. In the fall of 1861 he enlisted in Company A, One Hundredth P. V. I., serving three years, chiefly with the Ninth Army Corps. In 1870 he was appointed deputy collector of Internal Revenue, for Washington county, serving until 1872, when, at the State election, he was elected prothonotary of the county, taking the office in January, 1873. He was re-elected in 1875. During his second term in the prothonotary's office, Mr. Miller studied law, and in October, 1879, he was admitted to the bar, since which time he has been successfully practicing his chosen profession in Washington, of which city he has been a resident since 1870. In November, 1861, Mr. Miller was united in marriage with Miss Harriet Hamilton, daughter of Dr. A. C. Hamilton, a practicing physician in the borough of West Middletown, and to this union ten children were born, viz.: Horatio H. (cashier of the First National Bank of Claysville), Mary Emma, Harry M., Julius P., Martha S., Charles F., Anna B. and Ulysses Grant, all living in the county, and two unnamed that died in infancy. In politics Mr. Miller is a staunch Republican.

THOMAS McKEAN, one of the retired successful merchants of the borough of Washington, is a native of the county, having been born September 14, 1820, in Amwell township. The first of the family to come to Washington county was Robert McKeon, father of the above, who was born February 12, 1795, in County Tyrone, Ireland. In 1815 he came to America by way of Canada, landing at Montreal, thence proceeding to Washington, this county, where he lived until 1820, in which year he moved into Amwell township, on a farm, and in 1828 returned to Washington borough. In 1832 he started on a trip to Philadelphia, but died of cholera while on the way. In 1817, soon after coming to Washington county, he married Mrs. Mary McClintock, formerly Mrs. McGowan, who had several children by her first husband, all now deceased. By her second marriage there were four children, viz.: Mary, who was a Presbyterian missionary to the Creek Indians at Tallahassee, Indian Territory, and died there January 21, 1861; Thomas, our subject; Alexander, who died in Washington, Penn., March 27, 1890, and whose family are still living here; and Sarah, who died in infancy. The mother was called from earth March 17, 1867, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years, at the time living with her son Thomas.

Thomas McKean, of whom this sketch chiefly treats, was eight years old when the family came to live in the borough of Washington. He received his education partly at the schools of his native township, and partly in Washington, and learned manufacturing tobacco and cigars, which he carried on, wholesale and retail, for forty-five years, opening out for his own account September 25, 1813, and retiring from same in 1858. His original stand was the room now occupied as the office of the Washington Reporter. At his retirement he was about the only man in Washington who was in business there when he commenced in 1813. On March 14, 1844, Mr. McKean married Fannie Jane, daughter of Samuel Snodgrass, a farmer who came from Lancaster county, Penn., at an early date. He died of cholera at West Alexander, this county, in 1832, and his wife in Washington borough, in 1840. They were the parents of three children, as follows: Fannie Jane; Mary Margaret, now the widow of John V. Wilson, a carpenter of Washington, who died July 2, 1876; and William, who died in March, 1846.

By the marriage of Thomas and Fannie J. McKean, there were ten children, of whom the following is a brief record: Mary Ellen is married to Rev. J. C. McClintock, and lives in Burlington, Iowa; John A. is a physician at Washington, this county; Maria is the wife of Hon. W. J. Davis, of Goshen, Ind.; William is in Grand Rapids, Mich., a traveling salesman for J. V. Farwell & Co., of Chicago; James is married to Jennie D. Ackelson, and lives at Abilene, Kans.; George is teller in Wells, Fargo & Co.'s bank at San Francisco, Cal.; Annie is the wife of Rev. W. P. White, a Presbyterian minister at Germantown, Penn.; Elizabeth is the wife of Homer U. Seaman, jeweler, Pittsburgh, Penn.; Thomas C. is clerk in a gents' furnishing business, Pittsburgh, Penn., and Bernard is an insurance agent at No. 135 Broadway, New York.

Mr. McKean is one of the well-known citizens of Washington. His place of business and home, No. 164 and 166 South Main street, was built by him in 1854, and he has lived on the Square ever since coming to the borough. Politically he is a Republican, and has served as school director six years, and secretary during that time. For twenty-seven years he has been a trustee and treasurer of the Washington Female Seminary. Forty years ago he was a member of the Sons of Temperance, and continued so until they disbanded. Since 1846 he has been a member of the First Presbyterian Church, of which he was trustee for twelve years, and since 1864 has been an elder. For forty years he was secretary and treasurer of the Sunday-school. He has been a director of the First National Bank of Washington for more than thirty years, and is now the vice president of that financial house. Mr. McKean was interested in the establishment of a board of health for his borough, which prompted him, without compensation, to keep a complete record of the deaths in Washington and vicinity, including names, ages and causes of death; commencing June 20, 1850, and up to January 1, 1893, a record of 3,240 deaths has been made by him.

STEPHEN L. BLACHLY, M. D., one of the oldest and most skillful practitioners in Washington county, is descended from a long line of distinguished men, eminent in the profession; but among this galaxy of brilliant medical lights we must look in vain for one whose skill in any case surpassed that of his descendant, the gentleman of whom we write, who is not only an ornament to the modern school of medicine, but a worthy and honored representative of a race of expert physicians.

Dr. Ebenezer (1) Blachly, the first physician in the family, was a son of Aaron and Mary (Dodd) Blachly, and lived in Huntington, Suffolk Co., Long Island. His children were: Elizabeth, Ebenezer (2), Joseph, Benjamin and Daniel, of whom Ebenezer (2), born in 1709, entered his father's profession, and married Hannah Miller, who bore him the following children: Francis, Zopher, Ebenezer (3), Miller, Sarah, Cornelius, Mary and Mary. The son Ebenezer (3), born in 1735, was a surgeon in the Revolution. He married Mary Wickham, and they had twelve children, five of whom were also physicians. He died in 1805, and his son Ebenezer (4), born in 1760, entered the war of the Revolution before he had reached the required age, and took an active part as surgeon throughout the conflict, after which he married Elizabeth Spencer, and reared a family of nine children: Nancy, Ebenezer S., Henry W. (father of subject), Mary J., Juliana, Bayard P., Eliza, Joseph W. and Oliver; with the latter two their mother passed the declining years of her life.

Dr. Henry Wickham Blachly was born in Pater-son, N. J., April 17, 1786. He first studied medicine with his father, finishing in New York City, and finally settled in Washington county, Penn. On January 9, 1806, he married Hannah Loveridge, who bore him twelve children: Ebenezer S., a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, who practiced thirty years in Waynesburgh, Greene Co., Penn. (he was twice married, first time to Martha Hanna, who bore him five children, and after her death he married Elizabeth Allison; but one of his children grew to maturity—Byard Milton Blachly, M. D., who practiced for about thirty years in Waynesburgh, Greene Co., Penn., where his father practiced); Milton Blachly died at the age of sixteen; Eveline Blachly married Dr. William B. Porter (they died leaving three children—two daughters and one son, John H. Porter, who was a physician and died soon after completing his medical studies); Maria J. Blachly married Dr. Luttellus Lindley, of Connellsville, Fayette Co., Penn. (she died leaving one son, Dr. Henry B. Lindley, of Perrysville, Allegheny Co., Penn.); Stephen L. (subject of sketch); Eliza Blachly married John Milton Lindley (he died leaving three children: Byard, a banker and lawyer in Winfield, Iowa; Colin M., a physician in Zollersville, Penn., and Sarah); Oliver B. Blachly married Ellen Cracraft, by whom he had five children: Byron, Henry, Oliver, Mary and Howard (his second wife was Ella Hunt); Joseph Warrin Blachly was a physician who practiced successfully in his native county for a number of years (he was married to Eliza Minton, by whom he had four children: Maria, Ella, Joseph Warrin and Frank, a physician practicing at Clarksville, Penn.); Lucilla Caroline Blachly married T. N. Day, and their living children are: Henry B., Homer (a physician practicing at Avoca, Iowa), and Cora L.; Harriet Newel Blachly married Harvey Lindley, and their children are: Henry B. (who married Sarah Van Kirk), Ann Eliza (married to Sal. Cozad), Oscar, Howard and A. Lincoln; Henry W. Blachly, a physician who practiced for many years at Cayett, Ohio, died in 1889 (his wife was Caroline Cracraft, and they had two children: Mary, married to Dr. Emerick, and Henry W., a lawyer of Van Wert, Ohio); Hannah Louisa Blachly, the youngest of the family, never married, and lives at Sparta, Penn. The father of this family died at the age of sixty-two years, having practiced medicine forty years in Washington county; the mother passed from earth in 1887, on her ninety-seventh birthday, and they are buried at Prosperity.

Stephen L. Blachly, the subject proper of this memoir, was born December 11, 1815, in Sparta, Washington Co., Penn. He read medicine with his father till twenty-two years of age, and on account of the prevalence of smallpox at that time was called upon to begin an active career before his preparatory study was fully completed. He was educated at Washington College, and later received his degree from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. On January 9, 1840, he was united in marriage with Sarah, daughter of Benjamin Lindley, who was of Puritan descent, and to this union were born five children, viz.: two died in infancy; Mary Minerva, who has been twice married, first to Stephen J. Day, and after his decease to S. McVey, of Sparta; Henry Spencer, a druggist in Waynesburgh, Greene county, Penn., and Dr. Oliver L., in Sparta, who married Anna, daughter of Rev. John Sherrard. Mrs. Blachly died November 25, 1857, and July 28, 1859, Dr. Blachly married Maria, daughter of James and Margaret Wade, of Fayette county, Penn. Dr. Blachly has resided in the same place over fifty years, and while engaged in general practice has become a skilled surgeon, and has always had an extensive practice; he has frequently been president of the Washington County Medical Society, of which he is one of the oldest members, and is also censor for the Eighth District of the State Medical Society of Pennsylvania, also a member of the American Medical Association, and the Alumni Association of Jefferson Medical College. He has always had a very extensive practice, and he retired from active life in 1890. Physically he enjoys good health. He is about five feet ten inches in height; weighs 190 pounds; is erect in stature; and has become a very strong man by exercise, and care, though he was not robust when young. His father was about the same height, but weighed 160 pounds. The Doctor never used intoxicating liquor; in his youth he commenced smoking, but gave it up. He has been a member of "Upper Ten Mile" Presbyterian Church fifty eight years, and has been an elder in same thirty five years.

JAMES HERRON was born September 18, 1829, in North Strabane township, this county, and is a son of Joseph Herron, whose grandfather was a native of Ireland, and came with his family in an early day to America.

His son James was born in County Down, Ireland, and came to America in the latter part of the last century, locating in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., on the farm now occupied by his descendants. He was married to Rachel Reed, a resident of Ohio, who bore him children as follows: Charles, John, William, James, Robert, John, Joseph, Thomas and Rachel. Mr. Herron was an active Democrat, and in religion was a member of the Seceder Church.

Joseph Herron was born, January 2, 1797, on his father's farm in North Strabane township, and received a common-school education. On January 3, 1824, he was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of Daniel Hastings, of Somerset township, and the young couple made their permanent home on the old farm, where the following children were born and reared: Rachel, born December 15, 1824; Robert, born September 30, 1826; James, born September 18, 1828; John, born July 24, 1830; Sarah (Mrs. Jonathan L. Peese), born April 22, 1833; Joseph, born December 8, 1834; Margaret A. (Mrs. Robert Munnell), born October 4, 1837; and Elizabeth M. (Mrs. John Herron), born October 6, 1842. In politics Mr. Herron was a Democrat, and served as judge of elections and school director, and was also a lieutenant in the militia. In religious connection he was a member and liberal supporter of the Seceder Church. He died January 25, 1852, and his wife on March 18, 1854. Both are buried in the U. P. cemetery at Pigeon Creek.

James Herron was born on the farm where he now resides, and attended the common schools until almost twenty-one years of age. He then commenced learning the carpenter's trade, which he followed several years in North Strabane and adjoining townships. On June 23, 1865, he was united in marriage with Emma, daughter of John Barr, a native of Ireland, who came to America with his parents when but twelve years of age. He was a son of John Barr, also a native of Ireland, and who was there married to Margaret Dickey, who bore him children as follows: William, John, Robert, Mary (Mrs. Andrew Jackson) and Margaret (Mrs. Robert Patterson). The father of these children immigrated to America in an early day, locating with his family in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., where the remainder of their lives was passed. He was a Democrat in his political preferences, and in religion a member of the Seceder Church.

John Barr passed his youth on the home farm in Somerset township, and was there married to Elizabeth, daughter of James Smith. Their children were John A., James S., Margaret D. (Mrs. James Rankin), Emma (Mrs. James Herron), Sarah J. (Mrs. William Pollock) and William A. In politics Mr. Barr was a Democrat, and served many years as justice of the peace. He was a member and one of the founders of the U. P. Church at Pigeon Creek, and served as an elder for years. He followed agricultural pursuits.

After his marriage Mr. Herron settled on the home place in North Strabane township, where he has followed farming and stock raising. He and his family are members of the U. P. Church at Mt. Prospect. In politics he is a Democrat, and has served as school director and judge of elections. He is an enterprising and popular citizen.

JOSEPH S. HUNTER, a member of one of the oldest and most prominent families of Washington county, Penn., is a grandson of James Hunter, who was born of Irish parents about 1788, in eastern Pennsylvania. On June 21, 1810, James Hunter was united in marriage with Eleanor Garrett, and they reared the following family: Margaret (deceased), born April 12, 1811; Susan (deceased), born October 24, 1814; Elizabeth, born April 13, 1818 (widow of Robert Marshall), living in East Finley township, this county; James J. and William G. Mrs. Hunter died, and on March 29, 1827, Mr. Hunter was married to Sarah Clark, of Buffalo township, this county, who bore him two children: John Clark, born December 24, 1827, and Sarah Ann, born October 6, 1830, both now deceased. This wife also died, and November 2, 1848, Mr. Hunter was married to Jane Welsh, who died in 1888. Soon after his first marriage he located in Buffalo township, Washington county, following farming and distilling until 1839, when he settled on the farm in East Finley township which is now the property of his son, James J. Hunter, where he died in the year 1858.

James J. Hunter was born October 26, 1820, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and came with his father's family to East Finley township, where he began life in 1843, doing farm work for others, and cropping on his father's place. On October 19, 1845, he was married to Jane, daughter of Thomas Hutchisson, of East Finley township, and three children were born to them: Joseph S., born June 24, 1846 (farming in Franklin township); Thomas H., born June 14, 1818 (a farmer of East Finley township); and James C., born June 30, 1852 (a resident of Brilliant, Jefferson Co., Ohio). The mother of these children died in 1853, and on November 13, 1860, Mr. Hunter was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Marshall, and the following children have been born to them: Mary E., born March 27, 1862; Jane A., born September 12, 1863, and Florence M., born July 27, 1865. After his first marriage Mr. Hunter lived in West Finley township, but finally (in 1861) settled in East Finley township, where he now resides. In political relations he is a Republican, and in religion he and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church of East Finley township.

Joseph S. Hunter was born in West Finley township, and remained on the home place until he was twenty eight years of age, obtaining his education at the common schools. On February 11, 1875, he was united in marriage with Mary P., daughter of J. W. Patterson, and to their union were born four children: William W., James H., Jennie A. and Clark P. After their marriage the young couple settled in West Finley township, remaining there four years, when they removed to their present farm, which consists of 200 acres of well improved land. He is a member and liberal supporter of the United Presbyterian Church at Dog Wood Grove. In political life he is a staunch Republican, and is one of the most energetic workers of his party in the township, although he has never accepted political preferment.

JOHAN G. POGUE is one of the few men who can look back upon their past and see no failures to regret, but find that step by step, and year by year, they have risen higher on the ladder of success, until the prime of life has found them on the topmost round, with leisure to pause and take a retrospective view. John G. Pogue is a son of William Pogue, of whose father we only know that he was of Scotch ancestry, and (at the time of the birth of his only son, William,) a resident of Baltimore, Md.

William Pogue was born in 1797, in Baltimore, Md., and in early life learned the trade of a tobacconist. He was well educated and fond of reading. The father dying when William was a small boy, the latter was cared for by his mother, who afterward moved to Buffalo township, Washington county, and purchased a small piece of land about three miles north of Taylorstown. The son followed farming, and also worked a small coal bank located on the place. He was afterward married to Sarah Allison, who was born in 1786, and they had five children: James (who died at the age of forty seven years, in Cadiz, Ohio), Susan (deceased in infancy), John G. (subject of this sketch), William (who died in Canton, Ill., at the age of forty years) and Sarah Ann (who died in Buffalo township, this county). Mr. Pogue followed farming until the death of his wife, which occurred in 1836. He then worked at his trade with George Black, of Washington, Penn., and passed his later years with his children. Politically he was a lifelong Democrat. He died in 1859.

John G. Pogue was born March 28, 1821, in Buffalo township, this county, and when but eight years of age went to live with one Joseph Alexander. With him he remained two years, "doing chores" and attending the common school. In the fall of 1834 he made his home with John C. Hanna, a farmer of Hopewell township, this county, and in 1840 again entered the employ of Mr. Alexander, with whom he remained until 1849. Meanwhile, this industrious youth embraced every opportunity to secure an education. He attended Franklin High School, which was conducted at the home of Major Waterings by W. A. McKee; he also taught school five winters in West Virginia and Pennsylvania. On October 25, 1848, Mr. Pogue was united in marriage with Elizabeth Burt, who was born in August, 1824, a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Dryden) Burt, who were both members of old pioneer families. Mrs. Pogue and a sister, Mrs. Nancy McKee, of Hopewell township, Washington county, are now the only living representatives of the family of ten children in Washington county, the others having settled in different places. Mr. and Mrs. Pogue have had the following children: Sarah Elizabeth (Mrs. John McCammon, of West Finley township), Fannie A. (Mrs. John Atkinson, of Brooke county, W. Va.), Joseph (residing in Wheeling, W. Va.), Mary Jane (who died at the age of twelve years), William (dying at home), Martha (Mrs. Hiram Montgomery, of Donegal township), John J. (dying with his parents), J. Burt and Anna May (both living at home). For three years after his marriage Mr. Pogue lived as a tenant on the farm of J. C. Hanna, in Hopewell township, this county. He then came to Donegal township, and rented a farm, locating about two and a half miles north of West Alexander, where he remained nineteen consecutive years. Several years before leaving this farm he had purchased an adjoining tract of 111 acres upon which he moved in 1863. By energetic toil and close economy, he soon saved enough money to again invest in land, and in 1868 he bought the "Old McKeown" farm, lying just north of his previous purchase. In 1872 he took possession of the latter farm, and has entirely modeled the residence and all the other buildings. He has few equals as an agriculturist, and his success has been enhanced by the invaluable aid of a careful and economical wife. When he was first married, Mr. Pogue owed $150, since which time he has become one of the most successful and prominent farmers of Donegal township. Politically he was an ardent Abolitionist, and took a great interest in the freedom of the negroes. He is now a Republican, and has often held township offices, but has declined to enter in the more active warfare of political life. In religious connection he and his wife are members of the U. P. Church of West Alexander.

JOHAN S. BARR is a leading representative of a well known family of Somerset township, Washington county, and an enterprising, successful and popular citizen of Canonsburg, serving his township and county in many ways, in addition to his usual duties as private citizen.

His grandfather, John Barr, was a native of County Derry, Ireland, born in 1757, and died in 1838. He was married to a Miss Dickey, to whom were born the following children: William, John, Robert, Archie (who died at the age of twelve years), Margaret (wife of Robert Pattison) and Mary (wife of Andrew Jackson). In 1816 Mr. Barr and family emigrated to America, and after a six weeks' voyage landed at Philadelphia, finally coming to Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., where he purchased a farm, making thereon a permanent home, where he died in 1838. He was a member of the Seceder Church of Peters Creek, and on the organization of a new congregation of the same denomination called Pigeon Creek, nearer his home, united with it, serving many years as elder.

William Barr was born, in 1797, in County Derry, Ireland, and his youth was passed in his native land, where he was educated, becoming specially expert as a mathematician. In 1816 he came with his parents to America, and in 1826 was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of Hugh Boyd. Mr. Boyd and family, consisting of five children, came to America in 1824: Robert, Wilson (who preceded the rest of the family five years), Mary, Margaret and Bankhead. Both grandparents were elders in the same church in Ireland, and both elders in the same congregations—Peters Creek and Pigeon Creek—in America. After his marriage William settled on a farm where his life was passed, and children born to him as follows: John S. (of whom a sketch is given below); Hugh and Eliza (Mrs. A. D. Williamson), living near Xenia, Ohio; Margaret (wife of James H. Dickey); William W.; Bankhead Boyd; Mary (married to W. G. Garrett), and Martha Jane (deceased wife of William Berry). William Wilson Barr graduated at Canonsburg in 1856, studied theology at Xenia, Ohio; was called, accepted, and took charge in 1859 of the Eighth United Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, of which he is still pastor; Bankhead enlisted as a soldier, in 1862, in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers; was wounded at the Wilderness, and died at Alexandria, Va., his remains being brought home and interred in Home cemetery. The father of this family was known as one who always acted from principle, and did what he conscientiously thought was right. He was for many years identified with the Seceder Church of Pigeon Creek (now United Presbyterian), in which he was a ruling elder, and for many years led its praise service. He died in 1838, being followed by his life companion in 1876.

John Scott Barr was born January 26, 1827, in Somerset township, this county, passing his early life at home. Receiving but a limited education (such as the winter schools at that time afforded), he has supplemented it by an extensive course of reading. On November 25, 1851 (Thanksgiving day), he embarked on the matrimonial sea in company with Mary, daughter of James Gibson, a well known citizen of Washington county. Two children were born to this union, the first dying in infancy. The mother died March 12, 1855, leaving an infant daughter of three weeks, who was given her mother's name, and is the wife of Rev. J. M. Duncan of the United Presbyterian Church at Richmond, Ohio. On January 26, 1865, John S. Barr was married to Mary S. Pattison, of Indiana, Penn., to whom three children were born, viz.: William Wilson (deceased), Archie John S. (deceased) and Martha Jane (wife of Rev. W. F. Weir, a Presbyterian minister of Toronto, Ohio). After the death of his father, which took place when he was less than twelve years of age, Mr. Barr took the principal management of his father's farm, consisting of 110 acres, one payment to pay on that; but by hard work and economy, and with the aid of a good mother and the gracious favor of Almighty God, was added to the home place over 200 acres more. The careful and attentive habits of his youth have attended his maturer years, and have secured for him a comfortable home. His instinctive uprightness in his dealings with his fellow men, charity for the worthy poor, and generous support of all measures tending to promote the interests of Church and State, mark him as a man worthy of the esteem and confidence in which he is held by his friends and neighbors.

In politics the subject of this sketch was first a Whig, then a Republican, and has held various township offices, serving six terms as school director, and in 1872 was elected commissioner of Washington county, which office he filled very acceptably. In response to Gov. Curtin's call for men to repel Lee's invasion of Maryland, he enlisted in a company at Canonsburg, which became part of the Sixteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and equipped at Harrisburg, carried by rail to Hagerstown and then marched toward Antietam expecting to get to the battle field that evening; but night came on, and they encamped in a nice piece of woods by the roadside, struck their tents and put out pickets. About dusk word came that they would be attacked by Imboden's Rebel cavalry that night; a vote was taken whether they would retreat or stand their ground, and the result was that they should stay. Every gun was loaded, and about 9 o'clock the commissary wagon drove up and a number of shots were fired into it; the mistake was soon discovered, no one was hurt, and no "rebs" came. After Lee's retreat into Virginia, they were disbanded and sent home. In May, 1889, he was appointed a manager of the State Reform School at Morganza, for four years, by Governor Beaver. Here from 300 to 400 boys and about 100 girls are educated and taught some useful trades. In June, 1891, when the Citizens' Bank of Canonsburg was organized, he was elected one of its directors. When sixteen years of age he united with the then Seceder Church of Pigeon Creek (now United Presbyterian) and was always an earnest worker, seeking her peace and prosperity. He was chosen an elder when thirty five years of age, thus holding the place of father and grandfather. In April, 1888, he and his wife and family removed to their residence in Canonsburg, and united with the U. P. Chartiers Church of that town.

WILLIAM B. FLICK ranks among the most progressive citizens of Beallsville, and is a successful agriculturist. His father, Daniel Flick, was of German descent, and his ancestors settled in the Ligonier Valley many years ago.

Daniel Flick was born in 1802, in Fayette county, Penn., and there learned the weaver's trade, becoming one of the first weavers in that locality. He was five times married: In 1822 he married Susanna Brown, who was born September 9, 1803, and settled in Waynesburg, Greene Co., Penn., where he followed hotel business, farming and mercantile pursuits; here Mrs. Flick died, leaving four children, of whom William B. is the only one now living. Daniel Flick next married Nancy Stewart. His third wife was Mrs. Nancy Haldeman, a widow; his fourth was Jane E. Cleaver, and for his fifth wife he married Mrs. Eleanor Freeman, widow of Louis Freeman. He died March 18, 1871, at the age of sixty-eight, on the farm in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., where he had moved in the spring of 1856. For a number of years he operated a keel boat in the transportation of freight between Rice's Landing and Pittsburgh, and was also a wagoner, carrying goods across the mountains from Baltimore to Greene county.

William B. Flick, son of Daniel and Susanna (Brown) Flick, was born June 15, 1830, in Waynesburg, Greene Co., Penn., and began his education at a tender age, being carried by his sister to school when but three years old, in order to save time for the busy mother. On October 10, 1850, he was united in marriage with May Berryhill, a native of Greene county, Penn. She died leaving one son, William, who became an engineer, and during a collision, November 5, 1890, at Claysville, Washington county, was killed, having clung to his engine to the last. Mr. Flick was married in 1853 to Miss Maria Rhinehart, who died leaving two children: Oscar (a resident of Greene county) and an infant. In 1855 Mr. Flick came to West Pike Run township, Washington county, and on May 17, 1866, married his third wife in the person of Zobitha, daughter of James Irwin. Her only brother, James F. Irwin, is living in Virginia. Since coming to West Pike Run township, Mr. Flick has resided on his present farm, which is located on the northern boundary of Beallsville. He is a successful agriculturist, and has for the past ten years made a specialty of breeding Shorthorn cattle. Politically, he was formerly a Whig and Know Nothing, but is now a Republican, and he is at present serving in the council of Beallsville borough. He has been a member of the I. O. O. F. for twenty years, and of the Encampment, and with all public enterprises he is prominently identified.

The following reminiscences are from the pen of Mr. Flick:

The old log school-house that I attended for the first time, now sixty years ago, was constructed of unhewn logs, and put together as you would build a pen. Small stones were set on edge between the logs, and then dubbed with clay mortar. One log was sawed out to make room for a sash in the west side, and on this sash was pasted greased paper. This old log school-house was abandoned and a new one put up eight or ten years after. I was carried by my sister to this old school-house. I would go to see it, and hunt squirrels with my father, for it was a good place for game. Now, as to the floor in this old school house; it was laid with what was called puncheons in those days, which were split-out logs, dressed off as best could be done. This floor was not all over the room, for there was a space six feet square at the east end, for fire, and on the ground immediately above this place, over head, were joists to serve as bearings whereon to build a chimney. This chimney was, at the base, six feet square and tapered to the height desired, built out of split lath and plastered with clay mortar. Clapboards were split out of oak timber, three and a half feet long, and laid down on poles; while the joists were covered with another clapboard. And then there was what was called a big pole to hold them down; there were no boards over head. As to seats, they were made of split puncheon, roughly made with legs. Three of these were placed around this square where the fire was, and as the pupils would get warm, they would retire to other benches, and others would then take their places at the fire. Daniel Flick, my father, was one of the first teamsters who made a business of going to Baltimore for goods before there was any railroad; and I may here state that while he was at Baltimore on one occasion, he learned that the B. & O. R. R. had twelve miles of road made, and would run three coaches, engine and tender to Elliot's Mills. The coaches were furnished with side-seats running lengthwise. So my father concluded to take a free ride. The B. & O. company had mules stationed at the heavy grades to assist the engine in making grade. This was in spring of 1831. This engine and the coaches were placed on exhibition in the city of Pittsburgh among other old relics, and were destroyed by fire.

WILLIAM SWAN, son of Col. William Swan (who was a son of Timothy Swan, a Revolutionary soldier, and a native of County Down, Ireland, and Jane (Watson) Swan, of Westmoreland county, Penn.) and Martha (French) Swan, daughter of Enoch and Mary (McElroy) French, of Chambersburg, Penn., was born in Trumbull county, Ohio, May 11, 1826. His father, a soldier in the war of 1812, died during the infancy of his son William, who was the youngest of a family of six children. In 1832 his mother removed from Ohio to the vicinity of Canonsburg, in order that her children might have better educational advantages.

When a very young man Mr. Swan came to Washington to learn the printer's trade in the office of the Examiner, and during his apprenticeship he was an inmate of the family of the later venerable Judge Grayson, who was the founder of that paper. In 1851 Mr. Swan, in partnership with William Ritzel, Esq., founded the Review. It was during this partnership that Mr. Swan, leaving the paper in the hands of Mr. Ritzel, made a trip across the plains to California, which trip was made on account of bad health. His diary, kept during the journey, is one of intense interest, telling of many escapades happening to the travelers, and descriptions of some of our now great western cities at that time. He was gone six months, returning via the Isthmus of Panama to New York. Upon his return to Washington, he bought Mr. Ritzel's share in the Review, and conducted the paper with ability and success until its consolidation with the Examiner in 1865; and published as Review and Examiner by Swan & Ecker, Mr. Swan continuing editor and proprietor until his death, which occurred October 10, 1876. In 1863 Mr. Swan was the nominee, on the Democratic ticket, for the office of county treasurer, and although his party was then in the minority in the county, yet he polled a vote which indicated the high esteem in which he was held by his fellow-citizens as a man of financial integrity and ability, as well as of personal popularity. His was, in every sense, a manly character, and as such always commanded the respect of his opponents, and attracted to him troops of personal friends. Warm hearted, gentle in manner, kind, charitable, benevolent and generous, he was ever ready to assist the poor and unfortunate, and every project, which appealed to his sympathy, never failed to receive substantial aid at his hands.

In 1858 Mr. Swan was united in marriage to Miss Sarah A. McClane, daughter of Ebenezer and Jane (McMurray) McClane, of Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., and by her had five children, all now deceased except one daughter, Jean McClane Swan, who resides with her widowed mother in the borough of Washington.

PROF. G. G. HERTZOG, a well-known teacher, and talented professor in the Southwestern State Normal School, at California, is a son of Andrew Hertzog, whose father, John, was born near Hagerstown, Md.

John Hertzog was educated in his native State; he was of German descent, and spoke and read the German and English languages with equal ease. Coming to Fayette county, Penn., he remained a bachelor until middle age, when he selected a wife in the person of Mrs. Sarah Burchinal, a widow lady, who had four children by her former marriage, namely: Jeremiah, Luther, Thomas and Rebecca. One son, Andrew, was born to the union of John and Sarah (Burchinal) Hertzog. The father followed agricultural pursuits, and died at an advanced age. In his political sympathies he was a Jeffersonian Democrat.

Andrew Hertzog was born November 11, 1811, in Springhill township, Fayette Co., Penn., and there attended the subscription schools. He followed the business of building and contracting for many years, and after his marriage settled on the homestead farm in Fayette county. He married Susanna, daughter of George and Hannah Gaus, natives of Pennsylvania, who were the parents of the following children: Asenath, Susanna, Hannah, Mary, William, Paul and Philip. Mr. Gaus was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of the Baptist Church. After his death Mrs. Gaus was married to Joseph Baker, and by him had four children, viz.: Michael, George, Josiah and Caroline. To the union of Andrew and Susannah (Gaus) Hertzog were born the following children: John J., Hannah (deceased), G. G., Sarah (wife of William Mallory), Andrew, Amanda (married to George Lyons), O. G. (a minister of the Disciple Church, now acting as financial agent for Hiram College, Ohio), Susanna (wife of Cyrus Pyle), Caroline (married to George D. Bowers), Mary (wife of Elza Warman) and Lizzie (wife of J. D. West). Politically Mr. Hertzog was a Whig and Republican, serving for years as justice of the peace, and in religion was a member of the Baptist Church at Mt. Zion.

Prof. G. G. Hertzog was born September 22, 1837, in Fayette county, Penn., and from earliest boyhood developed strong intellectual capacity. After attending the common schools, he remained sometime at the academy at George's Creek; then took a thorough course of instruction at the Southwestern State Normal School, at California. On December 25, 1862, he was married to Emily C., daughter of John G. Hertig, and she has borne him four children, viz.: Lucy S. and Walter S. (who both graduated at the Southwestern State Normal School, the latter in 1891, and is now a teacher), Russell T., deceased, and Carl S. Lucy S. after graduation took a medical course at the Homeopathic College, of Cleveland, Ohio, and since receiving her diploma has been employed as principal of the Women's and Children's Dispensary at Cleveland, Ohio.

Prof. Hertzog was first connected with the Southwestern State Normal School in 1866, since when he has been an instructor in the higher branches, and is now professor of mathematics and book-keeping. His energetic personality is felt and appreciated in every department of the school, to which he has devoted many years of his life with eminent success, as is fully evinced by the phenomenal progress the institution has made. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and in religion an earnest worker in the Christian Church, in which he has been an elder for over twenty years, and in the Sunday school, of which he has been superintendent for many years.

LODOWICK McCARRELL is prominent among the leading attorneys of the borough of Washington, and a lineal descendant of Lodowick McCarrell, a native of Ireland, who came to America and to Washington county in 1780. At Ten Mile and Hickory, in Mt. Pleasant township, he took up a large quantity of land, a great part of which he cleared and improved, and here for years he followed agricultural pursuits. He died in 1851, at the advanced age of eighty-four years, bearing to the last the impress of the stalwart race from which he sprung.

Here he married Martha, daughter of John Lemon, who, together with Andrew Eagleson, was the first settler in Canton township, where he died. He had several daughters, all now deceased, our subject's grandmother being the first to pass away, dying before her husband. The grandparents of Lodowick, Jr., had a family of seven children, of whom the following is a fragmentary record: John died in Lawrence county, Penn.; Thomas is spoken of more fully further on; James died in Beaver county, same State; Andrew died in Mount Pleasant township, on the old homestead;

Leman died in Buffalo township, this county, when middle aged; Isabelle (deceased) was the wife of Isaac Hodgens, of Buffalo township; Elizabeth (deceased) was the wife of John Cockins, of Mt. Pleasant township. The father of this family was an elder in the Seceder Church.

Thomas McCarrell, father of Lodowick, Jr., was born in Virginia in 1801. He was thrice married—first, to Miss Esther McNary, of Washington county, who died in 1831, leaving four children, as follows: Martha, who died in January, 1893, at Hickory, this county; Margaret, wife of Joseph Cowden, in Cecil township, near Venice; Dr. John McCarrell, who died in January, 1894, in Wellsville, Ohio, and Dr. James McCarrell, a resident of Allegheny, Penn. For his second wife Thomas McCarrell married Elizabeth McConnaughy, of Washington county, a daughter of David McConnaughy, a farmer, who had come from the North of Ireland to this county prior to the beginning of this century; he and his wife and children are now all dead. Mr. and Mrs. McCarrell, after marriage, settled on the old farm in Mt. Pleasant township, where were born to them the following named children: David M., a physician in Hickory, this county; Leman, farming on the homestead in Mt. Pleasant township; Alexander D., a United Presbyterian minister at Stewart's Station, Westmoreland Co., Penn., and Lodowick, the subject of these lines. The mother died in 1859, at the age of fifty-nine years, and the father, in 1863, married Margaret Martin, who died in 1890. The father died in 1872, a member of the Seceder Church. Politically, he was a Democrat, and filled various county and township offices of trust. He was elected county commissioner in 1853, was associate judge for a term of five years, and was justice of the peace in Mt. Pleasant township seven terms.

Lodowick McCarrell, whose name opens this biographical sketch, was born February 2, 1812, in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., and received a liberal education at the schools of the locality, working also at times on the farm. Having decided to make the legal profession his life vocation, he entered Jefferson College, from which he graduated in 1867 in the classical course, and then commenced the study of law in the office of Montgomery & Gibson, Washington borough. In 1869 he was admitted to the bar of the county, commenced practice in the following year, and has since continued with eminent success. Mr. McCarrell was married July 25, 1876, to Lida, daughter of Robert Jackson, and to this union one son, Robert L., was born. In his political preferences our subject is an active member of the Democratic party, and in religious sentiment he is of the United Presbyterian faith.

JOHN BAIRD, son of George Baird, of whom mention is made elsewhere in this work, was born in Washington, Penn., July 16, 1816, and received his education in the public schools in the vicinity of his birthplace. In the earlier part of his life he was engaged in the commission business, which he conducted very successfully until he was appointed agent of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. in Washington, which position he held for many years up until nearly his retirement from active business.

Mr. Baird was married twice, first time to Harriet N. Gilfillan, daughter of Dr. Gilfillan, of West Alexander, Penn. She died in 1852, leaving four children, of whom two are living, viz.: Mary M., of Leetsdale, Penn., and Susan C., widow of James C. Johnson, of Erie, Penn. For his second wife Mr. Baird married Harriet S. Clark, daughter of Joseph Clark, of Franklin township, Washington county, and to them seven children were born, as follows: Jane Wilson, wife of Moses Atwood, of Pittsburgh; Sarah, who died in infancy; George, engaged in the banking business in Pittsburgh; Joseph, also engaged in banking, in Washington; William, connected with a glass company of Washington; and Eleanore and Katharine, both at home. On March 5, 1889, the father departed this life at the age of seventy-three. Politically he was a Republican, and in religion a member of the First Presbyterian Church.

HON. JOHN BARCLAY FINLEY, a distinguished citizen and business man of Monongahela, was born in the city of Philadelphia, Penn., November 17, 1845.

His grandparents came to western Pennsylvania from Cecil county, Md., immediately after the close of the Revolutionary war, his grandfather having served in that war, locating first in Allegheny City, shortly after moving to a point eight miles west of Pittsburgh near White Hall and Sargents Hall, six miles east of Finleyville, or as it was then called "Rowgalley," where he had a sister married to James Barclay, who had also come from Cecil county, Md. John Finley was a farmer, and owned a body of land, on which Finleyville was built. The original tract on which the town was located was called "Mount Pleasant," and the warrant was taken out by John Wall, December 3, 1787, purchased by James Barclay, who sold the most of it to John Finley in 1788. It was named Finleyville, in honor of John Finley. He and his wife had children as follows: William, born January 16, 1788, never married; Robert, March 27, 1790, never married; John, January 17, 1792; Jane, May 20, 1793; Sarah, April 19, 1795; Levi, January 3, 1798; Margaret, March 30, 1800; Isabel, March 11, 1802; Mary, November 28, 1804; James (father of J. B. Finley), June 10, 1806, and Susan, June 23, 1808. Of these Margaret married a Mr. Baldwin; Isabel married a Mr. Cochran; Jane married Dr. Joseph Curry; Susan married a Mr. Curry; Mary married a Mr. St. Clair; Sarah, married a Mr. Neil. John Finley was a very large land owner in Washington county.

James Finley, father of subject, was born in 1806, on the old homestead six miles east of Finley on the Pittsburgh and Brownville road. He learned merchandising with his brother, Robert, who was the first postmaster of Finleyville. A short time after James went to Pittsburgh, where he entered a mercantile house, remaining here from the time he was twenty-five to thirty years of age, when he proceeded to Philadelphia, and from there traveled abroad. Returning to Philadelphia, he there engaged, in company with a partner, in the wholesale dry-goods business. In 1851 the firm failed, and had to close out the business at a great loss. Having saved from the ruin a small amount of money, he was enabled to open a general store at Finleyville. Here he remained several years, dying in 1857, at the age of fifty-one years. Mr. Finley was married to Miss Catherine O'Neil, who was born at or near Albany, N. Y., a daughter of John O'Neil. To this union were born seven children, viz.: James, who died aged seventeen; William P., who was but eighteen years old, when in May, 1862, he was killed at the battle of Williamsburg, Va. (he was a member of the "Friend Rifles," of Pittsburgh); John Barclay, our subject; Byron S., unmarried, and residing in Otley, Iowa (he and his mother, the latter now aged seventy-one years, and sister Florence E., reside together); Rowland W., who resides in Goodland, Kans. (he was county clerk two terms, going out of office in 1890; he owns a considerable body of land near the county seat, and also a flouring mill at Goodland; he married Miss Laura White, of Iowa); Florence E., mentioned above; Robert F., unmarried and residing in San Francisco, engaged in the erection of gas plants.

When six years old our subject came with his parents to Finleyville, Washington Co., Penn., at the common schools of which place he received his primary education, finishing with a course at the normal school in Monongahela City. Soon after leaving school he engaged as a clerk in the mercantile house of Alexander & Co., in that city, continuing with them in merchandising until 1865, when they disposed of their mercantile interests, and engaged exclusively in banking. Mr. Finley remained with them until 1870, when, the Peoples Savings Bank being established, he was made cashier. The bank was, in 1880, reorganized under the title of "The Peoples Bank," Mr. Finley being elected president, which position he continues to fill. He was one of the original organizers and promoters of the Monongahela City Gas Co., having been a director since its organization and treasurer since 1880; has been director of Williamsport Bridge Co. for a number of years, president since 1888, and he rebuilt it after the fire in 1881; he is a director, and for two years was president, of the Bellewood & Monongahela Natural Gas Co., and is also one of the principal stockholders of this company; is also one of the incorporators of Monongahela Cemetery Association; is also president and principal stockholder of the Lawrence Gas Co. of New Castle, Penn., and of the New Castle Electric Co., and treasurer and principal stockholder of the City of New Castle Water Co.; president of and stockholder and director in the Broad Top & Cambria Coal Co., and is a director in the Fifth National Bank of Pittsburgh. Politically Mr. Finley is a Republican, and represented Washington county in the Legislature 1887-88, and was elected to fill the unexpired term of Hon. James K. Billingsly, 1889-90; served in the House of 1891, and resigned in April, 1892, in order to accept office as councilman so as to more effectively advocate improved streets and sewerage for Monongahela City; he had been a member of council before, and president of councils three or four terms, also clerk of council a number of years. Mr. Finley is a prominent Freemason, having attained the thirty second degree; is a Sir Knight Templar and member of the Shrine. He is a member of the Americus Club, and the Duquesne Club, of Pittsburgh. He was a member of the Revenue commission of 1887 (along with M. S. Quay, John Faunce, W. Norris, James S. Graham, H. K. Boyer, Christopher E. Hydrick, Jerome B. Niles, Henry Palmer, Thomas V. Cooper, and others) to examine into the tax laws of the State and recommend State tax legislation. During the war of the Rebellion he enlisted in Company G, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Militia, in answer to a call of Gov. Curtin in 1862, and was stationed near Hagerstown, Md. After Lee crossed the Potomac his regiment was ordered back to Greencastle and thence home.

Mr. Finley was united in marriage, February 21, 1878, with Miss Marguerite Bowman, who was born in Monongahela City, a daughter of Michael Bowman. Mr. and Mrs. Finley are members of the First Presbyterian Church.

MRS. CLARA W. BAIRD, the widow of Andrew Todd Baird, is a daughter of Hugh W. Wilson, of Washington county, who settled in South Strabane township, on a farm his grandfather had purchased.

The ancestry of this family in Washington county came to America at an early day, and six generations have lived on the old home place established in Washington borough, the representative of the fifth generation still living there. James Wilson came from Bedford county, Penn., in 1781, and purchased lot No. 291, where Smith's store now stands. He died in 1792 in the house he had built on the corner of Main and Beau streets. At his death his wife (name unknown) inherited by will the use of 200 acres of land adjoining the town until James, the youngest son, should be of age, when the farm was to be equally divided between James, Thomas and John. Hugh, the eldest son, had been provided for by certain property set off to him previously, a portion of which was the lot on Main street, near Maiden; and in addition to this property he purchased, in 1786, the lot on which Morgan's store now stands. This Hugh Wilson was the grandfather of Mrs. Clara Baird. He was thrice married; his first wife was Rachel Leet, born May 31, 1769, daughter of Isaac Leet, and sister of Maj. Daniel Leet, and by her he had children as follows: Rebecca, Margaret, Rachel and Hugh W. The mother of these children dying in 1788, Hugh Wilson married Margaret (Hamilton) Fleuning, a widow with one daughter, Catherine, who afterward became the wife of John D. McFadden, jeweler, of Pittsburgh. By this wife Hugh Wilson had one daughter, Eliza, married to Rev. Thomas Swain, of Philadelphia, who was pastor of the Baptist Church at Washington, Penn., from 1846 to 1850. After the death of his second wife Hugh Wilson married a Miss Spencer, an English lady, who survived him many years.

Hugh W. Wilson, the only son of Hugh and Rachel (Leet) Wilson, was born in Washington, Penn., February 22, 1812. On April 25, 1837, he was married to Frances Emma, daughter of Thomas and Frances Anica (Preble) Barlow, of Allegheny, and their children were: Edward Preble, born April 25, 1838, now living in Cincinnati, Ohio; James Blaine, born November 25, 1839, now living in Washington, Penn.; Clara—the subject proper of this sketch; and Frances Emma, who died in infancy. The mother died February 12, 1845, at the age of twenty-seven years, and Mr. Wilson married, September 9, 1847, Sarah Neville, niece of General Neville, and by her he had two children: Neville Craig, born October 30, 1850, died January 1, 1887, and Rebecca Blaine, born September 12, 1852, died February 16, 1877. The mother of these children departed this life September 30, 1856, aged thirty-six years, and the father on May 13, 1862, at the age of forty-nine years. By occupation he was a farmer, and during the later years of his life he followed fruit growing, also kept a greenhouse. His death was sudden, caused by over exertion in rapid walking, which produced internal rupture. For thirty years he was a deacon in the Baptist Church.

On June 8, 1865, Clara Wilson was united in marriage with Andrew Todd Baird, by whom she had seven children, viz.: Frances Emma, Jane Cunningham, Anica Chambers, George (deceased at the age of five months), Andrew Todd (deceased when aged ten and one-half years), Hugh Wilson and Susan, the survivors all living with the mother on Maiden street, Washington.

Andrew Todd Baird was born in 1831, at the home of his grandparents in Washington, Penn., but was taken to Ripley, Ohio, where he remained until 1836, thence moved to Wheeling, W. Va., in which city he lived till 1841, there receiving a part of his education. At the age of seventeen (1848) Mr. Baird graduated at Washington and Jefferson College, where he took a classical course. For a time he studied law with his uncle, but for some reason abandoned it. He learned telegraphy, and in 1851 had charge of the telegraph office at Washington, but resigned to enter his father's store. In 1860 he became a partner with his father, and on the latter's death succeeded to the business. For twenty years (1868 to 1887) he was treasurer of Washington and Jefferson College; was treasurer of the First Presbyterian Church sixteen years (1869 to 1885) and at the time of his death the church was out of debt; for thirty years he was librarian of the Sunday-school. Mr. Baird had joined the church in 1856, and lived the life of a true Christian. He was a most conscientious man and gave liberally of his means to all deserving charities and beneficent institutions, and on June 6, 1856, he commenced to devote one-tenth of his income for that purpose. He was a staunch Republican, at all times standing firmly and conscientiously by his political opinions. After marriage he and his wife took up their residence on Beau street, in the borough of Washington, remaining there until 1871, moving twice before 1875, when they took possession of the present home of the family. Here Mr. Baird died March 25, 1887, at the age of fifty-five years, six months.

GEORGE BAIRD. This gentleman was a typical specimen of the vigorous and hearty Scotch-Irish race from which he claimed descent.

His grandfather, John Baird, came to America, as a soldier under Gen. Braddock, and shared with him the memorable defeat on the Monongahela, July 9, 1755. He is said to have lost his life in the disastrous battle of Grant's Hill, in 1758, before Fort Duquesne (now Pittsburgh). His widow with her infant son, Absalom, continued to reside in the home he had established for them in Chester county, Penn. But on arriving at a suitable age, this son was sent to the famous academy at Peppa, in Lancaster county, then conducted by that eminent educator, Dr. Robert Smith, where, by thorough study, he prepared himself to enter upon a course in medicine. The outbreak of the American Revolution found him a physician ready for practice, and opened to him a fine field of professional energy and of patriotism as an army surgeon, a capacity in which he served his country until 1781, when his regiment was disbanded under an act of Congress. Returning to Chester county, he settled in Kennett Square, and there practiced medicine until November, 1786, when he removed to Washington, Penn. In his new sphere, Dr. Baird, besides practicing his profession, soon reached eminence as a leader in the community, as indicated by the various offices he successively held, viz.: justice of the peace, county lieutenant, brigade inspector, member of the State Senate, and then of the House of Representatives, sheriff of Washington county and trustee of Washington Academy, the germ of the present Washington College. He died October 27, 1805, leaving four sons, viz.: John, who followed him in the medical profession, but died early; George, the subject of this memorial, and Thomas H. and William, both of whom became eminent and successful lawyers, the former also a distinguished judge. His first wife, Susanna (Brown), was called from earth November 16, 1802, about three years before his death, and his second, Margaret (Darrah), followed his remains to the grave in the year succeeding their marriage.

George Baird, the second son of Dr. Absalom Baird, was born in Kennett Square, Chester Co., Penn., October 28, 1785. He was taken by his parents to their new home in Washington at the age of eleven months, and here he grew up into the bodily and mental strength which ever characterized him amidst the peculiar advantages of a community whose first settlers possessed unusual culture and transmitted it to their posterity. Reared carefully amidst the best influences of a Scotch-Irish Presbyterian home and community, the texture of his youthful character was wrought after that superior fashion. The death of his father left Mr. Baird an orphan of just twenty years. He had simultaneously or alternately, been for some time pursuing classical and mathematical study at Washington Academy, and preparing for the practice of medicine in his father's office. During the summer of 1805, he had enjoyed the instruction of the Rev. Matthew Brown, who in the spring of that year had become both pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Washington, and principal of the academy. Dr. Brown had in the academy, as assistant, Mr. David Elliott (afterward Rev. Dr. Elliott), the successor of Dr. Brown both in the pastorate of the church and the presidency of the college. The retirement of Mr. Elliott after a year of service to resume his studies as a candidate for graduation in Dickinson College, at Carlisle, Penn., was simultaneous with the transition of Washington Academy into the college under the charter of 1806. Mr. Baird took his place as tutor, and efficiently discharged the duties of the position for a year. The serious bereavement which imposed upon him a large share of the support of the family, also compelled the abandonment of a future prosecution of collegiate studies, and, what was still worse, of his medical studies also. This was much regretted, in view of his special classical taste and capacity, and a corresponding want of adaptation to ordinary trade. But "necessity knows no law." The aspiring student must needs abandon his books and come down to the stress of business. He did this with cheerful submission and characteristic energy, ever holding the confidence of the community in which he lived, but not with the degree of success with which we may well suppose the pursuits of his preference and longing might have been crowned. His first important venture, along with his brother-in-law, Nicholas Wilson, in the form of a boat load of flour for the market at New Orleans, was a disastrous failure, on account of the intervening depression of prices. Subsequently he was engaged in business for a brief season at St. Genevieve, Mo., and also at Nashville, Tenn. But returning to his home in Washington, popular favor expressed itself in his election, in 1811, to the office of sheriff of Washington county, for the term of three years, re-election being forbidden by law in the case of that office, unless after a lapse of time. During the same years, as for the two previous years, the office of deputy attorney general was filled by his brother Thomas H. Baird, who likewise was president judge of the district composed of Washington, Fayette and Greene counties for a continuous period of twenty years, beginning with 1818. During the years 1816-24, William Baird, the youngest brother, was deputy attorney-general. These facts abundantly attest both the energy of these brothers and of their hold on the public confidence.

Two important events in Mr. Baird's life were closely associated with his election as sheriff in 1811. One of these was his marriage, and the other his union with the Presbyterian Church of Washington, by public profession of his faith. On October 25, 1811, two or three weeks after his election, he and Miss Jane, daughter of John and Catherine Wilson, of Washington, were happily united for life by Rev. Dr. Matthew Brown. The union was a thorough blending of mutual love and devotion, of ever increasing strength, until November 2, 1860, when on the verge of a half century the husband's death separated them for a little while. Very shortly after his marriage and the assumption of the duties of his office, Mr. Baird took the vows of a Christian upon himself and sat down beside his beloved bride at the communion table of the Lord.

The expiration of Mr. Baird's term of office was followed, after a short interval, by his election in January, 1816, as a member of the House of Representatives at Harrisburg, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Gen. James Stephenson. He at once took his seat and vigilantly discharged his duties as a legislator. Retiring then to private life, he engaged in mercantile business, which through several changes, and with varying fortune, he pursued until 1829, when his financial embarrassments culminated in bankruptcy. The trial was in every way severe, and its experience bitter, but conscious integrity and an unblemished reputation sustained his wounded spirit. It was under the necessity which followed this reverse of fortune, that Mr. Baird in 1830 removed to the neighborhood of Ripley, Ohio, and took charge of a farm and a mill belonging to his brother-in-law, Rev. Andrew Todd, of Kentucky. Here, too, his life for six years was one of both struggle and heroic endurance, as well as of success least equal to his expectation. In 1836 another change was made responsive to an invitation of his wife's brother, Marcus Wilson, to join him in the dry-goods business at Wheeling, Va. But their arrangements had scarcely gone into effect when Mr. Wilson's death precipitated another. Alone he then entered into the grocery business, though he was, of course, put under unexpected stress. Yet he pushed his way with assiduous earnestness and established a trade which produced a comfortable living. So he continued until 1844, when the increasing infirmities of Mrs. Baird's aged parents at Washington, made a call of filial duty to return to that place and take charge of them. Concurrent with this was the inducement of a better opportunity to educate his younger children. At Wheeling he had not only been reasonably prosperous in business, but his family had formed strong ties of friendship, which still bind them. Their relations with the First Presbyterian Church of that city, during the seven years of their continuance, were most cordial and satisfactory. Especially was their union close with the venerable pastor, Rev. Henry R. Weed, D.D., and his family. The removal to Washington was the last change. Engaging in the same business as at Wheeling, Mr. Baird prosecuted it with vigor, having the efficient help of his youngest son, Andrew Todd Baird, during the last twelve years of his life. That son succeeded him at his death, and soon, by his combined skill and energy, rose to the front rank of business men, a place which by common consent he held up to his death. The return of Mr. Baird to Washington was speedily followed with renewed tokens of confidence from a community which well knew his worth. He was at once elected a trustee of Washington College, and so continued through the remaining seventeen years of his life. This was but a return to a position which he had before held for twenty consecutive years, commencing with 1812, under the presidency of Dr. Matthew Brown. During all of this latter period he acted as collector and a portion of it as treasurer of this institution. In this, too, his youngest son was his assistant, and succeeding to the financial trust was in full charge of the resources of the board until his death in 1887. In 1848 he was chosen to the office of justice of the peace, and discharged its duties for five years. But the office which he most of all valued was that of ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church of Washington, to which, after election by the people, he was ordained and installed October 3, 1847, along with James Boon, Joseph Henderson and Dr. Robert R. Reed. In that sacred office he was ever discriminating, constant and true to duty, and during most of the time was the efficient clerk of the Session. His appreciation by the ministry and eldership beyond his own particular church, may be inferred from his unanimous appointment by the Presbytery of Washington, as one of its commissioners to the General Assembly, which held its sessions in Nashville, Tenn., in May, 1855.

The character of Mr. Baird was very marked. In him seeming opposites were wonderfully blended. Decision even sometimes to sternness if not bluntness, was joined with a tenderness of heart seldom surpassed. He was brave to utter fearlessness in avowing and maintaining his convictions, and yet modest, diffident and deferential to the judgment of those in whose wisdom and truth he confided. He would suffer loss rather than forsake a principle or betray a friend. He was not slow to maintain his own rights with a heroic spirit, but he was ever more ready to forego his own ease and interest in doing a kindness. No parent more strictly exacted obedience, whilst no one could exceed him in a father's sympathetic love. He was solicitous for the spiritual welfare of the young, an earnest teacher in the Sabbath-school, and, during several periods, its superintendent. He loved the sanctuary with its sacred word and ordinances. The family altar never fell into neglect in his home, nor did the religious instruction of his children. With his last breath he uttered affectionate words of parting to his beloved wife and children, as well as fit counsels to all that came to his bedside. His expressions of good will toward his fellow-men were hearty, and his prayers for the coming of the Lord went up before him to the heavenly throne. On November 2, 1860, he breathed out his life in the sweet peace of Christ, and two days later his body was gently laid to rest in the "city of the dead." He had through grace finished his earthly course of seventy-five years, and even then was beholding the Lord's face, and was satisfied with His likeness.

His widow survived him until July 16, 1872, when she departed this life in her seventy-ninth year. She was greatly beloved in life, not only within her own large circle of relatives but by a still greater number, between whom and herself, during long and affectionate intercourse, ties had been formed which are stronger than death. The loveliness of her manners and disposition which made her girlhood so attractive, was thus carried into the responsible relations of wife and mother. She was equally at home among the refined and the lowly; modestly diffusing the light of her own genial spirit over all around her, and receiving back the largest rewards of confidence and love. Her words of encouragement and hope fell tenderly upon sorrowful hearts. As a daughter, sister, wife and mother, her affection, illustrated by her daily words and acts, wrote its own history upon the memories of those bound to her by those tender ties, which must prove as lasting as the soul. She was kind, tender and thoughtful in all that related to the welfare and happiness of each and all of them. She was a mother in the fulness of love and care to a succession of orphaned children, chiefly nephews, nieces and grandchildren, which seldom finds a parallel. From the time of her marriage, down through the threescore years during which she had a home, there was no time when the blessings of that home were not shared by one or more of this class. In her time of greatest need, she always had somewhat to give, when the Master's cause appealed to her for help. In this, as in a multitude of other ways, did her unselfish preference of the good and happiness of others over any gratification of her own, appear.

Mrs Baird was born and reared, as she also spent most of her life and died, on the same premises. She was the fourth daughter of John Wilson, Esq., who died in 1847, and Mrs. Catherine Wilson, who died December 15, 1857, who, with their firstborn child, immigrated from Ireland to this country in 1786. After a residence of three years in Philadelphia they settled in Washington, Penn., in 1789, and here, after a long life, they came to their rest among the dead. Of five sisters, all of whom lived to widowhood and advanced age, and were blended into closer union by means of common circumstances and experiences, three were called away within the brief space of seven teen months. Mrs. Martha Wishart (widow of Dr. John Wishart), the second sister, died March 1, 1871, in the eightieth year of her age; on August 2, 1872, the eldest sister, Mrs. Mary, widow of David Acheson, fell asleep as she neared the venerable age of eighty five years; Mrs. Margaret Wilson died July 21, 1876; Mrs. Catherine W. Todd, on January 5, 1877, and John K. Wilson on July 4, 1883.

MORGAN HAYES, senior member of the firm of Hayes & Wilson, carriage makers of Washington, Penn., was born in Hartford county Conn., March 13, 1820; received his education there and learned the carriage makers' trade in the town of Hartford.

Morgan Hayes settled at Washington, Penn., October 15, 1841, and in partnership with his brother and uncle (who had been keeping a hotel in the borough) established a carriage shop in rear of the court-house. Burned out there, the company purchased the old Presbyterian church building, now vacant and the property of the S. B. & C. Hayes estate. In 1871 the shop was established in the old Methodist church building, 54 North Franklin street, where business is now carried on. As a coincidence, it may be related that a brother in Columbus, Ohio (now of the firm of M. & E. K. Hayes), conducted an industry of the same nature in an old church building. In 1871 our subject formed a partnership with John S. Wilson, who had served an apprenticeship with him, for the manufacture of all kinds of carriages, buggies, spring wagons, etc., which has since continued with well-merited success. Politically, Mr. Hayes is a Democrat, in religion a member of the Second Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder. He is the oldest carriage maker in Washington, and built the first buggy in the county. He has in his possession a buggy he made in 1843, and sold July 3, that year; but some years ago he bought it back, and has exhibited it since at the county fair. This vehicle is now half a century old, is good and sound, and a venerable reminder of the days immediately following the "Hard Cider Campaign." Some years ago, Rev. Charles Hayes published a voluminous work, on the Hayes family, at Westfield, N. Y., which is a standard genealogy back to 1640. It does not treat of the family before the Reformation.

OLIVER M. LINTON is descended from an honored ancestry who came to Washington county at a very early period in its history. John Linton immigrated to America about 1682, and was apparently the first of the family to set foot upon American soil. An old family Bible, now in the possession of our subject, contains a record of five generations, and the first item in this record is the following: "Benjamin Linton, son of John and Rebecca, born 6th month, 10th day, 1703."

Joshua Linton, son of the above named Benjamin, by a second wife, nee Jane Cowgil, was born January 22, 1738, and was the great-grandfather of Oliver M. In early pioneer days he was a resident of Bucks county, Penn., whence, in company with his three sons — Benjamin, Mahlon and Joshua, Jr. — he came to Washington county toward the close of the last century. [This is taken from data supplied by Prof. Edwin Linton.] Of these sons, Mahlon was born in Bucks county, at 9:30 o'clock, a. m., February 6, 1781, was reared to agricultural pursuits on his father's farm, after the fashion of those early times, and also learned the trade of weaving, both of which occupations he followed through life. After his arrival in Washington county, he purchased, on March 10, 1789, seventy six acres of wild land in East Bethlehem township, where he made a settlement, clearing his place of the primeval forest, and enduring the many hardships incident to pioneer life. On March 31, 1803, he married Ann Hilles, who bore him the following named children: Sarah, born August 14, 1804, died in 1873; William H., born April 30, 1806, died 1862; Samuel, born June 23, 1809, died 1864; Joseph, born January 28, 1813, died 1882; Mary Ann, born April 27, 1815, died 1882; Isaiah, born September 29, 1817, died 1891; Caroline, born August 21, 1820, died in girlhood, and Margaret, born September 21, 1825. The father died April 4, 1831, the mother following him to the grave June 21, 1838. He was a Whig in politics, and in his religious connection was a Quaker.

William H. Linton was born on the farm now owned by his son, Oliver M., in East Bethlehem township, and which has been in the possession of the Linton family ever since its purchase in 1789 by Mahlon Linton. He received his education at the subscription schools of the locality of his birth, and afterward attended Westland Academy. His brothers and sisters, who grew to maturity, all married and became scattered, but he continued to live on the old homestead, assisting his father in the duties of the farm, and at the latter's death he inherited the property. He was married October 31, 1832, to Matilda, daughter of Benjamin Taylor, one of Washington county's early Quaker citizens. To this union were born children as follows: Eli, Caroline, Elizabeth Ann, Oliver M., William Hilles, Mary and Eliza, John Francis and Lawrence, all of whom are now deceased, except Caroline, Oliver M. and William Hilles, the last named being a resident of Salem, Ohio. The father by occupation was a farmer, shoemaker and broom maker; in politics he was a Republican, in religious faith a Quaker; he died March 29, 1862; the mother was called from earth September 17, 1869.

Oliver M. Linton, whose name opens this bio graphical memoir, was born on the farm which he now owns, and of which he has been a lifelong resident, with the exception of three years (1882 to 1885) he spent in Centreville. He was educated at the common schools of his district, receiving at home a thorough training in the arduous and manifold duties of a practical agriculturist, and has made farming pursuits, including threshing by horsepower, the vocation of his life. On October 26, 1865, he was married to Miss Philena Cleaver, who was born September 18, 1841, in Columbiana county, Ohio, daughter of Eli Cleaver, and this union was blessed with five children, viz.: Nora M., born August 19, 1867; Mary M., born August 2, 1869; Lizzie L., born September 10, 1871; Cora E., born April 3, 1873, and Eva O., born November 2, 1882. Of these the following named three all died in 1872 of diphtheria: Nora M., March 14; Mary M., February 15, and Lizzie L., March 12. Mr. Linton's farm, comprising ninety-three acres, in a high state of cultivation, is equipped with all modern improvements, and is devoted exclusively to general farming and stock raising. In his political preferences our subject is a Republican, and has served as judge of election.

JOHAN S. WILSON, of the firm of Hayes & Wilson, carriage makers, Washington, is a native of that borough, born in March, 1830. His grandfather, Matthew Wilson, was of Butler county, Penn., whence he removed to Morgan county, Ohio, where he carried on farming, and died in 1845 at the patriarchal age of ninety years. He was a Revolutionary soldier. His wife, a native of Ireland, bore him five children (all now deceased), one of whom came at the age of seventeen years to Washington, but did not remain long; another son and a daughter died in Ohio.

William Jackson Wilson, a son of Matthew, was born in Butler county, Penn., and when a lad came to Washington, where for many years he followed his trade, shoemaking. He was a very patriotic man, and held a commission as major in the militia. In 1862, then sixty years of age, he was desirous of enlisting in the active service of his country, but because of his white hair and beard he was rejected. Determined, however, to get into some regiment, he rejuvenated himself by dying his hair, and was then accepted, serving his country four years with as much zeal and activity as many a much younger man. When he reached the age of seventy-six, he departed this life, a staunch Republican in his political preferences, although prior to the Civil war he had been a Democrat. At one time in his life he was overseer of the poor, serving eight years. Socially he was connected with the I. O. O. F. and F. & A. M., and in religion he was a member of the M. E. Church. Mr. Wilson was married to Mrs. Mary Kimmons, nee Sprowls, a descendant of John Sprowls who came from England to this county about the time of the Revolution, settling in East Finley township. To this union were born six children, as follows: George W., in Louisville, Ky. (for thirty years he was on the L. & N. railroad); Sarah is the wife of Morgan Hayes; John S. is the subject of this sketch; Mary (Mrs. Daniel Mowry) is deceased; Charlotte lives in Washington, Penn. The mother died at McConnellsville, Ohio, in 1841.

John S. Wilson received his education at the public schools of his native place, and learned the trade of shoemaker with his father, at which he worked three years. Preferring, however, the carriage making business, he bound himself as an apprentice to S. B. & C. Hayes, of Washington, in that line, and served four years, after which he worked as a journeyman, part of the time in Wheeling, W. Va. In 1859 he went "across the plains" to California, with oxen, the journey occupying six months, and he has still in his possession a diary he kept, containing an interesting account of his trip from the time of his leaving home to his return in 1865. About that year he again went to Wheeling, where he remained several years, and then, finally, returned to Washington, where, in 1871, he entered into partnership with Morgan Hayes, for the manufacture of all kinds of carriages, buggies, spring wagons, etc., under the firm name of Hayes & Wilson, which has since continued with unqualified success. In 1868 Mr. Wilson was married to Miss Harriet Woodward Kimball, of Wheeling, W. Va., a native of White Mills, Penn., and whose parents are now deceased. No children have been born to this union. Politically Mr. Wilson sympathizes with the Democratic party, but in voting he invariably uses his judgment, casting his ballot for "the right man for the right place;" socially he was at one time a member of the I. O. O. F. He is a typical self-made man, having attained success by his own individual efforts. Enterprising to an eminent degree, he takes a lively interest in all measures tending to the welfare and prosperity of his city and county. He is a stockholder in both the Glass Works and the Tube Works in Washington.

OF. LYON, a resident of Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., is of Scotch-Irish descent. His great-great grandfather, Nathaniel Lyon, emigrated from the Highlands of Scotland to this country in the early part of the eighteenth century, and settled near Morris-town, New Jersey.

Nathaniel Lyon had five sons: Ezekiel, Nathaniel, Benjamin, Stephen and John. These brothers all immigrated to western Pennsylvania, and for a time remained at, or near, what is now Brownsville, Fayette county. Here Ezekiel, the eldest, built a woolen mill and manufactured cloth for many years. Nathaniel, the second son of this family, immigrated to Ohio in the early days, and settled on the Muskingum river. Stephen, the fourth son, was a cripple and worked at the trade of tinsmith. The fifth son, John, settled in Virginia, at or near the flats of Grave creek, and there lived and died.

Benjamin Lyon, third son of Nathaniel, and great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born in 1752 near Morristown, N. J., where he had his home until after the Revolutionary war, in which he served during the entire conflict. He was married in 1777, while a soldier, to a Miss Wilcox who, with her father, mother and one brother had started from London, England (the father, Mr. Wilcox, during a storm while they were crossing the ocean, was drowned). The mother, Mrs. Wilcox, with her two children, reached this country safely, and settled in Philadelphia. After the war, Benjamin Lyon immigrated to Western Pennsylvania, and settled on a farm at the headwaters of Mingo creek, about one mile north of Dunningville, Washington Co., Penn. This farm was for many years owned by Andrew Crouch (deceased), and is now owned by his son, John Crouch. The original mansion house and home of Benjamin Lyon, on this farm, is still standing; it is a frame building, and was built by his own hands, he being a mechanic. He lived on this farm until the death of his first wife in 1801. She was buried in a graveyard on the adjoining farm, known for many years back as the "Todd farm." Benjamin Lyon, soon after the death of his wife, sold out and moved to Smith Creek, Greene Co., Penn., where, in 1812, he married the Widow Rogers, and by her had one son (Mathias), born June 9, 1813 (now living in Chillicothe, Mo.). By his first wife he (Benjamin Lyon) had children as follows: Betsy, born April 27, 1778; Phebe, born November 10, 1781; Sabia, born December 9, 1783; Nancy, born March 30, 1787; Noah, born March 27, 1790; William, born March 9, 1795; and Joanna, born December 13, 1800. Religiously, Benjamin Lyon was a Baptist, and was very strong in the faith. He died in 1836, at the age of eighty-four, and was buried on the Thomas Smith farm, two miles from Waynesburg, Pennsylvania.

William Lyon (grandfather of O. F. Lyon) was born March 9, 1795, in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn. He was married September 7, 1816, to Elizabeth Hathaway, who bore him eight children, viz.: Morgan Lyon, born July 17, 1817; Thomas Harvey (residing at Linden, Washington Co., Penn.), born September 1, 1819; Harrison (deceased), born December 24, 1821; Jackson (deceased), born October 17, 1824; Louisa (Mrs. Horner, deceased), born May 27, 1827; Richmond (deceased), born January 28, 1829; Perren (residing at Orange, Cal.), born May 10, 1832; and William Sealy (residing at Rochelle, Ill.), born February 26, 1835. He lived in Green county for a short time, then bought a gristmill on Ten Mile creek, Washington county (now known as Lindley's Mills), which he owned and operated until 1842, when he sold out, and with his wife and children moved to Clark county, Ind., where he remained until the fall of 1844, when, on account of sickness of nearly all his family, and death of two of his sons (Harrison and Jackson), he returned to Pennsylvania and located at Beck's Mills, three miles east of Canonsburg, Washington county, where he died November 9, 1845; Elizabeth Lyon, his widow, died April 10, 1861.

Morgan Lyon (father of O. F. Lyon) was born July 17, 1817. His education was obtained at common schools, and for some time he taught school in his own neighborhood; when not teaching he worked with his father in the mill. On November 25, 1838, he was married to Clarissa Jane McVey, who bore him nine children, viz.: Oscar F. (whose name opens this sketch); Emma A. (Mrs. Samuel Bane, deceased), born September 17, 1841; Elizabeth A. (Mrs. Evans Bane, residing in Moniteau county, Mo.), born March 22, 1844; Harvey R., born September 9, 1846, was a soldier in Company K, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, war of the Rebellion (now residing in Denton, Tex.); William A., born January 13, 1849 (was a soldier in Company K, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, died at Alexandria, Va., June 1, 1864, of wounds received in action); David H., born October 1, 1851 (died in infancy); Sarah L., born March 29, 1855 (residing in Moniteau county, Mo.); Clara J. (Mrs. Hoge), born December 12, 1858 (residing in Chillicothe, Mo.), and James M. (residing in Burlington, Iowa), born January 4, 1861.

For a number of years Morgan Lyon followed droving, buying stock in Ohio and western Pennsylvania and driving it across the mountains to the Eastern cities. In 1862 he opened a store of general merchandise at Lone Pine, Penn., and at the same time and place owned and operated a coal mine. Here he continued in business (which proved to be very profitable) until 1869, when he sold out and moved to Moniteau county, Mo., and purchased the farm upon which he lived until his death. Politically, he was a Whig, and after the organization of the party he became a Republican, being always interested in public affairs, and intensely loyal. He was especially earnest in promoting the welfare of the public schools, was a great reader, well posted on the general topics of his time. He was always an earnest believer in the Christian religion, and died strong in the faith, January 29, 1891.

Clarissa Jane Lyon (mother of O. F. Lyon) was born May 20, 1820, a daughter of Stephen and Amy McVey, who were of Scotch Irish origin, and whose ancestors were among the early settlers of western Pennsylvania. Mrs. Lyon had four brothers and three sisters, viz.: Silas (deceased), Harvey (residing at Washington, Penn.), Franklin, a carpenter (deceased), Charles (a soldier in the Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, war of the Rebellion), Sarah Waddell (residing at Millsboro, Penn.), Ann Vorhees (deceased), and Amy, living at West Union, Penn. Mrs. Lyon was always a consistent, Christian woman, a devoted wife and mother. Forgetting self, she lived and toiled solely for the good of her family and those around her. She and her husband were formerly members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, but in later years both united with the Christian Church. She is still living on her farm (left by her husband) in Moniteau county, Mo.

O. F. Lyon, eldest son of Morgan and C. J. Lyon, was born December 1, 1839, in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn. At the age of two years he went with his parents to Indiana, returning with them to Pennsylvania when he was about five years old, and settling in North Strabane township, Washington county. Here he remained, going to school in the winter time, and working on the farm in summer. At the age of seventeen he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed until the opening of the war of the Rebellion, when he enlisted, September 16, 1861, in the first three-years' call, in Company A, Eighty-fifth P. V. I., serving until November 22, 1864. He was with Gen. McClellan in the Peninsular campaign of 1862; with Gen. Foster's expedition from Newberne, N. C. via Atlantic Ocean to Hilton Head, S. C., January, 1863; with Gen. Gilmore, in the Department of the South, during 1863; with Gen. Butler, around Petersburg and Richmond, Va., in 1864. He participated in the siege of Yorktown, battles of Williamsburg, Savage Station, Fair Oaks and Black Water, Va.; siege of Morris Island, and Fort Wagner, S. C., sometimes called the Sixty-one-days' fight; White Marsh Island, Ga.; Bermuda Hundred, Ware Church, Appomattox, Strawberry Plain, Deep Bottom, Chapin Farm, Va., and others. At Fair Oaks his life was saved by his belt clasp, which was struck and broken through by an ounce minie ball. After his return from the war Mr. Lyon entered the store of his father, and on February 18, 1866, was united in marriage with Catharine Ferrel. The following children have been born to them: Jennie C., born May 26, 1867 (educated at Oberlin, Ohio, and now teacher of music at Braddock, Penn.); Emma A., born August 17, 1869 (graduated at Bethany College (W. Va.), and is now missionary in Nankin, China, under the control of the Foreign Missionary Society of the Christian Church); Ella L., born June 7, 1872 (graduate of the Washington Business College and teacher of stenography and typewriting); William M., born October 20, 1871, and Sherman L., born December 12, 1883, both students.

Soon after his marriage Mr. Lyon engaged in farming and stock raising, and in 1872 purchased the farm upon which he has since lived. He is an active Republican, and has served two terms as justice of the peace in Amwell township. He and his family have for many years been members of the Christian Church, and are prominent in the community.

THE WISE FAMILY. This family, which settled at an early day in the southeastern part of what is now Washington county, Penn., were of German extraction. Adam Wise and his wife, the progenitors, were natives of Rhenish Hesse, a province of Hesse Darmstadt, and lived near the river Rhine, where his ancestors carried on the business of milling and distillation of wine. He and his wife, excited no doubt by the wonderful reports which were spread far and wide of the opportunities afforded the emigrant for bettering his condition of life in the New World, set sail with their first born child (Andrew, born May 7, 1748) from Rotterdam, in the ship "Hampshire," Thomas Cheeseman, captain, and touching last at Falmouth, England, landed at Baltimore, Md., in July, 1748, the vessel after some delay proceeding to Philadelphia, where it arrived September 7 following. Adam Wise and family first settled on Pipe creek, in Carroll county, Md., at or near the site of Frederick City, where he lived about twenty-two years, and was engaged in the business of milling, distilling and farming, at which he prospered and was well to do. Shortly after March 10, 1763, when his son Adam, Jr., was born, his first wife died. After a suitable period of mourning had elapsed, the elder Wise consoled himself for the loss by taking another wife — a German lady — and a few years after, his nomadic spirit having revived, he closed out his business in Maryland, and started with his family, now numerous, in search of a new home in the wilds of western Pennsylvania (making the long and tedious journey over the mountains in wagons), and settled on North Ten Mile creek, probably about the year 1770, if not earlier. This section of country was then known as "The Wilderness of Ten Mile" and was very sparsely settled. Only four years before this the first white settlement within the present limits of Washington county had been made near the junction of Ten Mile creek with the Monongahela river, and about four miles down the stream from the point where Adam Wise selected his new home. The selection was judiciously made. Perhaps nowhere in Washington county could he have found a more inviting site for a homestead. On a commanding eminence overlooking the beautiful valley of Ten Mile he built his cabin home. He must have been a man of cultured and refined taste, as a family tradition states that he was largely influenced in selecting this location by the picturesque landscape here presented to his view, and more particularly by the groves of white pine growing in this locality - a feature of natural scenery very rare in Washington county. Here he located a tract of land, then in Westmoreland county, comprising about 400 acres, by what was called a "tomahawk improvement;" that is, he blazed the trees around his boundaries. The tract lies on the north side of North Ten Mile creek, about two and one half miles from its junction with the south branch, and about four miles from the Monongahela river. This tract he named "The Fishery," for the reason that the finny tribe was very numerous at this point in the waters of Ten Mile, and it was patented March 19, 1785, under that name, by his son Peter Wise, who inherited it, the warrant having issued June 26, 1785. The delay in taking out a patent was occasioned by the disturbed state of the country caused by the Revolutionary war, and also owing to the death of the original proprietor, which occurred before its close.

Joseph P. Wise

After the erection of Washington county, by act of Assembly, March 28, 1781, this tract was included in Washington, and after the county was subdivided into townships it was in Bethlehem; then after its subdivision into East and West Bethlehem, it was partly in both townships, the line passing nearly through its center. The village of Zollarsville is now located on a part of this tract. A recital of the adventures and hardships experienced by this family during the first few years of its life in the wilderness would be too voluminous for this sketch - until the close of the Revolutionary war the Indians were hostile and the settlers were constantly menaced by destruction at their hands. At one time the danger became so threatening that they forsook their home and took refuge in old Fort Redstone, in which one of their children was born. The nearest trading posts were Winchester, Va., and Frederick City, Md., and to one of these points journeys were frequently made for the purchase of salt, hardware and other necessities which they could not produce on the farm. These trips required about a month to make, and several settlers generally traveled together, for mutual protection against the wild beasts and marauding savages. Each man generally had charge of three horses, all heavily laden with such produce of their farms as could be carried on pack saddles. At first they carried wheat, but this proved too weighty - then they tried flax, but this proved too bulky. At last finding that whisky and peach brandy were highly prized and commanded high prices at these trading posts, small distilleries were soon erected on almost every farm, and their products soon came to be the chief articles of export and trade. The sites of three of these primitive distilleries are still plainly marked on the old Wise plantation. This whisky took the name of the region in which it was manufactured, and "Old Monongahela" soon became a popular brand - a distinction which it has retained to the present day.

For several years the only mills for grinding grain were run by hand or by horse power, but the practical mind and enterprising spirit of Adam Wise soon conceived the idea of erecting a flouring mill to be propelled by water power, and to him and his son Andrew must be given the credit of erecting the first mill built within the valley of Ten Mile. It is not now positively known in what year this mill was erected, but a plat of the land made in 1785 shows the location of the mill, race and dam, and it was in successful operation and a place of note in 1788, as is shown by a petition of the inhabitants of Bethlehem township to the court in that year, which prays "that a line dividing said township into two parts, should begin at Peter Drake's and thence by a straight line to Wise's Mill which has ever been accounted treble." This mill, however, was probably in operation about 1775, or shortly thereafter, first with an undershot wheel, and upon a small scale, but as the settlement rapidly increased it was soon found to be insufficient to do the business, and it was torn down, and a large mill with three run of buhrs, and overshot wheels, was erected near the site of the old mill. For many years it did an immense business, having no competition, flour of its manufacture being shipped in keel and flat boats as far south as New Orleans. Not long after the erection of the flouring mill, a sawmill was also erected, which did a large business, being surrounded by the primeval forest, and lumber being in great demand on account of the rapid settlement of the neighborhood.

In the midst of all this business, Adam Wise, by whose capital and enterprise the mills were erected, died June 9, 1781, in his sixty-third year, and was buried in a graveyard on his plantation. A plain stone, with his age and date of death rudely cut thereon, still marks the grave where sleeps this sturdy, brave hearted, enterprising pioneer. He was a useful man in his day and generation. Probably no man ever lived in this section who did so much to promote its rapid settlement and improvement. By his enterprise in erecting a mill, other settlers were attracted to the neighborhood, on account of the convenience thereof, the primeval forests rapidly gave way to cultivated fields, and the rich hills of Bethlehem were soon covered with golden grain. This mill passed out of the ownership of the Wise family in 1840, and was torn down in 1867. It was sold outside of the family for a few years, but was repurchased and owned and operated by said family for more than half a century. Adam Wise left a large estate for the time, and also a large family, his children being thirteen in number. By his first wife, who died in Maryland, he had five sons, viz.: Andrew, born in Germany; Peter, Frederick, Henry and Adam, Jr.; by his second wife, Catharine, he had eight children, viz.: sons—Jacob, Daniel, Abraham and Tobias, and daughters—Mary, Mary Ann, Ulian and Judith, some of whom were born before he left Maryland, others, after he came to Washington county, Penn.: of these, Andrew patented the farm where Thomas Martindell now lives. He married Zernab Hartman, and died March 4, 1840, aged ninety two years, his remains lying buried in the graveyard on his father's original plantation. His descendants now reside in and near Logansport, Ind., from one of whom Mr. George C. Horn, the writer of this sketch is indebted for much of the information used in its preparation.

Peter, the second son, inherited by the will of his father (dated April 13, 1781) the family homestead, and lived thereon until 1818, when he sold it to his son Andrew, and moved to near Canton, Ohio, where his posterity now generally reside, constituting a numerous and influential family. Hannah, a daughter of Peter, married Jacob Zollars, and lived on a part of the old Wise tract until her death. She was the mother of four children, all of whom are now dead or moved away from this county except Demas Zollars, who still resides here at an advanced age. Frederick, the third son, founded the town of Fredericktown, situated on the Monongahela river, upon land patented and owned by him, and named it after its founder. The survey was made March 8, 1790. He seems to have been a Prohibitionist, a rare distinction probably in his day, for among other things he stipulated in his deed to purchasers of lots "that no distillery for the destruction of grain or fruits shall be at any time erected on the premises." Two of the sons of Adam Wise, viz., Henry and Daniel, settled in Virginia and their descendants are numerous in that State at the present day, but nothing definite concerning them is known to the writer. Jacob lived and died in Washington county, and some of his descendants still live here. Of Abraham and Tobias, with their sisters, Mary, Mary Ann and Ulian, the writer after diligent inquiry can find no trace. They must either have died or moved away to parts unknown to the writer. They probably moved to Ohio along with their half-brother Peter, who was made their testamentary guardian by their father. Judith married Rev. John Spohn, a minister in the German Baptist Church, and some of her grandchildren are still residents of this county.

Adam Wise, the fifth son of Adam, Sr., by his first wife, was born April 5, 1763. He married Barbara Zollars, a daughter of Frederick Zollars, a pioneer in the neighborhood. He became owner of a farm of about 276 acres adjoining the land of his brother Peter. About 1812, he became the owner of the old Wise mill, and of 100 acres of the old homestead. He operated the mill in connection with his farms until 1824, when he disposed of his property among his children, and retired from active business life. He died July 15, 1842, aged seventy-nine years; his wife, Barbara, died September 29, 1852, aged ninety-three years. Adam Wise was a member of the German Baptist or Dunkard Church, and so great was his religious zeal, that when he erected his new brick residence, now owned and occupied by James R. Hawkins, he had the second story finished in one compartment, so that public religious services could be held therein. His wife, however, was of the Lutheran faith, and was one of the original members of the Lutheran Church, which was organized here by Rev. Stowe in 1792. They were the parents of eight children, viz.: Elizabeth, David, Samuel, George, Rebecca, Frederick, Joseph and Solomon.

Elizabeth, born May 8, 1785, married Jacob Shidler, and settled with her husband on a farm located on Daniels run, in West Bethlehem township. She was the mother of five children—all sons, viz.: George, Adam, Samuel, Joseph and Jacob, all of whom are now dead or moved out of this State. George was a minister of the German Baptist denomination, but moved to the West many years ago. Joseph became a noted physician, and practiced his profession in West Bethlehem township, until his death. She and her husband were both members of the German Baptist Church, and the brick church on Daniels run, still in use by that society, was built on land donated by her husband.

David, born March 8, 1787, located on a portion of his father's homestead, and also purchased the Ludwig Praker farm adjoining, on which he lived the remainder of his life. He was twice married, his first wife being Miss Esther Shidler and his second Miss Rachel Garrett. He literally obeyed the Divine command "to multiply and replenish the earth," for he became the father of eighteen children. By his first wife he had ten, viz.: Adam, Jr., Barbara, Elizabeth, David, Jr., George, Henry, Hannah, Anne, John and Benjamin. By his second he had eight, viz.: Amos, Jacob, Nicholas, Isaac, Mary, Lydia, Maria and Isabel. Of this large family all are now living but five, and the homes of the balance are scattered in four different States. He was a worthy member of the German Baptist denomination, and illustrated by life and example the teachings of the Divine Master whom he loved and served. Three of his sons, viz.: Adam, David and John, are ministers of the German Baptist Church, the latter being a bishop of that Society. Two of his grandsons are also in the ministry.

Samuel, born August 10, 1789, married a Miss Shidler, a daughter of John Shidler. He first settled on a farm near Hillsborough in West Bethlehem township, but subsequently removed to Knox county, Ohio. He had a large family of which nothing definite is now known to the writer.

George, born November 13, 1791, married Miss Margaret Utery, a daughter of Stephen Utery, of this county. He resided for several years near the village of Hillsborough, but subsequently purchased a large tract of land situated on Ruff's creek in Greene county, Penn., to which he removed. In his old age he disposed of this homestead and moved with his family to Marshall county, Ill. He was the father of nine children, viz.: sons—Stephen, Jackson, Morgan and George A.; daughters—Maria, Elizabeth, Isabel, Margaret C. and Matilda. Several of these are now dead, the balance reside in the West. He was a minister in the German Baptist Church, and for many years was pastor of the society of that name on Daniels run. He was not an educated man in the modern acceptance of that term, but his strong practical common sense, wise counsel and earnest piety made him an acceptable minister to his congregation.

Rebecca, born November 20, 1795, married Peter Crumrine, who was a resident of Greene county, Penn. She was the mother of three children. She died at an early age, and her husband, having remarried, moved with his family to Knox county, Ohio. The writer knows nothing of the subsequent history of this family.

Joseph, born May 22, 1797, married Miss Parmelia Barnard, and lived on the mill property heretofore spoken of, which he owned and operated for several years. About the year 1824 his brother, Frederick Wise, purchased a half interest in the mill property and it was operated by the brothers as joint owners until 1840, when it finally passed out of the ownership of the Wise family. Joseph also purchased 165 acres of the original Wise tract from Andrew Wise, the son of Peter Wise, and resided thereon until his death. He was the father of nine children, viz.: sons—Solomon B., Morgan R. and Joseph Jr.; daughters—Elizabeth, Mary, Emily and Rebecca (both dead), Maria and Barbara. Of these Solomon B. and Morgan R. both reside in Arizona Territory. Morgan became a noted politician, having twice represented Greene county, Penn., in the Legislature, and was twice elected to Congress. Joseph Wise, Jr., inherited his father's homestead and still resides on it, title to which has vested in the Wise family without a break in the succession for one hundred and twenty-two years. Joseph, Jr., married Miss Mary Reynolds, who was educated at Washington Female Seminary, and graduated therefrom in the class of 1869. The daughters living are all married, and all reside in Pennsylvania. Joseph Wise, Sr., was a member and for many years a ruling elder in the Regular Baptist Church. He was a man of strong religious conviction and was always ready to defend the doctrines of his church, yet he was liberal and tolerant of the opinions of others, and had the respect and confidence of all. He died April 20, 1873, and his mortal remains are interred in the graveyard on the old plantation.

Solomon, born May 16, 1799, married Pamela Alexander for his first wife, and after her death he married Jane, her sister. He inherited the greater part of his father's homestead, which he sold in 1854, and moved to Marshall county, Ill., where he died. His children by his first wife were Sarah Jane, Alexander and Adam T.; by his second Harriet, Emma, Leonidas and Hamlin. The latter died in infancy, the rest are living in the West. Solomon Wise was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was one of the original members of the M. E. Society at Utery's, organized in 1810. He was one of its first board of trustees, and was a zealous and liberal member of the church.

Frederick, the fourth son of Adam Wise in the order of their ages, was born September 2, 1793. He married, September 1, 1817, Elizabeth Burson, a daughter of Edward and Elizabeth Burson (nee Blackledge), who were among the earliest settlers in what is now Greene county. They emigrated to this section from Bucks county, Penn., in 1789, and settled on a farm near Clarksville, Penn., where Mrs. Wise was born January 26, 1799. She had seven brothers—James, Thomas, David, Levi, Joseph, Isaac and Abraham—and two sisters—Sarah and Margaret. Of these, Thomas, Levi, Isaac and Abraham were citizens of Greene county, Penn. Thomas was a man of considerable note, having held public offices of various kinds during forty-five years of his life. He twice represented Greene county in the Legislature, and served two terms as associate judge of the court. Isaac also served a term as associate judge. Abraham inherited the family homestead, to which his son, James C., succeeded, it having been owned successively by members of the family for one hundred and three years. James and David settled in Columbiana county, Ohio, and Joseph in Jefferson county, Ohio. Sarah became the wife of John Johnston, of Columbiana county, Ohio, and Margaret married Joseph Burson, of Guernsey county, Ohio.

Mrs. Wise was a Quakeress by birth, and could trace her lineage through a long line of Quaker ancestry back to Joseph Burson, who came from London, England, to Philadelphia with William Penn's first colony of Quakers in 1681. Her great-great-grandmother was Mary Potts, an aunt of Isaac Potts, at whose house near Valley Forge Washington had his headquarters in the Revolution. Frederick Wise, as before stated, was joint owner with his brother Joseph of the mill property, and in addition he owned about 120 acres of the original "Fishery" tract, having purchased it from his father, upon which he lived, and where his useful, honorable and blameless life closed in death, February 14, 1876, when he was aged eighty-two years five months twelve days. He was buried in the old Wise burying ground, already the last resting place of many of his own kith and kin. His beloved wife died December 23, 1879, and now sleeps by his side. She was aged eighty years ten months and twenty-seven days. Frederick Wise and his wife were both members of the German Baptist Church, of which he was an elder or deacon. He was of a quiet, peaceable disposition, and was pre-eminently a peacemaker. He was frequently called upon to settle disputes among his neighbors, and especially among the membership of his church, and so great was the confidence reposed in his wisdom, justice and impartiality, that his arbitrament generally proved satisfactory, and the blessing promised to the peacemaker by the Divine Master rested upon him, even during his life on earth. He was the father of four children, viz.: Adam, who died in infancy, Margaret, Emeline and Joseph B.

Margaret was born October 2, 1818, became the wife of James C. Hawkins, March 24, 1836, and died January 15, 1892, less than one year after the death of her husband, with whom she had lived happily for fifty-five years. Her married life was spent on a farm in East Bethlehem township, Washington county. She and her husband were consistent members of the Bethlehem Baptist Church, in which faith she continued steadfast until her death. She possessed in an eminent degree the qualities which adorn womanhood. We quote the following tribute to her memory published at the time of her decease by a distinguished minister of the Baptist Church. "She was a woman of peace and great kindness of heart. For many years her home was the home of her pastor, and she was faithful to her church even at the expense of her comfort and health. She possessed those traits which endeared her to her family and neighbors, and led her to faithful service to her Master." She was the mother of seven children, viz.: Emma (now dead), who became the wife of Rev. J. L. Thompson; Dr. A. W. H., who was a surgeon in the United States navy, died unmarried; Alexander L., who married Miss Cynthia Greenfield (he served in the United States army as captain during the war of the Rebellion, and is now colonel of the Tenth Regiment, N. G. P.); Cynthia is unmarried; Elizabeth, now dead, became the wife of John Sargent; James R. married Miss Decima Adleman; William N. married Miss Ada Farquhar. All of these who are now living reside in Washington county.

Emeline, born November 28, 1820, became the wife of Richard C. Hawkins, November 25, 1841, and resides on a farm near Jefferson, Greene Co., Penn. She and her husband are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. She is the mother of eight children, viz.: Joseph W., who married Miss Clarinda Bailey; James T. (now deceased), married to Miss Anna E. Greenlee; Margaret V., married to William C. Bailey; Clara E., married to William J. Bodley; Thomas H., married to Miss Frances Bailey; William B., married to Miss Mary Murdock; Samuel C., married to Miss Mary E. Grimes; Frederick W., deceased in infancy; all the survivors reside in Greene county, Penn., except Clara, who lives in Wheeling, West Virginia.

Joseph B., born May 29, 1833, was married November 30, 1879, to Miss Sarah V. Stockdale, of Morris township, Greene Co., Penn. Her parents were William and Hannah Stockdale (nee McQuaid), both of Washington Co., Penn. Her grandparents were James Stockdale, of Belfast, Ireland, and Mary Wier, of Morris township, Washington Co., Penn. Her brothers were Hon. Thomas R. Stockdale, now member of Congress from Mississippi; Hon. James Stockdale, of Baltimore, Md., deceased; Hon. John M. Stockdale, of Washington, Penn., and Robert Stockdale, Esq., of Mount Pleasant, Iowa. Her sisters were Mary, wife of Thaddeus Dodd, M. D., of Amity, Penn., and Isabel, wife of Blachley Lindley, of Morris township, Washington Co., Pennsylvania.

Joseph B. Wise was educated at Greene Academy and Waynesburgh College, Penn., at which institution his wife graduated in the class of 1854. He was engaged in teaching for ten years, and then turned his attention to farming and stock raising. He owns about two hundred acres of the original Fishery tract, a part of which he inherited from his father, on which he now resides. He is now serving his third term as justice of the peace.

He is the father of two children, viz.: William F., who graduated from Washington and Jefferson College in the class of 1883, read law with Thomas C. Lazear, Esq., of Pittsburgh, and is now a practicing attorney in that city; Charles S., who graduated from Washington and Jefferson College in the class of 1888, and read law with David T. Watson, Esq., of Pittsburgh, where he is a practicing attorney with his brother.

We here close the biography of the Wise family. We regret its many omissions and imperfections, but we plead in extenuation the meagerness of our material. If any early records of the family were kept, they are now lost, and we have been compelled to rely for our information on public documents and such family traditions as we believe to be authentic. We regret that we could not give more in detail the history of the collateral branches of the family, but this the limited space at our command forbids. Our object has been to commemorate the dead rather than the living; to brush away the dust from a few noble old burial urns, in which repose the ashes of the founders of our family. Our aim has been to exhibit the trunk and primary branches from which our family has sprung, so that the generations present and to come may attach their branches thereto, and thus keep alive and in vigorous growth the old family tree. In reviewing the history of our family, we find that they have been mostly plain, practical, common people—generally farmers. None of them "have stood the applause of listening senates to command," or "waded through slaughter to a throne," but some of them have honorably filled almost every position in life. Some have been representatives in Congress and in the Legislatures of their respective States. Some have been editors, some physicians, some lawyers. Some have been ministers of the Gospel of Christ, and some have stood as loyal soldiers on the battle fields of their country. None of them have been millionaires, but most of them have been well to do, and none so poor that they could not command their own time and lead an independent life. And best of all, none have ever lived an inebriate's life, or been convicted of an infamous crime.

That the generations yet to be may emulate and excel those past and present, in all that constitutes the highest type of intellectual, moral and Christian manhood, is the wish of the author—JOSEPH B. WISE.

WILLIAM A. PATTERSON, one of the leading merchants of Monongahela, is a son of Joseph, whose father was James Patterson. The latter was born in 1790, in eastern Pennsylvania, where he grew to manhood, and was married to Mary Watt, who bore him twelve children. For his second wife he selected Miss Mary Swonger, and two children were born to their marriage. He came to Allegheny county at a very early date, and was prominently identified with its early development. He voted with the Whig party, and in religious faith was a member of the United Presbyterian Church. The pioneer farm is yet owned by members of his family.

Joseph Patterson, son of James and Mary (Watt) Patterson, was born May 28, 1828, near Buena Vista, Allegheny Co., Penn., and was there reared to manhood. He assisted in the farm duties during early life, and when a young man married Rebecca, daughter of Col. James Scott, who, in his day, was a leading citizen of Allegheny county, and a prosperous stockman. Mr. Scott possessed a gifted mind, and was a brilliant military officer, having served as colonel of the militia in the war of 1812. He was married in Allegheny county to Mary Van Kirk, who bore him the following children: Diana, wife of James Wykoff; Susan; John V.; Harvey; Samuel; Mary, wife of Samuel Van Kirk; Joseph; Rebecca (Mrs. Patterson); William; Sarah; James, and Isaac. Mr. Scott was a leading politician, and served in the State Legislature. In religious faith he was a member of and elder in the Presbyterian Church.

Joseph and Rebecca (Scott) Patterson resided on the home place for several years after their marriage. They then moved to Elizabeth, remaining there thirteen years, after which he purchased a farm in Nottingham township, this county. He sold out a few years later, and coming to Monongahela successfully conducted a grocery store for some time. He was a very prosperous business man, taking an active interest in politics, and was equally prominent in religious circles, having served as an elder in the Presbyterian Churches at Round Hill, Mingo, and Monongahela. He died in 1889, having reared the following children: James S. (deceased), William A. (whose name opens this sketch), Mary (wife of A. J. Yohe), Vivia (married to James Stewart), and Vernie P. (wife of Frank Bebout).

William A. Patterson was born August 22, 1853, near Suiter Station, Allegheny Co., Penn., and at the age of seventeen years came to Washington county. He attended the public schools, and the Southwestern State Normal School at California, Penn., afterward graduating from Duff's Business College, Pittsburgh, Penn. Upon leaving college he entered the employ of the P. V. & C. R. R. as ticket agent at Houston's Run, remaining there but one year. He then embarked in mercantile enterprises and formed a partnership with his father in the grocery store, finally taking a trip to southwestern Arkansas, where he purchased a sheep ranch. One year later he returned to Monongahela, Penn., and opened a furniture store at the stand formerly occupied by Swiekard's shoe business. Soon afterward he remodeled and took possession of his present place of business which is one of the finest stores in Monongahela. He carries a full line of furniture and undertaking goods, and enjoys a large amount of custom. In political opinion he is a wide-awake Democrat, having served his party as a member of the council, and in religion is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He married, April 14, 1880, Belle, daughter of Ira Bebout, of Monongahela. Their children are Ada, Mary, Allie, William A. and Bertha.

JOHAN WILSON, superintendent of Washington County Home, located in Chartiers township, was born September 15, 1844, in Hopewell (now Independence) township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a son of John and Ellen (Murphy) Wilson, natives of County Down, Ireland, whence they emigrated in 1838 to Washington county, Penn., settling on a farm in Hopewell township. Mr. Wilson owned a good farm, and followed agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1877, his wife surviving him until July, 1878. They were the parents of three children: Mary M., wife of John Adamson, of Hopewell township; John; and Samuel, married and residing in California.

John Wilson was reared in Independence township, and received his education in the district schools of the same. He commenced life as a farmer boy and continued to follow agriculture till 1882. On April 22, 1875, he was married in Independence township, to Miss Lizzie A. Denny, a native of Washington county, daughter of Walter and Mary (Welch) Denny, also natives of this county. Mr. Denny is a farmer of Independence township, and has been a resident of Washington county all his life, the Denny family having settled here at a very early date. After his marriage Mr. Wilson located in Independence township, and in 1877 removed to Hopewell township, where he remained till 1882 when he abandoned farming, and engaged in the Revenue service as storekeeper and gauger in the Twenty-second District of Pennsylvania, in which he continued till December 1, 1885. He then embarked in general merchandising at West Middletown, this county, following this until his appointment as superintendent of the County Infirmary, which took place in 1891. To Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have been born two children: Annie G. and Manie E. Mr. Wilson and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Washington. He has been identified with the county all his life, and takes an active interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of the community.

CHARLES BANFIELD. England has given to this country some of the most loyal, industrious, enterprising and thrifty citizens, an excellent representative of such being the subject of this sketch, who by hard work, thrift and honorable dealings has succeeded in accumulating, from absolutely nothing, a comfortable competence.

Mr. Banfield was born in Somersetshire in 1815, a son of Joseph and Mary (Cook) Banfield—the parents of twelve children, ten of whom grew to maturity, now all scattered; some came to America, one of whom lives in Johnstown, Penn., another in Belmont county, Ohio; Charles and John are in Washington county. While our subject was yet a child his parents took him to the Forest of Done, in Monmouthshire, England. His education was very limited, as we find him when but a lad of eight years acting in the capacity of "doorkeeper" at a coal mine, soon after which he commenced to work as a regular miner, digging from the bowels of the earth the black diamonds. In May, 1838, Mr. Banfield was married in England to Harriet Chevers, and in 1842 he set sail for the United States, landing in New York in the month of May, with his wife and one child. His little savings being now gone, Mr. Banfield set about looking for work of any kind, and at last succeeded in securing a job on a farm in Washington county, during the summer of 1842, his wages being 31½ cents per day. One of his hands being disabled through some cause, he had to do all the work with the other. In the fall of the year he returned to his old occupation of mining in Pittsburgh, receiving $1.10 per 100 bushels of coal. In 1846 he came to Chartiers township and bought a fifteen acre farm which he continued to work until 1868, when he moved into Amwell township, where he lived until 1888, in which year he retired from the farm and came to the borough of Washington. Here he built himself an elegant residence, into which he moved in 1889.

Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Banfield, of whom the following is a brief record: George died in England at the age of two years; Mary, born in England, is now the wife of Robert Thompson, of Houstonville, this county; John, Charles James, Joseph and George, all died young; one died in infancy, and Harriet Maria, "last, not least," the fifth in the family in the order of birth. She for many years, with true filial devotion, has taken care of her aged parents' home. The mother for the past twenty years has been in feeble health. In politics Mr. Banfield is independent; he has held various township offices, such as superintendent of the school board. He is a man of advanced ideas, gifted with a good mind coupled with sound judgment, and on a foundation laid with hardships and cares he has built a record that places him among the most successful men in Washington county, in which success he has been from the outset assisted by a good, sensible, faithful wife.

JOHN IRVIN, one of the prominent and most successful native-born agriculturists of East Finley township, was born August 1, 1835. He is the only living descendant of Francis Irvin, a native of Ireland, where he was born about the year 1780, and whence he emigrated to the United States a short time prior to the commencement of the present century. He landed at Philadelphia, where, after a brief sojourn he married a Miss Hayney, of that city, whose parents had come from the Emerald Isle. Francis Irvin then moved, with his young wife, westward to Washington county, this State, where, for a time, he made his residence near the village of Cross Creek; later came to East Finley township, settling near the headwaters of Wheeling creek, being one of the pioneers of that section. Here, with his own hands, he hewed for himself a home out of what was then a vast wilderness, and where are now fertile fields and fruitful valleys. To this honored pioneer couple were born the following named children: Andrew, Nancy, William, James, Margaret, Sarah and Franklin, all now deceased except Sarah, who is at present living in Adams county, Ill. In 1837 Francis Irvin moved from Washington county to Adams county, Ill., accompanied by his wife and all his children except two, Andrew (who afterward migrated to Licking county, Ohio) and James, the entire journey being made in wagons, and here the grandmother died in 1848, and the grandfather in 1849.

James Irvin, father of subject, was born about 1800 in Washington county, Penn., where he was married to Martha Harvey, daughter of James Harvey, of West Finley township, this county, and to their union were born children as follows: Elizabeth Ann, married to S. N. Farabee, and died in 1855; John; Martha and James (both deceased in infancy). The father was called from earth March 21, 1856, the mother having passed away October 11, 1839. Mr. Irvin, in 1835, purchased the property which our subject now owns and resides on, in East Finley township, where he carried on general farming with considerable success; he was an extensive cattle dealer and drover, and frequently had driven cattle from Illinois (where he had purchased them) to the Philadelphia (Penn.) market.

John Irvin, the subject proper of these lines, was born in East Finley township, passed his boyhood and youth on his father's farm, and, being the only son, his duties were of necessity by no means light, and but little time could be spared for school training. His mother died when he was four years old, and his father's sister, Margaret, took charge of the house. After the death of his father Mr. Irvin took an extensive trip through the States of Iowa and Illinois, at that time included in the "Far West," his journeyings occupying over a year's time. On his return to Washington county he again took up farming, and, in connection therewith, engaged extensively in the buying, raising and selling of live stock. On June 29, 1859, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Ann Blayney, of West Finley township, who was born November 17, 1842, and this union has been blessed with the following children: James H., born June 29, 1860, at present managing his father's farm; William M., born May 15, 1862, died August 7, 1885; Martha Jane, born September 11, 1864, married to Jesse Montgomery, of East Finley township; Mary M., born September 11, 1866, married to R. A. Marshall, also of East Finley township; Ada L., born December 19, 1869, living at home; Jonathan or "Johnnie," born December 15, 1872, died March 21, 1873; Cad B., born June 16, 1871, died August 27, 1882; Harvey, born February 1, 1877; Charles O., born April 28, 1880, and John, born January 25, 1883, all three living at home. Soon after his marriage Mr. Irvin took up his residence on the old home farm, where he has since resided, carrying on general agriculture, including stock raising and dealing in wool, but is now retired from active work, his farm being managed under his personal direction. Politically, he is prominently identified with the Republican party; he and his wife are consistent members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Old Concord, in Morris township.

AW. KIMMONS, a leading citizen of West Alexander, and a well known justice of the peace for that borough, is a native of Washington county, Penn., having first seen the light in West Finley township, September 20, 1829. He comes of vigorous Scotch-Irish lineage, his grandfather, John Kimmons, having shortly after his marriage emigrated from his native Erin to the shores of Columbia, settling on a farm in East Finley township, this county, at a very early day. The children born to this pioneer were John, Thomas, Samuel, Andrew and Anna (Mrs. Samuel McCoy). The tract of land Mr. Kimmons settled on was then all wild wood land, and this he and his family largely improved. Here he died, full of years and honor, a devout member of the Presbyterian Church, and a staunch Whig in politics.

Samuel Kimmons, father of the subject of these lines, was also a native of East Finley township, born May 4, 1790, and was there reared to agricultural pursuits, his education being received at the subscription schools of the period. In 1813 he was married to Eleanor Ross, who was born November 11, 1790, in New Jersey, and they then settled down to a co-partnership life on a farm situated in West Finley township, near the village of Good Intent. Here they remained until 1837, when they moved to Marshall county, W. Va., and there died, the father February 21, 1875, and the mother February 10, 1880. They were members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he was trustee, and his political preferences were Democratic until 1861, when he donned the Republican toga. He was a very popular man, and was frequently called to offices of trust and responsibility by his fellow-citizens. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Kimmons were as follows: William (deceased), Anna (wife of James Potter, of Adams county, Ill.), Jane (wife of George Potter), Thomas (deceased), Deborah (deceased wife of Noah Trumbull), Abner (living in Dallas, W. Va.), A. W. (a resident of West Alexander) and Alfred (residing in Ohio county, W. Va.).

A. W. Kimmons passed his early boyhood at the home of his birth, receiving his primary education at the schools of the district. When eight years old he accompanied his parents to Marshall county, W. Va., where he completed his education, and carried on farming until 1858, in which year, on March 25, he was united in marriage with N. J., daughter of Martin Armstrong, a native of Donegal township, this county, and the children born to this union were Laura M. (wife of W. A. McCausland), Carrie L. (wife of Theodore Henderson), Annie N., Minnie B. and Emma I.

James Armstrong, father of Martin Armstrong (above mentioned), was a native of Ireland, whence while yet a young man he came to the United States, settling in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., at a time when the country was entirely new. He married Margaret Martin, a native of Scotland, and reared a large family of children, as follows: Hugh, Mary, John, James, Joseph, David, Margaret (Mrs. Robert Stewart), Martin and Samuel. The father was one of the founders of the West Alexander Presbyterian Church, and was among the first trustees; politically he was an Old-line Whig, and at one time served the Government in the capacity of scout. Martin Armstrong, son of James, was reared to manhood in Donegal township, receiving his education at the local schools. He was married to Margaret, daughter of Samuel Jameson, of Marshall county, W. Va., and the young couple then settled on a farm in West Finley township, this county, where they passed the remainder of their lives. They were consistent members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he was a trustee. In politics he was first a Whig, then a Republican, and was a prominent member of the school board. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Martin Armstrong were Samuel, James, Mary M. (Mrs. O. P. Henderson), N. J. (Mrs. A. W. Kimmons), Thomas, Lura, Luther, Hattie N. (Mrs. John Kimmons), William J. (living in Linden, Kans.) and Chester, of whom Samuel, Thomas, Lura, Luther and Chester are now deceased. After marriage A. W. Kimmons settled on a farm in West Finley township, where he followed agricultural pursuits for twenty eight years; he then moved into the borough of Washington, remaining one and one-half years, or until 1887, in which year he came to West Alexander, where he has since made his home. The family are all members of the Presbyterian Church, of which denomination at Dallas Mr. Kimmons had been an active adherent for twenty-five years. In his political preferences he is a straight Republican, and has served his township with much satisfaction in various offices of trust; in 1891 he was elected a justice of the peace, a position he is filling with eminent ability and sound judgment.

THE CHRISTMAN FAMILY. Enos Lewis Christman was the pioneer of the Christman family in Washington county, Penn. He was a son of George Christman and Sarah, nee Beerbower, and was born December 27, 1828, in Vincent township, Chester Co., Penn. His father passed from life in 1843, when the subject of our notice was under fifteen years of age, leaving a widow and two younger children, William Davis and Jefferson. The mother was left in circumstances which rendered it necessary for the elder boys to take care of themselves.

Enos L. spent the summer of 1844 with an uncle, Jacob Beerbower, who kept a store in Brecknock township, Lancaster county, where he assisted in attending store and working on a farm. In the fall of that year he returned to his mother's home and attended the public school until February 10, 1845, when he entered the office of the Village Record, at West Chester, Penn., and was apprenticed to the late Hon. Henry S. Evans, for five years, to learn the art, trade and mysteries of a printer. He was the successor as an apprentice in that office, of Bayard Taylor, the great traveler; Hon. William Butler, judge of the United States district court, and of Edward M. Paxson, one of the supreme judges of Pennsylvania. Here he served his master so satisfactorily that when the gold fever broke out all over the country, in 1849, Mr. Evans not only released him from serving the balance of his time as an apprentice, but advanced him $400 in cash to go to California. This money was returned at the end of two years with a handsome percentage added.

He sailed from Philadelphia on July 3, 1849.

*Respectfully Yours,

in the good ship "Europe," Capt. Addison Plummer, passing around Cape Horn, and stopping a month at Valparaiso, Chili, to repair damages to the ship. The voyage was an eventful one, occupying two hundred and twenty two days, and landing Mr. Christman in San Francisco in February, 1850. His face, like that of all others at that time, was turned toward the gold mines. After suffering many hardships he was soon at work with pick, shovel and bowl, washing the golden sands on the upper waters of the Mariposa river. He met with indifferent success as a miner, and in July, 1850, he printed the first number of the Sonora Herald, at Stockton, and carried it to Sonora on horseback, where it was circulated at 50 cents per copy. A printing office was soon established in a tent in Sonora, and a little later he entered into partnership with Dr. Lewis C. Gunn, formerly of Philadelphia, and the paper was published regularly for several years. After roughing it in the Golden State until the fall of 1852, Mr. Christman returned to West Chester, Penn., where he married Miss Ellen A. Martin, a native of Philadelphia, whose mother dying when she was a little child, the daughter was taken to West Chester, and raised in the family of the late Capt. William Apple, her uncle, as one of their own children.

In November, 1852, Mr. Christman, with his wife, came to Washington, Penn., and he purchased a half interest in the Commonwealth newspaper, and entered into partnership with George C. Stouch, a former fellow apprentice in the Village Record office. The paper had been started by Seth T. Hurd. This partnership continued until the death of Mr. Stouch, in December, 1855. The Hon. William S. Moore subsequently became a partner with Mr. Christman in the publication of the paper, but owing to the disintegration of the Whig party, which cause it had espoused, and the formation of new political parties, the paper became embarrassed, and early in 1858 it was consolidated with the Reporter, then, as now, the oldest paper in Washington county. After the consolidation, without disposing of his interest in the paper, Mr. Christman returned to West Chester, where he was employed by his old master, Mr. Evans, as foreman in the Village Record office. Here he remained until the Rebellion of the slaveholders broke out, when he promptly enlisted, in the latter part of May, 1861, and became second lieutenant of Company K, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Corps. With this body he served in the field until May, 1863, when he was appointed, by President Lincoln, provost-marshal of the Seventh District of Pennsylvania, embracing Chester and Delaware counties, with headquarters at West Chester, filling the position until the close of the war, being discharged November 30, 1865. While in the field he participated in the battles in front of Richmond (known as the Seven Days' fight), the second Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam and Fredericksburg, and was promoted first to captain and then to major of the Fourth Regiment. It is a curious coincidence that the three brothers, all in different commands, were almost side by side in the bloody battle of Antietam. Enos L. was under Gen. Meade, in front of the cornfield to the left of the pike; William Davis was a lieutenant in the One Hundred and Twenty fourth Regiment, adjoining the Reserves on the right, and near to the Dunkard church, while Jefferson was in the Seventy second Regiment, fighting on the left of the Reserves.

At the close of the war Mr. Christman moved with his family to Somerset county, Md., where he engaged in farming and the timber business. Not succeeding up to the standard of his desires, he returned to West Chester and became assistant editor with Mr. Edward B. Moore, in the publication of the American Republican. In 1872 Hon. William S. Moore, his old partner in the Washington Reporter, having been elected to Congress, was very anxious that Mr. Christman should return to Washington and resume his place in the printing office. This was agreed upon, and on April 2, 1873, Mr. Christman returned to Washington, after an absence of fifteen years, and took charge of the publication of the Reporter during Mr. Moore's absence at the national capital. In August, 1876, the first number of the Daily Reporter was issued. Shortly after this Mr. Moore died, and his interest in the paper passed into the hands of Alex. M. Gow, Esq. In January, 1883, Mr. Christman purchased the interest of Mr. Gow, and became sole proprietor of the paper. He had now a family of eight sons and daughters around him, and in March, 1891, the Christman Publishing Company was chartered, being a family concern as the name indicates. At this time Mr. Christman's health failed, and since then he has had but little to do with the practical publication of the paper, the company, under the leadership of his son William, managing it vigorously and successfully.

The children of this family were: Mary Elizabeth, died in infancy; Sarah, married to Charles M. Hayes, and has two sons, Harry and Clyde; Elizabeth and Ella; William, married to Miss Fannie M. Morgan, deceased in 1891, having three children, Howard L., Frank and Herbert; George, baggage master, B. & O. R. R.; Henry, married to Miss Lena Fleissner, and has one daughter, Nellie; Edwin A., married to Mrs. Maggie Frazier, and has two children, Roy and Hazel; Charles F., married to Miss Clara F. Neff. All are residents at this time (1892) of Washington, Penn.

Mr. Christman's youngest brother, Jefferson, learned the printing business in the office of the Commonwealth and subsequently settled in Philadelphia. After serving three years in the Seventy-second Regiment, he took a situation in the Public Ledger office, where he has been employed as a compositor for many years. He married Miss Maggie Powers, and they have four daughters, two of whom are married—Lillie, to Morris Naylor, and Ida, to Harry Conaway. William Davis, the other brother, after following the mercantile business for many years in Chester county, removed to Washington and took a position in the Reporter office. He married Miss Zilpha A. Maxton. They have two sons living, Dr. Percy, a successful physician at Washington, and Frederick B., engaged in the printing business in Chicago. An only daughter, Coña, died in young womanhood, at West Chester, in 1879.

John Beerbower was the father of Sarah Beerbower, wife of George Christman. He was born in Vincent township, Chester Co., Penn., March 10, 1779, and died in East Vincent township, October 20, 1858. He was a carpenter and farmer, and was many years a justice of the peace. He was commissioned, by Gov. Simon Snyder, as captain of a company of militia in the First Brigade of the Third Division of the counties of Chester and Delaware, on August 1, 1814, and served a tour of duty during the war of that time with Great Britain. His wife was Elizabeth Fertig, who was born July 20, 1784, and died March 29, 1828. They are buried at (Brownback's) First Reformed church of Coventry. This church was organized in 1743. Herman Bierbauer was the father of John Beerbower. He was born in Germany, July 16, 1741, came to America when a young man, died December 29, 1801, and is buried at the old Hill church, on the Ridge road, in East Pikeland township, Chester county. His tombstone is lettered in German. His wife was Christiana Hoffman. She was born October 7, 1747, and died February 7, 1826.

The ancestors of the Christmans were Germans. The Colonial records of Pennsylvania show that between the years 1730 and 1771, eleven Christmans, several with families, landed at Philadelphia and swore allegiance to King George II. This record states that: "Daniel Christman arrived at Philadelphia September 5, 1730, with forty five palatines and their families, 130 persons in all, in the ship 'Alexander and Ann,' William Clymer, Master, from Rotterdam, last from Cowes." Daniel subsequently settled in Worcester township, now Montgomery county, and in 1734 paid quit rents in that township. He had five sons and one daughter. Felix, the oldest son, was born in Germany, the other children in Pennsylvania, viz.: Henry, George, John, Jacob and Magdalene. Of these Felix, Henry, George and Magdalene settled in Vincent township, Chester county, previous to the Revolutionary war. Felix, when an old man, was found dead in shallow water, in Birch run, near his home. He was a blacksmith. Henry was a saddler and George a miller and millwright.

Henry Christman, the saddler, was born in Montgomery county, Penn., December 25, 1744, and settled in Vincent township, Chester county, as above stated, where he became the owner of a large tract of land, situated on French creek. Here he lived during the Revolutionary war, and it is handed down as a tradition that he did considerable hauling for the patriots at that time. It is also said that his fine, heavy draught horses were sometimes hidden in the thick bushes along the creek to prevent them from being seized by the British, who ranged through that neighborhood while Washington was at Valley Forge. On one occasion he traded a barrel of whisky, being a distiller, and a set of heavy wagon harness for forty acres of land, which afterward became valuable. He died September 16, 1823, and is buried in the family burial plot at Zion's church, in East Pikeland, Chester county. He married Susanna Keeley, who was born February 25, 1750. She died September 19, 1823, only three days after the decease of her husband, and is buried by his side. This couple had three sons—Henry, Jacob and George; and six daughters who grew to womanhood—Madeline, married to John Young; Catherine, married to John Miller; Margaret, married to Isaac Hanse; Elizabeth, married to Peter Yeager; Mary, married to Jacob Finkbiner and Frederick Yost; and Susanna, married to Frederick Oyer.

George, the younger of the brothers, married Elizabeth Brownback, and lived on the old homestead on French creek until his death. He was born May 9, 1793, and died January 17, 1866. His wife was born January 5, 1793, and died March 19, 1870, of gangrene after having a foot amputated. The old homestead with its many acres is still in possession of the family.

Jacob, the next older brother, was born May 5, 1788, and died March 2, 1871. He married Margaret Evans, who was born December 13, 1791, and died April 1, 1862. They lived on a farm of about 300 acres adjoining the old homestead. They had four children: Elizabeth, married to Jesse Brownback; Susanna; Jacob, married to Miss Hannah Worman, and Henry E., married to Miss Martha Christman. The last named retain the farm owned by the father.

Henry Christman, the eldest of these brothers, was born March 14, 1779, and died August 12, 1864. On February 26, 1806, he married Elenor Root, daughter of Sebastian Root. She was born April 10, 1787, and died August 19, 1854, while on a visit to her daughter, Margaret Buckwalter, at Parker's Ford, in Chester county. They lived on a large farm adjoining the old Christman homestead as well as that of the brother Jacob. These brothers were all stout, able bodied men, of good height and build. They were successful farmers and distillers, and in their early days sold many a barrel and tierce of first quality apple whisky in the Philadelphia market. Henry was also the owner of an oil mill, which, about the year 1835 he converted into a flour mill. This with the farm he retained until his death. He was commissioned lieutenant colonel in the First Brigade in the militia of Delaware and Chester counties, by Gov. Simon Snyder, and served a tour of duty in the war of 1812-14 with Great Britain. To this couple was born a large family: George, February 10, 1807; Sarah, February 14, 1809; Susanna, March 24, 1811; Henry, August 13, 1813; Catharine, September 22, 1816; Eliza, October 1, 1818; Elenor, April 10, 1821; Maria, February 10, 1823; and Margaret, November 10, 1821. Of these Sarah and Eliza died in childhood; Margaret married Isaac Buckwalter, and died January 16, 1885, leaving two daughters; Catharine married Isaac Shantz, and died July 28, 1866, leaving two children, a son and daughter; Susanna married Michael March, and died April 19, 1891, leaving to survive her two sons, Franklin and Jefferson, and two daughters, Mrs. Ellen Brownback and Mrs. Emma Miller; Maria married Abraham Pennyacker (she survives her husband and has four sons living); Elenor resides with this sister; Henry died suddenly July 24, 1865, and was unmarried.

George, the first born of Henry and Elenor Christman, spent his childhood under his father's roof. At the age of twenty-one, December 23, 1827, he married Miss Sarah Beerbower, and continued in the service of his father as farmer and teamster until 1835, when he moved to the Seven Stars tavern on the Ridge road, in East Vincent township, less than a mile from where he was born. The farm connected with the tavern was worn out and nearly fenceless. He worked hard, and soon had things greatly improved in appearance, building an addition to the house. In the fall of 1843, after a prolonged illness, he died of fever, in his thirty-seventh year. He was a tall, angular man with dark hair and eyes. His widow subsequently married Henry Huzzard, and died April 27, 1863, in the fifty-sixth year of her age.

All the earlier Christmans were Lutherans, and their names are found in the church records of that denomination in Chester and Montgomery counties.

ANDREW SCOTT RITCHIE. The family of which this gentleman was a worthy representative claim their descent from Scottish ancestry; Andrew Ritchie, grandfather of Andrew S., was a Revolutionary soldier, and at the close of war came to Cross Creek township, settling on a wild tract of land on Muller's run. In 1796 he purchased from Ephraim Hart the farm still owned by the Ritchie family, situated about a mile from Cross Creek village. His wife died in 1834, aged seventy nine years, and himself at the advanced age of eighty five, four years later.

James Ritchie, his son, was born in 1789, and received his education at the subscription schools of the neighborhood. In 1826 or 1827 he married Matilda, daughter of Robert Bowland, a member of an old Washington county family. James Ritchie was a man six feet three inches in height and almost perfect in physique. In politics he was an Old line Democrat, and a substantial supporter of the Presbyterian Church under the guidance of Dr. John Stockton. They had two children: Andrew S., and a daughter who died in infancy. He died in 1834, aged forty five, from cholera contracted at Pittsburgh, Penn. His widow married James Thompson, by which union she had one child—R. B. Thompson—a prominent citizen of West Middletown.

Andrew S. Ritchie was born, December 10, 1828, and reared at West Middletown. When he had completed his rudimentary education in the schools of his district, he entered the Florence Academy and then Washington College, where he graduated in 1849, dividing first honor with three others. He commenced the study of law under T. M. T. McKennan and after his death continued study with Hon. William McKennan, being admitted to the bar in 1852. He never practiced his profession, however, and spent the next few years in teaching. In 1865 he accepted the position of paying teller in the First National Bank of Washington, Penn., which position he filled until 1890, when he was compelled to resign on account of failing health. During the twenty-five years of his connection with the bank he performed his duties ably and faithfully, so that he enjoyed the entire confidence of the board of directors and the community in which he lived. For many years he was a very active member of the board of trustees in the Washington Female Seminary and also of Washington and Jefferson College. On September 10, 1851, Mr. Ritchie married Jane, daughter of James McFadden, of West Middletown, and they had four children, viz.: James McFadden, residing at Sewickley, Penn. (auditor for the H. C. Frick Coke Co., married to Nannie Doyle in 1881. They have one child, Charles Lothrop); Charles Stewart (assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Washington); Annie C. (the wife of Mr. Owen Murphy, a prominent operator in the Washington and Sistersville oil fields), and William Bowland (paying teller of the First National Bank). Mr. Andrew S. Ritchie was a Whig, but later a Republican, and his sons are all Republicans. He died, December 10, 1892, of paralysis, from which disease he had been suffering for two years. He was a member of the First M. E. Church, was loved by a wide circle of friends and relatives, and was respected by all who knew him.

JAMES JOHNSON VAN EMAN. Among the leading representative families of Washington county none are more worthy of special mention in this volume than the one of which the gentlemen, whose name opens this sketch, is an honored member.

James J. Van Eman is a son of Samuel Logan and Martha (McConnell) Van Eman, both natives of Washington county, Penn. The paternal great-grandfather, Nicholas Van Eman, who was a Hollander, was married to Mary Wilson, and their children were George, Nicholas, Andrew, Garrett, Katie, Polly, Susan and Hannah. Of these, George was born September 12, 1753, in Holland, whence he emigrated to America, finally making a new home in Washington county, Penn., as one of the pioneers of North Strabane township, the place of his settlement being a farm near Clokeyville, now owned by Joseph Clokey. He married Rebecca Scott, and they had children as follows: Nicholas, George (a minister), Scott, Jane, Andrew, Rebecca, Elizabeth, Joseph, Garrett, William, Sarah, Abraham and Hannah. The father of this family removed to Stark county, Ohio, in 1810.

Joseph Van Eman, son of George and Rebecca (Scott) Van Eman, was born December 12, 1790, in North Strabane township, this county. When he reached maturity he left the paternal roof and located on a farm (now owned by Thomas Slater) in Cecil township, same county, which he afterward sold, and then, in 1818, bought one near where is now Van Eman station on Chartiers Railroad, in the same township, and here passed the remainder of his days. On February 28, 1811, he married Miss Isabel Logan, and the children born to them were Rebecca (married to John Johnson), James (deceased in infancy), Samuel L. (father of our subject), Joseph (married to Sarah Lee), Mary (married to Samuel Alexander), George (a minister, married to a Miss Bowers), Cyrus (who died when young), Margaret (married to Israel Bebout), Logan (who married Jane Vance) and Sarah (wife of Samuel Bebout). The mother of this family was called from earth May 21, 1870, the father in 1875. They were members of the Centre Presbyterian Church in Peters township, in which for forty years he was a ruling elder. He was a man of superior mind, and of more than ordinary intelligence and executive ability. He was a director of the poor of Washington county, executor and trustee for many estates, and enjoyed the fullest confidence and highest respect of the community at large.

Samuel Logan Van Eman, son of Joseph and Isabel (Logan) Van Eman, was born July 20, 1816, on his father's farm in Cecil township, this county. On September 28, 1847, he married Martha McConnell, also a native of Cecil township, born in 1826 to James and Sarah (Phillips) McConnell, both natives of Washington county, the former of whom was a son of Alexander McConnell, who emigrated with his father from Scotland or the North of Ireland to Cecil township, this county, where both patented land; and the farm which Alexander secured has never been out of the family, being now in the possession of his great-grandson, John P. McConnell. To Samuel L. and Martha (McConnell) Van Eman were born children as follows: James J. (our subject); Belle M., born in 1850, married to John N. Brown, son of Rev. A. B. Brown, D. D., at one time president of Jefferson College; Sadie E. (unmarried), and Joseph Scott (deceased in infancy). The father of this family died October 11, 1891, the mother is still living. They were members of the Centre Presbyterian Church, Peters township, in which he served as a ruling elder for thirty-five years; upright and honorable in all his dealings, and, like his father, executor and trustee for several estates, he was respected and esteemed far and wide.

James Johnson Van Eman was born August 31, 1848, on the old homestead in North Strabane township, this county (near Van Eman station), and received his education at the common schools of his district and at an academy at Elder's Ridge, Indiana Co., Penn., completing his literary training with a course of study at Washington and Jefferson College. On leaving the latter institution he took up and continued work on his father's farm—chiefly buying and selling stock—till his marriage, February 9, 1871, with Miss Maggie Espy, when he opened a store in Thompsonville, Peters township. This he carried on six years, at the end of which time, finding his health becoming impaired, he returned to the farm. Five years later he went to Pittsburgh, where for two years he had a store for the sale of agricultural implements, on leaving which he came to Canonsburg and established his present hardware store, tin and steel roofing establishment, now one of the most extensive businesses in this part of the county. To Mr. and Mrs. Van Eman have been born six children, viz.: M. Etta, Samuel Logan, M. Maude, Nellie, John Espy and James Jay. Mrs. Van Eman was born in Upper St. Clair township, Allegheny Co., Penn., a daughter of John (a farmer) and Margaret (Smith) Espy, both descended of Scotch ancestry. Mr. Van Eman stands high among the leading business men of Washington county, and enjoys the esteem and respect of all who know him. He and his wife are members of the Central Presbyterian Church, of which he is a deacon. Mr. Van Eman is mayor of Canonsburg. In politics he is a Republican.

GEORGE O. JONES is descended from a hardy and long lived English family. His paternal ancestor, Charles E. Jones, the son of an English army officer, was born near Leeds, England, in 1799. He served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, and by hard work and frugal living saved enough to bring him to America, where he came in 1827. Before leaving he married Susan Judson, who had a brother, Robert Judson, living near Washington, Penn. Here Mr. Jones came, and liking the new country immediately sent for his wife and children to follow him. He purchased a lot and built his home on North Main street, where the Jones homestead, in a more modern form, is now located.

Charles E. and Susan Jones were the parents of ten children, two of whom died in infancy; William died in 1853; Sarah died in 1862; Susan died in 1864, just six weeks after her marriage with William McClain; Mary married William Workman and resides at Washington; Jane, the widow of the late William H. Taylor, also lives at Washington; James J. became a Methodist minister, but death cut short that which promised to be a brilliant career (he died at Denver, Colo., in 1875, where he had gone in search of health); Sylvester F. also became a Methodist minister, and is at present pastor of Emmanuel Methodist Episcopal Church at Evanston, Ill. Mrs. Jones died in 1871, at the age of seventy-one; her husband survived her until 1883, when his long life of eighty-four years was brought to a close.

George O. Jones, the youngest of the family, was born November 19, 1845, attended the Washington public schools, and entered Washington College as a student; but the Civil war called him away from his studies, and on February 26, 1864, he enlisted in Company A, One Hundredth P. V. I. On the second day of the battle of the Wilderness, May 6, 1864, while making his way to the front, he was struck in the head by a minie-ball and fell unconscious to the ground. He was carried off the field for dead, his knapsack emptied of rations by W. H. Underwood, who thought George would have no further use for such things; but as a grave was being prepared, signs of life were discovered in him by Dr. Wishart, a surgeon of the One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment, and instead of being consigned to the ground he was ordered to a hospital. As a memento of this incident, Mr. Jones still carries in his pocket a piece of skull bone, about the size of a dime, which was extracted from the wound. After recovery, he returned to his company and served until the close of the war. He was mustered out of service on July 21, 1865.

In January, 1866, he resumed his studies at Washington and Jefferson College and graduated from that institution in 1869. After graduating, he entered the law office of John L. Gow, Jr., as a law student, and was admitted to the bar of this county in August, 1871. In March, 1873, he was commissioned a notary public, which office he has held ever since. At present he has the honor of being the oldest notary public, in time of service, in the county. On May 1, 1872, he married Miss Emma Kidd, daughter of William and Eliza Kidd. As a result of this union, three children have been born, William K., Susan J. and Alice E., all of whom are living. He is a member and past commander of Post No. 120, G. A. R., Department of Pennsylvania. He and his family are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Washington. He is also a trustee of this church.

JOEL TRUESDELL, of West Alexander, was born October 17, 1822, in Claysville, Washington Co., Penn., where the most of his boyhood was passed. The Truesdells are of English origin, and in their native country were generally engaged in merchandising. They emigrated to Connecticut in the early part of the eighteenth century. James Truesdell, the great grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was a native of Connecticut. He enlisted in the war of the Revolution, and died in the service. He had three sons, Samuel, James and Joel, of whom Joel was born in Connecticut in 1769, and was twice married, his first wife being Mehetable Bradley, by whom he had five children, viz.: Clarissa, who became the wife of Seth Gaylord, of New Haven, Conn.; Mabel, who became the wife of Ransom Brockett, of Bristol, Conn.; and Josiah, Calvin and Abel. At the age of seventy-five years Joel Truesdell married, for his second wife, a most estimable lady, Mrs. Sarah Plumb, who lived to be nearly one hundred years of age. Politically, he was a Democrat, was for many years a justice of the peace, and for several years a leading member of the Connecticut Legislature. He was one of the original stockholders and directors in the bank of Waterbury, Conn. While agricultural pursuits were his chief life vocation, he also engaged in a number of other lines of business, and was always regarded as a valuable counselor, and altogether a very enterprising man, much respected for his excellence of character, gentleness and kindness of disposition, and politeness of manner. He died in the year 1856, having been a lifelong member of the Baptist Church.

Josiah Truesdell, the eldest son of the above, was born July 28, 1790, in Bristol, Conn., where he had the advantages of a superior education. In 1820 he came to Washington county, Penn., and after a year's residence there he returned to his native State, and on August 21, 1821, was married to Mary, daughter of Daniel Tuttle, a member of one of the oldest of Connecticut families. The children of this union were: Joel, Luther C. (a resident of Claysville), and Sarah M., the wife of T. C. Noble.

Daniel Tuttle, the father of Mary Tuttle, was born near New Haven, Conn., and was a son of Samuel Tuttle, a direct descendant of William Tuttle, and Elizabeth, his wife, who sailed from Wales in the ship "Planter," and after a voyage of ten weeks landed in Boston, July 1, 1635. William Tuttle was one of the founders and original proprietors of the city of New Haven, and owned the present site of Yale College. His descendants were leading factors in establishing and building up the college at New Haven, and include many of the best known names and families of New England, amongst them being the Rev. Dr. Jonathan Edwards, the theologian and president of Princeton College; Rev. Dr. Timothy Dwight, president of Yale College; Seth Thomas, who became so widely known by his extensive clock manufactories, was reared in Mrs. Truesdell's father's family, his wife being her full cousin. Mrs. Truesdell died January 30, 1876.

In the year 1821 Mr. Truesdell located in Claysville, and entered into partnership with his brother Calvin. At the end of eight years the partnership was dissolved, and Calvin removed to Wheeling, W. Va., where he engaged in the wholesale dry-goods business at the corner of Twelfth and Main streets, Josiah being a partner in the same business. About the year 1834, Calvin removed to Licking county, Ohio, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was a delegate to the convention which nominated William Henry Harrison for the Presidency in 1836. In 1838 he went to Lake county, Ill., where he resided until the time of his death, which occurred in the spring of 1887, when he was in his ninety-second year. His son, Morgan, was a leading citizen of Lake county, Ill., having held the offices of recorder of deeds and mortgages, and also clerk of the courts. His grandson, Gaylord Sankston Truesdell, is a well-known American artist abroad, having resided for the past five years in Paris. He recently contributed a picture to the Corcoran Art Gallery at Washington, D. C., which has elicited a great deal of admiration. Josiah Truesdell and his wife were ardent Presbyterians, and the present house of worship, which was erected in the year 1830, and which has been used by the Presbyterian congregation at Claysville for the past sixty-two years, was erected mainly through the combined efforts of Mr. Truesdell and Rev. Thomas Hoge, the first pastor of that congregation, and who, during his ministry at Claysville, was a resident of Washington; Mr. Hoge agreeing to furnish one-third of the funds necessary to erect the building, on condition that Mr. Truesdell furnish the two-thirds—a proposition which was fulfilled on the part of both, each giving liberally of his own means. While they lived there was the warmest friendship existing between Mr. Hoge and Mr. Truesdell.

Mr. Truesdell was an enthusiastic admirer of John Quincy Adams, and gave one of the only two votes that were cast for him in Donegal township on the occasion of his candidacy for the Presidency. He was an enterprising man, ever having the interests of his borough, township and county at heart. In school matters he was very aggressive as a champion for a better and more advanced system of education. He died November 3, 1830, from injuries sustained by jumping from a stage coach while descending the hill, just immediately west of West Alexander on the National pike, near the West Virginia line. He was thus early cut off in the prime and usefulness of his life, and no one, perhaps, who has been a resident of that section, died more deeply lamented.

Joel Truesdell, the subject proper of this memoir, received his education partly in the schools of his native place, and partly in the select schools of Wheeling, taught at the time by Mr. Ezekiel Hildreth, father of the late Eugene Hildreth, M. D., and Prof. George B. Gow, a relative of the Hon. John L. Gow, late of Washington, Penn. In 1838 he entered the employ of Wilson & Humes, in Claysville, for whom he worked eight years, when he removed to West Alexander, and continued in the employ of Mr. George Wilson, senior member of the above-mentioned firm, until 1852, in which year he embarked in business on his own account in that place. This venture proved a decided success under his superior energy and management, and he not only conducted a general store with an endless variety of stock, but also dealt largely in wool. In 1870 he retired from active business and has since been engaged in various other enterprises. On June 30, 1852, Mr. Truesdell was married to Elizabeth M., daughter of John Valentine, and two children, Mary E. and John V., were born to them, the latter dying in infancy. The mother died in 1862, and in 1864 our subject was wedded to Catherine, daughter of Isaac Mayes, of West Alexander, and one son, Charles L., who died at the age of five years, came to bless this union.

In politics Mr. Truesdell was originally a Whig, and since the organization of the party he has been a Republican. He has represented his party in county and State conventions, has served his township in all its various offices, and has held nearly all the positions of trust in the borough of West Alexander. He was elected auditor of the county in 1876, the board of auditors being composed at that time of himself and Joseph Linton, who served with great satisfaction to their constituents. His party would have been glad at various times to have recognized his high qualities for some of the best offices in the gift of the county, but politics not being in harmony with his tastes, he always declined such proffered honors. For many years he has been prominently connected with the Presbyterian Church at West Alexander, in which he is an elder, and he has contributed largely to its growth and prosperity. He was for many years superintendent of the Sabbath school, at all times taking a lively interest in its success. We may say that no one merits the esteem of the community where he has so long resided, or has the confidence of the people of the county, to whom he is generally known, more than the subject of this sketch. Mr. Truesdell is a man of generous instincts, takes a deep interest in his relatives and friends, and during his life has taken a great deal of pleasure out of making frequent visits to the old New England homes of his father and mother.

GEORGE M. WARRICK, senior member of the firm of George M. Warrick & Sons, dealers in general groceries, Washington, is a native of the county, born in Amwell township February 28, 1831. His grandfather moved, in 1795, from New Jersey to Beaver county, Penn., where he died.

Jonathan T. Warrick, father of George M., was ten years old when he first came to Washington county, and seventeen when he finally returned to it, after a residence for a time in Beaver county. In this county he taught school until he was twenty-six years old, when he commenced carpentering and cabinet making, but finally abandoned those trades for farming, first in Amwell township till 1835, afterward in East Finley township, where he died in 1846, at the age of sixty-two years. He was a surveyor in the county. About the year 1820 he was married to Miss Mary Slack, a native of Washington county, whose parents were of English descent, and came here from New Jersey. To Mr. and Mrs. Warrick were born nine children, as follows: Sarah, wife of Jackson Harshman, in South Strabane township; James, married to a Miss Wilson, died in Davenport, Iowa, at the age of sixty-six years; Matilda, an invalid from the age of eighteen years, died in 1890; Mary, deceased wife of George Ely (one of her sons, Dr. Ely, lives in Washington, Penn.); Charlotte, wife of Elijah Coulson, of Buffalo township; William W., married in 1855 to a Miss Wylie, who died in 1891 (he was a contractor for ten years in company with his brother George M., later went into the grocery business with him, but in 1873 he withdrew from the firm; he now resides in Washington); George M. is the subject of this sketch; Elizabeth is the wife of W. K. Long, of Washington, and Hannah C. is living in Washington. The mother of this family passed from earth in 1817, in East Finley township.

George M. Warrick was educated in the schools of his native township, and worked on his father's farm until sixteen years of age, when, his parents being now dead, he came to Washington, and passed one summer on a farm adjoining the town. He then commenced learning the trade of carpenter, and two years later began the business for his own account. When about twenty years of age he went to Chicago, then a growing city of 30,000 inhabitants. Returning to Washington, he for some years followed contracting, after which, in 1858, he embarked in mercantile business at his present stand, forming a partnership with his brother William W., the style of the firm being G. M. & W. W. Warrick. About 1866 they bought the Washington flouring mills, in partnership with John M. Wilson, carrying on both it and the grocery business. Some seven years later William W. Warrick retired from both concerns, and our subject and Wilson continued together till 1887, when they sold out the mill to Zelt Bros., Wilson also retiring from the grocery. Mr. Warrick then associated his two sons with him in the grocery business, in which they still continue.

In 1855 Mr. Warrick was united in marriage with Miss Mary Wilson, of Taylorstown, daughter of William Wilson, and five children have been born to them, viz.: Matilda Belle, wife of Rev. McCarroll, a Presbyterian minister at Waynesboro, Penn.; William J., married to Anna Polen, and then removed to Plattsmouth, Neb., where he carried on a drug business seven years, then sold, returned to Washington, and is now with his father in the store; John W., with his father; Rachel and Jennie, both at home with their parents. Mr. Warrick has been a member of the M. E. Church since eighteen years of age. When he united with the First M. E. Church of Washington there were 300 members. Politically he was a Democrat up to the Buchanan election, when he enlisted in the Republican ranks. Our subject is a typical self-made man, having had nothing but his own efforts, industry and enterprise to aid him, and when he went into business he possessed but a few hundred dollars. He never speculated, and never incurred a debt that he could not pay inside of six days.

DAVID E. BAKER, senior member of the well known firm of Baker & Worrell, jewelers, was born in Amwell township, January 5, 1849, a son of Nathan and Maria (Horn) Baker. His education was received at the common schools and Lone Pine Academy, the chief part of his time being passed in the customary duties of the farm until he was twenty four years of age.

In 1873 he was united in marriage with Miss Emma, daughter of George Swart, of Amwell township, and two children were born to them, viz.: Winnie Myrtle and Lida Ray. Lida Ray died November 30, 1889. The mother died in 1883, at the age of thirty four years, and in 1887 Mr. Baker married Lizzie, daughter of Dr. Elijah Hoffman, formerly of Buffalo township, this county, now of Wisconsin. To this marriage one child was born—Frank N. Mr. Baker opened out a general merchandise store at Amity, Amwell township, in 1873, which he carried on until 1880, when he sold out. In 1885 he came to Washington borough, where he formed a partnership with George Brady, in the jewelry business, which continued three years, when it was dissolved, and Mr. Baker took as a partner a Mr. McConaghy, but in April, 1891, the latter retired, and Frank N. Worrell took his place, the style of the firm being now, as already intimated, Baker & Worrell, general jewelers. The firm are popular and enterprising, keeping well abreast of the times in their line. Socially Mr. Baker is a member of the Royal Arcanum, of the Improved Order of Heptasophis, and National Union. In politics he is a Republican, and in religion a member of the First M. E. Church of Washington. His home is on Prospect avenue, on the edge of South Strabane township.

WILLIAM P. HASTINGS, proprietor of one of the leading hardware stores in Washington, is of English descent, his paternal grandfather having emigrated from the "Old Country" to America, making a settlement in Washington, this county, where he followed the trade of saddler, and passed the rest of his life. He had children, of whom John C. is deceased; William (now deceased) lived near Brownsville, this county; Samuel died in Indiana; Henderson is deceased; Mary is the wife of Hiram Swart, of Amwell township; and Nancy is deceased.

John C. Hastings was born in Washington, this county, in 1818, and received his education at the local schools. He commenced life a poor boy, and when but eight years of age began to work in Jonathan Martin's fulling mill, but later was employed on the National pike under this same Martin, who was one of the contractors. He learned the carpenter's trade with Joshua Martin, a brother of the above-mentioned Martin, and followed the trade until 1848, when he was appointed clerk in the postoffice under Jonathan Leet. In 1850 he opened on his own account a grocery store, where Brady's jewelry store now stands, and in 1860 formed a partnership with R. F. Streat, in hardware and agricultural implements. He bought Streat's interest in 1869, and in 1871 he removed the hardware business to the store which his son, William P., now keeps. In 1878 he associated the latter with him, which alliance continued until the father's death April 16, 1888, he being then seventy-seven years old. He was originally a Democrat, but in 1856 became a Republican; in religion he was a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Hastings was twice married, first to a daughter of James Nichol, of Washington county, whose immediate ancestry were agriculturists in the early days of the county. In 1852 Mr. Hastings married Miss Hannah, daughter of Huston Paul, and two children were born to them: William P. and Anna G., wife of W. S. Harrah, of Allegheny.

William P. Hastings was born at Washington, Penn., March 22, 1853. He received a liberal education at the common schools of the borough, and in 1870 commenced clerking in his father's store; in 1878 he was admitted as a partner, as already related. He was married to Miss Sarah, daughter of A. B. Ashbrook, of Buffalo township, in 1875, and two bright boys have come to bless their home: Harry, born in 1877, and William, born in 1883. Mr. Hastings is one of the well-known and enterprising young business men of Washington, and represents a family whose progressiveness and integrity have never been questioned.

DAVID McMILLEN CAMPSEY, one of the leading representative and substantial citizens of the county, is a native of the same, having been born October 13, 1843, in Donegal township.

His grandfather, James Campsey, a farmer by occupation, was born June 22, 1772, in Mounter-tany, Parish of Raphoe, County Donegal, Ireland, and in 1794 emigrated to America in the ship "Liberty." In 1792 he had married Elizabeth Johnson, of the same county, born February 1, 1770, and when he immigrated to the United States he was accompanied by his faithful wife and two children: William, born July 1, 1793, and John, born May 4, 1796. For a few years, or until 1801, they lived east of the mountains, and then proceeded westward to Washington county, Penn., making a settlement about two miles south of Claysville, this section being at that time an unbroken and sparsely settled wilderness. When they arrived, the neighbors formed a "bee," and built them a log cabin, the foundation of which was four stumps, one for each corner, but one day being occupied in its erection. Here our little pioneer family made their home, gradually surrounding themselves with the necessaries and comforts of life, and here four more children came to enlarge the domestic circle: Margaret, born February 20, 1798; Joseph, born February 20, 1800; James, born February 20, 1803, and Rebecca, born June 2, 1805. The head of this pioneer family was a vigorous, energetic man, incessantly and assiduously toiling to make a home for his little ones, and to convert the forest wild into a fertile farm. On November 23, 1843, the loving partner of his bosom was called from earth, and Mr. Campsey, having then made an equitable division of his property, which was considerable, retired from active labor, and passed the remaining portion of his days on earth with his son James. He died September 1, 1851, full of years and honor, and was laid to rest by the side of his wife in Claysville cemetery. All their children lived to adult ages, excepting Margaret, who died in her girlhood.

James Campsey, the third son of this pioneer, was born February 20, 1803, in Donegal township, this county, and attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood, the building being made of logs, while the interior was furnished in the most primitive manner, the seats being merely slabs, and the writing desk another slab, supported by pegs driven into the wall. The fireplace, which occupied the greater part of one end of the school-room, was a "yawning chasm," wherein was thrown the wood, which was cut by the scholars. The books used in those early times were the English Reader, the U. S. Spelling Book and the Western Calculator. Mr. Campsey was a natural mechanic, and could turn his hand to almost any kind of work in that line, being very ingenious and skillful. He constructed a distillery complete, including all the plant, which he operated for some time, until he became aware of the harm liquor was doing among those who could not discriminate between use and abuse; he then gave up the business, and disposed of the plant. Mr. Campsey was twice married, the first occasion on November 7, 1827, to Isabella Daugherty, a native of Washington county, born April 21, 1811, by which union there were five children: Mary Ann, born May 29, 1830; Harriet, born November 18, 1832; Margaret E., born May 19, 1835; James D., born May 24, 1838, and a son, unnamed, born November 2, 1840, dying four days afterward. The mother of this family departed this life April 29, 1841, and March 10, 1842. Mr. Campsey wedded Mrs. Susanna Ralston (also a native of County Down, Ireland), widow of James Ralston, and daughter of David McMillen, of the same township, and two children (twins) came to this union: David M. (subject of sketch), and Rebecca, born October 13, 1843, died February 19, 1876. Soon after his first marriage James Campsey purchased of Samuel Stokely a valuable farm property, comprising 352 acres of prime land lying one and one half miles north of Claysville, to which he moved and where he followed farming till December, 1869, when he removed to Claysville, and there lived a retired life, having amassed a comfortable sufficiency by hard toil and earnestness of purpose. On April 4, 1883, he was called from earth, his wife having preceded him to the long home September 24, 1874. Mr. Campsey was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville, Mrs. Campsey being a member of the U. P. Church of South Buffalo. In politics he was originally a Whig, in later years a Republican.

D. M. Campsey received his primary education at the common school of his district, and in 1862 entered Millsborough Normal School, where he remained one year; in 1863 he prosecuted his studies in Carversville Institute, and October 19, 1865, commenced a commercial course at Eastman's Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., from which he graduated in February, 1866. After his graduation, he entered the employ of Lord & Taylor, of New York, with whom he remained some time. On April 7, 1870, having returned to his native county, our subject opened a dry goods store in Claysville, which he carried on eleven years, and then in 1878 formed a partnership with R. B. Daugherty, in the same line at West Alexander, at the same time conducting a hardware store in Claysville, in company with William Wilson. For many years he has been engaged in the wool and grain trade, buying and selling, and he is now largely interested in the oil business.

On July 31, 1873, Mr. Campsey was married to Addie K., daughter of David Kennedy, and the names of the children born to them are James Arthur (died September 22, 1876, at the age of thirteen months), George A., Susannah J., David M. (born March 26, 1883, died July 29, 1891), and Donald McLain. The family are adherents of the U. P. Church at Claysville, of which Mr. Campsey has been a member of Session since 1885. Politically he is a Republican, and an active worker in the party. Fired by a spirit of patriotism during the Civil war, he enlisted for three months in Company D, Forty-fifth P. V. I., serving the full term of his enlistment.

HUGHALLISON ROGERS. Hugh Rodgers (for so the name was originally spelled) came, in company with a sister, from his native Ireland to America, and made a settlement in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn. He participated in the Revolutionary war. He was twice married, his first wife dying soon after marriage; his second wife was Miss Mary Cowden, of Chartiers township, who bore him children as follows: Mary Ann, who died October 11, 1844, aged twenty-one years; John C., who died August 14, 1845; Elizabeth, married to Rev. John Stream, of Columbus Grove, Ohio; Ebenezer Kerr, who died September 8, 1886, and Caroline, matron of the Washington County Home. The father of this family died September 7, 1845.

Ebenezer Kerr Rodgers was born October 17, 1828, in Washington county, Penn., and was reared to farming pursuits, which he followed for some time, but on account of ill health was obliged to abandon and seek some lighter open-air employment. During the remainder of his life he dealt in stock, and for a time was interested in a livery stable, which stood where Banc Bros. now are, in Washington. On March 4, 1850, he married Miss Margaret, daughter of Hugh Allison, of Chartiers township.

John Allison, grandfather of Mrs. Ebenezer K. Rodgers, was a native of Scotland, whence he came with his family to America about the year 1780, and made a settlement in the wild woods of Washington county, Penn., which teemed with ferocious animals and hostile Indians. The settlers at that time never went abroad from their log houses without their trusty rifles, not even to church meeting, which was held in an old log edifice that stood near where is now the borough of Canonsburg. Services were often held in the open air, but, later, another and a better church building was erected at Buffalo. John Allison married Jennette Brownlee, and by her had children as follows: Gavin, born January 29, 1759; Archibald, born September 29, 1760; William (1), born May 23, 1764, died in infancy; William (2), born September 23, 1765; James, born April 8, 1768; Thomas, born June 30, 1770, became one of the first ministers in Washington county; Ebenezer, born June 10, 1771, died in infancy, and Hugh, born December 2, 1773. The parents of this family both departed this life in Chartiers township, the father about the year 1790, and they now rest in the graveyard at Buffalo.

Hugh Allison, son of John, was four times married; the first time before he was twenty-one years of age, to Miss Irwin, of Buffalo township, who died leaving one child, Jane, born July 12, 1795, who married George Morrison, and lived to the advanced age of eighty-three years. Hugh Allison's second marriage was with a daughter of John Brownlee, and she died leaving two children: Eliza, born August 9, 1800, married to William Scott and died in Ohio, and Annie, born December 3, 1801, deceased when young. Mr. Allison's third marriage was with Miss McBride, of Washington county, and by her he had children as follows: Maria Reed, born February 12, 1805; Rebecca McBride, born September 2, 1807, married to John Hanna; Hugh, born April 27, 1810, died young; John and Thomas, both deceased. Mr. Allison's fourth wife was Jane Gabby, born December 14, 1771, in Washington county, daughter of James and Jeanette Gabby. By this marriage eight children were born, of whom the following is a brief record: Jane, born August 11, 1822, is now the widow of Joseph McNary; James, born September 18, 1821, is now in Nebraska; Margaret, born March 6, 1826, married Ebenezer Kerr Rodgers, and died October 9, 1892; Archibald H., born November 24, 1827, is now in Chartiers township; Hugh B., born April 20, 1830, lives in Des Moines, Iowa; a daughter (name not given), died unmarried; Ann Henderson, born June 27, 1833, lives in Chartiers township, and Ebenezer, born August 12, 1835, lives on the old home farm in Chartiers township. The father of these families died September 2, 1853, at the age of eighty years. He was from early manhood an elder in the North Buffalo Seceder Church, was a prominent temperance advocate, and succeeded in having the first temperance society formed in his vicinity. He was one of the first to refuse liquor to farm hands while working in the field. He was a great reader, and had a large library of books. He was a man of strong will, of very pronounced opinions, and was an advocate of women's rights. At the time of his death, which occurred suddenly from an attack of colic in 1853, he was the owner of 400 acres of land in Chartiers township. His widow passed from earth December 14, 1870, aged eighty years.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Ebenezer K. Rodgers remained a year on the farm, and then removed into the borough of Canonsburg, where they resided sixteen years; thence, in 1867, moved into Washington, where their home has since been. The children born to them are seven in number, viz.: Jane A., at home; Hugh Allison and Ebenezer Allison, both in Washington; Mary, at home; John C., in McDonald, Washington county; Frank F., in Indianapolis, Ind.; and Harry Hanna, a civil engineer engaged by the Pennsylvania Railroad. On September 8, 1886, the father of this family departed from earth, having for the last year of his life been confined to the house. He was a good business man, possessed of a very even, quiet disposition, and at all times exercised great patience. In his political preferences he was a Republican, and in religious sentiments a member of the U. P. Church of Washington.

HUGH ALLISON ROGERS was born September 24, 1855, in Canonsburg, Washington Co., Penn., where he received a portion of his education at the public schools. About the year 1867 he came with the rest of his father's family to Washington, and there, at the public schools of the borough, and by a short attendance at Washington College, completed his education. He then commenced the study of law in the office of John W. & Alvan Donnan, and on finishing his studies was admitted to the bar of Washington county in 1882, prior to which he had been appointed a notary public. In 1884 he was appointed cashier of the People's Light & Heat Company, which position he is now holding. Politically he is a Republican, a strong worker for his party, but no office-holder. He is a member of the U. P. Church, and librarian in same; was at one time a lieutenant in the National Guards of Pennsylvania, serving some eight or nine years. On September 30, 1885, Mr. Rogers married Miss Mary J. Murray, who was born September 23, 1861, a daughter of John Murray, of Washington. One bright little girl has come to brighten their home, named Florence, born July 18, 1889, and one boy, named Hugh Donnan, born January 5, 1893. The family residence is on Jefferson avenue, in Canton township.

MICHAEL RYAN, proprietor of Washington Carriage Works, was born at Binghamton, N. Y., September 16, 1851. His parents, Martin and Mary (Fitzpatrick) Ryan, natives of County Galway, Ireland, came to America in 1847, and made their first home in New York State, where their three children were born; subsequently the family moved to Ohio, and thence, about the year 1854, to Washington county. The father died in Ohio, and his widow afterward married John Maloney, who was killed on the railroad July 12, 1866. She resided with her son Michael until she died, on January 28, 1892, at the age of seventy-five years. The children born to her marriage with Martin Ryan are Bridget, wife of Henry Kane, of Douegal township; and Michael and James, both residents of Washington, Penn.

Michael Ryan, of whom this notice is written, obtained his education in the common schools of Washington county, and very early in life, owing to the limited circumstances of his parents, had to earn his own living. In 1868 he entered the carriage works of S. B. & C. Hayes, where he remained until he finished his apprenticeship, and then commenced work with Hayes & Wilson, remaining in their employ about eleven years. In 1881, in conjunction with his brother, he established a carriage factory, the style of the firm being Washington Carriage Works, Ryan Bros., proprietors, for the manufacture of light carriages. This partnership continued until January, 1891, when his brother retired. Mr. Michael Ryan has conducted the business alone since that time. In 1889 a commodious brick building was erected on East Beau street, which, in 1891, was remodeled and enlarged, and the industry has grown until it is now one of the foremost manufacturing establishments of Washington, and in the carriage building line it is in reality the only one devoted exclusively to the making of light vehicles in Washington. Mr. Ryan commenced life a poor boy, but by energy, perseverance, and strict attention to business he has deservedly earned an almost phenomenal success. He never married. Politically he is a Democrat, and has been a member of Washington borough council.

JAMES W. KUNTZ enjoys the distinction of being one of the oldest residents of Washington borough. His grandfather, Michael Kuntz, a laborer by occupation, came unaccompanied, in 1788, from Lancaster county, Penn., to Washington county, and bought land where now stands Brady's jewelry store, in the borough of Washington.

Here Michael Kuntz built a cabin, but on account of the Indians his family did not come out until May, 1790. He returned to Lancaster county, and there died in 1794; he was a Freemason of high standing. His widow survived him until about the year 1850, when she was called from earth at the advanced age of eighty-five years; she was his second wife, and there is no record of any children by his first marriage. To his second union five children were born, of whom we find the names of George, Jacob, Sophia (Mrs. George Burker, formerly of Washington) and Mrs. Reddick (deceased). The family crossed the mountains on pack horses, the packs or saddle-bags being made of homemade linen, and when the little boys were tired walking they were placed in the pockets of these saddle-bags.

George Kuntz, born in Lancaster county, Penn., January 25, 1785, was about six years old when brought to Washington, and here he lived at the same place about fourscore years, dying July 18, 1870. He was a hatter, who, in 1810, opened a factory in Washington where hats were made by hand. This business he continued until 1844, when he retired. In 1818 he married Elizabeth, daughter of James Wisbey, of Washington, and seven children were born to them, viz.: Michael and James W., both in Washington; one that died in infancy; Brady, a physician, who died in Washington March 26, 1863; Sophia, who married Charles Hayes, and died in Washington in 1854; Philip, who also died in Washington, and Stephen, who died in April, 1891, at the age of fifty-six years. The father was called from earth July 18, 1870, at the age of eighty-six years. He was a Jacksonian Democrat, and for a time served as borough treasurer. He was a Freemason, having been initiated in 1824. The mother died April 21, 1884, aged eighty-four years.

James W. Kuntz was born February 20, 1821.

in an old log house which stood on the same piece of land on which he now resides. He received his rudimentary education at the public schools of the borough, and later attended Washington College, at which time he became acquainted with James G. Blaine. He learned the trade of cabinet maker with Thomas Bryson, ultimately buying a half-interest in the business, in which he continued several years. In 1849, being seized with the "gold fever," he set out for California, across the plains, the journey occupying six months. His health, beginning to fail in that land of promise, and having a friend whose mind was affected, he concluded, in 1851, to return to Pennsylvania. While en route the friend became totally demented, jumped overboard and was drowned, and Mr. Kuntz, now alone, continued his homeward trip. He then opened a leather store in Washington, which he carried on successfully for twenty years, when he sold out and moved on his farm in Franklin township, but in 1887 returned to Washington, where he now lives comparatively retired. In 1865 Mr. Kuntz married Nancy, a daughter of Samuel Workman, of Washington. No children have been born to them. Politically he is a Democrat, and has served as burgess of Washington some six or seven years. Socially he is a Freemason.

CHARLES G. McILVAIN, a young attorney of Monongahela, and a progressive, native-born citizen of the county, is a lineal descendant of the time-honored pioneer, Greer McIlvain, who came to this county from the eastern part of the State prior to 1788, and patented a large tract of land in Somerset township.

Charles G. was born April 6, 1862, in Carroll township, a son of Greer and Elizabeth (Williams) McIlvain, the former of whom was a grandson of the pioneer Greer McIlvain, a sketch of whom and the immediate ancestry of our subject appears elsewhere. Charles G. received his primary education at the common schools of his district, and at the age of fifteen he entered the Southwestern Normal School at California, Penn., on leaving which he for some time attended Jefferson Academy. He then entered the law school in connection with the University of Michigan, from which he graduated in 1885, and on his return home was admitted to the bar of Pittsburgh. He has succeeded in building up a large practice and highly respectable clientele in that city, and along the Monongahela valley.

On April 9, 1890, Mr. McIlvain was married to Nancy M., daughter of Capt. Peter Donaldson, of Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn., and one child, Ruth, has come to brighten their home. Mr. McIlvain is a Republican in politics, and resides at Monongahela.

WK. LONG, one of the best known business men of Washington and second to none in popularity, in the county, as a dealer in footwear, is a native of Washington, Penn., where he first saw the light November 13, 1835.

His father, William Long, was born in August, 1786, in Manheim township, Lancaster Co., Penn., where he learned the wagon maker's trade. About the year 1800 he came to Washington, where he established himself in the wagon making business, which he carried on up to the time of his death in 1848. By industry he amassed a competence, but lost it all through ill advised liberality and misplaced confidence in human nature. He was a member of the Lutheran Church. In 1822 he married Miss Catherine, daughter of John Krider. (This John Krider conducted a farm in Canton township, but removed to Illinois, where he was thrown from a horse, receiving injuries from which he died at Fulton, Ill., at the age of eighty-four years.) To William and Catherine Long were born eight children, as follows: Susan, wife of W. W. Davis, of Guernsey county, Ohio; Nancy, John and Catherine (all three deceased—John at the age of twelve, and Catherine when about eight years old); Mary, wife of Jesse Allen, in Knox county, Ohio; W. K., our subject; Eliza, wife of J. O. Vankirk, in Franklin township; and Ellen, married to J. J. McWilliams, near Edinborough, Erie Co., Penn. The mother of this family died in 1872, at the age of seventy-five years, while staying at the house of her daughter, Mrs. W. W. Davis, then living in Canton township.

W. K. Long received his education at the public schools of the place of his birth, and grew to manhood on the John Coulson farm. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company F, Fifteenth Cavalry (Anderson), in which he served until June, 1865, when he was honorably discharged. He was with the army of the Cumberland, participating in its almost innumerable battles and skirmishes, but came through without a wound, although at the battle of Sandridge, Tenn., he had a horse shot under him. He was sick for several months, in 1863, at Nashville, Tenn. On his discharge he returned to his native county, and remained in Buffalo township until 1866, when he came to Washington and clerked for Warrick Bros., grocers and millers, until 1875, in which year he entered into partnership with G. M. Warrick & J. M. Wilson, grocers, and at the end of two years they opened out a shoe store where Mr. Long is now established, the partnership in both industries continuing until July, 1889, when it was dissolved, our subject carrying on the boot and shoe business alone. In November, 1872, Mr. Long married Elizabeth, daughter of Jonathan T. Warrick (a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere), by which union there are two children—Mary L. and William W.—both at home. The family are members of the First M. E. Church of Washington. Politically, Mr. Long is a Republican.

TIMOTHY HARE. To beautiful Erin, the land of which Moore has so sweetly sung, and which has given to the world so many of its brilliant statesmen, jurists and soldiers, Washington county is indebted for many of her substantial, progressive and loyal citizens, among whom may be justly included the gentle man whose name opens this biographical memoir.

Timothy Hare was born in County Clare, Ireland, in 1838, a son of Timothy and Catherine (Holloran) Hare. The father died there in 1847. When about sixteen years of age (1854) our subject emigrated to America, coming to Washington county, where he first worked on the farm of Robert M. Patterson, of Cross Creek township, for $8 per month, remaining with him two years. He had been barely that length of time in the land of his adoption when he found himself, by dint of hard labor and careful thrift, enabled, though yet but a mere boy, to send means to his native land to bring to Washington county his widowed mother and one of his sisters. The mother died in Washington in 1887 at an advanced age. She was the mother of nine children, all of whom died in Ireland, save three: Timothy, Bridget (Mrs. Shaughnessy) and Mary (Mrs. Farrell), both residents of Pittsburgh, Penn. In 1853 the second sister emigrated. After a time Mr. Hare commenced the huckstering business, carrying goods to Pittsburgh each week; then worked a farm in South Strabane township for one year. In 1871 he embarked in the present grocery business in Washington, in which he has met with exceptional success.

In 1861 our subject was married to Margaret, daughter of Thomas Breen. To them nine children were born, namely: John F., in Washington; Thomas, near Pittsburgh; Timothy, a tailor in Cadiz, Ohio; James, in Washington; Mary, Catherine J., William and Margaret, all at home with their parents; Charles died some sixteen years ago, at the age of six months. Mrs. Hare is a native of Ireland, and was brought to this country when a small child. In 1880 Mr. Hare built the house in Washington, which is now the family home. In religious faith he is a Catholic, in politics a Democrat, but at elections he asserts his right to exercise his own judgment, regardless of party lines.

JOHN H. MURRAY. The antecedents of this gentleman came to Washington county at an early day. John Murray, his father, married Margaret Henderson, who resided near Claysville, this county, and by her had six children, viz.: Hannah (deceased, was twice married. Her first husband's name being Murphy, and her second husband's Lavery); Michael, now living in Sedalia, Mo.; Charles, James and Thomas (all three deceased), and John H., the subject of this sketch. The father, who was a teamster by occupation, died in August, 1830, when John H. was but six months old, the youngest in a family of six children; the mother afterward moved to Illinois, where she died of cholera in 1852.

John H. Murray was born February 12, 1830, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and at the common schools of the neighborhood received his education, which, as he had to apply himself to work on the farm in early boyhood, was of necessity very limited. In 1849 he went West, and for two years followed agricultural pursuits in Illinois, and worked as a farmer and carpenter part of the time in Pennsylvania and the balance of the time in Illinois. In 1862 he enlisted in Company C, 22nd P. V. C., and participated in several engagements. In January following his enlistment, he was taken sick, for fifteen months was confined in hospital, and after his discharge as a convalescent he cooked for the officers' mess, one year. At the close of his term of service, June 1, 1865, he was mustered out with his company, and he then returned to Washington county, taking up his temporary residence in Buffalo township. Soon afterward he commenced a butcher business in Claysville, which he carried on one year, and then, in 1871, removed to Washington and opened out a meat market on Wheeling street, which in 1874 he moved to Main street, and in 1886 to his present stand, on North Main street. On February 6, 1855, Mr. Murray was married to Sarah A., daughter of Joseph Magill, a resident of the Claysville neighborhood, but in 1857 she was taken from earth, leaving one daughter, then only fourteen months old, now the wife of David Sample, Jr., of Washington.

In the spring of 1861 Mr. Murray married, for his second wife, Elizabeth J., daughter of Joseph Hutchison, now deceased. To this union four children were born, viz.: Mary, wife of Hugh Rodgers, Washington; William H., who is in partnership with his father; Annie, wife of Thomas Blair, of Wheeling street, Washington; and John E., living with his parents. Mr. Murray is one of the many progressive and prosperous self made men of Washington, and is esteemed by a host of friends whom he has gathered around him by his thorough business habits and social qualities. In his political preferences he is a straight Democrat, but finds no time for office aspirations. His comfortable and commodious home is on Highland avenue, one of the most beautiful streets in the borough.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS COOL. As the student of human nature looks on the men and women who have risen from the ranks to positions of eminence in the world of literature, politics, science, art or religion, he will fain inquire, "Whence came they? Amid what scenes did these giant minds unfold? in what social circles were they first introduced to the world which they have conquered?" From the vast majority comes the ringing answer, "The dear old farm was our childhood home; our early social enjoyments were found on the glittering pond, by the woodland river, in the husking bee and the harvest home. Amid these scenes our minds were nurtured, and 'far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,' we learned from self-sacrificing, toiling parents the lessons of self denial and perseverance, with which to conquer first ourselves, and then our foemen." God bless the farm and the farmers of our land. They are the rocks on which our nation rests, and the history of their lives should be treasured by every patriotic citizen of America.

Gilbert Cool was born about the year 1794, east of the Alleghany Mountains, and came to Washington county, when a young man. He decided to learn the blacksmith's trade, and accordingly entered a shop of one John McConnell, living near Paris, where he learned his trade. His employer had a fair young sister in law, Rebecca Moore, and Rebecca soon became the bride of Gilbert Cool. They located in Frankfort, Beaver Co., Penn., where he followed his trade, and being both energetic and industrious, soon acquired a comfortable property. Time passed on, and one by one children came to bless their union, until the following names were added to their family circle: William (who died at the age of forty years), was a farmer of Allegheny county, Penn.; John, a farmer living in Allegheny county; Augustine, also residing on a farm in Allegheny county; Christopher Columbus, mentioned below; Thomas, an agriculturist of Allegheny county; Sarah, deceased in youth; Verlinda, deceased wife of William Dawson; and Alice, deceased wife of Philip Stronse, of Beaver county, Penn. Some years after his marriage Mr. Cool purchased and moved upon a farm near Florence, in Hanover township, which he afterward sold at a handsome profit, and then bought 175 acres in Findley township, Allegheny Co., Penn., where his remaining years were passed. He was a hard-working, successful business man, and in politics was an Old-line Whig, afterward uniting with the Republican party. He possessed a robust constitution, and was ill but for a short time before his death, which occurred November 9, 1879, followed by his wife a year later. They are buried side by side in Hopewell cemetery, Allegheny county. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church.

Christopher Columbus Cool was born April 7, 1839, near Florence, Washington county. He received his earlier education at the common schools of the neighborhood and then took a short course at Mt. Union College, Stark county, Ohio, fitting himself for school teaching. After leaving college, he, in company with several classmates, made a western tour, visiting the principal cities of Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Indiana, Kentucky and West Virginia, many of the present large cities of those States being but villages at that time. He taught school in Wayne county, Ill., also in many of the western towns, and having satisfied his curiosity concerning the resources of the western States, returned to the home farm, teaching school during the winter season. On June 14, 1865, he was united in marriage with Eliza Jane Culbertson, who was born September 7, 1839, being the youngest of three children born to David and Elizabeth (Whittaker) Culbertson. Her father was a representative farmer of Hanover township, and was for many years an elder in the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church at Florence, this county. Two daughters have been born to the union of Christopher Columbus Cool and Eliza Jane Cool, namely: Allie Etta, and Effie Dora, both of whom are living at home. Since his marriage Mr. Cool has resided on his father-in-law's farm, one half of which was purchased, successfully devoting his attention to agriculture and stock raising. He is a progressive, energetic citizen, thoroughly posted on general topics, and an enthusiastic supporter of the Republican party. He and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church at Florence.

JOHAN P. WILSON. The family of which this gentleman is a worthy representative are of North of Ireland descent. Robert Wilson, the grandfather of our subject, emigrated to this country, and made a settlement on a farm in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., where he died. He had married a Welsh lady, who bore him seven children: James, William E., Thomas, Isabel (Mrs. Buchanan), Mary, Annie and Jane (Mrs. James Campbell)—all now deceased.

William E. Wilson, father of John P., was in his day a prominent agriculturist of Smith township, this county, where he bought a farm and made a settlement April 10, 1829. He had married, in 1822, Miss Margaret, daughter of John Park, a sketch of whose family follows this. To this union were born eight children, viz.: Sarah Ann; Samuel P., in Burgettstown, Penn.; Martha (widow of Alexander Russell), also in Burgettstown; Nancy (deceased); Isabella; John P.; Rebecca, of Bur-gettstown, and William L., who lately moved to that town. The parents both passed away on their farm in Smith township, the father in 1871, at the age of nearly fourscore years, and the mother in 1881, at the age of eighty-four years; they were members of the Seceder Church of Burgettstown, he being an elder in same.

John P. Wilson was born December 11, 1837, on the old home farm in Smith township, and lived thereon until he was twenty-nine years of age. On January 10, 1867, he was married to Miss Jane, daughter of John Reed, Esq., a descendant of the Reeds, who came in 1775 from Lancaster county, Penn., to this county. They settled in Mt. Pleasant township, on what is now known as the Mc-Bride farm, where they made improvements. This land, they claim, was unjustly taken from them by Gen. Washington. Being thus deprived of their land in Mt. Pleasant township, the family moved to Cecil township, where their descendants are now to be found. David Reed married Margaret May, who bore him eight children, all now deceased, viz.: Alexander, David, Polly (Mrs. George Murray), John (father of Mrs. John P. Wilson), James, Joseph, Jennie, and one that died in infancy. John Reed graduated from college when sixteen years old and on November 24, 1821, settled down to farm life in Mt. Pleasant township, where he passed the remainder of his days. He was married to Jane May, of Cecil township, and nine children were born to them: Phoebe (deceased); Margaret, in Washington county; David, in Burgettstown; John (deceased); George Murray, living at the old home; Jane, wife of John P. Wilson; Samuel, in McDonald, this county; Mary, at home, and Elizabeth, in Cecil township. The mother of this family died in 1844, aged forty-one years; the father in 1877, at the patriarchal age of ninety-one years. Politically he was first a Whig, afterward a Republican; for many years he served as a justice of the peace, and for several terms he was in the State Legislature; for twenty-five years or more he was a member of the Secoder Church at Hickory. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. John P. Wilson remained in Smith township twenty-two years, then for two years resided in Canonsburg, whence in April, 1891, they moved into the borough of Washington, where they have a pleasant home, the residence having been built by their two sons—J. Reed and William Park—who comprise all their family. John P. Wilson has been a lifelong agriculturist, but is now, although still retaining his farm, retired from active work in that line.

THE PARK FAMILY. Tradition says that in 1787 John Park, then twenty eight years of age, was married in Washington county, by Rev. John McMillan, D. D., to a young daughter of Hon. John McDowell, of Chartiers township. This John Park was born December 18, 1758, a son of Samuel and Mary Park, who came hither before their marriage, from the North of Ireland, the voyage lasting six months, on the same vessel. Samuel Park was an importer of horses from the mother country, and in pursuit of his business he made three trips to the land of his birth. In this country he settled in Donegal township, Lancaster Co., Penn. In the fall of 1777 he came to Washington county, and for the sum of £150, or about $2,160, purchased of Matthew Rodgers some 566 acres of wild land, the bill of sale being dated December 7, 1777. He then returned to Lancaster county, and sent out his sons, John and James, to clear some of this land, which they did, also erecting a log cabin and planting a crop, their sister Isabella accompanying them, to keep house for them. Samuel Park was a hardworking, industrious man, widely known and respected for his strict integrity.

James Park, one of his sons, was born in 1760. He was with Col. William Crawford in his expedition against the Indians in northwestern Ohio, in 1782. His wife was Isabella Craighead, and their children were: Samuel; George; James (deceased December 8, 1811); Mary, married in 1782 to Col. John Marshall (They then settled on Cross Creek, this county. Col. Marshall was born in 1746, and when the Revolutionary war broke out he entered the patriot army as a subaltern; he participated in thirteen battles, and at Trenton was severely wounded, a bullet entering his left side; was then promoted, and after the surrender of Cornwallis was made a brevet-major, Gen. Washington presenting him with a sword, which is now in the possession of his grandson, C. R. Marshall, of Richland county, Ohio. The Colonel lost a brother at the battle of Brandywine. Col. Marshall took part in the Whiskey Rebellion, was one of the "Council of Safety" held at Mingo Creek July 23, 1794, and at Monongahela City August 14, following, he presented the resolutions which were adopted; he was colonel of a volunteer regiment. In 1802 he was elected to the Ohio State Legislature, and reelected in 1803-04. He died in Ohio September 27, 1821, his wife several years later. They were the parents of ten children; Isabella Park was born in 1764, and was married in 1784, to Robert McGee, by whom she had five children (he died in 1796, his widow passing away in Clark county, Ind.); Hugh Park, born in 1767, died while a young man.

John and Sarah Park for a time lived in two small cabins, a few feet apart, but later removed to the homestead, or "Deer Park," as it was called upon the death of John's father. They were the parents of ten children, of whom the following is a brief sketch: Agnes, born July 31, 1783 (was married to John White); John, born September 16, 1792 (married in 1820, to Ann Colmery, who died January 8, 1823, and he afterward, in 1827, married Martha Conley); Samuel, born December 25, 1795 (graduated from Jefferson College, afterward taught school, also surveyed; died in 1823, from the effects of a fall from a roof); William, born July 15, 1797 (in 1831 bought 300 acres of land in Peters township; in 1833 he married Jane Law; was a member of the board of trustees of Jefferson College; a director of the Chartiers Valley Railroad; thirty years an elder of Centre Church; died November 6, 1870); Margaret, born March 15, 1800 (married in 1822, to William E. Wilson); James was born November, 30, 1802; Isabel, born May 16, 1805 (married in 1831, to Henry Vance); Sarah, born December 18, 1807 (married John Hickman); McDowell was born March 6, 1810; Rebecca, born November 14, 1814 (married James Rankin, of Washington, Penn., and died April 18, 1875). The father of this family served as a scout in the Revolutionary war.

WC. CRAVIN is a son of Thomas Cravin, who was a native of Mifflin county, Penn., where he was reared and educated. When a young man he went to Guernsey county, Ohio, and was there married to Sarah Chalfant, a native of that county, who bore him six children, namely: Mary, wife of John Reed, Edith, married to Robert Jobs; Rachel, deceased; W. C.; Thomas, and Tilson, who died in infancy. For his second wife Mr. Cravin was married to Caroline Ingraham. He was a painter by trade, and followed that business throughout active life. He came to Brownsville, Penn., soon after his first marriage, and in 1852 went to California, Penn., where he died in 1886, and was buried in that village. In politics he was formerly an Abolitionist, then united with the Republican party, and in religion was a member of the M. E. Church, which he served as class-leader and steward.

W. C. Cravin was born February 16, 1843, in Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn., and came with his parents to California, Washington Co., Penn., when but nine years of age. He attended the California Normal School, also Duff's Business College, at Pittsburgh. On September 21, 1861, he enlisted in Company C, 85th P. V. I., and was first sent to Washington, D. C., thence to the army of the Potomac. He was in the Peninsular campaign, and being sent to North and South Carolina, took part in the battles in the latter State. When Grant took command of the army of the Potomac, W. C. Cravin again entered that division, and participated in Grant's advance on Richmond. After the expiration of the three years for which he had entered the service, he re-enlisted, and was appointed captain of Company E, 199th Regiment P. V. I.

He served in that rank until mustered out at Richmond June 25, 1865, when he returned to Washington county, Penn. On December 4, 1866, he was united in marriage with Nancy, daughter of Samuel Ray. In 1867 Mr. Cravin opened a grocery establishment which he conducted for twelve years, when he sold out and in 1882 entered the employment of the Yohe brothers, with whom he is yet engaged. In political opinion he affiliated with the Republican party until the Prohibition movement was organized, with which he is now in hearty sympathy. In religious faith he is a member of the M. E. Church.

SAMUEL M. TEMPLETON, proprietor of drug store, Washington, is a native of the borough, born in June, 1835. His grandfather, Dr. S. Murdoch, established a drug business in Washington many years ago, which the father, of our subject, Dr. Joseph Templeton, who was a physician of prominence in his day, entered in 1843.

Samuel M. Templeton attended the common schools and college of the place of his birth, receiving a good practical education, and in 1855 began learning the drug business in the store that had been established by his grandfather, ultimately becoming a regular pharmacist. In 1861 he enlisted in Company A, Twelfth P. V. I., serving three months, and after his discharge returned to Washington, where he resumed the drug business at the same stand that had been previously occupied by his grandfather and father.

On June 10, 1868, Mr. Templeton was married to Rebecca, daughter of Alexander Murdoch, of Washington, by which union there are three children—Alexander M., Nelly and Betty—all yet living at home. Politically our subject is a Republican, but is no office seeker. In church connection he is of the United Presbyterian faith. His residence is on North Main street, just outside the borough limits.

THOMAS JEFFERSON DUNCAN was born in the borough of Bridgeport, Fayette county, Penn., February 11, 1845. On his mother's side, his ancestry, which had been American-born for several generations, was of English extraction.

Dr. Benjamin Stevens, his grandfather, emigrated from Maryland to Fayette county, where he was a widely known practitioner of medicine, and where he established and for many years operated an iron forge. Though dying before he attained old age, Dr. Stevens left to survive him several children, of whom one, Priscilla, was the mother of the subject of this sketch. His immediate paternal ancestors were Irish, but of Scotch origin. The latter part of the eighteenth century was not only a period of general European wars but of profound discontent among the sons of Erin, and open rebellion against English rule. The successes of Sir John Jarvis and Admiral Duncan on the water, the overthrow of the United Irishmen and the complete suppression of the revolt by the storming of the camp on Vinegar Hill, established the supremacy of England, and many a brave Irishman preserved his life and his liberty by flight from his native land. It was during these stormy times that Arthur Duncan sought refuge in America and settled in Fayette county, Penn. There he pursued his vocation of an iron worker at the forge of Dr. Stevens, already mentioned. He left a family of eight children, of whom the following are still living: Enos Duncan, Mrs. Jane Stanford, Mrs. Elizabeth Doolittle, and Hon. Thomas Duncan, who was the oldest, is now (1895) eighty seven years of age, lives in Bridgeport, Fayette Co., Penn., and is the father of the subject of this memoir. He was at times an active politician and was elected commissioner of his native county (Fayette), and for ten years served as one of the judges of its courts. Some years ago he withdrew from business and public affairs, and is now leading a retired life. In early manhood he married Priscilla Stevens, who died in 1873 at the age of sixty six years. She was a woman of more than ordinary strength of character, took a lively interest in the charitable and benevolent enterprises of the community in which she lived, and left a monument in the memories of the people with and for whom she labored. The fruit of this union was five children, viz.: Sophia, now deceased, who was married to W. H. Laming; Elizabeth, now widow of William Worrell (deceased), and a resident of the above mentioned borough of Bridgeport; Dr. W. S. Duncan, a physician and surgeon of wide reputation and extensive practice, who died in 1892; Arthur Duncan, whose death occurred as he was about entering manhood, and Thomas Jefferson Duncan, whose name stands at the opening of this article.

His boyhood days were spent in his native town, where he attended the graded public school. Soon after leaving this school, he was placed under the tuition of E. N. Hartshorn, an enthusiastic and successful instructor, who afterward became a professor in the college at Mt. Union, Ohio. It was at this time in his career that young Duncan, at about the age of eighteen years, first turned his attention to pedagogism. He was elected teacher of a school in Wharton township, one of the mountain districts of Fayette county. In this region, "far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife," he passed one winter amid experiences that were as novel to him as the rugged and snow-clad scenery of the mountains was grand and imposing. He not only labored for the children but lived among the people. Here were social customs, phases of life, and revelations of fact that were as strange to the new "master" as they were real. As he once expressed the situation: "He not only taught lessons in the three R's from the books, but learned lessons from the pages of life and the volume of nature." Having completed this engagement, he entered Mt. Union College, Ohio, and was there during the bitter contest in 1861 between the faculty and the students relative to the authority of the former over the literary societies. The college authorities, of course, triumphed, and several of the undergraduates who were most active in the affair were dismissed from the institution. Others voluntarily withdrew. Duncan was among the latter and with one of his friends, now Rev. John H. Hartman, was soon afterward pursuing his studies in Vermillion Institute, at Haysville, Ohio. His name appears for two years in the published catalogue of this school, which, under the supervision of Rev. Sanders Diefendorf, was then a flourishing academy, attended by hundreds of students from Canada and eleven States of the Union. While here his health became broken, and he was forced to return home for its recuperation. He was able to resume his studies in the spring of 1866, and matriculated in Washington and Jefferson College, at Washington, Penn., from which he was graduated two years later. The class of 1868 was one of the largest ever sent out by this institution, and on its roll of membership are the names of gentlemen who have since attained distinction in their several professions. Among them are Prof. D. J. McAdam, Hon. H. J. Eckly, S. B. Fisher, C. E., James S. Moorhead, Esq., Rev. T. J. Sherrard, Rev. L. M. Gilleland, Hon. W. B. Sutton and others. During his senior year he was both student and teacher in the college (officially tutor), and, as such, had partial charge of the classes of the preparatory department. After graduation he was invited to continue this relation, but, declining so to do, accepted the Superintendency of the public schools of his native town, and continued in that position for two years. Throughout his term of service he was energetic in the administration of both the methods of instruction for use by the assistant teachers and the affairs of discipline among the pupils; and it is said there are now men in the community, whose heads begin to show the silvery touches of years, who when as boys on mischief bent, learned by experience, at this time, that the way of the transgressor was hard. His next move was to East Liverpool, Ohio, where he had been elected Superintendent of Schools. The condition of educational affairs here required a complete reorganization of the system. His plans were, however, supported by the Board of Control, and he had the co-operation of a corps of efficient teachers. The schools grew rapidly in both membership and reputation under his management, which continued two years. He had, when at college, registered himself as a student of law in the office of L. Y. Hamilton, Esq., and he gave up his position at East Liverpool with a view to the completion of his professional studies. The fall of 1872, however, found him in the ranks from which he had so recently withdrawn. This time he was located in Pittsburgh, Penn., where he continued four years, having supervision, as Principal, of the public schools of the Fifteenth and Seventeenth Wards of that city. As a disciplinarian he was considered firm if not rigid; in methods of instruction he was progressive; and his schools were frequently visited by teachers from other sections of the city. His field of labor was, however, more extensive than the district. He was an active member of the College of Principals, a frequent instructor at teachers' institutes of the city, at times accepted invitations to render similar services for conventions in other counties, lectured at the Teachers' State Association, and was an occasional contributor to the press on subjects relating to the profession in which he was engaged. During the preceding years, he had devoted what time could be appropriated from other duties to his legal studies, and, in the fall of 1875, was admitted to practice law in the courts of Washington county. Subsequently he was admitted to the Supreme Court of the State, and such of the United States Courts as business or other matters rendered desirable. In the summer of 1876 he first located and offered his services as a lawyer at Washington, Penn., where, without interruption, he has continued the practice of law ever since. This was the year of the memorable Presidential campaign in which Tilden and Hayes were the rival candidates. Mr. Duncan threw his energies into the contest, and proving an acceptable speaker addressed numerous meetings throughout the county, making acquaintances and friends as he went. It was not long until he found himself with a fair clientage, and his practice has steadily increased until he is now one of the hardest worked members of the bar. As a lawyer he is faithful and devoted to his clients and persistent for their welfare and success, or, as has been sometimes said, stubborn in the advocacy of causes entrusted to his care. His library is well supplied with books, which, in the preparation of cases, are brought into frequent requisition, and his briefs usually tend toward elaborateness rather than otherwise. He is an earnest, persistent worker, valuing time according to the results that may be wrested from it; and people who know him attribute whatever success he has attained as largely to level headedness and patient work as any other elements of his character. In politics he has always been a Democrat, and in the campaigns preceding general elections usually stumps his own and other counties in behalf of the party with which he is identified. While thus interested in politics, and often a participant in the counsels and conventions of the party of his choice, he has never sought for himself the reward of office but has uniformly refused to be a candidate for positions of a political character. The only apparent exception to this statement was in 1876. That year he was the nominee for district attorney, an office, which falls within the line of his legitimate professional life and to which only lawyers are eligible. In 1888 the Democratic Convention of the Twenty-fourth Congressional District nominated him as the party candidate for Congress in opposition to his known wishes. The convention had been in session two days, during both of which in response to inquiries he had telegraphed forbidding the use of his name and stating his unwillingness to accept the position, if tendered him. Disregarding his protest, the convention proclaimed him the candidate and appointed a committee to give him formal notice of its action. His name was at once published throughout the district as the party representative, and it was said created enthusiasm under the belief that it indicated party success. The committee of notification just mentioned consisted of James H. Hoover, of Fayette county; Joseph A. Skelly, of Allegheny; James Smith, of Greene; and John P. Charlton, of Washington. When waited upon by them, Mr. Duncan adhered to his original resolution and declined to accept the nomination. The prospects of his election were considered flattering, and the district is now represented by a Democrat. The reasons assigned by him were of a personal and private character arising chiefly from a desire to apply his time and energies to the welfare of his family and to business affairs. In his letter of declination, which was widely published and quoted from, he stated that "among his party associates he did not recall a single individual toward whom he entertained the slightest feeling of political animosity or whose advancement he would willingly impede in the least, that he united with unabated interest in the efforts of the people to maintain their liberties against the encroachments of power unjustly exercised whether manifesting itself in the form of monopolizing combinations and trusts, corporate aggregations or official usurpation, that he was uncompromisingly opposed to legislation in the interest of favored classes, to the squandering of the public domain, to oppressive and unnecessary taxation direct or indirect, and to the tendency during the past few years to a centralization of power in the administration of governmental affairs, and that he adhered to the principles of just government administered wisely and economically for the peace, safety and prosperity of its citizens as a whole, without preference or favor as to class, location, race, or other basis of distinction."

In religion Mr. Duncan is more immediately associated with the denomination of Methodists, in which he has been a communicant for many years. At the time this sketch is written (1893) he is connected with the First M. E. Church of Washington, Penn., and has for years past been a member of its Board of Trustees and Treasurer of its Stewards' Fund. In addition to his professional duties Mr. Duncan is connected with various business and other organizations of the community and county in which he resides, to some of which he sustains official relations. Among them are the following: Director and Vice-President of the Farmers and Mechanics National Bank of Washington, Penn.; member of the Board of School Directors; Trustee and chairman of the Finance Committee of the Dime Savings Institution of Washington, Penn.; Chairman of the Board of Examiners of the Courts of the county; Trustee of the Young Men's Christian Association; President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and Children; Curator and Treasurer of the Citizens Library Association, and others. In July, 1880, he was married to Miss Eleanor Morris, for a memoir of whom and for reference to his domestic life see the article immediately succeeding this.

MRS. ELEANOR M. DUNCAN is the wife of T. J. Duncan, Esq., whose life is outlined in the last preceding sketch. She was born in West Brownsville, Washington Co., Penn., December 11, 1856, and is a descendant from two families well known in Revolutionary and Colonial times, of whom, perhaps, the most noted representatives are Capt. Jonathan Morris, a soldier of the Revolution, Dr. Jonathan Morris and Benjamin West, the celebrated artist. Her maternal grandfather was W. H. Miller, a native of Barren county, Ky., who was born in 1800, and died in Hart county, said State, at the advanced age of eighty-two years. His wife, Elizabeth, died at Louisville, Ky., in 1857. They had issue five children, all girls—Mary E., Emily, Louisa, Julia, and Sarah J., who was born in February, 1825; she is the mother of the lady whose name commences this article, and now resides with one of her daughters at Bennett's Station, Penn. She is said to have been a young woman of rare beauty, and at the age of nearly eighteen years was married to Capt. Benjamin F. Morris, who was fifteen years her senior.

Mrs. Duncan's paternal ancestry includes two distinguished Quaker families, the Wests and the Morrises. David Morris emigrated from Wales, and married Mary Phillipine in or about the year 1685. Their home was on the west bank of the Delaware river, below Philadelphia, where their children, David, Isaac, Elizabeth, Mordecai and Jonathan, were born. The family increased rapidly and was distributed through several eastern counties of the State. A recent historian says: "Every branch of it retained the names David, Jonathan, Isaac and Mordecai. Notwithstanding the fact that they were Quakers, they took part in the Revolution, several members of the family serving throughout the war in the Continental Line." Among the early settlers of western Pennsylvania was Jonathan Morris, a grandson of David (the Welshman), who, soon after the Revolutionary war, came with his family from the East and settled in Washington county among the Quakers, in what is now East Bethlehem township. He had previously married a sister of Benjamin West, the famous painter. The Wests were also Quakers, and members of that family came, about the same time, to Washington county, the name still being borne by later generations in the eastern part of the county. Judge William West, the blind orator of Ohio, is a descendant of Jonathan West and a relative of the Mrs. Morris already named. Jonathan Morris died about 1788. Four sons survived him. In a late publication it stated that three of them were soldiers in the war for American independence. They were Joseph, David (who was for many years keeper of the celebrated hostelry, the "Globe Inn," of Washington, Penn.), Jonathan (a captain of the Revolutionary war, who is said to have equipped, at his own expense, a full company of Continental soldiers; was wounded at the battle of Brandywine, and died in Fredericktown, Washington county, in 1838), and Jesse (who was born in 1771).

On April 12, 1749, Jesse Morris married Sarah Blackmore, the day before she was seventeen years of age. Their children were eleven in number, viz.: Rebecca, Elizabeth, Mary Ann, Sarah, David, Almira, Martha W., Benjamin F., Cynthia, Adelia M. and Jesse J. Benjamin F. Morris, the father of Mrs. Duncan, was born in Washington county, May 3, 1809, and died at Fredericktown, said county, June 18, 1882. He was for many years a steambot pilot and captain on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, where he was known not only as a genial, kind-hearted man, but also as a courteous, prompt and efficient officer. He abandoned river life about the commencement of the late Civil war. Capt. Jonathan Morris, of Revolutionary fame, at the time of his death, in 1838, had willed or given his nephew (Capt. B. F. Morris) his blue military cloak. For it the latter seemed to possess a peculiar affection, and, in accordance with his request, this cloak became his shroud and was buried with his body in the Quaker burying ground of Westland. During one of his trips on the Ohio river, Capt. B. F. Morris met Miss Sarah J. Miller, at Louisville, Ky., and they were afterward married August 15, 1842. Their married life was spent chiefly in Pittsburgh, West Brownsville and Fredericktown. The product of this union was nine children, viz.: Jesse J., married to Nancy E. Sharpneck; Mary E., married first to Leroy Hiller, and, after his death, to W. W. Reeves; Adelia M., who died at the age of about two years; Sarah Louise, married to John Crumrine; L. Franklin, married to Jennie Cowden; William B., who died in infancy; Samuel, married to Annie Reece; Eleanor, the subject of this sketch; Lorena M., married to John V. Stathers, and died September 21, 1883. All whose deaths are not mentioned are at this time (1893) living in or near Pittsburgh, Penn., except Mrs. Duncan.

When Mrs. Duncan was about two years of age, her parents changed the family residence from West Brownsville to Fredericktown, where she received the first elements of her education in the public school. In 1869 the Morris family removed to Pittsburgh. Here she attended the schools of the Seventeenth Ward, in which she completed the course of study in 1873. At this time her present husband was Principal of the schools, and she came under his supervisory if not immediate control. The acquaintance thus formed soon grew to a friendship and ripened into that more ardent passion that culminated in their marriage in 1880, after Mr. Duncan had established himself in his legal practice at Washington. They have resided there ever since. She is a reader of books, takes an interest in the political as well as other current news of the day, is a ready and entertaining conversationalist and a pleasing entertainer at her handsome home where she receives her many friends. They have one child, a daughter, called Ina, who is now (1893) past eleven years of age. Soon after completing her studies in 1872, the subject of this sketch, then in her seventeenth year, was elected teacher of one of the schools of the Thirty first Ward of Pittsburgh from which she accepted an invitation to a position in the Fifteenth Ward, where she continued until her marriage in 1880. During this time she held a Professional Certificate, received a Teacher's Permanent Certificate from the State, and was elected a member of the Pittsburgh Academy of Teachers. She is a member of the M. E. Church, and is identified with various benevolent enterprises conducted in its behalf. As an amateur she has for her own pleasure devoted a portion of her time for several years to art studies, and has produced a number of paintings in oil, which have received favorable comment from critics and professional artists. During the past year Mrs. Duncan served as a member of the Ladies Auxiliary Committee of Pennsylvania for the World's Fair. She was an active worker, and rendered efficient services in promoting an interest and securing statistics or exhibits of women's work for the Columbian Exposition from the district to which she was assigned.

JAMES FRANKLIN TAYLOR, one of the best known and influential native born attorneys of Washington county, first saw the light of day in South Strabane township, January 15, 1854.

The first of his family to come to Washington county was Henry Taylor, who moved hither from Cecil county, Md., sometime prior to 1780. Washington county was erected in March, 1781, and Henry Taylor became the first judge or president of courts therein, his appointment, which was dated October 2, 1781, coming from the chief executive council of Pennsylvania. He served with much ability as judge some years, and after a short interval was reappointed September 30, 1788, to the same position. He married Jane White, who bore him eleven children, of whom Matthew was the grandfather of the subject of these lines. Henry Taylor took up a "tomahawk right" to over 1,200 acres of land in the Rich Hills, in this county, all of which, with the exception of the Matthew Taylor estate, of South Strabane township, has passed out of the family. This sturdy old pioneer passed away from the scenes of his busy and eventful life in 1800. In addition to his civil offices, he was a general in the militia, and his commission is still in the possession of the family.

Matthew Taylor, son of Henry, and a native of South Strabane township, this county, is claimed as having been the first white child born west of the mountains. He was a farmer by occupation, owning the old homestead, and traveled considerably all over the county, which, in those early days, was a matter of no small enterprise. He married Miss Nancy Hutchinson, a woman of strong character, powerful will, thrifty in the extreme, the antithesis, it is recorded, of her husband. Of this union were born eleven children: Matthew, James, Thomas, George and William H. H. (all of whom died in Washington county), Polly (Mrs. John MacFarland), Sarah Jane (Mrs. Oliver Lindsay), Eliza (Mrs. Van Eman, in the West, the only member of this family now living), Henry (killed by a falling chimney, at a fire in Washington), Nancy (Mrs. Hugh Reynolds) and Rachel (Mrs. Workman Hughes). The mother died at the patriarchal age of ninety-two years, leaving to her children the imprint of her resolute and startling character.

William Henry Harrison Taylor, son of Matthew and Nancy Jane (Hutchinson) Taylor, was born in 1830 in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., educated at the schools of his district, attending also Washington and Jefferson College, several years, and on the old homestead was reared to the multiform duties of farm life. In 1850 he married Miss Jane E., daughter of Charles E. Jones, who was born in 1799 in England, where he followed the carpenter's trade, and where he married Susan Judson. In 1827 they came to America, settling in Washington, Penn., where he continued his trade in connection with contracting for house building. Mr. and Mrs. Jones had the following children: Mary, Sarah, two that died in infancy, Jane E., William, Susan, Sylvester F., James J. and George O. The mother died in 1871, aged seventy-one years, the father January 11, 1883.

To Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were born six children, of whom the following is a succinct record: Edward M., pastor of the Tremont M. E. Church at Boston, Mass. (in 1872 he graduated from Washington and Jefferson College, and afterward with first honors at Boston School of Divinity; was on the circuit for a time, prior to locating in Massachusetts; married Miss Mary Bradford, a descendant of a "May Flower" family); James Franklin, the subject proper of this sketch; Emma, wife of John A. Hall, assistant postmaster at Washington, Penn.; Alice, who died at the age of eleven years; William Nelson, senior member of the firm of Taylor & Speer, in the iron commission business at Pittsburgh, and who married a daughter of Stephen Crump; Susan Jane, wife of Dr. Maurer, of Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Taylor remained on the farm until 1866, when they moved with their family into Washington, for the purpose of educating their children, where he opened a general fresh and salt meat business, including pork packing and stock buying, and formed a partnership with Robert Charlton, which continued till the latter's death, after which Mr. Taylor carried on the business alone till the time of his decease, February 9, 1884, he being then fifty-four years old. He is buried in Washington cemetery. A staunch Republican and a loyal American, he took a strong interest in all national matters, political or otherwise, but was no office seeker. During the war of the Rebellion he was a fearless, out-spoken Union man, frequently even to the extent of exciting the ire of some less loyal acquaintance. He was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, and one of the leaders in the congregation in building the new First M. E. church, at Washington, of which he was a trustee. He was a pronounced advocate of education, and gave his children every advantage possible in that line, sending his sons to college and his daughters to seminaries, and held the office of school director at different times. He was, physically, a strong, vigorous man, but succumbed to diabetes, from which he was a sufferer for several years. Honest in his dealings, a despiser of shams of all kinds, and a biter of deceit and mendacity, he made and kept hosts of warm friends, who respected and honored him for his many virtues. Since his departure, his widow, still hale and hearty, has continued to reside at the old town house on West Wheeling street.

James Franklin Taylor was about twelve years old when the family moved to Washington, at the public schools of which place he received a liberal English education. He then entered the preparatory department of Washington and Jefferson College, and continued until the end of the junior year, when he ceased study for a year for recuperation, intending to return the following year, but changed his mind when his old classmates had graduated and gone forth. Having decided to take up the legal profession, Mr. Taylor, in 1876, commenced the study of law in the office of Boyd Crumrine, and November 10, 1879, was admitted to the bar of the county. He at once opened an office in Washington and commenced practice; but later returned to Mr. Crumrine's office, where he remained until 1883, in which year he was elected district attorney, and after serving three years was re-elected for another term. There was no opposition to his nomination, as he was very popular with the people, having served with full satisfaction to his constituents in previous offices. In 1882 he was chairman of the Republican County Committee, prior to which he had served as secretary of the same; was also assistant burgess of the borough of Washington for one term. On January 1, 1891, our subject entered into the present partnership with Winfield McElvaine, making a strong team in the general practice of law. Mr. Taylor's success as a lawyer has been such that he has been prominently mentioned for the position of judge of the several courts of his native county, the position twice filled by his great-grandfather, the Hon. Henry Taylor.

In September, 1884, Mr. Taylor married Annie Walton, eldest daughter of Rev. Richard L. Miller, D. D., pastor of an M. E. Church in Pittsburgh, and of this union have been born three children: Alice, Woodward and Virginia, all at the parental home on East Maiden street immediately outside the eastern limits of the borough, the house being of brick, comfortable and commodious.

Mr. Taylor is a director (was one of the first directors) of the Citizens National Bank, of which he was an original stockholder; and was also one of the three serving as a committee on the erection of a building for the same bank. While a student at college he was a prominent member of the Delta Tau Delta Fraternity.

GEORGE T. WALKER. As citizens and individuals, the American people have an insatiable thirst for biographical reading. A great man dies, and the people jostle each other in the library, book store and news stand to obtain the record of his life. What is the secret? Can it be only a vulgar curiosity which prompts us to search the lives of our public men or more humble fellow-citizens? While in some cases it must be admitted that this is indeed one element of the cause, it is not the real motive of the mass, or of even a considerable portion of biographical readers. Our leading public men and more successful citizens have each certain characteristics which have contributed largely to their success, and we, their humble neighbors, need the benefit of their example to guide us in the common walks of duty. We also need the record of lives similar to our own, for we are the same that our fathers have been, and by studying their biographies, we can avoid their mistakes and profit by their wisdom.

The original Walker family were natives of Ireland, the first of whom to emigrate being one George Walker. He was a farmer, and coming to America was married, and reared two children—Nancy, wife of Zaphaniah Mercier, of Chartiers township, this county, and Thomas. The parents die many years ago. Thomas Walker was born in 1822 at Bower Hill, Allegheny Co., Penn., and in early life came with his parents to Washington, Penn. He learned the carpenter's trade and followed it for several years in his native city; then moved to Pittsburgh, Penn., but soon returned to Washington. In 1866 he and Mr. Fitzwilliams built a planing mill, Mr. Klevis afterward becoming a partner. Thomas Walker was married, while in Pittsburgh, to Elizabeth Wilson (daughter of William Wilson), who bore him children as follows: William, Annie (wife of George Caldwell, of Washington), George T., Robert, Kate, Rowena (Mrs. William Brown, of Washington), Maria (living with her brother George T.) and Burns. Of these children, William, Robert, Kate and Burns are deceased. The father was a general contractor and builder, and in politics a Republican, serving as a member of the council several times, also filling minor offices. He was a member of the I. O. O. F. and was always willing to aid others. As a contractor, he had the largest trade of the city, and erected many of the most elegant buildings, among which may be mentioned the United Presbyterian Church, the Second Presbyterian Church, Hazlett's Bank, Reed's Block and several others. In personal appearance he was slightly below the medium height, weighing 240 pounds. He died in 1886, in his sixty-fourth year, of heart trouble, having been preceded to the "long home" by his wife in 1882.

George T. Walker was born November 7, 1855, in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the public schools until 1870, afterward spending two terms at Washington and Jefferson College. He then entered a planing mill and learned the carpenter's trade, when he was given the position of foreman, which he occupied some time. In 1878 he went to Texas, but not liking that part of the country, returned to Washington. In 1885 he formed a partnership under the firm name of Walker & Son, which continued until 1887, when he associated himself with C. M. Slater in the general contracting and lumber business. On December 25, 1883, George T. Walker married Olive B., daughter of Samuel Fulton, a citizen of Washington. In December, 1890, she was called from earth, leaving two children, Margaret and Thomas. Mr. Walker built the Citizens' National Bank, and many private residences in Washington. In 1884 he erected his present elegant home on West Chestnut street, and is at present engaged in the construction of the college gymnasium. He owns many houses and a considerable amount of real estate in and near Washington City, having dealt in the real estate business quite extensively. He is also interested in the oil business, and is a member of the Producers' Association. In politics Mr. Walker is an active Republican, having held various local offices; for five years he was in Company H, Tenth Regiment State Militia, under Col. Hawkins, of Beallsville, Washington county. In brief, George T. Walker is one of the most prosperous, well-known and popular business men of Washington.

JDALLAS JACKSON, a typical self-made man, whose trade banner bears the legend—"The hammer in the hand above all the arts doth stand"—is a native of Washington county, having been born April 13, 1840, in Hanover township. James Jackson, his grand father, a native of eastern Pennsylvania, came to Hanover township at an early day where he died. By occupation he was a farmer, in religious faith a member of the M. E. Church, and, in politics, a Whig. His children were Andrew, John, Noble, Perry and James.

John Jackson, father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Hanover township, this county, October 5, 1808, his education being received at the subscription schools of his district. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, which he followed all his life with marked success in his native township. On March 3, 1836, Mr. Jackson was married to Margaret, daughter of James Matthews, of Lancaster county, Penn., and they then commenced married life on the farm adjoining that on which he was born. Here he remained some years, when he sold this property and removed into the village of Florence, in the same township, where he passed the remainder of his life retired from active labor, dying March 11, 1853. He was an Old line Whig in politics, and a member of the M. E. Church. The names of his children are as follows: Martha J., Andrew M., John Dallas, Horatio C. and Sarah J.

The subject proper of this biographical memoir received a liberal education at the common schools of his native township, and at the age of fourteen came to Washington, where he entered the employ of S. B. & C. Hayes, as an apprentice to the trade of carriage builder. With this firm he remained some sixteen years, in part as apprentice, in part as journeyman, and then moved to Wheeling, W. Va., but after a stay there of fifteen months returned to Washington. In 1874 he opened his present widely-known carriage and wagon shop in the borough, where is also carried on a general line of blacksmithing, employment being given to six hands. Here, by industry, perseverance, thorough, honest work, judicious economy and close attention to business, Mr. Jackson has built up one of the most prosperous houses of the kind in the county. On January 8, 1859, he married Mary E., daughter of Jacob Miller, of Washington, Penn., and the children born to this union are James W., Sarah M., Jacob, John, Susan (deceased), Ella, Wray (deceased), Emma, Daisy and Joseph. Our subject is a member of the M. E. Church, and in politics is a Democrat.

MRS. ANICA CHAMBERS, a well-known and much-esteemed lady of Washington borough, is the daughter of Thomas Barlow, whose ancestors were among the first pioneer settlers of America.

Henry Preble (the grandfather of Mrs. Chambers) was descended from one of the oldest pioneer families, the first of his ancestry to set foot on American soil being one Abraham Preble. He sailed from England about the year 1636, with the "men of Kent," and first located in Plymouth county, Mass. Soon after his arrival Abraham Preble was married to Juliette, a daughter of Elder Nathaniel Tilden, and the young couple moved to York, province of Maine, where he died March 30, 1663. Frances Anica Preble, daughter of Henry Preble, was born December 25, 1797, and on July 28, 1817, was married to Thomas Barlow, who was born in 1794 in Connecticut. Five children were born to them, namely: Frances Emma, Anica (Mrs. Chambers), Harriet, Francis Joel and Frederick Stephen. The father died in 1859, at Washington, Penn.

Anica (Barlow) Chambers, the subject proper of this sketch, was married in the year 1855 to John D. Chambers, who was born in 1818, in Washington, Penn. At the age of thirteen years he entered Smith's store as clerk, and afterward became a member of the firm of Chambers & Matthews, the business being established in the block now occupied by Morgan's dry-goods store. Mr. Matthews died, and Mr. Chambers then closed up the business, which was very extensive. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. John D. Chambers were: Emma (Mrs. J. S. Humbird), Anica Barlow, Mary (Mrs. C. M. Ward), Henry Preble, and Harriet (who died in 1868). Mr. Chambers died in 1886. He was interested in the gas company, being one of the early stockholders, and in politics was a Republican.

CLEMENT M. SLATER, of the firm of Walker & Slater, builders, and proprietors of a planing mill in the borough of Washington, is a native of the county, born August 9, 1848, in West Alexander. His grandfather, James Slater, married Catherine Martin, and three of their children are David (father of Clement M.), Martin (in West Alexander) and Mrs. McKahan (in Washington, Penn.). James Slater, who was a farmer, died in 1859 in West Alexander at the age of seventy-one years.

David Slater was born February 28, 1818, near West Alexander. He was educated at the subscription schools of his neighborhood, and followed farming pursuits in Washington county till the age of twenty-four, when he moved to Ohio county, W. Va., where he now resides on his farm. In 1847 he married Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Dwight Warren, of New Hampshire, by trade a builder of windmills, and who came in 1837 to Washington county, where he died at the age of seventy years; his wife departed this life some five or six years later. Their children were Mrs. McKeag and Henry C., both in Washington; Rose Warren, living in West Alexander, and Elizabeth. To Mr. and Mrs. David Slater nine children were born, as follows: Clement M.; Rosa; Horace M., a carpenter in Oscalooosa, Iowa; William (deceased); Warren, living near West Alexander, this county; Frank, a farmer at Blue Hill, Neb.; Augusta, married to James McMurray, a farmer near West Alexander; Wendell P., farming on the homestead, and Vernon, living at home.

Clement M. Slater received a liberal education at the common schools of the place of his birth, working on his father's farm until he attained the age of sixteen years, when he commenced to learn carpentering in West Alexander. This trade he followed there some three years, and April 7, 1874, came to Washington, and for twelve years worked for Walker & Klevis as journeyman. On the death of both members of this firm, our subject and

George Walker (son of the old partner) bought out the business, and have since carried it on jointly, their general line being sawing and planing, house building, contracting, etc.

On January 5, 1871, Mr. Slater was married at Constitution, Washington Co., Ohio, to Jennie, daughter of Rhoda Mendellhad. This wife died November 6, 1876, leaving one child, George W., who, on May 4, 1890, was run over by a train on the B & O. R. R., from the effects of which he died after six hours' suffering, at the age of nearly eighteen years. On March 16, 1887, Mr. Slater married Miss Minerva Taylor, of Parkersburg, W. Va., daughter of Alexander and Delilah Taylor, also natives of that State. No children have been born to this union. Mr. Slater is a Republican, and has filled various offices of trust with considerable ability. He and his wife are members of the First M. E. Church, he for eighteen years, and is steward of same. He has made his own success in life by strict attention to business, economy and thrift. When he had finished his apprenticeship, all he had to start on was the sum of $2.50, and to day he is enjoying a well merited comfortable competence.

LON M. PORTER, one of the leading and most artistic photographers in Washington, of which he is a native, was born June 21, 1858, a son of Hugh and Nancy Porter. Hugh was a carpenter by trade, and was married in 1855, in Washington county, where they were born. In 1863 Mr. Porter enlisted in Company A, Twenty second Pennsylvania Cavalry (Ringgold Battalion), went South with the regiment and died there of fever, at a place known as New Creek. His widow is still living in Washington.

Lon M. Porter when a boy attended the Soldiers Orphan School, Uniontown, Penn., for five years, and then coming to Washington, learned the photographic art in the studio of John H. Rogers, later working for J. W. Rothwell. In 1878 he went to Pittsburgh, where he improved himself yet more in the art, in the far-famed gallery of Dabbs, remaining some time, and then proceeded to Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York, making an extended trip to the West and South before he returned to Washington. This was in April, 1883. Here for one year and a half he worked for S. G. Rogers, in the same establishment, where he had learned the business; then moved to Camonsburg, bought a gallery and carried on a profitable business there for six years. In the meantime he bought Mr. Rogers' studio in Washington, and for some months conducted both businesses, but since August, 1891, he has devoted his entire personal attention to his widely patronized, thoroughly equipped gallery at No. 143 South Main street, in Washington.

Mr. Porter is eminently qualified for his business, having had excellent training and varied experience. His work is of the best quality, and his patrons are among the first families of Washington and vicinity. Politically, he is a Republican, socially, a member of the Masonic Lodge and Chapter and a member of the Royal Arcanum. For several years he was a member of the National Guards, belonging to the First Regiment of Philadelphia. His father died June 20, 1865, aged thirty-five, the mother is still living, aged fifty-five, while but one sister, Mrs. Andrew Brady, is living, her residence being at Cornwall, Penn. One brother who died April 1, 1892, lived in Allegheny City.

DR. SIMON SCHNIDER STROUSS. The first recorded history of the Strauss family in the United States was enacted in Northampton county, Penn. David Strauss and wife came over from Leipsic, Germany, about the year 1750. Of this date we are not quite certain, but there is conclusive evidence that they sailed about the middle of the eighteenth century.

David Strauss was a musician and also somewhat of a fighter. He was chorister in the German Lutheran Church, and took up arms with his ardent fellow countrymen in the war of the Revolution. That he was a soldier worthy of the name, we know from the fact that he was made colonel under Washington. After the war he settled down to quiet farm life in Northampton county. His son, John Strauss, moved to Allegheny county, Penn., in 1806. He was a millwright by trade, but as he grew older, country life and bucolic charms increased in attractiveness to him, and he started West for his fortune. He pitched his family tent on a little creek in Allegheny county, about twenty miles northwest of Pittsburgh, now the junction of Allegheny, Beaver and Washington counties. Here he spent the remainder of his days. When asked by his children later in life, why he did not settle nearer the confluence of the two rivers, he would reply: "I could see no great advantages then. Pittsburgh was only a few houses near an old fort. One cart load of produce would supply its daily demand, and if we shipped down the river we were obliged to walk back or row up stream, which was slower and harder work than walking." So he concluded to go farther into the country and establish a little kingdom of his own. We can look back and say: "What a mistake he made." But, perhaps, our conclusion would be too hasty. Viewed from a financial point of view, doubtless it was a mistake; but when we consider the fact that the thread of life has been spun to an unusual length to almost all the descendants of this line, we may credit it to pure air, sanitary living, and muscle-making necessities of this pioneer farmer.

John Strouss married Mary Schnip, September 10, 1795, and there were born to them four sons and five daughters: Lydia, Elizabeth, Jonas, John, David, Mary, Simon S., Hannah and Martha. Mary Strouss died in 1815, and John was married, the second time, to Annie McCoy. There were born to him of this marriage three sons: William, James and Henry. Of these seven sons, Dr. Simon S. Strouss (whose likeness appears with this sketch) was the youngest of the first marriage. From this brief history of ancestry we can form an idea of the limited pleasures, and opportunities for any thing else than farm work, that fell to him in his youth. The paterfamilias and his wife and twelve children all believed and practiced strict economy, and the daily catechism of hard work, relieved on Sundays by the austere principles and rigorous observance of "Blue-Stocking" Presbyterianism, which creed, slightly modified, has been adhered to by nearly all this large family.

Dr. Strouss was born in Allegheny county, Penn., Wednesday, January 10, 1810. His educational advantages were necessarily quite limited. Even public schools were unthought of in his neighborhood, and he was obliged to search a few of not the best books and pamphlets for his little store of general knowledge. Finally, to his great delight, a Latin school was started in Hopewell church, near his father's farm, and he, having expressed a preference for the medical profession, was permitted to study this dry language in all its original dryness, for a few months. Thus equipped, as to his mental outfit, he came to Washington county and read medicine with Dr. Jonathan Letherman, who at that time had an office near Canonsburg. On a faded sheet of old-fashioned letter paper we find the following: "To all whom it may concern: This is to certify that Simon Strouss has attentively and diligently studied the science of medicine, including anatomy, surgery, midwifery, and therapeutics, and I can further state that his moral character is unimpeachable. February 20, 1831. Jonathan Letherman, M. D." This was his diploma, and now he starts out in the world, fully equipped, as Dr. Strouss. He first went to Pittsburgh, and practiced about one year with Dr. Wray, of that city. In 1832 and 1833 he practiced in Beaver county, located in what is now Independence (then Hopewell) township. He left there in the fall of 1833 and established an office in Amity, Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn. It was there that a long and useful life was spent, in service to his fellow men. He was eminently successful in every sense of the word. Beloved by his clients and respected by all with whom he came in contact. Compared with present customs, his remuneration for service was small; yet his practice became so extensive that he accumulated a comfortable fortune. With this he was liberal to the end of his days. The unfortunate always found a sympathizing helper, and of his church he was a strong moral and financial supporter.

Dr. Strouss first married, August 12, 1836, Jane E. Dodd, who was the eldest in the family of nine children of Rev. Cephas Dodd, viz.: Jane E.; Sarah; Thaddens, M. D.; Cornelia; Elizabeth; Hannah; James E.; Cephas, M. D.; and Elias E., M. D. Their father was the son of Rev. Thaddens Dodd, the founder and first pastor of Upper and Lower Ten-Mile Churches, Washington county; Rev. Dodd commenced his labor there in 1777, and later in his work was one of the principal actors in the establishing of what is now Washington and Jefferson College. Mrs. Strouss died Thursday, August 13, 1863. There were born of this marriage two sons and five daughters. Dr. Strouss was married, the second time, March 12, 1868, to Mrs. Anne Conger (nee Anne Day). There were no children of this marriage. Of the seven children we record the following: Hanna D., born September 20, 1837, died September 29, 1843; Mary Jane, born March 26, 1839; Cephas D., born January 1, 1841, died September 26, 1843; Martha Elizabeth, born November 19, 1843; John D., still-born; Sarah Ann, born March 13, 1846; Ruth D., born June 11, 1848, died October 3, 1858. Of these, Mary Jane married William C. Condit, July 8, 1858; Martha Elizabeth married Demas McCollum, December 4, 1863; Sarah Ann married David B. Baker, March 2, 1865. These three daughters settled on farms given them by their father, and are still living in Washington county. Dr. Strouss died Tuesday, April 21, 1883, and his wife on Wednesday, May 16, 1883. Thus within three weeks this beloved old man and his worthy wife passed away, breaking the Strouss line in this branch of the family as no sons were left to carry the name.

The life of Dr. Strouss was one of undeniable consistency, and in his old age there was allotted to him the esteem and regard that true worth justly merits. He was jovial, kind-hearted and earnest. Always willing to sacrifice personal comfort and consideration for a suffering patient. He early acquired a practice that extended to a radius of twelve or fifteen miles from his office. There was considerable of a German element in his locality, and they still reverence the memory of Dr. Strouss. His pills and drops were a panacea for all their ailments. Many of them affirm that even his jolly presence was enough to put one beyond the notice of suffering. Although he never read psychology, yet he understood the influence of mind over matter, and the power of the will. He had the true secret of the practitioner. This was best evinced in his treatment of fevers, in which he was eminently successful; often being called as council, especially in such cases to other localities. He was an earnest, active follower of the Master, always at his place with heart and purse in the Presbyterian Church of Lower Ten-Mile. He did his life work well, and has left us a noble example of an upright, useful and honorable life.

As a rule, Dr. Strouss never speculated or tampered with the vagaries of fortune. Once he was tempted by the Western sheep craze, and ventured some capital; but finding himself losing, he withdrew, and devoted himself more exclusively to his chosen profession. He has gone to his reward, and to us, his descendants, there is left a sacred memory and Christian example. May we strive toward true merit as he did, and preserve the mantle he has left to us, with his benediction, unsullied from dishonor's pollution. For the name and honor is ours to carry before the searching eyes of an exacting world. This feeble tribute we offer as a token of our undying gratitude, love and esteem.

THE McCracken Family. The natives of the Highlands of Scotland have, the world over, a reputation second to none for robustness, bravery, honesty and loyalty, and the McCrackens in this county, with proper pride, claim descent from such nobility of the historic soil of "Caledonia, stern and wild."

Many years ago, during religious persecutions in Scotland, a portion, if not all, of the clan McCracken left their heather clad hills for the North of Ireland, where, with many more of their self-exiled countrymen, they built up a new home in which they were free to worship according to their own old Presbyterian customs, without let or hindrance. From this place emigrated to America, in 1793, Andrew McCracken, following in the wake of his brother David who had preceded him to the shores of Columbia by some years. In Ireland Andrew was a flax dresser, but in this country he followed farming. The brother had made a settlement in Amwell township, and thither Andrew also made his way, where he passed the remainder of his days, tilling the soil and making a permanent home for his posterity; he died in 1837, at the age of seventy-seven, while on a visit to Athens, Ohio. He had married, in Ireland, Nancy Jamison, who departed to the "other shore" in 1835, when seventy-three years of age. They were the parents of six children—two sons and four daughters—who reached maturity, but none of whom are now living. Of these, Archibald was the father of

M. L. A. McCracken, the subject proper of this memoir; John went to Athens, Ohio, thence to Lee county, Iowa, where at the age of eighty-three he died (his sons are living on the Pacific slope).

Archibald McCracken, in 1823, married Lurena, daughter of Luther Axtell, a farmer, who came to Washington county from New Jersey in an early day, in which State he had married a Miss Dodd, and their four sons and six daughters all grew to maturity, of whom one son is a minister in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Pittsburgh; one daughter, Rachel, is at present living in Washington county, unmarried; another daughter, Nancy, married Silas Clarke, and is now deceased. The parents of these children both died in Washington county, the father about 1870, the mother some time later. The Axtell family are descended from Col. Axtell who commanded a regiment of Cromwell's guards, was present at the trial and execution of Charles I, and was himself beheaded not long afterward, about the time of the Restoration. A full account of the trial and execution of Col. Axtell is found in "Cobbett's State Trials."

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Archibald McCracken took up their residence at the old homestead of his ancestry, in Amwell township, where they passed the remainder of their days. The mother was called from earth in 1858 at the age of fifty-four years, the father died in 1885 aged eighty-seven years. Ten children were born to this honored couple, as follows: Phoebe, wife of Jehu Iams, in West Virginia; Elizabeth, married to William Watson, of Amwell township; Mary, wife of Samuel Smith, of Franklin township; Sarah, wife of Stephen B. Miller, of Amwell township; Chloe, Rachel and Martha Jane, all deceased in young girlhood; Andrew J., a farmer in Russell county, Kans.; Martin Luther A., special mention of whom will be presently made; and Jonas C., on the home farm.

MARTIN L. A. McCracken was born in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., his rudimentary education being received at the subscription schools of the neighborhood, afterward improved by an attendance at the free schools of the county, but he was fourteen years old before he could read. He remained at home until twenty-one years of age, and then, having nurtured a desire to become a lawyer, he resolved that the ambition of his young life should be fulfilled. Leaving the paternal roof-tree, he worked about on various farms, teaching school in winters five years, and then attended Pleasant Valley Academy for a time, and Waynesburg College one session. In 1860 he went South, and was a teacher at Mayslick Academy, Ky., when the Civil war broke out—producing an excitement in the State that caused the academy, as well as other institutions of learning, to be temporarily closed up. Returning to Washington, Mr. McCracken enlisted for three years in Company K, Eighth Pennsylvania Reserve Regiment, or Thirty-seventh Regiment P. V. I., which was attached to the army of the Potomac, and he served fifteen days over the term of his enlistment, during nine of which he saw heavy fighting in the wilderness. He participated in battles including over thirty days' heavy fighting, besides numerous skirmishes and minor engagements, and was four times wounded, though not any time seriously, unless we except the shooting off of the little finger of his right hand. His army record is as follows: Enlisted May 9, 1861; promoted to corporal then to sergeant, and as such was mustered out with company May 24, 1864. After his discharge Mr. McCracken returned to Washington county, read law in the office of the late John L. Gow, Sr., in Washington, Penn., and was admitted to the bar of his native county in 1867, since when he has been engaged with well-merited success in the practice of his chosen profession. He was partner with J. A. McIlvaine from 1874 until the latter's appointment to a judgeship; then was partner with M. H. Stephenson, one year; then practiced alone, until February 1, 1892, since when he and J. Q. McGiffin have been partners under the firm name of McCracken & McGiffin.

In 1862, while absent from his regiment on recruiting service several months, Mr. McCracken was married to Martha M., daughter of John Adams, who came from Ireland to Amwell township in 1818, and died in South Strabane township in 1873; two of his sons, William and James, now reside in Washington, where they follow carpentry. To Mr. and Mrs. McCracken have been born eight children, of whom five are now living, all at home with their parents, viz.: Minnie L., Bertram E., Edna L., William A. and Martha Jane. Mr. McCracken is a typical self-made man, a living example of what patient purpose, indomitable perseverance and hard study can accomplish. During the early years of his manhood, from November 1 to May 1, following year, he was accustomed to rise at 3 o'clock in the morning and study till daylight, which became the nucleus to his education. Politically he is a Republican; from 1866 to 1869 he served as recorder, and he has filled various township and borough offices. Socially he is a member of the F. & A. M. The original farm where his grandfather settled, in Amwell and Franklin townships, is now owned by him. Mr. McCracken has in his possession an old English musket, bearing the date 1763, which his great-grandfather Axtell carried throughout the Revolutionary war; he was at Valley Forge with Washington, and the musket was one of those used in making a litter on which Gen. Mercer was carried off the field wounded.

ANDREW W. KERR, one of the most successful and well-to-do agriculturists of Washington county, is of immediate English descent. His father, William A. Kerr, born in 1816, a son of Andrew, was a native of England, as were all his antecedents. When he was yet a child, his parents brought him to this country, making a settlement in Washington county, Penn., where they passed the rest of their days. They were the parents of the following named children: Margaret, who died at the age of five days; Agnes, deceased wife of William Smiley; Hannah, who died at the age of eleven months; Mary, married to Robert Caldwell of Hopewell township, both deceased (she died after him in 1877, at the age of sixty-eight years); and William A., father of the subject of these lines. The father of this family died May 28, 1823, at the age of forty-five years; his wife, Margaret, survived him till April 20, 1865, when she, too, departed to the "Better Land" at the age of eighty-two years.

William A. Kerr received his education at Frankfort Academy, Washington county, Penn., and taught school for several years in Hopewell township. On July 4, 1844, he married Miss Margaret Tweed, a native of Washington county, Penn., born June 20, 1815, of a very early family of the county. After marriage they located on a rented farm in Hopewell township until 1854, when they bought a farm in Buffalo township, on which they lived until 1872, in which year they sold it and bought another in the same township, where William A. Kerr died January 16, 1887, at the age of seventy years, and which farm is at this time in the possession of the subject of this sketch. The widowed mother is now living in Buffalo village. They were the parents of three children, viz.: Elizabeth Caroline, widow of John G. Farrer (she is now assistant matron at the County Home; Mr. Farrer volunteered in Company K, Fifteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, in the summer of 1862, and served until the close of the war); Mary Margaret, married to H. W. Leech, of Buffalo village, and Andrew W. William A. Kerr was a staunch Republican, and held various township offices. During the invasion of Pennsylvania in the Civil war he enlisted for State protection.

Andrew W. Kerr was born August 5, 1849, in Hopewell township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education at the schools of the neighborhood of his new home in Buffalo township, whither the family had moved in 1854. Here he was reared to farm life, and lived over thirty years. On December 16, 1874, Mr. Kerr married Miss Alma V. Giles, whose father (at that time deceased) was of Pittsburgh, Penn., and whose mother has since departed this life. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kerr, viz.: Annie Margaret, William Albert, Florence Estella and James Wiley. In 1887 the family moved into the borough of Washington, Mr. Kerr having built an elegant and commodious residence on Prospect avenue. At present he is a partner in a flouring mill in that place. Our subject and wife are members of the U. P. Church at Washington, and in politics he is a Republican.

JOSEPH M. DICKSON, who, though yet a young man, has brought himself, by ability and acumen, into the front rank of the legal circle of Washington, was born in Buffalo township October 16, 1856. He is a son of James Dickson, a native of Maryland, who, about the year 1839, came to Washington county, where he soon after married Miss Mary E., daughter of Elisha Duvall. Her father was a blacksmith by trade, and worked in his shop near Washington, until his death, at the patriarchal age of ninety-one years. The Duvall family came at an early date to this county from Wellsburg, Va. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Dickson removed to the northern part of the county, settling on a farm in Robinson township, where they now reside. To them eight children were born: Eliza, wife of D. C. Reed, in Cross Creek township; William, at New Concord, Ohio; Salem, in Jefferson township; Joseph M., an attorney in Washington; Mary, wife of George Wolf, in Robinson township; Alice and Agnes, both deceased, and L. J., engaged in the hardware business at Washington, Pennsylvania.

Joseph M. Dickson was reared on his father's farm, and received a liberal education at the common schools of the district. Later he attended the Jefferson Academy at Canonsburg and the Normal School at Sewickley, in Allegheny county, after which he engaged in teaching in the common schools of this county. He then entered the Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Va., where he graduated in the classical course in June, 1880, and he at once commenced the study of law at the same university, graduating therefrom with the law class of 1881. Coming to Washington county, he was admitted to the bar in 1883. Mr. Dickson is a staunch Democrat, being one of the active young workers in that party. For four years he served as secretary of the Democratic committee, and in 1884 was nominated for county prothonotary, but, his party being in the minority, he was, not unexpectedly, defeated, yet he had the satisfaction of polling the largest Democratic vote cast in the county up to that time. It was the year of the Presidential election, when James G. Blaine, a native of the county, was heading the opposition ticket. Mr. Dickson worked with untiring zeal, canvassing closely the entire county, and receiving many compliments from friends for the masterly fight he had made against certain defeat. He takes an absorbing interest in all national and local politics. He is a member of the Improved Order of Heptasophs, and of the school board of Washington borough.

JAMES W. McDOWELL is a great grandson of Thomas McDowell, who, in 1787, came from his native county, Lancaster, Penn., to this county, where he bought a tract of wild land in Mt. Pleasant township, and hewed out a home for himself and family. He died in 1798. He married Janet Clark, and by her had children, of whom James, grandfather of our subject, was born in Lancaster county, came with his father in 1787, and married Mary McKnight, daughter of a pioneer. The children born to them were James, of Mt. Pleasant township; John, of whom mention is made further on; Jane, wife of Alexander McElroy, of Mt. Pleasant township; Eleanor, married to John Nesbit, of Chartiers township, and Rebecca, wife of William Smith, of Mt. Pleasant township, all deceased. The parents of this family both died on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township, the father in 1827 at the age of sixty-seven years, the mother September 9, 1850, when about eighty-two years of age. They were members of the Union Church.

John McDowell was born in Mt. Pleasant township. Like his forefathers, he was a practical agriculturist. In May, 1839, he was married to Margaret, daughter of Jacob Miller, of Chartiers township, and the following eight children were born to them: Mary Jane, who died young; James W., our subject; Jacob F., on the home farm; Margaret, wife of J. M. K. Donaldson, of Mt. Pleasant township; Rebecca, wife of James Agnew, of same township; John, in business at Canonsburg; Sarah and Elizabeth, both living on the home farm. The mother died February 20, 1866, aged fifty-six years, the father August 18, 1886, at the age of seventy-five. He had lived all his life on the old farm. Politically he was a straight Democrat, and for some time served as school director; in religion he was a consistent member of Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church.

James W. McDowell was born on the family homestead in Mt. Pleasant township, January 29, 1812, received a liberal primary education, and attended Jefferson College at Canonsburg, from which he graduated in 1866. He then commenced the study of law at Washington under Hon. William Montgomery. In August, 1869, he was admitted to the bar, and for two years thereafter he wrote in a law office at Pittsburgh, Penn., whence he returned to Washington, where he has since been successfully engaged in general practice. On September 23, 1869, Mr. McDowell was married to Miss Nancy J., daughter of Joseph V. Rea, of Mt. Pleasant township. Three children have been born to them. Rea is a graduate of Duff - Business College of Pittsburgh, and John is attending college. Their first born, a daughter, died at the age of thirteen. Mr. and Mrs. McDowell are members of the First Presbyterian Church, of which he is a deacon and trustee. Politically a lifelong Democrat, he has served his borough and county in several offices of trust, and is at present member of the city council; socially he is a Knight Templar, and D. D. G. M. of the F. & A. M.

GEORGE W. HAYS, member of the well-known firm of George W. Hays & Co., dealers in hardware, etc. Washington, was born in Butler county, Penn., in 1875. After securing a fair education at the schools of his native place, he commenced, when nineteen years of age, to learn the tinning trade in Pittsburgh, and for some time after the expiration of his apprenticeship he carried on a general tinning business in Armstrong, Penn. Thence he moved to Freeport.

Here he followed the same line of business until 1882, when he moved to Millerstown, same State, and there, for eight years, sold general hardware, oil well supplies, agricultural implements, etc. In 1890 he came to Washington and purchased the store owned by T. A. Burkellow, where he now carries on the leading business in general hardware, house-furnishing goods, etc. Mr. Hays married Miss Anna M., daughter of D. S. McCollough, of Butler county, Penn., March 2, 1880. Six children have been born to them, namely, David Charles, Russell Valentine, Mabel Lucretia, Laura Amanda, Mary Aileen and Anna Margaret. Mr. Hays may justly be classified among the self-made men of the day, as his success in life is entirely due to his own unaided exertions, and he ranks high among the prosperous and respected business men of Washington borough. Politically, he is a Republican; socially, a member of the F. A. C., and, like Mrs. Hays, is a member of the Second Presbyterian Church, of Washington. Mr. Hays's father, John Valentine Hays, came, with his parents, from Germany, when nine years of age. In 1813 the youth had grown to manhood and married Margaret Upperman, who was born at Pittsburgh. To this marriage six sons and one daughter were born, of whom G. W. Hays is the fifth in order of birth.

EP. SWART, one of the leading photographers and thoroughly enterprising citizens of the borough of Washington, was born in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., July 31, 1861. His father, Amos Swart, also a native of Amwell township, and by occupation a farmer, married in 1849 Miss Sidney Horn, a daughter of John Horn, of Amwell township. Mr. and Mrs. Swart resided in that township until the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion, when he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., serving from 1861 until May, 1864, when he was shot dead in the battle of the Wilderness, the bullet passing through his brain. Shortly before this event, and while Mr. Swart was visiting his home, on furlough, his house was burned, a melancholy verification of the adage that "troubles seldom come singly." The family then moved to Washington, and some time later Mrs. Swart was married to G. W. Moninger, of Amwell township, where she now resides, again a widow. By her first marriage she had five children, viz. John H. (deceased), Josephine (wife of William T. Lindley, of Morris township), Mina (Mrs. A. S. Burns, residing in Washington, Warren (Iowa) and E. P. Swart. By her second marriage she became the mother of two children, Grant and Frank J. Moninger, both residents of Amwell township.

E. P. Swart, the subject of this sketch, was reared and educated in his native township, and in 1881 he went to Iowa, where he learned the photographic art, which line of business he has since followed with eminent success. In 1889 he returned to Washington, and about a year later established himself in his present business, which enjoys a large and increasing patronage. In 1883 Mr. Swart was married to Miss Belle A. Beebe, a member of one of the prominent families of Michigan. In February, 1889, she died, leaving three children, Mamie, Edgar A. and Ruth, the latter of whom died at the age of ten months. Politically Mr. Swart is a Republican, and while a resident of Iowa he held various township offices. Socially he is a member of the I. O. O. F., the Jr. O. U. A. M. and the I. O. H. and National Union.

JSHAN MARGERUM, the well-known and popular dealer in boots and shoes in Washington, was born June 22, 1828, at Washington, Penn., a son of John and Eliza J. (Smith) Margerum, both natives of Lancaster county, Penn., the former born about the year 1809.

John Margerum, the grandfather of our subject, was of Scotch-Irish extraction, and was a butcher by trade; he died in eastern Pennsylvania in 1825. His wife lived to a very advanced age, and died at the home of her son John, in Washington. They had nine children, of whom but one, Robert, is living, and he resides in Washington county, now far advanced in years.

John Margerum, the father of J. Shan, worked at the shoemaker's trade, in Washington, for fifty-seven years. He was blessed with an exceedingly robust constitution, and was never sick a single day in his life. He was called from earth in July, 1891, at the age of eighty-three years, strong both physically and mentally to the end, and at the time of his death was the oldest resident shoemaker in Washington. His wife had preceded him to the grave in 1889, at the age of seventy-five years. He was married in 1833 to Eliza J. Smith, daughter of John and Honor Smith, and to them fourteen children were born, of whom six are now living, viz.: J. Shan, Julia Ann (wife of Charles Wendle), John L., Eliza J., now of Wheeling, W. Va. (wife of Julius Clark), William and Marietta (now Mrs. Zelt) all residents of Washington, this county, except Mrs. Wendle, whose home is at Pittsburgh, Penn., and Mrs. Julius Clark.

J. Shan Margerum received his education at the schools of his native town, and learned the trade of shoemaker with his father, for whom he worked. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the Independent Patton Cavalry, of the Ringgold Battalion, which afterward became Company F, of the 22d Cavalry, and was appointed brevet lieutenant, which position he held until the rank was abolished. He served as company artificer, and participated in most of the forty six battles and minor engagements of his regiment, was twice wounded, though not seriously, and twice fell into the hands of the enemy, but succeeded in effecting his escape to the Union lines, each time; on the first occasion he was captured near Martinsburg, Md., by Maj. Gilmore's cavalry, but made his escape to a garden, and hid in a ditch two days before he dared to venture out. In 1891 he revisited the scene of his adventure, and although the town had grown considerably, he found the ditch and a stone fence about just as he saw them thirty years ago. After serving to the close of the struggle, the war-worn soldier returned home to the pursuits of peace, and resumed the business he had commenced in 1861, and which he has since continued in. About fifteen years ago he opened a retail business on North Main street, where he now lives. In February, 1870, he married Miss Lon A., daughter of Matthew and Ann Griffin, of Washington, Penn., both of whom were early settlers of Washington, but are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Margerum have no children. He is a Democrat in politics, as have been all the family on both sides of the house, and is a member of the G. A. R. He is a sportsman in the literal sense of the word, and owns a kennel of some of the best bred dogs in the State. Just after the war Mr. Margerum commenced collecting curiosities, and has now one of the most valuable collections in the county. Among the articles of vertu is the first "greenback" issued by the Government, now valued at $1,000. His interesting museum is open to the public, who are always welcomed and courteously treated.

ROBERT BIDDLE PATTERSON. This prominent business man represents one of the oldest families of Washington county. His grandfather, John Patterson, was born of Irish parents in eastern Pennsylvania, and came to Washington county when a boy. He was reared and educated in this county, where he grew to manhood, was married, and reared a family of fourteen children. In politics he was a member of the Democratic party, and in religion was connected with the Presbyterian Church.

James Patterson, his father, was born and reared in Washington county, and attended the public schools of Nottingham township, where he married Ann McVay, of Union township, a daughter of Thomas McVay. To them were born the following children: Thomas, John, Mary Jane, Hannah Z., Robert B., J. Kerr, S. R., William C., and Annie. They resided in Nottingham township for twenty years after their marriage, where he followed farming and stock raising; moved in 1862 to Westmoreland county, Penn.; resided there for six years; then went to Greensburg, where he lived in retirement. He was an active member of, and for many years an elder in, the Mingo Presbyterian Church. In political opinion he was a staunch supporter of Democratic principles.

Robert B. Patterson was born November 16, 1845, in Nottingham township, attended the common schools and after moving, with his parents, to Westmoreland county, attended the schools there, and also the academy at Salem. He learned the tanner's trade, which he followed but a short time, and afterward taught school four or five years. At the expiration of that time he opened a general store at Greensburg, Penn. In 1880 he moved to Monongahela, where he purchased a grocery store of George Scott, and conducted that business until 1892. There he was married to Miss Agnes Painter, August 30, 1881. Mrs. Agnes Patterson's father's name was G. W. Painter; her mother's, Mary A. Painter; her grandfathers', Tobias Painter and Christian Weaver, all of Westmoreland county, Penn. In 1892 he became interested in the Graham Foundry Company, and is now taking an active part in that enterprise. Mr. Patterson possesses the characteristic spirit of energy which has pervaded all who bear the family name, and has been the architect of his own success. Politically, he is an ardent worker in the Democratic party, and in religion is a member of the Presbyterian Church of Monongahela. The children of this family are: Robert J., Mary W., Edgar M., Catharine E. and Kenneth McVay.

ABRAMHAM L. ASHBROOK. This gentleman claims descent from Simon Ashbrook, a soldier in the German army, one hundred and twenty years ago, who left the Fatherland for America at the time of the Revolutionary war. In this country he was employed, during that struggle, in drilling recruits for the American service. His death occurred in Lancaster county, Penn., where one of his sons, also named Simon, was born. This son, Simon, about the year 1778, when he was in the neighborhood of twenty-one years old, came to Washington county and purchased land in Buffalo township, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying in 1849 at the age of eighty-two years. He had married Mary Fennell, who departed this life in Washington county in 1856, at the age of eighty-eight years. They were members of the Baptist Church.

Absalom Baird Ashbrook, son of Simon and Mary (Fennell) Ashbrook, was born June 3, 1808, and was reared on his father's farm. He married Miss Elizabeth Braddock, of Franklin township, this county, a daughter of John Braddock, and after marriage they made their home in Buffalo township up to 1884, when they came to the borough of Washington, here to pass their declining years. They were the parents of the following named children: Mary, wife of Robert Lytle, of East Finley township; Simon F., in Buffalo township; John, who died at the age of seven years; William, died when twelve years old; Abraham L., subject of this sketch; William A. and John B., both deceased; Sarah Margaret, wife of W. P. Hastings, of Washington, Penn., and Solomon Luther, deceased (a dentist who practiced in Buffalo township). The mother of this family died at the home of her son, Abraham L., in 1886, at the age of seventy-four years.

Abraham L. Ashbrook, of whom this sketch chiefly relates, was born March 31, 1847, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education at the common schools of the district. In his youth he commenced the study of dentistry, which he supplemented with a course of study at the Dental College, Baltimore, Md., during the sessions of 1885-86, from which he graduated in the latter year. He then came to Washington, where he has since remained in active practice, a prominent and popular leader in the profession. In 1871 Dr. Ashbrook was married to Miss Mary E. Stewart, of Buffalo township, daughter of John Stewart, and one son was born to them, named John Stewart, now living with his father. Politically the Doctor is a Democrat; socially he is a member of the Royal Arcanum, and in religion is an adherent of the Second Presbyterian Church. The Ashbrook family have, as a rule, been long-lived; Margaret (Howell) died when ninety-eight years old; John, when eighty-four; Solomon, when ninety-three; Nancy Huston, when ninety-one; William, when eighty-five—all brothers and sisters of Absalom B. Ashbrook, father of Dr. Abraham L. Ashbrook

GEORGE H. REYNOLDS. The family, of which this gentleman is an honored member, is well known and highly respected in South Strabane township, and the name has been an honored one from the time of the settlement of the family on American soil.

About the year 1676 James Reynolds, in company with a brother, emigrated from England to the New World, and settled near Shippensburg, Cumberland Co., Penn., where the old landmarks of that noted family still remain. One son of this pioneer, also named James, was a famous Indian fighter in his day. He had a family of six sons and four daughters, and at the commencement of the Revolution five of these sons enlisted in the patriot army, serving all through the war under Gen. Washington. One son, Benedict, who was born near Shippensburg, served in Capt. Potter's company, and was at the battle of Bunker Hill, remaining with Washington all through the many trials and privations until the close of the war. A few years after the conclusion of peace he married Elizabeth Harmon, and a year later took up his residence, along with four of his brothers, near Baltimore, in Anne Arundel county, Md. In 1785, in the early spring, he and his wife, two small children (the eldest but three years old) and one of his brothers, set out from Maryland with all their goods and chattels, including four horses and a cart, to cross the Alleghany mountains into western Pennsylvania. When they reached where now stands the town of Cumberland, near the old fort built by Gen. Washington, one of the horses died, so they had to abandon the cart and carry their household effects on the other horses, in pack-saddles. Thus they continued their journey over the mountains, frequently meeting with snow blockades and Indians, until they reached where is now Hopwood, in Fayette county. Here they met one of Mr. Reynolds' old friends, and together they all pushed forward into Washington county, landing in Amwell township, near what was called Mount Nebo, a landmark now obliterated. One year later Mr. Reynolds purchased from the Darby estate the farm on which he permanently settled and passed the remainder of his days. With the exception of his three horses he had no property whatever, but by energy and perseverance he succeeded in securing a home, which he worked and cleared up, paying for same in rye and corn, as there was but little or no money in circulation at that time, and soon he became comfortably settled. He reared a family of nine children in a log cabin having but one room 16x20 feet, afterward building an addition. As there were no school-houses in those days in that region, he used a part of his cabin for school purposes, and here his son Zachariah, then but sixteen years old, taught subscription school, receiving from each scholar as a fee for one term's tuition (about three months) a bushel of rye. Seven of the nine children born to this brave old pioneer were Henry, Zachariah, Mary, Susau, Lloyd, Benedict and Sarah, all now passed away, Sarah dying in 1885, the last of the nine. Mr. Reynolds was generous and kind-hearted to a fault, ever willing and liberal in helping immigrants to make a start in his neighborhood, and he was always anxious to see the community in a prosperous condition. As a citizen he was honored, and, being an old soldier, was readily recognized as a friend among veteran comrades he might chance to meet; indeed, he would rather recount reminiscences of the Revolutionary war to his friends than talk on any other subject. He would never accept office, but was always looked to for advice in matters requiring judgment and care. At the advanced age of ninety-one years he passed from earth, a lifelong Democrat. [Written by his grandson, Col. George H. Reynolds.]

Henry, the eldest son of Benedict Reynolds, lived in a house that was put up by a man named Kirk, one of the earliest settlers in the county. It was built of brick in 1800, one of the first of the kind in the county, and is still standing. Henry Reynolds' family, born and reared in this house, were Isaiah, Joseph, Sarah, Elizabeth, Belinda, Emily, Rebecca, Margaret and Benedict.

Major Zachariah Reynolds, second son of Benedict the pioneer, was born in Anne Arundel county, Md., and was about two years old when the family crossed the Alleghanies. He was reared in South Strabane township, and was self educated. At the early age of sixteen he commenced teaching school, a vocation he followed for forty years, the school-houses and their furnishings during a portion of that time being of the most primitive description. The floors and seats were made of puncheons, the windows of greased paper, and a log was made into a bench, while a plank fastened against the wall with wooden pins served as a writing desk. At the age of eighteen, during the days when all the men between the ages of eighteen and forty-five were enrolled in the militia, he was chosen captain of his district, and was called out to muster and drill at least three or four times every year. Finally he rose to the rank of major, his commission being signed by the governor of Pennsylvania, in the year 1810 or 1812, and was held in reserve in the war of 1812-15. During that period Major Reynolds, being a self-made man, roused the admiration of the citizens of Washington county, and as a consequence was elected to many positions of trust. He was a fine penman as well as an active business man, and in 1836 was appointed county treasurer, which office he filled for two terms of three years each, after which he served as prothonotary in 1839. Mr. Reynolds was twice married: first to Mary, daughter of Moses Little, of South Strabane township, but she died a little over a year after her marriage, leaving one child, David L., now residing on the farm then owned by his grandfather. Mr. Reynolds, for his second wife, was united in marriage with Mary Raney Huston, whose father, Joseph Huston, settled on and owned part of the site where the borough of Washington now stands. After this marriage Mr. Reynolds retired into private life on the farm in South Strabane township, and there passed the remainder of his heretofore busy life, dying November 8, 1865. He was a Democrat in politics, and liberal in church matters. The children by his second wife were named George H. Mary E. and Seth H.

George H. Reynolds, eldest son of Maj. Zachariah and Mary (Raney) Huston Reynolds, was born in Washington, Penn., in 1840, was educated in the common schools, and reared to agricultural pursuits on the home farm in South Strabane township. During the war of the Rebellion he enlisted in Company F, Twenty second P. V. C., known as the Ringgold Battalion, and served until the close of the struggle. He served in the army of West Virginia, and participated in many of the battles and engagements in which his battalion was concerned. On April 1, 1869, he married Rachel Austin, a native of Bellaire, Ohio, daughter of James Austin and granddaughter of Gen. Charles De Hass. The children born to this union are Frank S. De Hass, Eva Mand, Blanche, Birdella, Lizzie Artemesia and Georgia Pearl. Col. Reynolds is a Democrat in his political preferences, following, in this, in the footsteps of his forefathers. He has been engaged in various occupations, and at the present time is general manager for the Electric Belt Co., of Washington, Pennsylvania.

ROBERT W. IRWIN, one of the most eloquent pleaders at the bar of Washington county, is a son of Ephraim and Margaret (Richey) Irwin, the former of whom was a native of the county. The grandparents on both sides removed to this county from the North of Ireland early in the present century. The children born to Ephraim and Margaret Irwin were: Elizabeth, married to W. J. Meloy; Esther A., married to Jonas Mills; William R.; J. B.; R. W. and Sadie M., and one son who died in infancy.

Our subject was born April 25, 1858, in West

B. W. Irvine

Finley township, this county, and his early life was passed alternately in working on the farm and in attending the common schools of his district.

When he was sixteen years of age the family moved to Buffalo, same county, where they remained two years; then spent one year in Cross Creek, when, in 1877, they moved to Hopewell township, where the parents now live. In the fall of 1875 Mr. Irwin commenced to teach school in Washington county, a vocation he followed six winters, his summers being occupied in improving himself at the Normal Schools of Claysville and Alexander. In November, 1877, he registered with Boyd Crumrine, Esq., as a student of law, previous to which he had studied Latin with Rev. Walkenshaw, one summer. On June 15, 1881, he was admitted to the bar of Washington county, and he has since practiced his profession in Washington with more than average success. In court, when pleading a case or addressing a jury, he is the "observed of all observers," so forcible, clear and impressive is his eloquence, each argument or point being delivered with a grace and ease that invariably commands the attention of his hearers. For this gift Mr. Irwin modestly admits that he is indebted to his connection in earlier life with debating societies in the country, at the time he was teaching school.

On December 24, 1884, Mr. Irwin was married to Miss Carrie N., daughter of William Fowler, of Westmoreland county, and niece of William Smith, of Smithville, in Somerset township, this county. When she was but a young girl, her mother was called from earth. To Mr. and Mrs. Irwin have been born four children: Nellie May, now (1892) six years old; Earl Wilson, who died at the age of eight months; Ray Wilson, who died at the age of one year, and Frances Margaret, aged one year. Politically Mr. Irwin is a Democrat, and has been a hard worker in the interests of his party. In 1883 he was a candidate for the office of district attorney, but the county being strongly Republican, he was defeated. For four years he has served as president of the school board. On the retirement of Judge Acheson from law practice, at his request the present firm of Acheson & Irwin was formed. Mr. Irwin is an elder in the Third Presbyterian Church, of the Sunday-school of which he has been superintendent for some time. His residence is No. 85 Highland avenue.

SAMUEL P. FERGUS, the well-known extensive oil operator, is a native of the county, having been born in South Strabane township August 17, 1843.

He is of Scotch descent, the first of the family to come to this country being John Fergus, great grandfather of our subject, who was married in Scotland and emigrated with his family to America, settling in Huntingdon county, Penn., where he died. His family consisted of three sons—Thomas, John and Samuel. Of these Samuel married Mary Paxton, and had the following named children: Hugh, Mary (Mrs. Andrew Hart), Margaret (Mrs. Thomas Maxwell), John, Martha, Thomas, Sarah (Mrs. Hugh Fergus), Jane and Nancy. The father of these died April 14, 1853, aged ninety years, and the mother on February 18, 1861, aged ninety-three years. Their son, Thomas, was born November 2, 1802, on the old homestead taken up by his father in South Strabane township, this county. On May 3, 1831, he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of John D. Roberts, of that township, and the children born to them were John D., Mary, Susan (deceased), Hannah J., Maria, Isabella, Samuel P. (subject), Addison R. and Sarah M. After marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Fergus took up their residence on Mr. Roberts' farm, where they remained seven years, and then came to their present residence in South Strabane township.

Samuel P. Fergus, whose name opens this commemorative sketch, was educated in the schools of his township, continuing on the home farm until the fall of 1861, when he entered Washington College, remaining there one year. He then enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. L., in which he was, some time later, promoted to corporal, serving as such until the fall of 1864, when he was transferred to the Twenty-seventh U. S. Colored Infantry with rank of second lieutenant, being afterward promoted to first lieutenant. He served on the Potomac, and participated in the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, in which latter engagement he was shot through the right hip with a bullet, which necessitated a twelve-months confinement in hospital. His wound having healed, he returned to his command, and he was in the front of Petersburg, then at the siege of Richmond, until 1864, when he took part in the engagements at Fort Fisher, Fort Anderson, Wilmington, North East Station, and in many skirmishes; was in pursuit of Gen. Johnson up to the time of the latter's surrender. Throughout his service he was in the army of the Potomac, for some time under Gen. Terry, and toward the last with Gen. Sherman. After the disbandment of the army, his regiment was ordered to Wilmington, Del., where it lay ten months, he being a member of the court martial held there. The regiment was mustered out at Columbus, Ohio, and our subject returned and resumed farming in South Strabane township. In the fall of 1871 he was elected, on the Republican ticket, treasurer of Washington county for one term of three years. Since the beginning of 1878 he has been engaged in the oil business. Oil was found in South Stra bane township, where an uncle of his had lived, and he has been operating some wells there, besides several in other States. In 1888-89 he erected his beautiful residence on East Beau street, in the borough, generally conceded to be the finest in the place. On December 17, 1873, Mr. Fergus was united in marriage with Miss Mary, daughter of William Patterson, of Indiana county, Penn., but who died in April, 1876, her babe having been taken from her by the Grim Reaper the day previous. For his second wife, Mr. Fergus married, October 9, 1878, Miss Margaret L., daughter of Thomas Weir, of Somerset township, this county, and by this union there have been born children as follows: Thomas H. W., Hugh Earnest and Margaret Josephine, all three living at home, and John Addison and David S. L., both deceased. Mr. Fergus has been a member of the U. P. Church since 1870, and he is an elder in the same. Politically he is a staunch Republican.

CYRUS MORROW. Some writer has said that the most prominent characteristics of the Scotch-Irish are stern integrity, high sense of duty, hatred of tyranny, the defense of liberty and the love of God. Of such a grand old race is the subject of this memoir descended, William Morrow, his great-grandfather, the first of the family to come to America, having been born in the North of Ireland, where he married a native of the same locality. Here some of their children were born, and in an early day the family immigrated to the shores of Columbia, making their way westward to Washington county, Penn., where they found a settlement near Hills borough, in West Bethlehem township.

George Morrow, grandfather of Cyrus, was born in the North of Ireland, and came to the United States with the family. His earlier life was passed in Bethlehem township, his later days in Donegal township, this county, he having settled on a farm on Dutch fork of Buffalo creek, about one mile above where it empties into Big Buffalo creek. Here he successfully followed farming during the rest of his pioneer life. In West Bethlehem township he had married Hester Poole, who bore him children, as follows: David, Abraham, Noah, Thomas, Elizabeth, Matilda and Mary, all of whom attained adult age, except Thomas, who died young, and three of them are yet living, viz.: Matilda (married to Milton Lamborn, of Washington, D. C.), and David and Noah (both residents of Licking county, Ohio). Some time after his marriage George Morrow brought his parents from West Bethlehem to his farm in Donegal, where they peacefully ended their days.

Abraham Morrow, father of Cyrus, was born in 1816, in West Bethlehem township, this county, where he was reared to farm life, his education being secured at the subscription schools of the locality of his birth. About 1841 he married Jane De France, a native of Washington county, born on Raccoon creek, June 19, 1821, a daughter of Allison De France, and to this union were born seven children, as follows: Cyrus; Salem and Parmelia Ann (both living with their widowed mother); Ellen, deceased at the age of twelve years; a son that died in infancy; Perry, living with his mother, and Albert, a farmer in Donegal township. After marriage Abraham Morrow resided for some years in the last named township, near Atchison post-office, then moved to Licking county, Ohio, near Kirkersville, whence, after a residence of a few years, he returned to his native county and finally settled on the home farm. Here, on February 12, 1888, he passed from earth, and here his widow, now aged seventy-one years, is calmly awaiting the final summons. Abraham Morrow during his lifetime was one of the best known men of his township. As a citizen he was public-spirited, and interested in the advancement and welfare of the community. Quiet and unassuming in his way, kind and charitable in disposition, an exemplary Christian, he won universal respect and esteem. He was an earnest and consistent member of the Christian (or Disciple) Church. In Licking county, Ohio, there was no organized congregation of this church, and he, with a few others, became the founder of one; he was chosen elder, and later he, in company with a few others, at a considerable personal sacrifice built a meeting house. After his return from Ohio, he was an elder in the church here until his death. He was also instrumental in the erection of the Dutch Fork church and parsonage.

Cyrus Morrow was born February 3, 1844, in Donegal township, this county, near the present postoffice of Atchison, and here, under his father's careful tuition, he learned the art of husbandry, and received a very fair common-school education. On August 26, 1871, he was married to Elizabeth Condit, a native of Amwell township, this county, born July 1, 1853, a daughter of Cephas and Mary (Bane) Condit, of that township. This union has been blessed with seven children, all yet living under the parental roof, their names being Minnie E., Franklin S., Garfield B., Albert G., Earle, Ethel and Elizabeth J. After marriage Mr. Morrow remained on a farm near Atchison postoffice, in Donegal township, until 1880, in which year he purchased the George W. Guy farm, situated on the Dutch fork of Buffalo creek, a short distance from where it empties into Big Buffalo creek. Mr. Morrow is not only a general farmer on a large scale, but also one of the most extensive wool growers in his township. As the eldest of a family of boys who work together, he has had the care and responsibility of some large deals, and by his business sagacity, excellent judgment and well known ability as a financier has been instrumental in keeping the family estate in a highly creditable shape. Despite the financial crisis of 1857 which crippled so many, including Mr. Morrow's father, they succeeded by strenuous efforts in pulling through, and placing their affairs once more on a solid foundation. To-day the "Morrow boys," as they are familiarly known, have few equals in the county for industry, economy, honesty and public-spiritedness. In his political predilections our subject is a staunch Republican, influential in the party, and has filled various offices in his township with eminent ability.

THOMAS FLEMING BIRCH, one of the leading attorneys of Washington, whose practice is for the most part in the civil courts of the county, is a native of Claysville, Washington Co., Penn., born May 18, 1856. His father, John Birch, was one of the enterprising men of Claysville.

Our subject received a thorough English education at the common schools of his native borough, which was supplemented with a course of study at Washington and Jefferson College. He began the study of law in the office of Alexander Wilson, and in 1880 was admitted to the bar of Washington county. For three years he was in the practice at Washington and in 1883, formed a partnership with Mr. Albert S. Sprowls, under the firm name of Birch & Sprowls, which continued until 1888, when it was dissolved, since when Mr. Birch has again been practicing alone. Mr. Birch is unmarried. In politics he is a staunch Democrat; socially he is a Knight Templar.

THE BRADY FAMILY are numbered with the earliest pioneers of Washington county, one John Brady having settled in this county about the beginning of the present century. He became prominently associated with the political history of the county, and died after a useful life, leaving no family. He was a distant relative of Capt. John Brady, of Revolutionary fame, who was a native of New Jersey, and died soon after the war, leaving several children, of whom are named: Freeman; Moses, an attorney, in Canada, where he inherited an estate from his father; Andrew, an M. E. minister, deceased in Livingston county, N. Y.; William, deceased in Virginia, and Jane, deceased wife of William Gourley, of Livingston county, N. Y.

Freeman Brady was but four years of age when his father died, and his mother (who was afterward married to a Mr. Welch) died in 1840, in Livingston county, N. Y. Before the death of his mother, Freeman Brady went to live in Centre county, Penn., with his uncle, George Brown, of whom he learned the trade of mason. In 1816 he left the home of his uncle, and coming to Washington county took contracts for building the National pike, also serving in the capacity of superintendent for John H. Ewing. In 1820 Freeman Brady was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of Benjamin and Martha Means. Her father was a native of New Jersey, and settled about 1796 in South Strabane township, Washington county, where he died in 1816; his widow passed away in 1859, at the age of over ninety years. They reared a family of ten children, all now deceased. To the union of Freeman and Mary (Means) Brady children were born as follows: Sophia, wife of James Simmons, in Washington, Penn.; John, also living in Washington; Andrew, deceased in 1875; Freeman, deceased; Martha, deceased in 1845; Samuel, a resident of Washington (a sketch of whom follows); James, also living in Washington; David, deceased, and Benjamin, who was killed on the streets of Washington, during a war riot. The father was actively identified with the Democratic party, and served in various local offices; by President Buchanan he was made postmaster at Washington; he was a Freemason. In 1840 he erected the court house and old stone jail of Washington county, and also put up many other prominent buildings. He died in 1876, his wife in 1875, having passed away at the age of eighty five years. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church.

John Brady, son of Freeman and Mary (Means) Brady, was born November 20, 1821, on the home farm in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. He learned of his father the trade of mason, which he followed over fifty years, and has worked on many of the public buildings of his native county. He laid the foundation of the courthouse of Washington county, and also assisted with the brick work. In 1856 John Brady married Esther, daughter of James Thompson, of Canonsburg, and she died one year after their marriage, leaving one son, John, who is now a railroad man. In 1863 Mr. Brady was married to Sarah, daughter of Timothy Ross, a native of West Bethlehem township, this county, and their children were Hetty, wife of Samuel Traster, of Washington; Mattie, married to James S. Williams, also of Washington, and Alexander, living at home. The mother died in 1867; the father is now living on the home place, which is cared for by his daughter Hetty. In politics he is identified with the Democratic party, and has been a member of the I. O. O. F. He attends the Presbyterian Church.

Freeman Brady (deceased), third son of Freeman and Mary (Means) Brady, was born September 20, 1827, in Washington, Penn. After attending the subscription schools he took a course at Washington College (where he was a member of the Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity), graduating in 1851. He then became one of the first telegraph operators of Washington, Penn., and in 1855 served as deputy sheriff. In 1856 he was united in marriage with Mary E., daughter of Samuel Donley, and sister to the late Mrs. James Brady. They began married life on West Wheeling street, and in 1857 he was elected recorder of deeds, occupying that position three years; he served several terms as chairman of the Democratic County Committee. In the meantime he devoted his leisure time to the study of law under the guidance of John L. Gow. In the May term of 1860 he was admitted to the bar, and formed a partnership with Hon. George S. Hart, which continued until 1876, when Judge Hart was elected to the bench. After that event Mr. Brady achieved an enviable reputation as an able lawyer, conducting a large and lucrative business. He was made by his party a candidate for State senator at a special election, but as the party was largely in the minority he was defeated. In 1867 Mr. Brady united with the Second Presbyterian Church of Washington; his wife was a member of the First Church before her marriage. He was never absent from services when it was possible to be present, and he filled the offices of deacon and elder in the congregation. He died May 11, 1891, and one hundred and four carriages followed his remains to the grave. Resolutions were passed by his associates of the legal profession, who mourned the loss of a brilliant lawyer, a Christian man and a true friend. He left a widow, and five children, named as follows: James; Charles, employed at Caldwell's place of business; Freeman, working in Smith's establishment; Robert, in a jewelry store; and Lydia, living at home. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Brady and her children have continued to reside in the old home, situated on South Main street in Washington.

James Brady, the seventh child of Freeman and Mary (Means) Brady, was born January 31, 1833, in Washington, Penn., where his boyhood was passed. He attended the common schools of his native town, and learned the trade of mason, which he has since successfully followed, having assisted in the erection of many of the public buildings of the county. In 1860 he married Julia A. Donley, daughter of Samuel and Eliza (Kettig) Donley, of Washington, the former of whom was lost in an explosion on the lower Mississippi, while returning from the Southwest, whither he had gone on a lookout excursion. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Brady made their home continuously in Washington, and here, on January 7, 1889, she passed from earth at the age of fifty-six years. Mr. Brady has been a lifelong Democrat, and under Grover Cleveland he was appointed, October 7, 1886, postmaster at Washington, which office he acceptably filled three years and six months; he was the first Democratic postmaster to follow his father, who was appointed to that position in 1861. He is a member (as was also his wife) of the Presbyterian Church, and he now attends the Second Presbyterian. Five children were born to this couple, of whom the following is a brief record: (1) George V. was born December 11, 1861, and was married to Tillie Miller; he is one of the leading jewelers of Washington, Penn.

(2) EDGAR L. BRADY was born in 1866, and his education was received at the common schools. Entering the office of the Review and Examiner, in Washington, he served his time at and mastered the printer's trade. He then for a time worked on the Commercial Gazette, from which office he went to the Burgessstown (Penn.) Call. Upon his father becoming postmaster of Washington he returned to his native town to fill the position of assistant postmaster, and has since been connected with the office, as head clerk since the appointment of the Republican postmaster, Underwood. In 1887 he was married to Miss Mellie Perrine, daughter of John Perrine, member of an old and prominent family of Cross Creek township. To this union two children have been born: Edgar and Ray Grayson. (3) Leda D. is caring for her father's home. (4) William H. is at home. (5) Richard D. is a butcher, of Washington, who in 1890 married Miss Lydia Uhler, of Washington county. James Brady, the father of this family, has been a strong, robust man all his days, and still has good health. The home wherein he now resides, No. 66 West Wheeling street, has been the home of this branch of the family since Mr. and Mrs. Brady were married.

Samuel Brady, sixth child of Freeman Brady, Sr., was born in 1830, in Washington, Penn. He learned the trade of saddletree maker, when such work was all done by hand, and constituted an extensive business in early times; this business he followed several years. He is now carrying on a general store in Washington. Mr. Brady was twice married, first time to Sarah Rankin, who died, leaving three children, viz.: William, Harry and Elizabeth, all living in Washington. Mr. Brady's second wife was Deborah Lopp, of near Brownsville, this county, by which union there are no children.

W B. MOORHEAD, one of the most successful business men of Cecil township, was born November 18, 1825, on the farm in Cecil township, which is yet his home.

He is a grandson of Samuel Moorhead, who was born in 1745, in Scotland, and when about twenty-one years of age left his native land for a home in America. He first located in eastern Pennsylvania, coming to Cecil township, Washington county, in 1775. In the following year he was married to Elizabeth Sproul, a native of eastern Pennsylvania, and a sister of Sarah Sproul, who married James McBride, grandfather of John B. McBride, whose biographical record appears elsewhere. After their marriage the young people located on the timber covered farm in Cecil township (now occupied by the W. P. Reud Coal Co.), where at night they, in connection with other settlers of the neighborhood, were obliged to resort to blockhouses, in dread of the Indians. They finally removed to the farm located where the subject of this sketch now lives. Here they erected a one-story cabin, built of round logs with the bark on. In this rude but happy home six sons—John, James, Francis, David, William and Robert—and one daughter—Elizabeth—were born, all of whom moved to Ohio with the exception of John. The father took an active part in the Whiskey Insurrection, and other questions of the day. Samuel Moorhead was one of a number of neighbors who went turn about over the mountains from eastern Pennsylvania, to carry salt in sacks on horseback, riding one horse and leading two, and carrying as much salt in one trip as would last the company one year, and he was a prominent actor in the many scenes of danger so common to frontiersmen. His mother-in-law, Mrs. Sproul, lived to the advanced age of one hundred and four years. He passed away in 1805, and his widow when she was ninety-two.

John Moorhead, father of subject, was born in 1785, on the home farm in Cecil township, where he grew to manhood, receiving a subscription-school education. In 1810 he was united in marriage with Sarah, daughter of John Buchanan, a native of Scotland, who settled in Robinson township, this county, and five children were born to this union: Samuel (first settled in Washington county, then moved to Beaver county, Penn., where he died in 1890), John (deceased in 1886 in this county), Eliza Jane (deceased at the age of twenty-one years), W. B. (whose sketch follows), and George B. (deceased at the age of twenty-one years). The mother of this family died in 1828, and in 1837 John Moorhead was united in marriage with Priscilla, daughter of John Aiken, a pioneer settler, and she bore him two children: Isabelle and Sarah (both deceased in youth). Mr. Moorhead was an ardent Abolitionist, taking an active part in politics, and serving his township as justice for many years. He and his wife were members of the Associate Reformed Church at Robinson's Run, later uniting with the U. P. Church at Venice. He died in 1861, and his widow was afterward married to David McKee, of Mt. Pleasant township, this county. She died in 1871.

W. B. Moorhead was reared on the home farm in Cecil township, receiving his elementary education at the schools of the neighborhood, which was supplemented with a partial collegiate course of study in Muskingum College, New Concord, Ohio. On February 9, 1871, he was married to Margaret Johnston, who was born on the farm in Robinson township, which afterward became the site of McDonald village. Her father, Thomas Johnston, was born in Chester county, Penn., and in early life was married to Susan Scott, a native of County Donegal, Ireland, who came here in an early day. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Johnston settled on the home farm in Robinson township, where the mother died in 1817, and in 1869 the father was also laid to rest. Mr. and Mrs. Moorhead have resided on the home farm, containing 200 acres in Cecil township, which is included in the oil belt. He has made many improvements, erected a good house and barn, and is operating seven oil wells, two more being now under way. Mr. Moorhead is an active business man, and has settled many estates. In politics he cast his first vote for the abolition of slavery, giving his assistance to the "Underground Railroad" for the purpose of shipping fugitives to Canada; he has since united with the Republican party, and has served his township as justice of the peace and in various other ways. In religious faith he and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at McDonald. The children of this well known and influential couple are as follows: Rosena E. and Melicent Scott, attending the academy at McDonald, and Tolbert Buchanan and Romulus Johnston, living at home.

Mr. Moorhead is noted for his sympathy for people in distress, or the unfortunate from any cause. He is much famed for his success in compromising troubles between neighbors, and carrying people through when in straitened circumstances; for securing the liberation of people who may have been put in jail for trivial offenses, to await their trial. Another feature of his sympathy for the unfortunate is his attending sheriff sales, buying in property and turning it over to its original owner, and giving him his own time to pay for same. Such acts of kindness and generosity have endeared Mr. Moorhead to the community, especially to the poor, who look upon him as of a verity "a friend in need."

ANDREW J. FORD, a representative self-made, prosperous citizen of the borough of Washington, now living retired, is a native of Pennsylvania, born December 23, 1828, in Mount Pleasant, Westmoreland county. Andrew Ford, father of our subject, was of Irish extraction on his father's side, of Scotch descent on his mother's, and was, it is believed, a native of New Jersey. He was left an orphan at an early age, and coming soon thereafter from Mt. Pleasant to Washington, this county, he learned the trade of wagon maker. He married Miss Martha, daughter of John Lennox, a shoemaker by trade, who had come to Washington county over a century ago, where he died. Andrew Ford returned with his young wife to Mount Pleasant, where they remained some six years, and then once more came to Washington, the subject of this sketch being at the time not three years old. Here the father worked at his trade for many years with "old John Morrow." He died in 1873, at the age of seventy-four years, a lifelong Democrat. His widow is yet living in Washington, at the patriarchal age of ninety three years. Eleven children were born to them, ten of whom were the following: Sarah, widow of Samuel Eckles, in Washington, Penn.; David, deceased; Martha, deceased wife of C. C. Turner, in Washington county; Mrs. Margaret Lennox (widow), living in Washington; Andrew J.; Sidney; John, in Monongahela, this county; Mrs. Emily Wheatley (widow); Mrs. Ann Eliza Boggs, and Mrs. Mary Ellen Hutchinson.

Andrew J. Ford, whose name opens this sketch, received his education at the common schools of Washington, and early in life entered the arena of business. Of his father he learned the trade of wagon maker, which he followed for some time, and then commenced that of brickmaking with one Bushfield, in the meantime working at gunsmithing during the winter months. For thirty-five years he carried on a brick yard in Washington, supplying the brick for many of the principal buildings in the borough. In 1874 he formed a partnership with G. W. Moninger, in the lumber trade, which continued thirteen years, when it was dissolved, our subject carrying on the business alone; but in 1888 he sold it to Pollock & Baker, and retired. In 1880 he built his present dwelling house on West Chestnut street.

On March 20, 1851, Mr. Ford married Miss Sarah Mackey, only child of Joseph and Ann Mackey; the father died when Mrs. Ford was a child, and the mother passed away at the home of our subject, in 1890, at the age of eighty-seven years. Mr. and Mrs. Ford have no children of their own, but several years ago they adopted a little girl, who, in their home, grew to womanhood, and then, marrying, left it; she died in 1876, leaving two children, a boy and a girl, who were taken care of by Mr. and Mrs. Ford. The boy, Andrew Ford McCombew, was taken from them by the hand of the Reaper on October 9, 1888, when almost fifteen years of age; his sister, Annie, is now living with our subject and wife. Mr. and Mrs. Ford are adherents of the First Methodist Protestant Church of Washington, of which he has been a member for thirty years, and is at present a trustee. In politics he is a Democrat, has held town offices, and has been member of the council several times. Mr. Ford owns a fine farm in Amwell township, comprising 106 acres, all under cultivation.

CHARLES ALEXANDER SCOTT, M. D., was born April 12, 1866, in Monongahela, Penn. His paternal great great grandfather was William Scott, who came from the North of Ireland and landed with his family in America, September 6, 1796. He settled near Dunningville, Washington county, soon after, in the same year.

Thomas Scott, son of William, was twenty-two years old when the family landed in America, and came with his parents to Washington county. On March 16, 1802, Thomas Scott married, in same county, Miss Margaret Turner; he had settled in 1800 on Mingo creek, in what is now Carroll township. They were members of the Presbyterian Church. Thomas Scott was a man of sterling principle, one who enjoyed the confidence of all who knew him. He was educated in Ireland, and was better informed than most of the farmers of his neighborhood. He owned two mills, both on Mingo creek, and the second mill building is at present owned and used, by the Harrison Brothers as a distillery. Mr. Scott built and owned the brick house, now the property of Mark Borland, on Main street, Monongahela, where he resided during the latter part of his life. He died February 24, 1856, Margaret, his wife, on December 24, 1849. They had a numerous family, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Rebecca, February 1, 1803; William, March 16, 1804; Joseph, January 14, 1806; Alexander, November 29, 1807; Moses, October 12, 1809; Mercy, October 15, 1811; John, August 22, 1813; James, April 15, 1815; Matilda, March 8, 1817; Elizabeth, January 22, 1819, and Jane, January 2, 1821. Of these, Alexander, born in what is now Carroll township, this county, was married July 31, 1827, to Miss Sarah Clause, of Washington county, Penn., and they had twelve children, viz.: Melinda, born March 19, 1829, died October 7, 1835; Arabella, born January 8, 1831, wife of Isaac Keeney; Benjamin F., born September 24, 1832; Patterson, born March 2, 1834, living in Ohio; Moses T., born December 13, 1835, residing in Cleveland, Ohio; Mary E., born December 3, 1837, married to Thomas Kemp, and residing at Ironton, Ohio; Thomas O., born December 5, 1839, residing in Monongahela (he enlisted in Company K, Sixty-second Regiment P. V. I., served three years, re-enlisted, and served until the close of the war; he was wounded three times); John F., born August 24, 1841, deceased; Joseph, born May 23, 1844, deceased; Margaret, born March 4, 1846, married to Bernard Clinton; Melinda, residing in Pittsburgh, and William. The father of this family was a member of the M. E. Church, the mother of the Presbyterian.

Benjamin F. Scott, eldest son of Alexander and Sarah (Clause) Scott, became a painter. He was married July 3, 1856, to Miss Jennie Hogan, of Spartanburg, S. C., born in Columbia, S. C., daughter of Daniel A. and Sarah (Lawler) Hogan, the former of whom was a cotton manufacturer of Spartanburg. They were of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and, what was very remarkable, there was but twelve hours difference in their deaths: he was born in the evening and died in the evening, while she was born in the morning and died in the morning. They were members of the Presbyterian Church. They were the parents of one son and four daughters, viz.: Jane, Catherine, Elizabeth, Joseph A. and Theresa. Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin F. Scott are the parents of two children: Rosanna A. and Charles A. Of these, Rosanna was married twice, first to Frank Miller, a farmer of Washington county, Penn., by whom she had two children: Daisy M. and F. Earl. Mr. Miller dying, she afterward married William Moose; they reside on their farm near Woodfield, Monroe Co., Ohio. William Moose is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Charles A. Scott, whose name introduces this sketch, attended the common schools, and completed his education at Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Penn. He read medicine with F. P. Scott, M. D., Monongahela, and one year later entered the Western Pennsylvania Medical College at Pittsburgh, whence he graduated March 27, 1891. Immediately thereafter he located in Monongahela, where he has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession, and where he ranks among the leading physicians. He was married January 2, 1891, to Miss Melissa Messenger, who was born on her father's farm on Hoge's Summit, Washington county, Penn., a daughter of Hon. John C. Messenger, who was admitted to the bar of Washington county, but does not practice. Mr. Messenger married Miss Sarah Wilson, and they reside on their farm on Hoge's Summit. Dr. Charles A. Scott and wife have one child, Pauline Keys. Dr. Scott is a member of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, and of the Knights of the Golden Eagle. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, and enjoy the respect and confidence of all who know them.

THE COFFEY FAMILY. To "Caledonia, stern and wild," whose hardy sons and daughters are to be found in every clime where it is possible for a man to live, America is indebted for a large portion of her most industrious, most useful, most thrifty and most loyal citizens, and among these stand prominent the Coffey family, of whom this sketch relates.

George Coffey, a wagon maker by trade, which he had learned in his native land, Scotland, was the only child of George Coffey. He was married there to Miss Agnes, only daughter of Alexander Dickey, who came to America and made a settlement in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., where he died at an advanced age; he was a typical son of Scotia, sturdy and tenacious of life, and it is said of him that a few months before his death he journeyed on foot to Pittsburgh in one day. Mr. and Mrs. George Coffey, after several years of married life in their native land, at the desire of Mr. Dickey followed him to his adopted home in Washington county, where for a time Mr. Coffey carried on his trade at Rankintown, on the National pike. He then moved to Buffalo township, and for fourteen years was recognized as the leading wagon maker within a radius of many miles. Retiring, however, from his trade, he took up the farm where his son George now lives, located at a point on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, known as "Coffey's Crossing," where he engaged in agricultural pursuits up to the time of his wife's death, in 1883, when he came into the borough of Washington and here passed his remaining days. He died in 1884, at the age of seventy-three years, after a busy life, in which by hard work he had to make his own success. When he first came to the county there was much in his line of trade to do, repairing the heavy wagons used in the construction of the National pike, besides a vast amount of other custom, that came to his shop from far and near. In the building up of the home the several members of the family had to do their respective parts, and, when they moved from the shop to the farm, even the daughters would often work in the field, in all kinds of weather, and many a day under a broiling sun do as much work as a man. In one day Miss Annie Coffey and her sister cut and tied about four acres of heavy corn. In those times it was customary for the farmers, who had produce to sell, to proceed early in the morning to Washington market, take their places and patiently wait for customers; and frequently Miss Annie Coffey and her mother would work in the sugar bush until late at night, then go to the house, change their clothing, and start on foot for Washington, a distance of five miles, carrying heavy jugs of maple molasses, which having sold, they would walk home, again change their garments, and once more go to work in the sugar camp. Thus, with little sleep or rest, did the brave women of those early days unrepiningly labor to build up a home for coming generations, and materially assist in the growth and advancement of the country.

To Mr. and Mrs. George Coffey were born seven children, as follows: Alexander, in Iowa; Maggie, deceased; Annie, in Washington; William, deceased; Jennie, married to Daniel Clemens; George, on the old home farm in Buffalo township; and Agnes, deceased. Of this family Miss Annie, with true filial devotion, always remained with her parents, comforting them in their declining years, and reverently closing their eyes in death. She has always enjoyed good health, and it is the earnest prayer of her many friends that she may be spared to them for many happy years to come. Her home in Washington is peaceful and pleasant, as is the life she leads in it. She is a devout member of the Presbyterian Church, the faith of her forefathers.

HENRY B. STANTON. Thadens Stanton was born February 10, 1817, in Wheeling, Va., and when a small boy came to this county, making his first home here near Ten Mile village. In Washington he learned the harness making trade, serving an apprenticeship of five years with Jacob Shafer. He then moved to Hillsborough, same State, where he resided several years, and, returning to Washington, continued the saddlery and harness business until 1850, in which year he took the census of the county. In 1852 he ran for treasurer, but was defeated; nothing daunted, however, he ran again at the next election, and was elected for one term on the Old-line Whig ticket; later he became a Democrat. At the close of his term as treasurer he resumed his trade, and continued it almost up to the time of his death; he died of dropsy April 5, 1873, at the age of fifty-five years. On July 8, 1841, he was married by Rev. George S. Holmes, in Washington, to Miss Jane Ann, daughter of Joseph Mahaffey, who came from County Down, Ireland, to Washington county, where he died at the advanced age of eighty-two years. His wife, Jane Ann (Patterson), followed him to the grave at the age of seventy-three years; they had a large family of children, three of whom are yet living: Mrs. Stanton, and Mrs. McConahay (widow of John), in Washington, and Joseph, in Harshville, Beaver Co., Penn. The children born to Thadens and Jane Ann (Mahaffey) Stanton were seven in number, viz: Susan, Lotitia, Elizabeth and Sarah Agnes (all four deceased), Henry B. and J. A., in Washington county, and J. C., in Canton, Ohio.

The widowed mother, after the death of the father, made her home with her son, Henry, in Washington, until her death, April 5, 1893, in the seventy-fourth year of her age.

Henry B. Stanton, whose name opens this sketch, was born October 2, 1845, in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., his education being received at the public schools of the borough. In 1861 he commenced to learn the trade of saddle and harness maker with his father, remaining with him till the latter's death, except a few years he was working for others. In 1875 he opened out in the same line of business for his own account, and has since successfully carried it on, doing a large trade and enjoying a wide patronage. On November 4, 1875, Mr. Stanton was married to Miss Catharine, daughter of Daniel Liggett, of this county. Politically, our subject is a Democrat, but has no time to aspire to office, his business demanding and receiving all his attention.

CHARLES W. TOWNSEND, M. D. The Townsend family, of which Dr. Townsend is a well known member, is of English descent. Many years ago three brothers, Elijah, John and Isaiah Townsend (cousins of Glen Townsend, of Quebec), left the shores of England for America, where they settled in Egg Harbor City, N. J., and here Elijah reared a family of children, among whom were Daniel, Isaiah, Japhet and Elijah. Isaiah owned a line of boats to Cape May.

Daniel Townsend was born August 14, 1747, in Egg Harbor City, N. J., where he grew to manhood and engaged in the lumber business. In 1776 he entered the Revolutionary war, serving about two years. He took part in the battles of Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine and Monmouth, and in 1779 came to Washington county, Penn., where he bought 400 acres of land of Joshua Wright, settling permanently on that tract. He married Lydia Sawens, of Massachusetts, and of this union the following children were born: Catharine (Mrs. John Baird of Beaver county), Naomi (Mrs. Uriah Burton), Julia (wife of Peter Sharp), Margaret (wife of William Chisler, of Ohio), Rebecca (Mrs. John Hazen, of Mercer county, Penn.), Ruth (Mrs. Stephen Higby, in Ohio), Lydia (wife of Arthur Devore, also in Ohio), Elijah (a lieutenant in the war of 1812, died in 1871), and Joseph, all of whom were married, and are now deceased. The father of this family was a Democrat in politics. He died September 1, 1833.

Joseph Townsend, son of Daniel and Lydia (Sawens) Townsend, was born March 1, 1796, on the old place in Washington county, Penn. He lived at home until fifteen years of age, when he entered the war of 1812 as a fifer, but was brought home by his father. A few years later the juvenile warrior had so far modified his views as to prefer rural life, and became an excellent farmer, devoting much attention to sheep raising. In early life he was united in marriage with Nancy, daughter of Col. William Blackmore, and grand daughter of Samuel Blackmore, who owned 400 acres on the site of the city of Washington, D. C. The property was leased for ninety nine years, which expired in about 1876, the heirs having never claimed it. William Blackmore, son of Samuel, came with the father from Washington, D. C., to Washington county, Penn., and there reared six children, viz.: Thomas, Charles, Nancy (Mrs. Townsend), Eliza, Ellen, and Arabella, all of whom are deceased, except Arabella. To Joseph and Nancy (Blackmore) Townsend were born three children, namely: Charles W., Daniel B., and William (deceased in youth). The mother died December 5, 1833, and in 1834 Joseph Townsend married Nancy, daughter of Robert Flack, whose father was born in Ireland, came to America about 1800, and settled on Chartiers creek, in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. To Joseph and Nancy (Flack) Townsend were born three children, viz.: Robert (deceased), Elijah T., and Margaret J. (Mrs. J. W. Boyer, of Finleyville). The father voted with the Democratic party, and in religion was a member of the Baptist Church. He died on his seventy fifth birthday, March 1, 1874, and was followed by his wife in August, 1874, in her seventy-fifth year.

Dr. Charles W. Townsend was born April 27, 1822, on the old farm in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. He received an excellent education, was for some time a surveyor in Washington county, doing much work, and then read medicine for four years with Dr. W. B. Lauk, finally graduating from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1849. In that year he began to practice his profession in Peters township, and in 1854 he married Margaret A., daughter of Rev. Joseph Wright, of Peters township, this county. To this union have been born the following children: Joseph (a civil engineer), Catherine (wife of Dr. Boyd Emery), William, Jennie L. (Mrs. Obediah Higbee), Chatham, Charles, Nellie and Nancy, of whom Charles and Nancy died in youth.

The Doctor has resided on a beautifully improved farm, on which are six large orchards of fruit trees, situated near the old homestead. In his chosen profession as a skilled physician he has obtained a most remarkable record of success. In one epidemic of typhoid fever approaching one hundred and fifty cases, every patient recovered, and in two other extensive epidemics of the same fever success was equally fortunate; during a general and extended practice of over forty years, he has not lost a lady in obstetrical practice, a fortunate achievement. Such history surely rests on the foundation of solid elementary principles, and careful thought, and now engaged in raising stock as a specialty, he still adheres to and loves his profession. In politics he is faithful to pure Democratic and Jeffersonian Republican principles, and on one occasion, in 1883, to give him a rest, his friends elected him to the Legislature without a single effort on his own part. With firm belief in the orthodoxy of the Trinity, he faithfully accepts the substantial philosophy of future entitative existence.

The following is a copy of an old deed given by Hugh Sharp to Elijah Townsend, of Great Egg Harbor, county of Gloucester, province of New Jersey, the date thereof being June 26, 1739. It is written in old English on sheepskin two and a half feet long. CHARLES L. DRIEHORST, SR., one of the leading business men of Washington, is a native of the "Fatherland," born August 14, 1816, in a small town on the river Weiser, "Lauenforde," Kingdom of Hanover. His father died in 1815, his mother some time later.

Before leaving his native land our subject had learned the trade of carpenter and joiner, at which he worked there for a time. Then, having decided to seek the New World, he set sail in April, 1841, landing on June 21 in Baltimore, whence he at once proceeded to Washington county, Penn., where a sister had already settled. He immediately began work at his trade, and being desirous of obtaining, as quickly as possible, a thorough knowledge of the English language, he spent the winter months in school. On October 10, 1842, he went squirrel hunting, and one of those little rodents, which he had shot, having lodged in a tree, he climbed to get it, but unfortunately slipped, and fell to the ground, whereby he received injuries, which confined him to the house for several years. He was first taken care of by a sister, and afterward by the family of Judge Wotring, where in his affliction he found a home. By the time he was able to resume work, all his savings, laid away by careful thrift, were completely exhausted, and he had again to begin life at the bottom of the ladder. In November, 1845, he set sail for the "Fatherland," where he remained until the spring of 1846, and on his return he again landed in Baltimore in June, 1846, he married Miss Amelia Klieves, in Wheeling, who was also from the same place in Germany. She died August 15, 1861, leaving six children, as follows: Theodore, Rosanna, Matilda, Charles, Lewis and Louisa. On March 5, 1863, Mr. Driehorst was married to Augusta Klieves, sister of his first wife. He worked as contractor at his trade till 1864, after which he entered the clothing store of J. B. Reekers as clerk, in which capacity he worked for thirteen years. In 1877 he began the grocery business on his own account, opening a small store on his property on West Wheeling street; the following spring he added to it a bakery, which by industry and strict attention to business, and the wants of his customers, he has built up, till it is the leading establishment of the kind in the town. Politically our subject is a Democrat, and has served both as assessor and collector of taxes in the borough of Washington. In church connection he is a Lutheran, and has ever been faithful to his church and its interests.

MATTHEW BLAINE, one of the oldest and most prominent citizens of Beallsville, Penn., is also a representative of one of the oldest families of Washington county.

His grandfather, John Blaine, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, where he was married, and reared the following family: John (who came to America prior to the Revolutionary war, and heartily espoused the cause of his adopted country, after the close of the war settling in Venango county, Penn.), James, Leonard, Matthew, Robert and a daughter, who died on the voyage to America. The four younger brothers came with their mother to America in 1779, and after a three months' voyage landed in New York. They first located in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., then purchased a small farm in Somerset township, same county, where Indians were very numerous. Robert, Matthew and Leonard then moved to Venango county, where the two former passed their lives. After coming to America, Leonard Blaine (who was born in 1761, in County Antrim, Ireland) resided in Venango county for about eight years, then came to Washington county, and was there married to Margaret Isehart. The young people settled on the wild tract of land in Somerset township, this county, and reared the following children: Margaret, deceased wife of John Jones; Elizabeth, deceased wife of Joshua Craven; William, deceased; Leonard; Jane, married to David Fleming; Mary and Matthew. The father was a very well educated man, and taught school until the present educational system was organized. The schoolhouse was of the usual primitive style, furnished in a meager way, and the text-books then used were limited to the "United States Speller" and the "Western Calculator." The terms of tuition were $1.25 per pupil for a term of three months, but many were taught by Mr. Blaine without payment, and no charge was made for old pupils. Politically he was a Democrat, and served as clerk of the Washington county commissioners; in religious faith he was a member of the Seceder Church at Pigeon Creek. He died in 1848, followed by his wife in 1850, and both were buried on the home place.

Matthew Blaine was born February 14, 1819, on the home farm in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the subscription schools of the locality. He began life for himself at the age of fifteen years, and on May 14, 1843, married Mary, daughter of Bennett and Ann (Hill) Morton, natives of East Bethlehem township, this county. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Morton were as follows: Mary, wife of Matthew Blaine; Stephen; Joseph, who enlisted in the Ringgold Battalion, was captured and first taken to Libby Prison, thence to Andersonville, where he died; John; Eleanor, wife of William C. Sargeant; Moses, and Elizabeth, wife of Daniel Zellars. The father was a Whig in politics, and in religion a member of the M. E. Church. Mr. and Mrs. Blaine resided on the old homestead until 1872, when he purchased a farm in East Bethlehem township, this county, remaining there until 1890, then came to their present home in Beallsville. He has always followed agricultural pursuits. In political opinion he is actively identified with the Democratic party, and has served as justice of the peace; in religion he is a member and steward of the M. E.

Church. Mrs. Blaine passed away July 1, 1889, leaving two daughters, Elizabeth J., wife of John Aiken, and Margaret M. A., married to Stephen W. Hill.

WILLIAM H. WITHERSPOON, one of the most prosperous wooland grain merchants of Burgettstown, traces his lineage to a well-known family of Scotland.

John Witherspoon was born and reared in the old country, where he was also married. After the birth of their eldest son the young couple came to America, and resided in Maryland for several years, and prior to 1800 they moved to Washington county, and in 1824 he purchased a small unimproved tract of land in Robinson township, upon which a log cabin was erected. Their children were as follows: Jonathan, John, Azariah, Joshua and Elizabeth. The father of this family was a Democrat in politics, and in religion he became one of the first members of the Associate Reformed Church, in which he was an elder many years. After the death of the father, the sons purchased 200 acres of land, and Jonathan finally sold his share to Joshua. The rest of the tract is the property of Thomas Biggert and Isaac Donaldson.

Joshua Witherspoon was born in 1802, in Robinson township, this county, and passed his boyhood on the home farm, attending the subscription schools during the winter months. On January 3, 1824, he was united in marriage with Jane, daughter of John Hooper, of Allegheny county, Penn. John Hooper was born December 26, 1777, and his wife, Elizabeth, was born February 26, 1776. Their children were as follows: Nancy, born March 4, 1799; Jennie, born March 1, 1801; William, born June 15, 1803; Peggy, born October 2, 1806; Eleanor, born December 13, 1811; and Elizabeth, born January 28, 1817. The parents were members of the Sharon Presbyterian Church, and in politics Mr. Hooper was a Democrat.

Joshua and Jane (Hooper) Witherspoon began married life on the home place in Robinson township, this county, which became their permanent home. The children born to this union were John (a resident of Robinson township), Elizabeth (deceased wife of William Gilliland, of Beaver county, Penn.), William H. (of whom a sketch follows), James W. (a minister of the Fifth Presbyterian Church of Allegheny, Penn.), and Samuel (residing on the home place). The father was an active worker in the Democratic party, and in religion was from early youth a member of the Associate Reformed Church at Robinson, serving as ruling elder for some time. He died April 16, 1858, and was followed by his widow August 9, 1888; both are buried in the church cemetery at Robinson.

William H. Witherspoon was born August 3, 1831, on the old homestead in Robinson township, where his youth was passed, and he received a good common-school education. On December 28, 1851, he was married to Mary, daughter of William Hood, of Hanover township, this county. The young people resided on the home place in Robinson township seven years after their marriage, then moved to Hanover township, and six years afterward settled in Burgettstown, Smith township, where they are now living. On coming to Burgettstown, William H. Witherspoon opened a general store, and also carried on a business in grain and produce. In 1884 he made a new departure, sold the store, and began dealing extensively in both wool and grain, making a specialty of the former, purchasing wool in different parts of Washington, Allegheny and Beaver counties, Penn., as well as in the State of Ohio. In politics he is an influential member of the Republican party. His was the first business house established on the west side of the railroad track in Burgettstown. Mr. Witherspoon was one of the building committee of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown, and gave liberally of his time and money to its erection. He was formerly connected with the Associate Reformed Church, which afterward merged into the U. P. Church, of which he has been an elder for many years, also serving in that capacity in the churches at Robinson and Frankfort Springs.

HUGH PATTERSON, one of the oldest, most respected and prosperous citizens of Jefferson township, was born November 7, 1807, near Eldersville, Washington Co., Penn., in an old log cabin which is yet standing.

James Patterson, his father, was born, reared and educated in Ireland, and coming to America soon after the Revolution, remained with his brother John and three sisters, for some months near Philadelphia. The two brothers were, for a time, employed in "flailing" wheat, getting one-tenth as his share, making the sum of 33 $\frac{1}{2}$  cents per day. Afterward they moved to Allegheny county, where they rented a farm, remained a short time, and then came to Washington county and purchased a farm in Jefferson township. Hugh was married to Sarah Given, prior to locating in Washington county. To them the following children were born: John, Mary (wife of William Moore), James, Sarah (married to Robert Pogue), Elizabeth (deceased wife of Erasmus Cooper, and mother of H. C. Cooper), Hugh and William, all now deceased except Hugh. The father died at the age of ninety-three years, a few months after his wife's decease. In politics he was first a Jacksonian Democrat, and then an anti-slavery Whig. In church matters he was a staunch Methodist, and, for many years, was a class leader. A liberal contributor to all worthy enterprises, he died esteemed by all. He held the office of school director for six years and treasurer of Jefferson township school board for a decade.

Hugh Patterson grew to manhood on the old farm which had been bought of William Wells, of Wellsville, Ohio, and passed his youth thereon, caring for his aged parents. He began mercantile business in Eldersville, Penn., in company with William Wilson for some fifteen years, and retired about thirty years ago. Mr. Patterson is about five feet eleven inches in stature, healthy and well formed, possessing a remarkably clear mind, and writing a steady hand for one of his years. In politics his first vote was cast for Joseph Ritner, as governor of Pennsylvania, for whom he again voted three years later, aiding in gaining the election, also voting for him a fourth time. His first Presidential vote was cast for Jackson. Mr. Patterson was an anti-slavery man, and of recent years has been an advocate of the principles embodied in the Republican party. In 1842 he was postmaster of Eldersville, also served one term after Taylor's election, finally resigning the office. He has been tendered other positions, among which were those of justice of the peace and county commissioner, but declined to serve in either capacity. Mr. Patterson is now reaping the reward of early toil, and is held in high regard by all who have known him.

WILLIAM M. GEORGE the proprietor of an extensive lumber business and feed store in McDonald, Penn., was born February 13, 1835, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county. He is a son of John, and grandson of Robert George, the latter of whom was born in Ireland, and was married to Christiana Plance in eastern Pennsylvania, and moved to Miller's Run. She bore him thirteen children. The young couple first settled on the Miller's Run farm, and cleared and improved the pioneer home. They were progressive citizens and among the earliest members of the Covenant Church, holding their first meetings in a small log cabin. The names of the family of Robert George are as follows: Thomas George, of Jefferson county, Ohio; Robert George, Carroll county, Ohio; David George and Jacob George, of Washington county, Penn.; Alexander George, of Illinois; John George and Margaret Slater, of Washington county, Penn.; Elizabeth McMasters, Carroll county, Ohio; Hannah Robinson, Pittsburgh, Penn.; Ann Ramsey and Jane Robb, of Washington county; Robert George, of Miller's Run, died August 15, 1819, aged seventy-five years.

John George was born in January, 1808, on the home place in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and passed his youth there assisting in the farm work, and attending the subscription schools of the vicinity. In early manhood he selected as his life companion Sarah, daughter of William McCrea, of Cross Creek township, and brought his bride to the old home farm January 3, 1832. Two children were born to this union: Robert Jamison and William McCrea. The mother died August 3, 1836, and for his second wife Mr. George was married in September, 1837, to Margaret Roney, who died May 29, 1838. His third wife, to whom he was married August 6, 1841, was Jane Slater, who bore him children as follows: Christiana; Martha A., who died May 1, 1843; Robert J.; M. G. Taggart; Margaret A. Slater; M. E. Coleman; and Mary E. Carithers. Mr. George was a farmer and stock raiser and an energetic business man, and in religious connection a staunch member of the Covenant Church.

William M. George was educated in the district schools, and on December 25, 1872, was united in marriage with Mary E., daughter of Robert Speer, of Ohio. The children born to this union are: John Ralph Speer, Robert Howard, William McCrea, Arthur Melville, Louella Blanche and Mary Edna. Mr. George learned the carpenter's and builder's trade in early life, following it several years. In 1873 he came to McDonald, and opened a lumber business and a grist mill, having recently given his whole time to the former occupation, in connection with a feed store, recently added. He has the most extensive business of the kind in McDonald, the old firm name, George & Wallace, being succeeded by W. M. George & Co. (limited). Their success is due to arduous effort. The principles of the Covenant Church were inculcated in the mind of Mr. George from childhood, and he has ever been a strong advocate and earnest supporter of that Society.

WILLIAM B. McCORKLE is a son of Thomas McCorkle, who was born in Washington county, and married to Anna McCullough, also a native of the county, born in 1833. Thomas and Anna McCorkle reared the following family of children: William B., Colwell (a farmer of Somerset township), David, Lizzie, Minnie, Retta, James and Samuel, of whom the last three are now deceased. The father died on the home farm in 1882; he was a member of the United Presbyterian Church. On August 12, 1886, Mrs. McCorkle was united in marriage with Frederick Whitely, of Somerset township.

William B. McCorkle was born December 19, 1858, on the home farm in this county, and on April 5, 1888, was united in matrimonial alliance with Miss Martha J. Bebout, who was born January 7, 1868, in Washington county, Penn., and is a daughter of David and Dorothy (McMurray) Bebout, who reared the following family of children: Catherine (wife of Weir McNary), James, Belle, Frank, Martha J. (Mrs. McCorkle), Elizabeth, and Dora (the last named being deceased). Her father is a farmer in Cecil township, this county, and both her parents are members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. McCorkle resides on the pleasant and fruitful farm of 106 acres, where he was born. He and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church, and he is a Democrat.

JOHAN PATRICK DARRAH, a leading retired agriculturist and a representative self-made man, is a native of County Antrim, Ireland, born in 1826. His father, William Darrah, was married in the "Emerald Isle" to Jennie McMuller, and they had born to them a family of eight children, viz.: Archibald, who died in Kansas; Alexander, who died in the East Indies; George, who died in East Liverpool, Ohio; John, who died in Glasgow, Scotland; John Patrick; William (deceased); Annie, married to Michael Parker, and died in Pittsburgh, and Mary, who died in Glasgow, Scotland. The parents both died in Ireland long since.

John P. Darrah came to America about 1843, with his brother George, landing in Montreal, Canada, whence, two years later, he proceeded to Buffalo, N. Y., by way of the St. Lawrence, Lake Ontario, etc., and thence at once went to Pittsburgh, Penn., where he remained, however, but one year, when he came to Washington county. He was a poor boy, without means to pay for stage hire or any other mode of conveyance, so he had to walk the entire distance from Pittsburgh to the town of Washington. Here he soon obtained employment on the National pike, in course of construction between Washington and Wheeling, and this was his first start in life in the land of his adoption. Mr. Darrah has been a resident of Washington county ever since. He industriously worked at various employments, practicing strict economy, until he was enabled to buy, in 1861, a farm in Morris township. This he sold, and then bought, in Franklin township, the farm now owned by Nelson Hathaway, where he remained some seventeen or eighteen years, when he moved into the city of Washington, having erected his present commodious residence, on the edge of Franklin township. On October 29, 1855, Mr. Darrah was married to Miss Catherine Naughten, a native of Galway, Ireland, whence her family had come to Washington county, her brother John having been an early settler here, but they are all now deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Darrah were born seven children, of whom the following is a brief record: George B. is a prominent contractor and builder in Washington, Penn.; Alexander E. is a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, and for three years was a professor of Greek and Latin in Beech Grove College, Beech Grove, Tenn. (he is now principal of one of the ward schools in the city of Nashville, Tenn., where he resides); John R. is a law student in the West; Alexander and Robert Emmet both died young; Jennie F. and Anna M. are at home with their father. Mrs. Darrah (the mother of these children) died August 2, 1889, at the age of about sixty years, and is buried in the Catholic cemetery, near Washington. Politically, Mr. Darrah has always been a Democrat, but never a partisan, and he is a member of the Catholic Church. He and his wife were the first couple to be married in the old Catholic church building in the borough of Washington.

When Mr. Darrah first came to what is now the borough of Washington he found it an old, dead-looking place, without any improvements to speak of. When night-time came the place was covered as with a pall, the darkness was so impenetrable, the only light visible being from a chance tallow candle placed in a window here and there. Candles were brought to the town by the wagon load from Wellsburg, Mr. Darrah himself having at one time brought a load. It was dangerous to walk the streets at night, owing to the deficiency of lights and the rude condition of the streets. The stage coach was a daily visitor at the place, and its arrival and departure produced about the only excitement the staid inhabitants had an opportunity of indulging in. Taking horses East, "over the mountains," to sell, was at the time a source of considerable revenue. The animals would be taken in large droves, "double-tandem" fashion, with a long, stout rope between each row, to which they were fastened, and every sixth horse had a rider in charge. Mr. Darrah had his share of the hardships incident to those pioneer days, and experienced many privations, but by a life of industry, perseverance and strict temperance he succeeded in overcoming all obstacles and evolving a handsome competence from a commencement of nothing, save a pair of willing hands and a stout heart.

WILLIAM H. MARTIN, a leading farmer and breeder of fine cattle and sheep, of South Strabane township, was born September 9, 1842, on the farm where he now resides.

Peter Martin, grandfather of subject, was born in 1759 in York county, Penn. He was a son of Samuel Martin, who emigrated from Scotland along with his son James, and was the first of the family to settle in York county, where he followed farming and died. He had five daughters and two sons. Peter Martin, Sr., purchased a farm of Jacob Shively (the original patent for which, written on sheepskin, is now in the possession of his grandsons). Peter Martin, who had been a farmer all his days, died May 12, 1843, aged eighty four years, a member of the old Seceder Church. He had four children, and among the younger members of the family was James Martin, who was born in York county, Penn., May 12, 1792. He was but a child when his parents came to Washington county, and purchased the farm in South Strabane township. James Martin was married, April 19, 1821, in Washington county, to Miss Mary White, who was born April 19, 1800, on her father's farm in North Strabane township, not far from Canonsburg. He was a farmer, and he and wife were members first of the Seceder Church, then of the United Presbyterian. Their children were as follows: Peter, born February 4, 1822, married to Mary J. Clokey, died December 23, 1862; Samuel, born January 24, 1824, married to Sarah Herron; James, born December 12, 1825, married to Elizabeth Clokey; John W., born January 11, 1828, married to Elizabeth Allison; Matthew A., born December 7, 1829, unmarried; Mary J., born September 21, 1832, died September 13, 1855, unmarried; Ebenezer H., born June 21, 1834, died unmarried (was a soldier in the Civil war, and was drowned in the Appomattox, June 23, 1864, while serving in the signal service corps); Ann E., born November 2, 1837, died September 5, 1838; William H., our subject, and Thomas Jefferson, unmarried.

William H. Martin was educated in the common schools of his township, and was united in marriage January 17, 1867, with Miss Anna M. Thome, who was born in North Strabane township, a daughter of James Thome. They have two children, Abbie E., wife of Rev. W. A. Jones, of Knoxville, Pittsburgh, Penn., and Willis J. William H. Martin and his brother inherited the old homestead farm of their father and grandfather. They now own 325 acres in South Strabane township, most of which is under cultivation. They raise grain, but pay chief attention to the raising and breeding of fine cattle and sheep. William H. Martin is one of the board of directors of the Western Pennsylvania Fair Association. He has held various local offices of trust, and is now a school director, having held that office for a number of years. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church, and he is an elder in the church at Pigeon Creek. In politics he has always supported the Republican party.

DR. J. C. McCULLOUGH, a well known physician of Amwell township, with residence at Lone Pine, is of Scotch-Irish descent. His grandfather, William McCullough, born in West Bethlehem township, this county, was married to Rebecca Dunn. He passed all his life in that township, following the vocation of a farmer, and died at the age of about eighty-seven years.

David McCullough, son of William and Rebecca (Dunn) McCullough, was born February 21, 1818, in West Bethlehem township, remaining there till March, 1843, when he was united in marriage with Catherine Lancaster, by which union there were born the following children: Hiram, who enlisted in the One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., and died in prison; Sarah Jane (Mrs. Wood), a resident of Greene county, Penn.; Rebecca, who was killed by a falling tree when eight years of age; John Cary; Mary Elizabeth (Mankey), residing in Washington; Joanna (Mrs. Horn), a resident of Amwell township; Samuel (deceased about the year 1888), who in his lifetime was a skillful wagon maker and blacksmith; Emma (Mrs. Scott), living in Washington county; Ella; William Ellsworth, who died of typhoid fever in 1883; Spencer and Newton, residents of Amwell township, both farmers. After his marriage David McCullough moved into Amwell township, east of Amity, near Big creek, and in 1849 located on the hill near the Baptist church, on the Clarktown road. He afterward moved to his father's farm, remaining there until the spring of 1855, when he went to Aleppo township, Greene county, and purchased a farm which he sold in the spring of 1876; again coming to Washington county in 1883, he bought the place where he now resides, near Amity. For more than forty years he has been a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and he has been a lay delegate to the Presbytery. Politically, he was formerly a Whig, then a Republican, but has never accepted any official positions.

Mrs. McCullough was a daughter of Samuel Lancaster, and was brought up by the Spencers near Clarksville. They formerly lived near Philadelphia, and old Mrs. Spencer heard the firing of the guns at the battle of Germantown, during the Revolutionary war.

J. C. McCullough was born on the farm east of Amity, Washington county, July 2, 1849, and remained at home until eighteen years of age, when he began teaching. He taught during the winter time, and was thus enabled to pay the expenses of his attendance at the summer terms at Jacksonville Academy, and at Waynesburgh, Greene county, until he was twenty-four years of age. Leaving college in the junior year, he began studying medicine at Cameron, W. Va., with Dr. S. B. Stidger, the leading physician of the county, and under his instruction remained two years, teaching in the winters. At the end of that time he went to the Medical College of Ohio, at Cincinnati, where he spent the winter of 1875-76. He then practiced four years in Marshall county, W. Va., afterward returning to the same college, where he graduated with honors March 1, 1881. He took one of the prizes offered to the graduating class of 105 pupils (a case of instruments), and stood second in the branches of chemistry and anatomy. He then returned to Marshall county, and on March 19, 1884, was there united in marriage with Miss Jennie Kittle, a daughter of Samuel and Caroline (Wellman) Kittle, at Cameron, W. Va., where he practiced medicine eight years. Their union has been blessed with three children: Loyal C., Myra J. and Samuel Smith.

In the spring of 1889 Dr. McCullough came to Lone Pine, where he has already secured an excellent practice. He is a thorough, earnest student, and has evinced great pluck and perseverance, richly deserving the success which has crowned his efforts. In his political opinion he is a Republican, and he was a member of the board of health of Marshall county, W. Va., two years. In religious connection both he and Mrs. McCullough are members of the M. E. Church.

JOSEPH WILLISON. On January 4, 1827, one Daniel Houston purchased 256 acres of land in Chartiers township, and after the Chartiers Valley R. R. was completed, laid out Houstonville. The fertile valley was a pleasant site for the proposed village, and lots were soon purchased; the work of building progressed rapidly, and ere long a beautiful little town had sprung into existence. Among those who were charmed with the location and appearance of the place was Joseph Willison, a native of Allegheny county, Penn. He is a son of Isaac Willison, who was born in Cumberland county, Penn., and reared on the home farm. In early manhood Isaac Willison selected a life companion in the person of Martha, daughter of Stephen Long. She died at Noblestown, Allegheny Co., Penn., leaving three children, namely: Catharine, Eliza and Joseph Willison. Catharine was married to William Chisholm. To this union one son was born, and in process of time he became Dr. I. W. Chisholm, of New Concord, Ohio. Eliza married John Cooper, of Venango county, Penn., and to them were born two sons and two daughters.

Joseph Willison was born August 24, 1823, near Noblestown, Allegheny county, and when yet a boy hired out as a farm hand for one year at $7 per month. His mother died when he was but two days old, and at the age of fourteen years he was left an orphan. At the end of his first year's work on the farm he made another bargain, and worked on a farm the following six years for $10 per month, the highest wages then received. His education was obtained at the subscription school, Moon township, Allegheny county, and the Moore school, near Hickory, this county, where he received instruction at the rate of 2 cents per day—not being a regularly enrolled student. A hard life was that of the homeless orphan lad, but bravely, uncomplainingly, he struggled on, rewarded at last for his indomitable spirit of persevering industry. At the age of twenty-one years he went to work in a flouring mill at Canonsburg for $10 per month, with his Uncle Butler Willison (who was a cousin of Gen. Ben. Butler), remaining there until he had learned the business. He then went to Patton's mill, working there two years for $12 per month. In 1849 he returned to Canonsburg and took charge of the flour mill (owned by James Berry) on shares. At that time the mill was not paying expenses, but when, fourteen years later, he retired on account of ill health, they were doing a very prosperous business, and 10,000 bushels of grain were in the mill. On February 12, 1850, this enterprising young business man decided that a permanent partnership was essential to the highest success in life, and to fill that important position selected Elizabeth, daughter of William and Ellen Black. Children were born to the union of Joseph and Elizabeth Willison as follows: Anna Belle (wife of Charlie Jones), born January 9, 1851, died April 30, 1880, leaving one son and one daughter; Ellen Clara, born January 2, 1852, deceased October 30, 1852; and Lizzie, born February 23, 1853, deceased August 31, 1877. The mother passed away March 4, 1853, and on June 22, 1854, Joseph Willison was married to Anna, daughter of James and Nancy Lyons, of Beaver county, Penn. To this marriage the following children have been born, of whom the following is a brief record: Linda P., born October 7, 1855, is the widow of John B. Miller, who owned the grain cradle factory; since the death of her husband Mrs. Miller has not only conducted the business with admirable success, but has enlarged the capacity of the mill. Homer L., born May 24, 1857, is now operating his father's farm; he is married to Dorrit, daughter of Andrew Russell. William Oscar, born August 1, 1861, is engaged in putting down gas and oil wells; the maiden name of his wife was Jennie Taggart, daughter of Samuel Taggart. J. Knowles was born May 1, 1863, and died December 30, 1880. Walter D., born October 25, 1866, is foreman in the grain cradle factory for his sister, Mrs. Miller. Charlie B., born September 18, 1870, is also employed in the same factory.

In the year 1863 Joseph Willison purchased a farm of 127 acres, situated one mile west of Houstonville, Chartiers township. This place is underlaid with a heavy vein of coal, and contains some of the best buildings within the limits of Washington county. In 1886 Mr. Willison sustained a very heavy loss by fire, his barn and grain being utterly destroyed; but he, at once, erected a new barn with the best modern improvements, costing him over $3,000. He deals very extensively in stock, having first invested in breeding the Black Top Dickson sheep, which has since been his favorite breed. He has been very successful in this special department of stock raising, and the demand for his sheep is greater than the supply. He sells at various prices, always realizing a handsome profit from his stock, which is of the finest quality, all being registered. In political opinion he was a Whig and a Republican, and since the organization of the "Prohibition party" has been one of its most ardent devotees, having cast the first and only vote in his district. He also favors woman's suffrage, and is interested in all the progressive and educational movements of the day. In 1851 he united with the Presbyterian Church, and twelve years later joined the United Presbyterian Society at Canonsburg, with which Mrs. Willison is also identified. Their home in Houstonville is of the most modern style, lacking no comfort or luxury which a cultured taste can suggest.

JAMES S. McNARY. Of the McNary family in Washington, the first (of whom there is any record) was James, by trade a shoemaker, who was born in Scotland about the year 1711, and, according to tradition, moved with his family to the North of Ireland. After sojourning there for a time he and his wife emigrated to America, bringing with them their four sons and one daughter, some of whom had married in Ireland.

In the year 1760 (as records show) James McNary bought a tract of land in York county, Penn., in which county he remained for a number of years. He was made an elder (as was also his son John) in the Seceder Congregation of Guinston, one of the oldest congregations of that denomination in America. His sons were: John, James, Thomas and David; his daughter, Jane, married William Robison, and remained for life in York county. The son John came to Washington county in 1801, and bought the tract of land in North Strabane township on which James S. now lives, revisited York county in the fall, expecting to return with his family in the following spring, but died during the winter. All the other sons of James McNary also came to Washington county, Thomas buying land in North Strabane township; James in Chartiers township, and David in Hanover township. Their father came also, and lived, up to the time of his death, with his son, David, dying in 1796 at the age of eighty-five years; he was buried in the Seceder churchyard near Paris, Washington county.

John McNary, son of the honored old Scotch pioneer, James, and grandfather of James S., died as already stated in York county, after a visit to and a purchase of land in Washington county. His family consisted of wife (Esther Bogle, a native of Ireland), daughters: Elizabeth (wife of William Douglas), Jane (wife of Robert McKibben), Mary (wife of John McCoy), Margaret (wife of James Martin), Esther (wife of Thomas Ewing, and grandmother of Judge Ewing, of Pittsburgh), Agnes (wife of William Pollock) and Jennet (wife of James Marshall); and sons: James, Malcolm, John (father of James S.), Thomas and Alexander.

John McNary, father of subject, in company with his brother Alexander, came into possession of the tract of land their father had bought in Washington county, and removed to it from York county in 1802. John returned to York county and settled up his father's estate there before locating permanently in Washington county. The other brothers, James and Thomas, and all the sisters, with their husbands, came to Washington county except Elizabeth Douglas, who raised her family in York county. Jennet Marshall subsequently went to, and raised a family near, Mansfield, Ohio. After John had closed up his father's estate, he came to his farm and soon after married Jane Hill, who had but recently come from Dauphin county with her sister, Mrs. James Thome, who had settled on a neighboring farm. After their marriage, which occurred on New Year's Day, 1805, he settled, in company with his brother Alexander, on the farm bought by his father, the same on which his son James S. now lives. This farm had been patented by James Gott, in 1784, sold by him to Samuel Smith, and by Smith to John McNary. In a short time Alexander sold his interest in the farm to John, and moved to and became permanently settled in Jefferson county, Ohio.

The family of John and Jane (Hill) McNary were: sons—William H., John, James S., Oliver R. and Alexander C.; daughters—Esther, Jane E. and Abba Caroline, with the following record: William H. [for his record see biography of J. C. McNary]. John lived unmarried on the old farm, and died April 15, 1881. James S. is the subject of this sketch. Esther married Samuel Pollock, and their family consisted of Jennie, James, John, Samuel (who died in youth), Oliver and Clark; Esther died November 9, 1890. Jane E. lived all her life unmarried at the old home, and died October 26, 1883. Oliver married Ellen Grove, and their family were: Tillie, married to Rev. W. C. Williamson, D. D., now pastor of the U. P. Congregation at Keokuk, Iowa; Ella, married to R. L. Munce, Esq., of Washington county, Penn.; Nettie; Hettie; James (deceased) and Clarkson, who is surgeon in the Military National Home at Leavenworth, Kans. (Oliver McNary was major in the army during the Rebellion, and a prisoner of war in the prison pens of Charleston and other places, suffering great privation and cruelty, but survived to get home, and is now living in Leavenworth, Kans.). Alexander C. McNary married Maude Burkhardt, and their children were: daughters—Lorena, Ida, Maude and Grace; sons—Eugene, John and Clarence. Alexander McNary died October 18, 1886. Abba Caroline, the youngest child of John and Jane McNary, died unmarried at the age of nineteen years.

Before leaving the biography of John and Jane McNary we will refer briefly to their early farm life, as it contrasts strongly with that of the present day, and serves to illustrate the noble character of those early pioneers. They were 200 miles from where supplies such as iron, salt, spices or clothing could be bought, and such of these things as they did get they carried on horseback over a roadless mountain country. They would slaughter their meat, freeze it, do up the fall work, and start east for salt and other necessaries which the farm would not produce. Their clothing was all made by hand at home. From a few native sheep the wool was shorn, then washed, picked, carded, spun and woven, all in their little cabin home. The flax for their linen was grown on the farm, pulled, spread out to bleach, then broken in a flax "break," scutched, spun and woven, all by hand—tools of the most primitive character. In some parts of this work neighbors would join in a "frolic," and in this consisted the amusements of those days. A "fulling frolic" was an event that might be of interest briefly to describe. The neighbors would all be invited for a certain evening, a room having the closest laid floor would be selected, then a number of chairs would be placed in a circle around the room and tied together. The young men, in their bare feet, and with their pants rolled up to the knees, would occupy the chairs; the web of linsay, or blankets, would be placed on the floor within the circle, and the "machine" was then ready to be set going. The ladies warned and applied the soapsuds, and the boys would kick the fabric backward and forward until it was pronounced properly fulled. If the kicking should at any time lag, and it was thought necessary to make it more lively, it was only necessary to raise the temperature of the soapsuds a few degrees above standard heat. Such was a primitive fulling mill. The grain was all taken to a mill on horseback, and ground in a horse-mill, the mill being operated by a tramp-wheel, on which was put the horse that carried the grain to mill. The most primitive of all was what was known as the "sweep" mill, but that gave way in course of time to the less cumbersome "tramp".

wheel process. The tramp wheel was about twenty-five feet in diameter, standing at an angle, the horse's weight on one side causing it to revolve, the horse walking as the wheel passed from under him. These mills had patrons living ten or more miles away, who had to travel that distance, then wait their turn at the mill, do their own grinding and get home, perhaps, the second day afterward. The tools used for farming purposes were principally made by the farmers themselves, even harness for their horses were manufactured out of the bark of trees, or hickory withes. Only the point and shear of the plows were made of iron; wooden mouldboards were made from split, twisty oak; shovels, forks, harrows, threshes—all of wood; latches, hinges and nails (used for building) all made by hand. Such was farm life when young James S., the subject of this sketch, was a boy. But with all these difficulties in their way in providing for bodily comfort, they did not forget the better part—the mind and soul. John McNary was active in establishing schools for the children, and church privileges for all. One of the early members of Chartiers Seceder Church, situated five miles distant, he and his family were constant attendants, riding horseback or walking, and often sitting in the church through long winter days with no fire, and walls not built close enough to keep out the winter blasts—manifesting a love of God and for His house, and a devotion to the principles of their holy religion that the church members of these favored days would do well to emulate. He was early elected an elder, and served with honor through life.

Mr. McNary lived to improve his farm; build one of the first brick farm mansions in the vicinity; establish one of the first Merino flocks of sheep, the sheep that made Washington famous as the first and best fine wool producing county in America; lived to see his family grow up in honor around him, and died February 11, 1844. Jane, his wife, survived him many years as the honored head of the family. Being a woman of more than ordinary physical and mental development, she deserves special mention for her many excellent qualities. In the early struggles for the support of her family she did her part. After the breakfast dishes were set aside she would carry her infant (James S.) to the field, lay him in the fence corner, and take her place with the reapers, keeping her land up with the best of them until the noon hour, when she would repair to the house and bring out the meal to the field, where dinner was generally eaten, then nurse her babe, set the dishes aside, and take up her sickle again. And this was not one day's experience, but for days and even years. Her disposition was ever happy and cheerful. A beautiful singer, she would fill her home with good cheer and hospitality, and even to old age Grandmother

McNary seemed supremely cheerful, happy and kind, enjoying with a relish the fun and enjoyment of children and grandchildren, who often and gladly assembled to enjoy the loving hospitality and tender, affectionate greeting ever sure to be enjoyed at her home. She died January 11, 1867, at the good old age of eighty-seven years.

Before leaving this old home, which was a type of many others in those primitive times, whose lot would seem to be so hard and almost void of comfort, we would record that in the midst of all there was a happiness and enjoyment, a real pleasure in their busy lives, of which the rich and idle in homes of luxury never know. No jealousies were there to rankle, no envy to corrode; no idle hours to drag their weary blighting miasma over the life—their very cares were their comforts, and life was a blessing because it was filled to the brim with doing good and enjoying it.

The above record gives some idea of the scenes and circumstances surrounding the subject of this sketch in his early life; and of the mother that nurtured and trained him—all favorable to the development of a vigorous, healthy, mental, moral and physical; and such was the nature of James S. McNary. In strength of character, integrity of purpose, industry, hospitality and vigor of body and mind, his "make up," so to speak, was of a nature to prove the value of early training and good influence. Had he chosen a public profession, he would have taken a front rank, and become the leader of thought and progress among men; but he chose—partly from the need of his services at home, and partly from native taste, being rather of a retiring disposition—the life of a farmer, a calling as honorable as that of the legislator, scientist, or military hero, but one that does not usually share with them in public applause. His renown is in richer fields and finer flocks. His benefactions are the making of two blades of grass grow where but one grew before.

In person Mr. McNary was in his younger days tall and muscular; in disposition cheerful and happy. In vigor of constitution he had few equals; in judgment, calm, cautious, but in the end decided, the wisdom of his council was sought far and wide. In industry and perseverance he was proverbial. He never surrendered to difficulties nor was faint hearted when trials came. A little incident illustrative of his character in this regard might be admissible here. One day, when he was eighty years old, he was standing in the hind end of his wagon, when the horse, by a quick movement forward, threw him out backward, on the hard street, his head striking on a stone, which cut a gash on the side of his head, rendering him insensible for the time. He was assisted into an office near by, and a couch made for him to lie on while his wound was being sewed up. When all was ready he was told to lie down, but in reply he simply told him to go "on with their sewing." "No," said the others, "lie down on the lounge." "No." Still they insisted until, becoming quite impatient, he said: "go on with your sewing, I ain't the lying kind." And truly it may be said of him that in all his long life he was not one of the lying kind. "Doing everything right" was his motto; doing it the easy way and doing it right was his ingenuity. And being of more than ordinary strength of body and muscle, coupled with a thoughtful and ingenious mind, he could accomplish more in a day in advancing farm work than was usual among men. When it came to doing hard work on the farm he acknowledged no superior, if any equal. When he was in the prime of manhood the grain was cut with the cradle; the grass cut with the scythe; hay pitched with a fork, in each case bodily strength and muscle being necessary to the utmost limit, and for that very reason he seemed to delight in doing them and doing more than anybody else could. Mr. McNary was married on the second Tuesday of October, 1841, to Rachel Anderson, who with an infant son died August 3, 1842, and they were buried in the same grave. He never again married. He lived for many years on his "Rich Hill" farm in South Strabane township, until he purchased the old John McNary homestead where he has since lived. He delights in keeping his friends about him, and when any one of them seems to need a home, his is open to them. If he did not raise a family of his own, he helped to raise those of others, with a father's devotion and care. Early in life he joined Chartiers U. P. Church, and has been a member of same all his life, and if the record were known he has perhaps spent as many days upon the public ministry in that congregation as any member in it, besides contributing as much to its support. He on one occasion, as a member of the board of trustees, while discussing the question of raising and paying the pastor's salary, objected to the practice then almost universal of paying when they might have the money, saying to the board: "Pay it when it is due; if you have not got the money in the treasury, come to me and get it." And true to his promise, he made up what was necessary and not in the treasury, on the day of each quarter out of his own pocket when due, the result being that the old congregation for almost the first time paid the salary promptly when due, until the habit of doing so became formed, and is practiced faithfully (to its honor be it said) to the present day.

In politics Mr. McNary was originally an Anti-slavery Whig; was on the ground floor in the Republican party; rejoiced in the downfall of American slavery, and the overthrow of the Rebellion. He has always been a consistent temperance man, and an earnest advocate of all moral reforms. He was one of the incorporators of the Oak Spring Cemetery Company, and helped by his counsel to convert the old planless, neglected, burying place into one of the neatest, most artistic and worthy memorial grounds in the county. He was a stockholder in the Canonsburg National Bank, also of the Citizens Bank (limited), in that borough, and of the Western Pennsylvania Agricultural Association, thereby showing his public spirit and interest in all the movements tending to promote and develop the resources of the county. He was one of the organizing members of the National Delaine Sheep Breeders Association, and now owns one of the best bred flocks of Delaine sheep in the United States, never having been beaten in any fair for the best Delaine wool. And now in his hospitable home, at the age of eighty-three years, he is living with an active interest in the welfare of friends and church and country, and awaiting the reward promised the faithful in the world to come.

J C. McNARY, Canonsburg. W. H. McNary, the eldest son of John McNary, of North Strabane township, was born November 26, 1805. He received his education in a log schoolhouse under the tuition of "old Master Howe" (as he was called), who taught for twenty-five consecutive years in the same place, and he was the only teacher William had. But, being a devoted reader, and, withal, an apt scholar, he secured an education that enabled him to take his place among his fellow-men as a leader of thought, always able to give a reason for the faith he professed in an intelligent and easy manner.

On February 26, 1828, he married Margaret Murray, by which union there were twelve children, of whom the following is a brief record: Mary died at the age of four years. John C. is the subject of this sketch. Martha Jane married Robert Russel, Esq., of Chartiers township, who was a leading farmer, a progressive stock breeder, and an elder in Chartiers U. P. Church, and is now deceased. George died at the age of five years. Margaretta died when twenty-one years old. James W. married Hettie Williamson, a minister in the Presbyterian Church, and they settled at Milwaukee, Wis.; they have three children: Nellie, Willie and Foster. William T. married Elizabeth Graham; their children: Lida, Willie, Nora, Graham, Margaretta, George and John; he is a minister in the United Presbyterian Church, and settled at Tarkio, Mo.; had the degree of D. D. conferred on him, and is president of the board of trustees of Tarkio College; was also a colonel in the army during the Civil war. Anna Maria married Rev. E. G. McKinley, a Presbyterian minister, and they settled at Bartow, Fla.; their children: Russel, Gretta and Louise. Thomas M. lives with his Uncle James in North Strabane township. Oliver died at the age of twelve years. Carrie (twin of Emma) married Rev. J. Bull Jackson, a minister in the United Presbyterian Church, and they settled at Morning Sun, Iowa; their children: Bessie, William, Retta, John, Russel (twin, deceased in infancy), Reed (twin) and Martha. Emma (twin of Carrie) died at sixteen years of age. These are the children and grandchildren of W. H. McNary.

After the marriage of William they lived for three years on the farm known as the "Rich Hill farm," in South Strabane township; then purchased and moved to the McNary homestead, known as the "Fine View farm" in Chartiers township. He was an industrious, devoted farmer, and made the breeding of fine Merino sheep a specialty in his farming operations, in which he was successful in having one of the best flocks in the county. He was a very zealous friend of education, and spared neither labor nor expense in securing for his family the best of school privileges. He was for thirty years an elder in Chartiers Seceder (later the United Presbyterian) Church, a leader in church work, and was often chosen to represent the congregation in the higher courts of the church. He was conspicuous as one of the original anti slavery men of the country. He believed slavery to be a crime against God and man alike, and an injury to master and slave as well—a disgrace to our fair nation, and a blight and injury to the county and State where it existed. He was very bold and fearless, even at the risk of bodily harm, in denouncing and opposing it in those dark times, when slavery was defended in Congress by the bludgeon, and the slave hunter in northern States by Federal law. He sheltered and assisted the runaway, when to do so meant fine and imprisonment by the laws of the country. He was present and active at the meeting in Pittsburgh where the Republican party was born, and lived to see the triumph of the principles he so long defended in the overthrow of slavery and the enfranchisement of the colored race. He was also an earnest advocate of temperance; was one of the first farmers, where he lived, to oppose and abandon the practice of the constant use of liquor in the harvest fields and gathering of neighbors for the assistance of one another. On questions of right and wrong he was fearless and uncompromising—he would denounce evil and evil-doers with a severity which perhaps at times would do no good, but rather made him enemies at the time. Yet, withal, he was one of the kindest of men; no appeal for help from the needy was ever unheeded, nor any sent hungry away from his door, his house being proverbial for its hospitality to neighbor, friend or stranger alike. In 1861 he left the farm, moving to Canonsburg, and there—busy as ever with his lots and houses—his pastime and pleasure was to be doing something. He could not be idle; never was known to sit and while away the time aimlessly. Although reading was part of his industry, one seldom saw him without book or paper in his hand when at rest in his home. He died September 10, 1877, more honored in his death than in his life by all who knew him for his many sterling qualities of head and heart. His wife Margaret survived him but a few years. She was a lovely woman, beloved by everybody; of a meek and quiet spirit, a striking contrast to the restless energy of her husband, and yet seeming to honor him the more for what she termed his "fuss and energy."

John C. McNary, the subject proper of this sketch, the oldest son of William and Margaret McNary, was born on the Rich Hill farm in South Strabane township, July 30, 1830. He passed all his early life on the farm with his father in Chartiers township, to which the latter moved in 1832. His privilege was to attend one of the best common schools of the county, which became so through the energy and love of education of his father, and a few other worthy patrons whom we would take a pleasure in naming: They were John Hays, John Haft, Samuel Griffith, George Barret and others, who from time to time came into the district. On October 20, 1859, J. C. McNary was married to Mary Jane Rankin, of Mercersburg, Penn., who died June 28, 1866, aged thirty-seven years. Her six children (there being two pairs of twins among them) all died in infancy. Mr. McNary afterward married, May 20, 1868, Abba T. Pollock, and their children were Mary Ellen, Mattie J. R., James T., William Houston, John Thome, and Nannie Jennett. Of these, Mary Ellen married George Paxton, January 20, 1892, and settled on a farm near Houstonville, in Chartiers township; Mattie J. R. died September 20, 1892, of typhoid fever, at her father's home in Canonsburg, at the age of twenty-one years; James T. died March 30, 1880, of inflammatory rheumatism; William H., John T. and Nannie J. are all at home with their parents, and attending school. Our subject early united with the U. P. Church of Chartiers, of which he was elected an elder. On the organization of a congregation in Houstonville, he became a member there, as he felt it his duty to take his place where he was most needed. He remained to see the young congregation well established; and when he moved to Canonsburg (in 1892) he again united with old Chartiers, the church of his father. Politically, Mr. McNary is an anti-saloon Republican—an ardent Protectionist—and as these two great principles are not embodied in any one party just at the present day, he is not a very ardent party man, but hopes for the day when, like the revolution of 1856, good men all over the country will again unite, independent of old party trammel, in defense of all true reform. Before the war he was a brigadier general in the State Guards, and at times is called "General." For twenty consecutive years, while in the township, he was justice of the peace, and is on that account also familiarly called "squire." He has been entrusted with the settlement of very many estates, and always took an active part in all local improvements. He is one of the incorporators of Oak Spring Cemetery Co., and of Western Penn. Agricultural Association. He was one of the original breeders of the National Delaine sheep, and the first man to ever adopt and advertise a flock with the title, "The Delaine Merino." He is president of the Citizens Bank (limited), Canonsburg, in which borough he is now living, for the purpose of securing better school privileges for his family, and to be near his other business interests, as well as to escape the care and labor of farm life, believing that when all the rest do as much hard work as he has, it will be all done; and also to be near to enjoy the religious privileges of God's house, and attend all the meetings for prayer and religious conference, believing them to be our richest inheritance in this famed land.

JAMES HARVEY COLEMAN, an energetic, successful business man, and a representative of one of the oldest families of Canonsburg, is a son of James Coleman, and a grandson of Christopher Coleman.

Christopher Coleman was born in Germany, immigrating to America during the last century. He was married to a native of New Jersey, who died in Washington county. He died about the year 1819, in Canonsburg, leaving the following named sons: William, Jacob, James, David and Simpson, some of whom were soldiers in the war of 1812. James Coleman was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and learned the trade of cooper, which he followed at Canonsburg for over fifty years. He was united in marriage with Jane, daughter of William Baxter, of Washington county. William Baxter was a native of Ireland, and first settled in Westmoreland county, Penn., afterward moving to Washington county. He was married to Jane Sealon, and passed the remainder of his life at Canonsburg, dying in 1819. His wife died in 1840, leaving the following children: Robert, William, Joseph, James, Jane and three other daughters, all of whom are now deceased.

James and Jane (Baxter) Coleman made a permanent home near Canonsburg, where the former died in 1871, at the age of eighty years, and the latter ten years later, aged eighty-two. Their children were William (deceased, who was a resident of California, and member of the Senate of that State), David (who served in the Eighth Missouri Regiment as adjutant, then as colonel, coming home as brigadier-general, after participating in twenty-two battles; he was appointed marshal of St. Louis), John P. (deceased colonel of the Thirtieth Missouri Infantry; served in the Civil war, but was not wounded), James Harvey (subject of our sketch), Joseph C. (served in an Ohio regiment, now a printer at Columbus, Ohio), Henry M. (for over thirty five years a resident of California), Mary Jane (deceased in infancy), Samuel (a druggist, captain of the Thirtieth Missouri Infantry), Frank (lieutenant of Company D, Tenth Pennsylvania Reserves), A. A. (a member of the One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. L.) and an unnamed infant. Of the children who survived in fancy, all lived to be over thirty years of age before any death occurred among them.

James Harvey Coleman was born February 28, 1829, near Canonsburg, and was reared to manhood in the vicinity. He learned the trade of cooper, and followed it fourteen years. On December 12, 1854, he and his brother Samuel opened a drug and book store at Canonsburg. In 1857 he was married to Miss May Belle, daughter of Robert White, of North Strabane township, whose parents were natives of Ireland. Robert White was formerly a cooper, and afterward followed farming. He was married to Ruth Clubbie, of North Strabane township, and reared a large family, of whom eight are now living, the four daughters living in this county. To the union of James Harvey and May Belle (White) Coleman the following named children were born: Addie Jean (wife of A. C. Bane, of Pittsburgh, Penn.), Ella Mary and Dora (both of whom are living at home), Edward White (a druggist of Pittsburgh, Penn.), George Curtis (living in California), Charles (was employed as a tailor for four years, then opened business for himself at Canonsburg), Robert and John, the latter two being deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Coleman have always resided at Canonsburg, and in religious faith the family are among the early Presbyterians of the county. In politics he was originally a Whig, and in 1856 became a worker for the Republican party; he has served his constituents as treasurer of Canonsburg, and school director.

JOHN M. GRABLE is a native of Washington county, Penn., born in Fallowfield township January 2, 1846, a son of Joel, who was a son of John, who was a son of John.

John Grable, his great-grandfather, was born in Washington county, Md., in 1754, and died in 1785. On December 10, 1779, he was married to Salome Hickman, and by her had four children, viz.: Jonathan, Jacob, John and Joseph. The mother of this family died in 1854; she and her husband lived in Washington county, Pennsylvania.

John Grable, grandfather of John M., was born in Chester county, Penn., in 1787, and died in 1822. He was by trade a tanner, in connection with which he followed farming, being owner of 400 acres of land which had been patented by his father under a Virginia grant, and repatented since the war. He married Miss Mary Carson, a native of Washington county, and four children were born to them: Joel, Jerome, Mary Ann and Julia (married to John McCormick, a farmer of Washington county). Jonathan Grable, a brother of John, was a major in the war of 1812.

Joel Grable, father of John M., was born in 1819 in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., where all his school days were passed. In 1842 he married Miss Maria, daughter of John Mitchell, a Washington county farmer, and two sons and five daughters blessed their union, viz.: John M., Julian, Jane, Zidana, Josephine, Roxanna and Carrie B., the last three named being now deceased. Julian married Angeline, daughter of Henry Fry, a well-known farmer of this county, and two sons and one daughter came by this marriage, all living at the home place with Joel Grable, whose wife had passed away in 1888. The farm comprises 150 acres of improved land, and the family own 443 acres further down the river. Joel Grable has served his township in various offices of trust, and was a justice of the peace eight years.

John M. Grable attended the common schools of the district, and worked on the home farm until he came of age. He then embarked in the insurance business, as solicitor for A. C. Sampson, of Monongahela City, with whom he remained some years; then moved to York county, same State, where he conducted an agency in the same line of business. Returning to Washington county, he started a grocery store at Bentleyville, which he carried on for some years; then moved into Monongahela City and opened an insurance office, where he has built up a satisfactory and safe business in both fire and life insurance. On November 25, 1875, Mr. Grable was married to Margaret, daughter of William H. Jones (of whom special mention is here made). They have no children. In politics our subject is a Democrat, and has for many years taken an active interest in the affairs of his party. He has served as mayor of Monongahela City several terms.

WILLIAM H. JONES, one of the oldest residents of Monongahela City, was born October 10, 1809, in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn. His father, William Jones, was born in Baltimore county, Md., in 1763, a son of a resident of the same State, who was a sailor by occupation and was lost at sea; his children were Mary (Mrs. Joseph Alexander) and William. After the death, by drowning, of her husband, Mrs. Jones married a Mr. Woods, by whom she had two children, Eliza and John; this husband dying, she married, for her third husband, a Mr. Morton. William Jones was reared in his native county, and learned the trade of blacksmith, which he followed for a time in the town of Harper's Ferry. He married Elizabeth McClelland, and to this union were born children as follows: John, Elijah, Ruth, Delilah (married to Rev. James Mills), Jesse Samuel, Rebecca (married to Andrew Mills), Rosanna F. H. (Mrs. Williams), Elizabeth (Mrs. James McCauley), Ann (Mrs. John Hess) and William H. The father of this family came to Washington county prior to 1790, and settled on a partly improved farm of 350 acres in Somerset township, which he had purchased. This property he improved, at the same time carrying on a blacksmith shop, where, during the "Whiskey Rebellion," he shod the horses of the cavalry that were sent to suppress the rising. He died in 1863, at the patriarchal age of one hundred years, lacking twenty days. Of the M. E. Church he was long a member, and was frequently elected to office in the same, but whilst truly loyal to his own particular persuasion, he contributed freely of his means to all churches. "He was strictly temperate in all things, of a quiet disposition, calm in judgment, firm in principle, inflexible in the performance of all his duties to God and to man as was given him to see right."

William H. Jones received his education at the subscription schools of the neighborhood of his birthplace, and as soon as he was old enough commenced working on his father's farm, on which he lived and labored until 1886, when he came to Monongahela City, where he has since had his home. On May 1, 18 , he was married to Sarah, daughter of John Fulmer, of Allegheny county, Penn., and the issue of this union are the following named children: Leonidas, William, Mary (Mrs. William Patton), Kate (Mr. John K. McMillan), Margaret (Mrs. John M. Grable), Albert S., Rose, Frank, Flora, and John S. Mr. Jones is a member of the M. E. Church, in which he held various offices while residing in Somerset township, and he is now a trustee of the church in Monongahela City. Politically, he was a Whig originally, and since the formation of the party he has been a staunch Republican. Of the school board of Somerset township he was an enthusiastic member. Up to within the past few years Mr. Jones was actively engaged in farming pursuits, in which he realized a comfortable competence, and now he is living retired in the enjoyment of peace and quietude.

JOHN C. SLOAN. The most successful men in the arena of life are not usually those who have been reared in the lap of luxury and idleness, but are men who have braved the bitter storms of hardship and poverty, hewing their way through every difficulty to positions of honor and prominence. Among the few who have thus risen from the ranks to places of recognized power and leadership, the Sloan family are most conspicuous.

James Sloan was born in 1776, in County Tyrone, Ireland, and when a young man was married to Martha Sloan, who was born in 1779, also a native of that county. They were distant relatives, many of the early Sloan family having settled in County Tyrone years before. Mr. and Mrs. Sloan rented a farm of thirty acres, where he became a prosperous farmer, but the tenant system of Ireland contained many features which no high spirited man could brook with patience. When James Sloan first entered the presence of his landlord, he was required to take off his hat and place it under his arm. He obeyed, but inwardly vowed that never again would he submit to such an order. To quote his own words: "I am willing to remove my hat to superior worth, goodness or mental qualities, but not to a man whose sole distinction is his riches." With true Irish independence, James Sloan sold his lease, which was valuable, inasmuch as he was able to employ workmen, while his own time was occupied in attending markets. Determined to seek a home where none could force his fealty or homage, with his wife, her mother, and two children (Jane and John), he set sail from Belfast, bidding farewell to one little grave on the soil of old Erin. They touched at Liverpool, and after a six-weeks' voyage arrived at New York. During the trip so fierce a storm arose that the hatches of the vessel had to be battened down, confining the passengers below for twenty four hours. In the meantime a sailor was washed overboard, but was rescued by a comrade. The elder passengers were troubled with sea sickness, but the children were well, both crew and passengers finally arriving in New York, in the summer of 1804.

The Sloans stopped two weeks with friends, and recruited from the long voyage, then proceeded on their journey, whither, they scarcely knew, but finally paused at Gettysburg, Penn., where they secured a vacant house; the wife and her mother then began to mend their clothing and clean the household effects. It was harvest time, and for three weeks Mr. Sloan assisted the farmer who owned the house. He then secured a horse and cart, packed the household goods, and with the family journeyed westward to Washington county, Penn., where his wife had relatives. A month later they arrived in Hopewell township, this county, and remained for a time on the farm now owned by James Maxwell, then the home of an aunt of Mrs. Sloan. On this farm Robert was born August 8, 1804. Mr. Sloan had obtained a good sum of money from the sale of his property in Ireland, part of which he invested in the farm of seventy-five acres now occupied by his son, reserving the remainder for other uses. This land was a portion of the 500-acre tract granted to Col. Chambers, in consideration of his services in the Revolutionary war. A house (the first built of hewn logs) was then erected upon the farm (being considered a very luxurious dwelling in those days), and new settlers beginning to arrive, Mr. and Mrs. Sloan were found congenial associates in their new home. They had both united with the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, and brought their letters with them, which they placed in the Church at Upper Buffalo. After coming to this county, the following children were added to the family circle: Robert, William, Mary Ann, Margaret, James, Eliza, Martha, one deceased in infancy and John C. (whose name opens this sketch). The father voted the Democratic ticket until 1835, when he joined the Whig party. He died in September, 1851, in his sixty-fourth year; his widow reached her eighty-fifth birthday, and passed away August 18, 1865. Her mother, who had crossed the ocean with her children, lived with a bachelor son in Cross Creek township, this county, until she was one hundred years of age. She then came to live with her grandson, John C., where she awaited the final call, living over again the happy days of childhood, knowing no care or anxiety, and finally passed away, peacefully as might a child, in her one hundred and ninth year.

John C. Sloan was born September 8, 1820, in Hopewell township, this county, being nine years younger than the other children. He passed his boyhood on the home farm, attending the country school, of which he retains a vivid recollection, describing it as follows: "Built of round logs, the crevices chinked with clay; the great fireplace constructed of the same material, with an old-fashioned stove, so large that it would hold great logs; the seats of hewed slabs without backs, upon which the luckless urchins sat and dangled their short legs, which in many cases failed by several inches to reach the floor." The first teacher, of whom Mr. Sloan has any recollection, was Joseph G. Chambers, son of Col. Chambers. Joseph G. Chambers was a remarkable man in many ways, possessing unusual intelligence; by self-exertion he won a place for himself beyond the reach of many even at that day. Possessing a wonderfully active brain, he prepared a system of English spelling; he discarded superfluous letters, having published a book to illustrate the plan. But his system was not adopted, the educational world then having had but little idea of phonic orthography, which he was one of the first to advocate in America. He was the originator of repeating guns, and attempted to have his invention patented, but there was much delay and trouble on the part of the Government. Agents of the English Government attempted to get control of the invention, offering a large sum of money. This fact coming to the knowledge of American officials, Mr. Chambers was put under surveillance for treason, being saved from harsh dealing only by the entreaties of influential friends. In the end he met with the fate of many inventors who have trusted the American Government for protection of genius: his invention went begging for recognition. He was a pioneer leader in the now modern fields of literature and education, and, though not a lawyer, was well versed in legal matters, possessing all the legal qualifications of a jurist. In character, Mr. Chambers was, when necessary, stern and unflinching in matters of principle, withal being kind and affectionate in disposition, qualities which are seldom blended in one individual. A man of excellent judgment, and calm, well balanced mind, he was frequently called upon to settle feuds and differences in his community, his decision being accepted as an ultimatum.

John C. Sloan appreciated the advantages he enjoyed under the tutelage of so intellectual and cultured a professor, proving himself an apt pupil, and learning invaluable lessons which have greatly influenced his later life. Mr. Sloan's parents planned to give him a classical education as a preparation for professional life, and to that end he was sent, at the age of thirteen years, to an academy at Florence, this county. He remained there eighteen months, beginning a course in Latin literature, but was then obliged to return home and take charge of the farm, leaving his education somewhat deficient. He afterward attended Frankfort Academy one winter, and has since supplemented his early training with an extensive course of reading and general information, gleaned from active intercourse with business men. On October 16, 1855, he was united in marriage with Miss Ann Denny, who was born December 21, 1818, in Washington county, Penn., daughter of Robert and Lydia (McManns) Denny, old residents of Washington county, and to their union five children have been born, namely: James S., Martha Jane, Mary M., Robert D. and Lizzie A. Of this family the eldest son is married and living in Hopewell township; the others are yet residing with their parents.

Mr. Sloan has inherited the characteristic spirit of energy and principles of integrity which are distinguishing traits of the majority of the Scotch-Irish race. He has ever taken an active interest in political matters, being among the first to aid any progressive movement. In earlier life he was and Old line Whig, and upon the organization of the Republican party he became an active worker in its ranks. In 1855 he was the first representative elected on that ticket to the General Assembly. He was one of the committee on agriculture, also on banking, and was instrumental in the passage of numerous bills of local interest, transacting a large amount of land office business for his constituents. The principal act of that session of general importance was the sale of the public works, in which Mr. Sloan was actively interested. In 1857 an extra session of the Legislature was called, to consider some method of relieving the great financial crisis of that year, and a bill of relief was passed, after which the Legislature adjourned. To illustrate the financial condition of the country at that time, Mr. Sloan was unable to pay his fare from Washington to Harrisburg with currency issued by any State bank of Pennsylvania, only three of the State banks having withstood the crash, and they had no paper in circulation. After his term in the Legislature had expired, Mr. Sloan determined to retire from public life, declining a re-nomination as representative, but has continued to serve in township and county offices. He has held all of the township offices except that of justice of the peace, which he declined. He was school director for twenty years, and served as director of the County Home for twelve consecutive years. He has kept pace with the progressive movements of each year, learning the best methods and systems of carrying on public work. He has visited most of the asylums and almshouses in the State, taking a very pardonable pride in the fact that Washington county is equal if not superior to any other. In his boyhood Mr. Sloan united with the Presbyterian Church, in whose teachings he was reared to manhood, and with his entire family is now connected with the Old Presbyterian Church at Buffalo. He was for many years a member of the board of trustees, also taking a deep interest in the Sabbath-school, where he has long taught an interesting Bible class.

JAMES PATTERSON SAYER, whose name and worth will long be remembered in Washington county, throughout the length and breadth of which he was known and respected, was a native of the Keystone State, born in the city of Allegheny, August 6, 1845.

He was the eldest son of Henry A. Sayer, who was an Englishman by birth, and was the nineteenth son in a family of twenty-four children—full brothers and sisters. Henry A. crossed the great waters of the Atlantic, to make a new home on American soil, and whether infatuated with the ocean, or not, the greater part of his life was spent on the waters of our most navigable rivers, acting in the capacity of steward. In form he was tall and slender; in religion he was a Protestant, worshipping with the Methodist Episcopal denomination. At the age of thirty he was married in Allegheny to Miss Margaret Boyd Patterson, and to them three children were given, viz: Eliza R., James P. and Charles B. The duty of rearing these children devolved largely upon the mother, the father being absent from home much of the time. The parents resided in the town in which they were married until 1864, when the mother died and was buried in the Allegheny cemetery, where in the year 1888 kind friends conveyed the remains of the father, and laid them side by side with those of his beloved wife, there to repose until the resurrection morn.

James P. Sayer in his childhood was considered rather delicate, and in view of the frequent attacks of disease, the family physician advised that he be sent to the country. Accordingly, when he was four years old his aunt Lizzie Snodgrass took him to their home three miles southwest of Washington, Penn., where he soon outgrew the malady, and developed into the robust boy that he was. While it can be truthfully said of these foster parents that no child received more care and affection than they bestowed upon young Sayer, it can be added that few children were more obedient, loving and kind than was he to them. The following incident relative to the first money he earned may be here related: His uncle owned an interest in a mill, and consequently there was a considerable amount of hauling or teaming, to do which the uncle kept four horses. One morning, when "Jemie" (as they lovingly called him) was about ten years old his uncle offered to advance him 10 cents if he would groom two of the horses, and the lad earned his pay so well that he secured a steady job; for a long time after it was his business to clean two of the horses, while his uncle groomed the other two and placed the harness on all four, the one dime paying for all. At the age of twelve years he was placed on a two-horse wagon, and for two or more years he hauled the coal with which to run the mill.

James P. Sayer received a good common school education, and in his seventeenth year (while a student at Washington College) he enlisted in the war of the Rebellion, entering the service as a corporal in 1862. He went out with the One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Company C, of which the lamented David Acheson, who was killed at Gettysburg, was captain. He was discharged with the rank of sergeant, October 25, 1864, on account of wounds received in action. In May, 1863, at Chancellorsville, he was one of the few who, at the call of Gen. Hancock, volunteered to remove a battery, which had been a special mark of the enemy, and from which almost all the horses had been shot away. It was a brave deed, and was done by courageous men. At Gettysburg Sergt. Sayer was terribly wounded, receiving two shots in the right arm, one in the left shoulder, and one in the leg, which latter finally led, twelve years later, to the amputation of that limb. From the date he received these wounds he was a great sufferer, compelled to go on crutches, and his friends would naturally suggest that he should have the leg amputated. But he was a man who seldom changed his plans after having come to a decision, and his reply to such suggestions invariably was that when it (his limb) went, he would go with it. Poor fellow, life's prospects did not promise for him much pleasure; indeed, regarding death as only a sweet sleep, he manifested little concern as to whether he lived or died.

After his return home from the war Mr. Sayer taught school for a time at Point Lookout, Amity, and at Baker's school-house, both in this county, and for two years he pursued the study of law under the direction of E. M. Sayer, of Waynesburg, completing his course with Alex. Wilson, of the Washington bar, and was admitted to practice December 13, 1869. As a lawyer he was careful, industrious and honest, for which and other reasons he was successful, securing the confidence and respect of the people, his brother practitioners and the court. And he was not only successful in his law practice, but also in his oil ventures, being interested with John W. Donnan and others in some wells at Coffey's Crossing, which paid him handsomely. On August 22, 1879, he was appointed judge advocate of the staff of Gov. Beaver, with the rank of major, serving in that capacity five years. Early in the "seventies" he was elected by the Republicans to the office of county treasurer, and he discharged the duties of that position with entire satisfaction to the county and credit to himself. The success of the Prohibition amendment campaign of 1889, in the county, was largely due to the effective work of Mr. Sayer as county chairman. His stronghold, however, was in the line of memorial and patriotic speeches, and he was always in demand wherever there was a reunion of old soldiers, or when the season for decorating soldiers' graves was celebrated with memorial services.

In October, 1870, Mr. Sayer was married to Mary E., daughter of Isaac Sharp, a well known merchant of Washington, Penn., and one child came to make bright their home, Mary Lavina Boyd Sayer, born September 12, 1876, at present a student at East End College for Women, Pittsburgh, Penn. About a year after the birth of the daughter, the father was informed that in order to preserve his life, amputation of the wounded limb was a necessity; and now with more than self and former friends to live for he yielded to advice and solicitation. His wonderful will power and endurance were shown when that operation was performed; he made all preparations for it himself, bade his friends "good-bye" pleasantly, saying he would not see them for a day or two, and to very few did he tell what was to occur. He placed himself on the operating table, refusing to take any anæsthetic, and directed the operation in a measure himself.

Just eleven weeks before his death he was taken seriously ill while in town, and was at once removed to his home, where he grew worse, his condition indicating an organic change in progress in his brain, the result of wounds received while in the service. Thus he lingered with great suffering, which he bore with true Christian fortitude, until summoned to his long home by the Angel of Death. At five minutes after 8 o'clock on the evening of Friday, July 22, 1892, in his forty-seventh year, he breathed his last, and the spirit of a worthy man was borne away. Death had no terrors for him, and he passed from things temporal to things eternal with his hopes firmly anchored to the Rock of Ages. His wife and daughter, and also a brother—Charles, in one of the Government departments at Washington, D. C.—and a sister—Eliza, the wife of Rev. Edwin R. Jones, a M. E. minister, in Ohio—survive him. Maj. Sayer had resided in Washington until about five years ago, when he purchased the pleasant country home about two miles west of the borough, on the National road.

In the death of James Patterson Sayer the community lost one of its best citizens, for a noble man and valiant soldier had gone from among them. In the Temple of Justice, the Post room of the G. A. R., in church, Sunday school, and business and social circles generally, his absence is noted with regret and his departure keenly felt. He was a man of sterling integrity. His views on all moral questions were pronounced, and his acts public and private—were invariably the consistent exercise of the principles of an upright Christian gentleman. If one element in his nature predominated over another, it was the religious sentiment. The following letter written by him on his twenty third birthday, bears testimony to the deep religious feeling he was possessed of:

Sunset Farm,

On Buffalo's Creek, near Farmington,

MARION COUNTY, W. VA.,

August 6th, 1868.

Again time in its remorseless flight has another time brought the anniversary of my birth. I am twenty three (23) years of age and now, upon a close review of my past life, the question arises, Is the world any better for my being in it? Oh, how very unpleasant it must be to realize the awful fact that you have done nothing to alleviate the toils and sufferings or to advance the interests of your fellowmen. I rejoice to feel that I am, in my weak way, attempting to serve God, and although very weak I pray to my Heavenly Father that my faith fail not, but that I may serve Him faithfully during life, and when my race on earth is over that I may be so happy as to reach Heaven and there in company with God and angels spend the countless ages of eternity.

I have spent most of this year at Uncle R. C. Snodgrass' in W. Va. I went to Amity, Pa., Aug. 19th, 1867. Taught school seven weeks. Left there Oct. 23rd, arrived at Uncle's Nov. 6th, and was obliged to remain all winter as my limb was so very sore that I was unable to work. Remained until April 6th, 1868, when I returned home to Washington Co., Pa., and remained three weeks, and April 19th solemnly dedicated myself to God in the M. P. Church, J. D. Herr, pastor, and now desire to serve the Lord. Came back to West Va. and now expect to leave for home Aug. 31st. Have been reading law this year, and wish to finish Blackstone this fall.

In conclusion I wish to record my thanks to a kind Lord for having thus brought me safely through another year. I now consign myself for future life.

JAMES P. SAYER.

He was unfailing in his devotion to the church, and prompt in his attendance on all its services. As superintendent of the Sunday school of the Methodist Protestant Church, of which he had been for years a consistent member, he was an indefatigable worker, and when in charge of a Bible class, a better or more zealous teacher could not be found. At the close of the Sunday school on the Sabbath following the death of its superintendent, after some feeling remarks made by its (then) superintendent, M. Sharp, the following resolutions were presented and adopted:

Whereas, Our highly esteemed brother and fellow laborer in the Sabbath school, James P. Sayer, has been called from the sorrows and afflictions of this life to his Heavenly home; therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Sayer we have lost an intelligent and devoted worker in our Master's vineyard and one esteemed and loved by all who knew him.

Resolved, That we endeavor to follow his wise counsel and so to live that we may meet him where sorrow and separation never come.

The members of the bar met and adopted minutes on the death of their respected and deeply lamented colleague, which were ordered spread on the records of the court. The following pertinent remarks thereon are from the pen of H. M. Dougan:

The memorial, just presented, embodies all of Major Sayer's history and character which was thought by the committee necessary to go upon the records of the court; much more might with propriety have been said of him, but to have said it would have made the report cumbersome and unsuited to the permanent tribute of affection and respect which the court directs to be placed among its records. It is proper that what was left unsaid be spoken of at this time.

Most of those who are here will recall Major Sayer's prominent characteristic in the conduct of legal business. While he was always courteous, and never took an advantage of his opponent which he was not fairly and properly entitled to, he was always combative; with him the trial of a case before the court was a battle, and he "fought for his own hand." This was the natural conduct of the man, for he was born a warrior. It was as natural for him to oppose, and fight while there was a chance to fight, that which he thought was wrong or which threatened to unduly interfere with the interests of his client, as it was natural for him to breathe. He did not, however, fight for the mere love of fighting, his sympathies must first be enlisted for the cause he represented. Like all other lawyers, he was often on the wrong side of a case; but whether he was on the right or wrong side, his conduct was the same. His side was presented to the court or to the jury with all the force that he could give to it.

As I stood by his coffin, the thought that was chiefly in my mind was that we were about to bury one who had been a fine specimen of the patriotic young American manhood of thirty years ago. In the years from 1861 to 1865 hundreds of the spirited youth of this county cheerfully left their homes to encounter the hardships and dangers of service in the Union army; of all of them, none rendered better service in his sphere than did Sergeant Sayer. He remained in the army but a little more than a year, and in that brief time he showed that he was as patriotic and brave as any man in it. I have heard his conduct at Chancellorsville spoken of in words of high commendation by his comrades. When Gen. Hancock asked for volunteers to go upon an important and very dangerous errand, Sayer was among the very first to step forward. In time of battle, the ordinary duty required of a soldier in the ranks is arduous and dangerous, but the chivalric courage of our deceased friend was displayed at Chancellorsville, when he with a few equally worthy and brave comrades saved Lapine's Maine battery from capture after all the officers and men of it had been disabled, and the horses all killed by the fierceness of the enemy's fire. At the great battle of Gettysburg he was wounded five times; one of his wounds caused the very great disability of which the members of this bar had almost daily vision; and I do not doubt that the injuries received at this battle were the cause of the distressing malady which brought his life to an early close. He was, notwithstanding his combative disposition, a man of great modesty; but he was very proud of his army record. Of a record such as he had, it was right that he should be proud. Under circumstances which tested one's courage, constancy and devotion, he had shown himself to be a soldier worthy of the cause for which he fought. His name will not live in history as one of the great heroes of the war; but so long as life lasts to those who knew of him in that great army, the history of which confers an immortality of honor on all who belonged to it and faithfully did their duty in it, he will be remembered as one of the humble and modest heroes of those splendid but dangerous days which witnessed the wicked but futile attempt to destroy free government on this continent.

He was one of the most courageous and manly men I ever was acquainted with. When he became certain that he was stricken with a mortal disease, he retired from public view, and calmly awaited death in the quiet of his own house. For him death had fewer terrors than it has for most; he had too often faced it in his boyhood to be afraid in his maturer age, and, like the Great Commander for whom he had so much admiration and respect, he died as he had lived, fearlessly.

The rich joyousness of summer and the solemn gloom of winter are now alike to him; the recollection of the mighty events in which the part he bore was highly honorable, will never again thrill his breast; the call to duty here, which he had ever obeyed with all the alacrity of his soldierly nature will not again receive from him the wonted response; his army comrades and the members of this bar will never again hear the genial and cordial greeting of this true-hearted and loyal gentleman; but when those who knew him recall his patriotic, unobtrusive, helpful and altogether worthy life, his memory will be thought of as something to be dearly loved and tenderly cherished.

His memory. He had a remarkable memory. He could give the day and date of almost every event which came under his observation from the time he was four years of age till his last sickness. He could tell the kind of weather that occurred on each day through all these years. A prominent merchant of Washington who noted in his diary the changes of weather for each day in the year, at one time called Mr. Sayer into his office and questioned him on each day of the year for some four years, and his descriptions corresponded in every particular with the diary. Mr. Sayer took great pleasure in spending an evening with his old schoolmates and reminding them of all their tricks and the various events that once occurred in the schoolroom. The failure of his mind and memory were among the most notable features of his speedy decline. Punctuality.—Mr. Sayer was always on time. He would allow nothing to keep him from meeting his engagements. In inspecting the National Guard of Pennsylvania he was never known to miss a train or disappoint a company. This was characteristic of him from his childhood. An engagement might extend over months, yet at the time of meeting it he would not vary a minute. Benevolence.—Mr. Sayer was a very benevolent man. He always remembered the poor; and was a staunch friend and helper of the church and all its benevolent enterprises. He was a willing supporter of every good cause. Will power.—Mr. Sayer's success in life was largely due to his will power. If he decided upon a certain course, bodily sufferings, and seemingly insurmountable difficulties never seemed for one moment to check him. When in the hospital suffering from his wounds, the attendant physician told him that he would not live till morning; he replied that he intended to return home in the morning and so he did. The doctor said his will power alone bore him through. This was characteristic of him till his death. In his last sickness his pains at times were almost excruciating, yet he would bear them with scarcely a change of countenance.

The funeral services of Maj. James Patterson Sayer were held at his late residence in North Franklin township, on Monday following his decease, and were participated in by several clergymen, the funeral address proper being made by Rev. Mr. Conway. The members of the G. A. R. and of the bar attended in a body to the cemetery. The hearse was followed by a large cortege of friends. At the grave imposing ceremonies were performed, and the impressive service conducted by G. A. R. comrades. The choir sang one of his favorite hymns; "Abide with me," and as the body was lowered into the unfeeling clay, the bugler sounded the call for "Lights out," the chaplain delivered a short touching address, and benediction was pronounced, and the assembled multitude mournfully turned from the last resting place of a brave soldier, a kind father, a loving husband and a useful citizen.

ARON STRAUS, a successful merchant and farmer of Donegal township, now retired from active life, is a native of Bavaria, Germany, where he was born July 12, 1809, a son of Myer Straus. He received a public school education in his native country, and then learned the butcher's trade, which he followed in Bavaria but a short time, as he soon thereafter sailed from Bremen for the shores of America. After a voyage of fifty eight days the vessel landed at New York, and Mr. Straus at once proceeded to eastern Pennsylvania, where he worked in various capacities for some time. In 1844 he came to Donegal township, Washington county, and locating in West Alexander, followed the butchering business for eleven years. At the expiration of that time he embarked in general merchandise, opening a store, where he soon obtained an extensive custom, building up one of the largest country trades in the county, and so continued until failing health compelled him to retire, in 1866.

In 1844 he was married to Hannah E. Lyle, who was born August 16, 1825, a daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Arison) Lyle. Of the children born to this union, Rosa M. is the wife of J. D. Schaeffer, a lawyer of Allegheny county; George A. resides in Donegal township; Louisa A. is the wife of Dr. T. J. McKee, of Allegheny, Penn.; Joseph A. resides on his father's farm in Donegal township; Lizzie M. is the wife of G. W. Lewis, of Ohio county, W. Va., and Daisy V. is the wife of D. F. Lewis, of Ohio county, W. Va. After retiring from mercantile life, Mr. Straus purchased a farm lying half a mile west of West Alexander, and erected a commodious and comfortable dwelling, to which he moved. He is one of the many prosperous and enterprising citizens which Germany has bequeathed to the United States. He is a member of the Democratic party, and is ever willing to assist in any public enterprise, but makes no pretensions to active political work.

FRANK J. L. WILEY. William Wiley, father of the subject of this sketch, was born near Winchester, Va., in 1794, and in 1806 came with his mother, Mary Wiley, to Washington county, where he followed his trade, that of bricklayer, and died in 1869.

He was one of the early Abolitionists of the county. His wife, Martha Harbison, to whom he was married in 1817, was born near Freeport, Armstrong Co., Penn., in 1800. She was a daughter of John and Massy Harbison, who were among the first settlers of Butler (then Allegheny) county, Penn., and who were married at Brownsville, Washington Co., same State, in 1787, the result of their union being eleven children, two of whom were killed before their mother's eyes by Indians, as related elsewhere in this volume, where is also given an account of the capture by the savages of Massy Harbison and her children, and her marvelous escape from her captors. Edward White, father of Massy, was a soldier in the Revolution, while John Harbison, her husband, was an Indian scout or spy. Massy was a good rifle shot, and during attacks by the Redskins on the blockhouse, which was within sight of her home, she would seize her rifle and do her part in driving off the invaders.

Edward White moved from New Jersey to Brownsville after the Revolution. To Mr. and Mrs. William Wiley were born eleven children, as follows: John (deceased); Martha (deceased at the age of sixteen years); Elizabeth (deceased in infancy); Thomas, in Washington; Henry (deceased); Maria (deceased), married to William Warwick; Frank J. L., the subject proper of this sketch; William C., in Washington; Ellen, wife of William R. Donaldson, in Wheeling, W. Va.; Jane, deceased wife of Capt. Fred. Rainbow; and Annie (Mrs. Adam Harbison), in Canonsburg, Penn. The mother died at Wheeling, W. Va., in 1882, at the age of eighty-two years.

Frank J. L. Wiley was born in Washington, Penn., of which fair city he has been a lifelong resident. He received his education at the public schools of the borough, and learned the trade of plasterer, which he still follows. Politically he has been an active Republican, and has held various offices of trust, such as borough councilman, judge of elections, etc. Socially he is a Freemason, and in religion a member of the M. E. Church.

DR. F. M. FINLEY. The Finley family are numbered with the earliest pioneers of Washington county, and are of Scotch origin. John Finley was born in the "land of the mountain and the flood," whence in early days he emigrated to America, first settling in Maryland, whence he moved to Pennsylvania, and took out a patent for 1,000 acres of land in Allegheny county. He was married in Maryland to Margaret Rowlands, who bore him the following children: William, John, Robert (who was a general in the militia), Jane (Mrs. Curry), Margaret (Mrs. Baldwin), Isabelle (Mrs. Cochran), Mary (Mrs. St. Clair), Susan (Mrs. Wilson), Levi, James and Sarah (Mrs. Neal), all of whom have passed away.

H. M. Sibley

The father was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian (Dr. Marshall's) Church. Both parents died on the farm in Allegheny county.

Levi Finley, son of John and Margaret Finley, was born in 1798, on the home place in Allegheny county, Penn., and his youth was passed amid the scenes of pioneer life. He received his primary education in the subscription schools, and afterward attended Jefferson College for two years, when he returned to the old place, remaining there until 1830. When yet a young man he was married to Rachel Neal, a native of Allegheny county, and the following children were born to their union: Margaret, Melissa J. (wife of Baldwin Wallace), Susan M. (wife of Rev. W. W. Lovery), John A., F. M., and Rachel Narcissa (deceased wife of John S. Collins). Mr. and Mrs. Finley resided two years in Greene county, Penn., on a farm at Rice's Landing. They then returned to Union township, Washington county, and bought the Huston and Fawcett farms, where they remained eight years, selling a large quantity of coal. They finally bought the farm of 500 acres in Union township, adjoining Finleyville, and lived in that village, which was then called "Row Galley," but nicknamed "Rogues' Alley." The name was then changed to Finleyville, where for thirteen years Mr. Finley managed a hotel in the old stone house, which is yet standing. In politics he was a Whig and Republican, and in religious faith was a member of the Mingo Presbyterian Church. He died June 21, 1861, his widow in 1887.

Dr. F. M. Finley was born March 27, 1834, in Union township, Washington Co., Penn., and was educated at the common schools and in private academies, entering Washington College in 1850. He graduated in 1854, and then entered Jefferson Medical College, but was compelled to return home on account of sickness, and there remained after the death of his father. He was married, September 23, 1869, to Emmeline, daughter of John Thompson, and they have one son, Francis H. Dr. Finley is a Republican, and has been a member of the school board for years. He is connected with the Presbyterian Church of Finleyville, to which he gives a hearty support.

ISRAEL L. WOOD. Washington county of today owes her position among the foremost counties of Pennsylvania to the presence within her borders of such energetic men as the one whose name opens this memoir.

Israel Lane Wood is a son of Thomas Wood, and grandson of William Wood, a native of Maryland, having been born near Deer Creek, in that State, where he was married to Margaret Mitchell, and moving thence to Greene county, same State, settled near Waynesburg. At that time, and many years afterward, the Indians were so troublesome that the white settlers were obliged to cross east of the mountains time and again, in order to escape the onslaughts of the Indians, returning when peace would be re-established. These journeys were made on horseback, as a wagon could not have followed the narrow trails which were the only passages across the mountains. During one of his temporary residences in Greene county, Mr. Wood heard that Indians were near, and he again fled across the mountains, but his neighbors disregarded the warning, and pursued their work of clearing the forest. Three or four of them, feeling thirsty, started to a spring near by, and while drinking heard the report of a rifle. Each knowing that his neighbor had no gun, naturally inferred that the Indians had come, and fled for his life; but by the time one had run two or three hundred yards, he was discovered by the Indians, and then came a fearful race. The Redmen were steadily gaining on the poor fugitive, and his only hope was an almost impossible one - if he could only cross Ten Mile creek he would be safe. But the bank was a rocky precipice, thirty feet high, and a broken limb would probably be the result of the leap, sure to be followed by capture, then death at the stake, or by the more merciful tomahawk. But time was precious, and with a swift glance at the bottom of the high bank, he sprang from the rock, and fortunately landed unhurt, saved from his pursuers at last. When the Indians no longer made their terrible raids through Washington and Greene counties, Mr. Wood took up his permanent home in the latter, where he reared the following children: Michiga, Isaac, Thomas, Edward, William, Mary, Nancy and Elizabeth, all of whom grew to maturity, but are now deceased. Mr. Wood died in 1808, his widow surviving him until 1845.

Thomas Wood, son of William Wood, was born in 1782, in the State of Maryland, and coming to Greene county, Penn., took an active part in the dangers and privations incident to pioneer life. In 1807 he was united in marriage with Anna Randolph, who was born in 1785, a daughter of James Randolph, of Greene county, Penn., who had emigrated from New Jersey, and their children were James (a retired citizen of Waynesburg, Penn.), William (a retired farmer of Illinois), Nancy (living with her brother James in Waynesburg), Lucinda (residing in Florida), Osborne (who died of cholera in 1848), Margaret (a resident of Waynesburg), Clarkson, died in Missouri, and Elizabeth, living in Monongahela City, this county. Mr. Wood was a successful and prominent farmer of Greene county, where he was at one time sheriff. In 1842 he moved to Illinois, where he remained for some time, finally proceeding to Missouri, where he died in 1846, followed in 1848 by his widow.

Israel Lane Wood, the subject proper of this sketch, was born April 18, 1814, in Greene county, Penn., and received but a limited education, as he had early in life to assist his father on the farm. When eighteen years of age, he learned the trade of a tanner, following same seven years. In 1839 he was married to Minerva Sargent, of Waynesburg, Greene Co., Penn., and they had the following children: Jesse E. (residing on his father's farm in East Finley township), Margaret Ann (living with her parents), Catherine Mary (deceased in infancy), Elizabeth (living with her parents), Thomas C. (deceased at the age of fifteen years) and William (deceased when thirteen years of age). In 1840 Mr. Wood moved to his father-in-law's farm, in East Finley township, near the Greene county line, and in the immediate vicinity of Simpson's Store postoffice, where he has since resided, and now owns one of the finest farms in the township. "Squire" Wood, as he is called, was always a Democrat, until in recent years he joined the Farmers' Alliance. In 1855 he was elected justice of the peace, which position he filled many years. On August 21, 1861, he enlisted in the First West Virginia V. C., serving three years, and taking part in the engagements at Blue Gap and Blooming Gap, the fight at Cedar Mountain, and in the second battle of Bull Run, all of which engagements were in Virginia. Soon after the last named battle he was injured by a stroke of lightning, and lay for months in hospital at Philadelphia. Receiving his discharge, he returned home, September 24, 1861, and has since farmed on the place whereon he had first located. Mrs. Wood is a member of the Disciple Church.

JOHAN A. LETHERMAN, M. D. When we pause to compare the relative value of each profession to general humanity, there is none superior, and few that are equal to that of a true physician. His opportunities for good are unlimited by sect or creed, as in the case of the clergyman, and, when so disposed, those who possess the art of healing the body can also bring messages of peace to the weary mind or storm tossed soul, exhausted in the battle of life. The noblest instances of disinterested heroism have been found in the ranks of this profession, which is filled with those who have braved for the sake of suffering humanity the most horrible forms of death. Unlike the soldier on the battle-field, their heroism is seldom the result of an excited impulse or heated passion, but in the silent watches of the night, with no blare of trumpet, or thrilling war cry to inspire their courage, these patient martyrs give their lives as willing sacrifices to relieve the pain of their fellow creatures. It is both a useful and deeply interesting task to trace the history of such unselfish lives, and following the spring to its fountain head, we find in the ancestry of our leading men the various traits of character which have combined to give us the leaders of to-day.

John Letherman (the grandfather of Dr. John A. Letherman) was a native of Maryland, and coming to Washington county, Penn., was there married to Christina Myers. The young couple settled on a farm in West Bethlehem township, this county, and reared the following children: Demas M., Joseph, Sarah (wife of H. Richardson), Lydia (married to Solomon Tombaugh), Lucy (wife of Byron Clark) and Jane (wife of Mathias Tombaugh). The grandfather was a soldier in the war of 1812, and in political opinion first affiliated with the Whig party, afterward becoming a Republican. He was an organizer of the Brethren (or Dunkard) Church in West Bethlehem township.

Demas M. Letherman, son of John and Christina Letherman, was born March 8, 1817, in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. His elementary education was obtained at the subscription schools of the neighborhood, and after attending the educational institutions of Belle Vernon, Washington Co., Penn., he taught school and did some farming on the home place. In early manhood he was married to Jane B., daughter of Joseph Munce, and she bore him eight children, namely: Florence, deceased wife of Adam Tombaugh; John A.; Joseph W., a physician of New Market, Ohio; Milo F., of Fallowfield township; Horace Biddle, deceased; Lucy B.; Ida, deceased wife of Daniel Gayman, and Demas V. Mr. and Mrs. Letherman always resided on their farm in West Bethlehem township. He was actively identified with the Republican party, and in 1872 was elected to the Legislature from the districts of Washington and Beaver counties, serving two terms. In religious faith he was a zealous member of the Dunkard Church. He died in 1878.

Dr. John A. Letherman was born February 28, 1848, on the home place in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. After attending the home schools he entered Waynesburg College, and one year later came to the normal school at California, remaining there two years. He then went to Long Island College Hospital at Brooklyn, N. Y., graduating in 1873, and finally took a course at Bellevue Medical College, receiving his degree of M. D. in 1874. After his professional training was completed, Dr. Letherman came to California, Penn., in July, 1874, and entered into partnership with Dr. James McDonough (his preceptor, who died not long afterward), in the practice of medicine. Since the death of his colleague, Dr. Letherman has filled his place, and acquired a large practice. On December 25, 1879, he was married to Berta A., daughter of James Ward, of Coal Centre, and she has borne him one son, Ralph W. Politically Dr. Letherman is a staunch Republican, and has served his borough as a member of the council and school board almost continuously.

THE VANCE FAMILY were among the earliest pioneers of Washington county, and as nearly as can be ascertained, are perhaps the oldest settlers of Smith township. The first ancestor of these prominent citizens, of whom we have an accurate history, was one Maj. William Vance. Maj. Vance was born in 1718 in Scotland, and came to Virginia in early life, afterward moving to Washington county, Penn., where he died April 8, 1788. His son Joseph was born about 1750, near Winchester, Va., where he was married, and coming to Washington county, Penn., about 1773, located three miles southwest of Burgettstown, in Smith township, on a large tract of land. This land was then an unbroken wilderness, or, to quote a pioneer phrase: "There was not a stick amiss," but it has since been divided into nine of the finest farms of Washington county. As soon as a rude shelter had been erected for the family, Joseph Vance, in company with a few of his widely parted neighbors, began the erection of what was known as "Vance's Fort." This was intended to protect the settlers from the murderous onslaughts of the treacherous Indians, who were yet numerous in the territory, and bitterly resented the encroachment of the palefaces upon their hunting grounds. The fort was situated but a short distance from the cabin of Joseph Vance, and stood for many years, the only signs of its existence now visible being a piece of brick-colored ground. At the gates of Fort Vance, under a white oak tree, on October 14, 1778, the Rev. James Powers preached the first sermon in English known to have been heard west of the Alleghany mountains in Pennsylvania. On this wild tract Joseph Vance and his wife passed their lives, with the exception of occasional visits to his birthplace, and, as immigration increased, property rose in value. The vast tract of land, once seemingly almost worthless, became very valuable, and the pioneers reaped the deserved reward of early years of toil, privation and danger. The first wife of Joseph Vance died many years ago, leaving him six children, viz.: William, John, Joseph, Elizabeth, Janet and Mary. Of this family one son, Joseph, returned with his father on a visit to Virginia, then went West and his fate was never known. For his second wife Mr. Vance was married to a native of Winchester, Va., who died soon after their marriage, and he made a third choice in the person of Mary Moore, a native of Winchester, Va., who bore him two daughters: Anna Mary (wife of William Brady, Ohio county, W. Va.), and Hannah (married to Edward Morgan, Ohio county, W. Va.). The father died May 6, 1832, and in 1852 his faithful wife was laid beside him.

William Vance, eldest son of Joseph, was born November 30, 1775, on the old "Fort Vance farm" in Smith township, where his boyhood was passed in the usual duties of pioneer life, a large portion of them falling to his share as the eldest son. On December 24, 1799, he was married to Rachel Patterson, who was born June 3, 1781, daughter of William Patterson, of Cross Creek township, this county. To the union of William and Rachel Vance children were born, of whom the following is a brief record: Cynthia, born March 8, 1801, gave her hand in marriage to William Van Ostran (they moved to Wayne county, Ohio, where she died in 1884); Joseph, born September 18, 1802, was a farmer in Smith township, and died in 1864; James, born July 23, 1804, followed agriculture in Jefferson township, this county, and died in 1881; William P., born September 4, 1806, lived on a farm in this county for some time, thence moved to Hardin, Ky., and is now a retired farmer of Caldwell county, Mo.; Alison, born December 14, 1808; Elizabeth was born February 17, 1811, and is now living in Burgettstown, Penn., the widow of David S. Walker; Ann was born November 8, 1812, and was united in marriage with Norris Walker (she died leaving a large family of children); David was born April 14, 1815, and died in infancy; and Rachel was born December 28, 1816 (she was married to Josiah N. Scott, and is now deceased). On January 9, 1817, the mother of these children passed from earth, and on June 12, 1818, Mr. Vance was married to her sister, Hannah Patterson, who was born in 1786. Five children were born to this union, namely: Thomas P. (deceased farmer of Cross Creek township), born July 15, 1819; Mary (unmarried, living in Rome, Ga.), born June 1, 1821; Caroline (deceased wife of R. S. Caldwell, Hopewell township, this county), born December 30, 1824; John S., born June 7, 1827; and Jane (wife of J. S. Young, of Ohio, died in Rome, Ga., where they resided), born September 7, 1830.

During his earlier life the father resided on the home farm in Smith township, in company with his brother John, whose interest he afterward purchased. In 1816 William Vance was elected as representative of Washington county, in the State Legislature. He was an enthusiastic member of the Whig party, being a counselor and adviser among his friends, and having favored the tariff bill from its infancy. After the term of office had expired, Hon. William Vance returned to his farm, having made a signal success in the performance of his duties. He was a liberal contributor and attendant of the Presbyterian Church with which his wife was connected. He died April 18, 1856, and in 1878 his widow followed him. Both are buried in the Cross Creek Cemetery.

Allison Vance, the fifth son of William and Rachel Vance, was born on the "Fort Vance farm" in Smith township, receiving a limited subscription-school education, which he afterward supplemented by study and observation, eventually becoming a well-informed business man. On May 30, 1839, he was united in marriage with Margaret Campbell, who was born February 1, 1814, daughter of Robert Campbell, a pioneer of Smith township. Allison and Margaret Vance were the parents of seven children: John (a farmer of Smith township), born July 2, 1840, died August 11, 1884; William P., born September 1, 1842; Rachel, born February 28, 1845, died October 2, 1860; David, born October 7, 1847, died October 11, 1860; Robert C. (an extensive farmer of Cross Creek township), born June 19, 1850; James L. (now living on the old Fort farm), born October 23, 1853, and Leander, born October 21, 1856. Mr. and Mrs. Vance located on a part of the original Vance tract in Cross Creek township (now owned by his son Robert), and in 1859 settled permanently on the original tract. A worthy representative of an honored and successful family, Allison Vance was no exception to the rule, but on the contrary became even more prosperous than those preceding. Politically he was first a Whig, then a Republican. He and his wife were members of the Cross Creek Church, to which he contributed liberally. His wife died December 10, 1889, and March 8, 1890, the husband and father was also called home. Both were buried in the Cross Creek cemetery. A singular fact is here recorded in connection with the death of Allison Vance. For the past four generations, the male ancestors of the Vance family have attained an advanced age. The first ancestor, Maj. William Vance, died at eighty-two; his son Joseph died in his eighty-second year; William, the son of Joseph, died at the same age, and, lastly, Allison Vance breathed his last, after having passed his eighty-first year.

WILLIAM WALKER PRICE, an enterprising and well known citizen of Canton township, is a native of the same, born March 27, 1853. He is a grandson of Joseph Price, a native of France, who in early youth immigrated to America, settling in Washington, this county, where he passed the greater part of his life.

William Price, son of the pioneer Joseph, was born in Washington, Penn., and received his education in the schools of his native city. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Horn, of Buffalo township, this county, and immediately thereafter the young couple commenced life upon a farm, where industrious and frugal habits brought well-merited success. The following children were born to them: William W., Ansdon and Silas. Mr. Price was a member of the Republican party, and took a deep interest in Christian work. He died February 17, 1863, and was buried in Washington cemetery.

William Walker Price, son of William and Elizabeth (Horn) Price, passed his early years upon the home farm, and received a liberal education at the schools of the vicinity of his home. On June 15, 1875, he was married to Lucinda, daughter of Uriah Clark, of Buffalo township, this county, and the following named children have been born to them: Charles, Lulu, Rose, Bessie and William K. Mr. Price is a member of the U. P. Church at Buffalo, Hopewell township, and in his political preferences he votes the Independent ticket. He has always resided on the home place.

HUSTON PAUL, an honored member of one of the oldest and most prominent families of South Strabane township, was born November 10, 1805, in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn. His father, William Paul, also a native of the county, was here reared to agricultural pursuits, and educated at the subscription schools of the district. He married Hannah Slaughter, a resident of the same county, and they then settled on a farm in Amwell township, where they lived many years. The children born to them were James, Huston, Nathan, Sarah (Mrs. Abel McFarland), Rosa (Mrs. Christopher Venum), Andrew, Daniel M., Lavinia (Mrs. Michael Schulser), John, William, Philo and Adaline Mrs. Thomas Reese). The father of this family died in November, 1840, in his sixty-third year, at the residence of his son Nathan P., in Delaware, Ohio; he was a progressive, self-made man, a Whig in politics, and a liberal supporter of all public enterprises. The mother passed away in February, 1865, in her eighty-second year, and is interred in Lone Pine cemetery; she died at the home of her son Philo, who lost his life at the battle of the Wilderness in front of Richmond.

Huston Paul, whose name opens this sketch, was carefully brought up on the home place, and early trained to practical farm life, attending during the winter months the subscription schools of the district. On October 4, 1827, he was married to Nancy, youngest child of Martin and Catherine (Battenfield) Heckathorn, who moved from Lancaster county, Penn., to a farm near Waynesburgh, Greene Co., same State. Martin Heckathorn died near Nineveh, Greene county, his wife at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Phebe Iams, in Dayton Ohio. They were the parents of eight children, viz.: Elizabeth, Eva, Daniel, George, Catherine, Jacob, Phebe and Nancy. For five years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Huston Paul resided at the mill property, one mile below Amity, in Amwell township, and in the autumn of 1833 moved to the farm in South Strabane township now occupied by Mr. Paul and members of his family. The children born to him are Hannah (Mrs. John C. Hastings), Catherine Jane, William and Nancy E., all yet living. Their mother departed this life in February, 1888, in her eighty fourth year, having lived the life of a modest, kind and devoted wife and mother, and her body is laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Washington.

Mr. Paul for some five years carried on a grist mill with success, and has prospered in all his undertakings; he at present owns 240 acres of well-improved land. In politics he was at first an Old-time Whig, and since the organization of the party has been a staunch Republican. Now far advanced on life's journey, he is calmly awaiting the summons that shall call him from the cares of the world to a home where there shall be no more pain or sorrow.

WILLIAM PAUL. Of the names that remain permanently associated with the more recent development of the grand agricultural interest of Washington county, there is none deserving of a more prominent place in this volume than that of this gentleman.

William Paul was born in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., June 19, 1834, a son of Huston and Nancy (Heckathorn) Paul. His early life was passed under the parental roof, during which time he was attending the common schools of the district, where he received a liberal English education, which was supplemented by a course of study at Washington College. He continued to reside on the old homestead in South Strabane township, assisting in the general work of the farm, until 1870, when he moved into Franklin township and bought the Hon. R. R. Reed mansion, together with 110 acres of the very core of this vast estate, to which he has since added thirty acres. Upon this land there are several valuable producing oil wells. Some time ago, no other spot in the neighborhood of Washington being found desirable, the borough officials, in order to obtain pure water supply for the city, secured some eleven acres of Mr. Paul's farm for that purpose.

From his elegant and commodious residence a delightful view of the surrounding country is to be had, the calm and peaceful fertile farms, "the orchard, the meadow, the deep tangled wildwood," having, ever and anon, glimpses of another kind of existence, as the trains of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad rush past, awakening momentary visions of great far away cities teeming with life and seething with commercial enterprise and activity. In addition to his general farming interests, Mr. Paul does an extensive dairying business, the market for his product in this line being mainly in the borough of Washington; and in this, as in all his other undertakings, he has met with eminent success. In fact, it may without prejudice be said of him that in the dairy business he is the leader in the county.

On September 10, 1861, Mr. Paul married Martha, the refined and accomplished daughter of Samuel and Mary (Pife) Vance, of South Strabane township. Samuel Vance was a native of this county, born in Somerset township in 1791, of stalwart, truth loving Scotch Irish lineage. He died in 1871, a man of noble impulses, strict integrity and high character, qualifications that shed their influence for the public good wherever and whenever called into requisition by the people who honored him with many positions of trust. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Paul, Philo V., Isaac E., Mary R., N. Alice and Mattie, living, and Samuel Huston and Cary Bell, deceased.

In the early taking away by death of these two much beloved and promising lads, Samuel and Cary, the family and friends received a great shock, and a bitter disappointment to their high hopes. Samuel Huston Paul was born June 13, 1865, and died at 1 o'clock on the morning of September 26, 1886, after an illness from typhoid fever of three weeks. By those who once knew him, his fine, manly face will be no more seen. In the home, where he was so tenderly loved for his obedience and kindness, there is a melancholy vacancy. Among his many friends, with whom, because of his unflinching integrity, he was ever popular, he is spoken of with love and honor, as of one who could never be tempted away from what he thought was right. While yet the fond hearts of the family were in deep sorrow over the death of Samuel, there came another stroke, all the more severe because of being so sudden. On December 25, 1886, Cary, in his boyish playfulness, went out of the house, saying that he would "give a Christmas salute." Soon afterward a loud report was heard, and poor Cary, a few moments before the life and soul of the family circle, cheerful and full of play, was found lying on the ground with his life blood fast flowing from a wound in the neck. He had bored a hole in a log and charged it with powder. The explosion must have been premature—evidently while he was bending over the log—a splinter entered his neck and severed an artery. Tenderly they carried him into the house and laid him on a lounge, but nothing could be done; he died in a few minutes afterward. Cary was within a few weeks of his eighteenth birthday, having been born January 17, 1869. Endowed with an unusual amount of good common sense, a cheerful, generous nature, kind and companionable in disposition, he has left to the grief-stricken family and his friends naught but pleasant memories of him. "Why these twin afflictions?" the soul asks. "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."

There is no flock, however watched and tended,
But one dead lamb is there;
There is no fireside, howsoever defended,
But has one vacant chair.

In his political preferences Mr. Paul is a staunch Republican, always taking an active interest in the public affairs of his township and county, and is a warm advocate of all measures tending to the advancement of educational interests. In religious matters he was a member of the First Presbyterian Church, in which he was an elder for twenty years, and on the organization of the Third Presbyterian Church, in 1891, he became a member thereof and an elder in same.

J M. K. DONALDSON. As the lives of our leaders in literature, politics and religion have imparted inspiration to humanity and civilization, so will the record of conscientious, energetic and successful men from the common ranks of life be of infinite value both to their contemporaries and descendants. Especially is this an evident fact, when we read or write the biographies of our early pioneers, whose history is filled with the romance of "truth stranger than fiction."

Jacob Donaldson was born in 1763, in Ireland, and came to America in early manhood, locating in Washington county, Penn. He was married to a Miss McKinney, and first settled on a farm in Hopewell township, thence moving to the farm in Mt. Pleasant township, which is yet owned by his descendants. He was a member of the Seceder Church at Hickory, this county, afterward uniting with the U. P. Church. In April, 1850, he moved to the village of Hickory, where he died in August of the same year, having been preceded by his wife, who had borne him children as follows: William (settled in Somerset township, this county), James (deceased, settled in Buffalo township), Richard (a tailor of Hickory, afterward bought a farm in Cecil township, and was killed while on his way home from Noblestown), Andrew (resided in Mt. Pleasant township), Isaac (lived in Mt. Pleasant township), Margaret (deceased on the farm of her brother, J. M.), and Mary (deceased wife of James Ackleson, Hanover township).

Andrew Donaldson was born in 1802, in Hopewell township, this county, and passed his early boyhood on the place of his birth, afterward moving to Mt. Pleasant township. In early life he was united in marriage with Ellen Wilson, a native of Cross Creek township, where the young people lived a few years, finally settling on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township. Their children were as follows: Esther (wife of A. V. McGuyin), Eleanor L. (married to Lemau McCarrell), J. M. K. (whose name opens this sketch), Sarah Jane (wife of W. W. McCarrell), and W. W. (living on the home farm), all of whom are living in Mt. Pleasant township. The father and mother were first members of the Union Church at West Middletown, then joined the Presbyterian Church at Buffalo, finally uniting with the Society in Mt. Prospect. He died in 1880, on the old homestead where his widow is yet living.

J. M. K. Donaldson was born March 5, 1843, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, receiving his elementary education in the district schools, and then attending the Academy at Buffalo village for three terms. In October, 1869, he married Margaret McDowell. Her grandfather, James McDowell, was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and coming to Mt. Pleasant township, this county, when a young man, was married to Mary McKnight. They settled on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, and he died in 1815, followed by his widow in 1853. They attended the U. P. Church at Cross Roads, then known as Union Church, Chartiers township.

John McDowell was born in 1811, on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, where his boyhood was passed. In 1837 he married Miss Margaret Miller, who was born in 1810, in Chartier township. They were members of Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church. He died in August, 1886, having been preceded in 1866 by his wife, who had borne him eight children, one of whom is deceased. Those yet living are James W. (an attorney in Washington, Penn.), Jacob F. (living in Mt. Pleasant township), Margaret (Mrs. Donaldson), Rebecca (wife of James Agnew), John (living in Canonsburg, this county), Sadie P. and Lizzie.

J. M. K. and Margaret (McDowell) Donaldson located on a place in Mt. Pleasant township, and in February, 1875, moved to the farm they now occupy, containing 140 acres of good land. He has made many improvements, having erected a pleasant dwelling and a good barn, 60x40 feet. He is an active member of the Democratic party, which he has served as a member of the school board, also as judge of elections. Mr. and Mrs. Donaldson are members of the Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church, of which he is treasurer. They have two children: J. Alfred and Margaret M.

ROBERT SCOTT. The Scott family were early pioneers of Washington county, and are of Scotch descent. Joseph Scott, the oldest representative, was born about 1761, in Scotland, coming to America during the latter part of the eighteenth century. He first located in York county, Penn., where he was married to Martha Paden, who was born in 1763. Prior to 1788, when Washington county was very sparsely settled, he came hither, and made a home in the eastern part of Hanover township, near Raccoon creek, securing control of an immense tract of wild land. A cabin was erected which furnished them with protection, and although deprived of many of the luxuries of life, they were soon able to build a comfortable home.

The story of the struggles, hardships and privations of early pioneers has often been told, and the lives of this earnest and self-reliant couple were similar to those of their comrades, who undertook the arduous task of making the wilderness "to blossom as the rose." Industry finally was rewarded; they became wealthy and highly respected citizens, passing the remainder of their lives surrounded by children and friends. They died at a ripe old age, in full connection with the "Old-School Presbyterian" Church, in which they had been reared from infancy. Politically, the grandfather was a Democrat. To this worthy couple were born two sons and three daughters, all of whom lived to an adult age.

Robert, son of Joseph and Martha (Paden) Scott, was born in Robinson township, Washington Co., Penn., and in early life followed the carpenter's trade, being naturally inclined to mechanical work. He was twice married, his first choice being Fanny, daughter of Edward Jackson. She bore him children as follows: Alexander, a wagon maker by trade, who first lived in Florence, thence moving to Armstrong county, Penn.; Joseph, a carpenter of Burgettstown, Penn.; Josiah, a blacksmith of Burgettstown; Andrew F., a blacksmith, moved to Galesburg, Ill., thence to Nashville, Tenn.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Finley Wilson, of Armstrong county, Penn.; and Margaret, wife of James Work. Of this family Andrew F. is the only one living. For his second wife Robert Scott was married to Mary Kerr, of Allegheny county, Penn., who bore him the following children: Samuel, a pattern maker of Wheeling, W. Va.; Fannie, widow of George Jackson, living in Florence, Penn.; Catherine, unmarried, is living with her brother Robert; and Robert, whose sketch follows. After his first marriage Mr. Scott located near Candor, in Robinson township, where he resided for some time, then settled near Paris, in Hanover township, and in 1856 came to Florence. The latter part of his life was principally devoted to work in the carpentry line, as his skill was well known. In repairing violins and similar instruments, he was remarkably successful, also making a specialty of ornaments, which required exquisite care. He voted with the Democratic party, and in religion was a valued member of the Presbyterian Church. His death occurred November 1, 1863, and he was followed by his widow August 30, 1880. They were laid to rest in Candor cemetery.

Robert Scott, son of Robert and Mary (Kerr) Scott, was born November 7, 1839, in Paris, Hanover township. His education was received at the country schools, and when he was sixteen years of age his parents moved to Florence. He then followed farm work at various places, and in 1860 opened a general store, having since continued in that business. On February 16, 1871, he was married to Margaret McCullough, a daughter of John McCullough, of Florence, who was one of the representative men of his time, and was justice of the peace for thirty years. The children of Robert and Margaret Scott are John M. (an enterprising young man, who is associated with his father in business), Mary D., Emma E. and Charley B., all of whom are living at home. In 1884 Mr. Scott mourned the loss of his wife, who was buried in the Presbyterian cemetery. In politics he has been a lifelong Democrat, and though taking interest in the success of his party, has declined proffered nominations to township offices. He is a member and trustee of the Presbyterian Church. By fair dealing, close attention to business and the practice of strict economy, his business has prospered until it has long been recognized as one of the leading establishments of Florence.

WILLIAM N. BEBOUT, a worthy representative of the prosperous native-born agriculturists of Washington county, first saw the light of day in Amwell township, February 19, 1820. The family are of Holland-Dutch descent.

Ebenezer Bebout, grandfather of William N., was for a short time a resident of Washington county, and died in New Jersey. Beden Bebout father of our subject, was born April 5, 1773, in Sussex county, N. J., and came to Washington county, Penn., in 1788, accompanied by his brothers Moses, Peter, Ebenezer and Lewis; Moses and Beden were tailors by trade, the others masons. Beden was married September 25, 1794, to Margaret daughter of William Nemons, and thirteen children were born to them, of whom the following is a brief record: Letitia, born August 25, 1795, married J. Fitzwilliams, and died at the age of ninety-five years; Abigail, born January 9, 1797, married J. Huston; Naomi, born October 16, 1798, married J. McDonald; Elizabeth, born September 28, 1800; Isabella, born December 1, 1802, married J. Jolly; Moses, who was a member of the "Washington Blues," born November 25, 1805, died in 1888, aged eighty-three years; Christian, born January 31, 1808, married W. Gilbert; William, born August 1, 1810, died young; Margaret, born November 18, 1811, married Richard Jolly; Alexander, born November 24, 1813; Jane, born September 4, 1815, married Cephas Bane; Alexander, born April 19, 1818; William N. (our subject) is the youngest, and the only survivor of this large family. In 1795 Beden Bebout bought the home farm which his son, William N., now owns, paying therefor $5 per acre, and here he passed the best of his busy life, dying February 20, 1867, at the age of ninety-five years. After he commenced farming, he continued his trade for several years during the winter months, visiting the several farm-houses in the neighborhood, as was the custom in those days. His wife spun and wove linen from flax raised on the farm; which he would take to Baltimore to sell or trade, and our subject was twenty-one years old before he wore clothes made of any other material. The mother's old spinning-wheel and reel are still in the possession of William N. For a long time Mr. Bebout had to bring salt in bags all the way from Cumberland, Penn. Mrs. Bebout died May 22, 1841, at the age of sixty-four years.

William N. Bebout, whose name opens this biographical memoir, attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood and did his full share in the labors of the home farm for several years. On September 25, 1845, he married Susan Bebout, whose grandfather was a second cousin of his grandfather. She is a daughter of Peter Bebout, who married Isabel Cooper, in Ohio, and in 1823, came to Washington county, settling in North Strabane township, where the father died in April, 1860, at the age of seventy years. He was a native of New Jersey, and came to Pennsylvania at the same time as did Beden Bebout; and was a soldier in the war of 1812. His wife passed from life in March, 1888. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Bebout lived fifteen years on the old farm, then ten years in Franklin township, but sold out and moved to Marion county, W. Va., where they bought a farm and passed eight years of their lives. This property they sold, and, returning to Washington county, made their home in Buffalo township until 1888, in which year they moved into the borough, buying their present comfortable house, which is situated on East Beau street. Their union has been blessed with ten children: Alexander, a resident of Fairmont, W. Va.; Isabel, deceased at the age of four years; Margaret J., wife of Lee Barnes, in Washington, Penn.; Elizabeth, wife of Franklin Arnett, Marion, W. Va.; Frank J., on the farm of 300 acres in Buffalo township; Nettie, wife of George Ritchey, Morgan county, Ohio; Thomas M., on the old farm in Amwell township; Ida, wife of Theodore Bell, Morris township; and Beden, who died of blood poisoning, at the age of twenty-one years, and when he was about to be admitted to the practice of medicine. Mr. Bebout in his religious connections is a member of the Second Presbyterian Church; politically he is a Democrat, and has served his township in various offices of trust. Mr. Bebout and his wife have been blessed with good health all their lives, and have together shared life's joys and sorrows for almost half a century. Before closing this memoir it may not be out of place to state that Mr. Bebout was an eye-witness to the execution of "Kid," the negro slave, who had run for his liberty into Pennsylvania, but was overtaken and captured by his owner, who proceeded to take him back South. Rather than return to a life of slavery, "Kid" slew his master, and for this act he was hanged.

MOSSES B. THOMPSON (deceased) was of Irish birth and descent. His grandfather, Adam Thompson, was born on a farm four miles from Belfast, Ireland, and devoted his life to agricultural pursuits and the manufacture of linen. He was married to a Miss McComb, who bore him five children: Adam, Benjamin, James, Moses and Robert.

Robert Thompson, son of Adam, was born on the home place near Belfast, where he was married to Elizabeth Wilson, and in 1811 they came to America, the voyage occupying six weeks. They landed at Philadelphia, whence they came westward to Pittsburgh, Penn., the journey of two weeks being made by wagon. In Pittsburgh he was engaged in the coal business, but later he moved to Peters township, Washington county, where he erected the first house in Thompsonville. He then for a time resided in Noblestown, Allegheny county, from there proceeding to Finleyville, this county, and finally opened a store in Library, Allegheny county. He died leaving three children: John, married to a Miss Lorimer (had two children, Emeline Finley and William, the latter of whom died in 1889); Rachel, deceased at the age of thirty five years, and Moses B.

Moses B. Thompson was born in 1811, in County Antrim, Ireland, and when an infant was brought by his parents to Pittsburgh, Penn. He assisted his father in various lines of business, and was also engaged in buying and selling grain. In 1850 he came to the farm in Union township, Washington county, and carried on an extensive traffic in sugar, making trips to the Southern States, where he bought a large quantity, and then sold in Pittsburgh, Penn. In 1875 he was married to Eliza Ann, daughter of Samuel M. Wilson, a native of Ireland, who in 1848 came to America, first landing at Baltimore, Md., thence proceeding to Wheeling, W. Va., and afterward locating in Pittsburgh, Penn., in the courthouse of which city he was a clerk. He was married to Elizabeth Mayne, a native of County Armagh, Ireland. Mr. Wilson bought, and moved upon a farm in Allegheny county, Penn., near Lock No. 3, and bought wool in addition to attending to his farming interests. He was the father of two daughters: Jane, and Eliza Ann, who was married to Moses B. Thompson. Moses B. and Eliza Ann Thompson began wedded life on the farm in Union township, Washington county, where the remainder of his life was passed, and his widow is yet living. He owned four farms, and also hotel property in the "Diamond" of Pittsburgh, which is yet undivided. In political opinion he was an ardent Republican, and was one of two in his township to vote the Abolition ticket. He died January 1, 1881.

MRS. ELIZA V. WALKER, a highly esteemed lady of Burgettstown, was born February 17, 1811, a daughter of William Vance, who was a son of Joseph Vance, both in their day prominent citizens of Smith township.

Joseph Vance was born about 1750, near Winchester, Va., where he was married, and coming to Washington county, Penn., about the year 1773, located three miles southwest of Burgettstown, in Smith township, on a large tract of land. This land was then an unbroken wilderness, or, to quote a pioneer phrase: "There was not a stick amiss," but it has since been divided into nine of the finest farms in Washington county. As soon as a rude shelter had been erected for the family, Joseph Vance, in company with a few of his widely parted neighbors, began the erection of what was known as "Vance's Fort." This was intended to protect the settlers from the onslaughts of the Indians, who were yet numerous in the Territory, and bitterly resented the encroachment of the "pale-faces" upon their hunting-grounds. The fort was situated but a short distance from the cabin of Joseph Vance, and stood for many years, the only sign of its existence visible being a piece of brick colored ground and an old stone chimney, recently destroyed. At the gates of Fort Vance, under a white oak tree, on October 14, 1778, Rev. James Powers preached the first sermon in English known to have been heard west of the Alleghany Mountains in this section of the State. On this wild tract Joseph Vance and his wife passed their lives, with the exception of occasional visits to his birth-place. As immigration increased, property rose in value, the vast tract of land, once seemingly almost worthless, became very valuable, and the pioneers reaped the deserved reward of early years of toil, privation and danger. The first wife of Joseph Vance died many years ago, leaving him six children, viz.: William, John, Joseph, Elizabeth, Jane and Nancy. Of this family, one son, Joseph, returned with his father on a visit to Virginia, then went west to Ohio, and his fate was never known. (Governor Vance of Ohio was a cousin). For his second wife, Mr. Vance was wedded to a Miss Cook, a native of Winchester, Va., who died soon after marriage; and he made a third choice in the person of Mary Moore, also a native of Winchester, who bore him two daughters: Ann Mary (wife of William Brady, of Ohio county, W. Va.), and Hannah (married to Edward Morgan, also of Ohio county, W. Va.; she is now living in Kansas at an advanced age). The father died May 6, 1832, and in 1852 his faithful wife was laid beside him.

William Vance, eldest son of Joseph, was born November 30, 1775, on the old "Fort Vance farm" in Smith township, where his boyhood was passed in the usual duties of pioneer life, a large portion of them falling to his share as the eldest son. On December 24, 1799, he was married to Rachel Patterson, who was born June 3, 1781, daughter of William Patterson, of Cross Creek township, this county, and to their union children were born, of whom the following is a brief record: Cynthia, born March 8, 1801, gave her hand in marriage to Peter Van Ostran (they moved to Wayne county, Ohio, where she died in 1884); Joseph, born September 18, 1802, was a farmer in Smith township, and died in 1864; James, born July 23, 1804, followed agriculture in Jefferson township, this county, and died in 1881; William P., born September 4, 1806, lived on a farm in this county for some time, thence moving to Hardin county, Ky., and is now a retired farmer of Caldwell county, Mo.; Allison, born December 14, 1808, lived on the home place and died in 1888; Elizabeth was born February 17, 1811, and is now living in Burgettstown, the widow of David S. Walker; Ann was born November 8, 1812, and was united in marriage with Norris Walker, brother of David S. (she died, leaving a large family of children); David was born April 14, 1815, and died in infancy; and Rachel was born December 28, 1816, (-he was married to Josiah N. Scott, and is now deceased). On January 9, 1817, the mother of these children passed from earth, and on June 12, 1818, Mr. Vance was married to her sister, Hannah Patterson, who was born in 1786. Five children were born to this union, namely: Thomas P. (deceased farmer of Cross Creek township), born July 15, 1819; Mary (unmarried, living in Rome, Ga.), born June 1, 1821; Caroline (deceased wife of R. S. Caldwell, Hopewell township, this county).

born December 30, 1824; John S., born June 7, 1827, now in Smith township; and Jane, born September 7, 1830 (married to J. S. Young, of Ohio; both died in Rome, Ga., where they resided). During his earlier life the father resided on the home farm in Smith township, in company with his brother John, whose interest he afterward purchased. In 1816 William Vance was elected representative of Washington county, in the State Legislature. He was an enthusiastic member of the Whig party, was a counselor and adviser among his friends, and favored the tariff bill from its infancy. After the term of office had expired, Hon. William Vance returned to his farm, having made a signal success in the performance of his duties. He was a liberal contributor toward and regular attendant of the Presbyterian Church, with which his wife was also connected. He died April 18, 1856, and in 1878 his widow followed him across the dark river. Both are buried in the Cross Creek cemetery. Of the children born to William and Rachel (Patterson) Vance, Elizabeth grew to womanhood, and on March 8, 1838, gave her hand in marriage to David S., son of Alexander Walker.

Alexander Walker was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and when yet a young man came west with his brother John, locating on a tract of land in Jefferson township, this county. Alexander Walker was married to Betsey Norris, of Washington county, Penn., who bore him children as follows: Eliza, Norris, James, Susan, Alexander, David, Isabella, Mary Ann, Drusilla and Samuel. The parents erected a log house on the farm, and conducted a distillery for many years. He was a Whig in politics, and in religious connection was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Cross Creek.

David S. Walker was born July 6, 1816, in Jefferson township, Washington Co., Penn., receiving a limited education in the log school house of those days. After his marriage to Elizabeth Vance, he and his wife resided four years in Cross Creek township, this county, thence moved to Jefferson township, and in 1875 came to Burgettstown, where they have since resided. The following children have been born to this union: William H. H. (who enlisted in the One Hundredth Regiment P. V. I., and died in the South after four months' service; his father went to him and brought his remains home); Mary E., who was married twice, first to Wesley Smith who died leaving two children, and she was afterward wedded to John Campbell (she is now deceased); Martha A., deceased wife of James Anderson, also deceased; Alexander H., a resident of Pittsburgh; Rachel A., wife of D. H. Hainer, of Ingram, Allegheny Co., Penn.; Jane A., and Eva (the last named being deceased). Mr. and Mrs. Walker commenced life in a very humble way, and for four years after marriage lived in an old log house. Mr. Walker was a Whig until the formation of the Republican party when he enlisted under its banner; on the latter ticket he was, after coming to Burgettstown, a candidate for the State Legislature. In religious faith he was a Presbyterian, being an attendant of the church of that denomination. In business affairs he was a very successful man. On May 14, 1877, the death of Mr. Walker was recorded.

JAMES D. CAMPSEY. Of the sturdy Scotch-Irish it has been truthfully said that they are the living exponents of righteous government; the untrifled defenders of civil liberty; the strong embodiment of virtuous manhood, and the uncompromising advocates of the Christian faith. These attributes, coupled with a high sense of duty, hatred of tyranny, and the love of God, are true characteristics of the race from which the subject of this biographical sketch is descended.

James Campsey, his paternal grandfather, a farmer by occupation, was born June 22, 1772, in Mountertau, Parish of Raphoe, County Donegal, Ireland, and in 1794 emigrated to America in the ship "Liberty." In 1792 he had married Elizabeth Johnson, of the same county, born February 1, 1770, and when he emigrated to the United States he was accompanied by his faithful wife and two children: William, born July 1, 1793, and John, born May 4, 1796. For a few years, or until 1801, they lived east of the mountains, and then proceeded westward to Washington county, Penn., making a settlement about two miles south of Claysville, this section being at that time an unbroken and sparsely settled wilderness. When they arrived the neighbors formed a "bee" and built them a log cabin, the foundation of which was four stumps, one for each corner, but one day being occupied in its erection. Here our little pioneer family made their home gradually surrounding themselves with the necessaries and comforts of life, and here four more children came to enlarge the domestic circle: Margaret, born February 20, 1798; Joseph, born February 20, 1800; James, born February 20, 1803, and Rebecca, born June 2, 1805. The head of this pioneer family was a vigorous, energetic man, incessantly and assiduously toiling to make a home for his little ones, and to convert the forest wild into a fertile farm. On November 23, 1843, the loving partner of his bosom was called from earth, and Mr. Campsey, having then made an equitable division of his property, which was considerable, retired from active labor, and passed the remaining portion of his days on earth with his son James. He died September 1, 1851, full of years and honor, and was laid to rest by the side of his wife in Claysville cemetery. All their children lived to adult ages, excepting Margaret, who died in her girlhood.

James Campsey, the youngest son of this revered couple, was born, as above recorded, on the old farm two miles south of Claysville, where he was early inducted into farm life, and made to work hard, at the expense of his school lessons, which were necessarily very limited. He was a natural mechanic, and could turn his hand to almost any kind of work in that line, being very ingenious and skillful. He constructed a distillery, including all the plant, which he operated for some time, until he became aware of the harm liquor was doing among those who could not discriminate between its use and abuse. He then gave up the business and disposed of the plant. Mr. Campsey was twice married, the first occasion on November 7, 1827, to Isabella Daugherty, a native of Washington county, born April 21, 1811, by which union there were five children: Mary Ann, born May 29, 1830; Harriet, born November 18, 1832; Margaret E., born May 18, 1835; James D., our subject, and a son, unnamed, born November 2, 1838, dying four days afterward. The mother of this family departed this life April 29, 1841, and March 10, 1842, Mr. Campsey wedded Mrs. Susanna Ralston (also a native of County Down, Ireland), widow of James Ralston, and daughter of David McMillan, of the same township, and two children (twins) were born to this union: David M. and Rebecca, born October 13, 1843, the former of whom is a leading merchant in Claysville, the latter dying February 19, 1876. Soon after his first marriage James Campsey purchased of Samuel Stokely a valuable farm property, comprising 352 acres of prime land, lying one and one half miles north of Claysville, to which he moved and where he followed farming till December, 1869, when he removed to Claysville, and there lived a retired life, having amassed a comfortable sufficiency by hard toil and earnestness of purpose. On April 4, 1883, he was called from earth, his wife having preceded him to the long home September 24, 1874. Mr. Campsey was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville, Mrs. Campsey being a member of the U. P. Church of South Buffalo. In politics Mr. Campsey was originally a Whig, in later years a Republican.

James D. Campsey, only surviving son of James and Isabella (Daugherty) Campsey, was born May 24, 1838, in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education at the common schools of the district, a goodly portion of his boyhood days being passed in hard work on his father's farm. On June 21, 1870, he was married to Margaret M. Moore, who was born in 1849, in Washington county, Penn., a daughter of John Moore, and the results of this union were five children, as follows: Harry O., born April 14, 1871; Metta B., born January 14, 1873, died October 19, 1889; Anna E., born January 14, 1876, died June 10, 1880; Thomas A., born January 2, 1878, died June 9, 1880; and Myrtle M., born January 23, 1880, all now deceased except Harry O. and Myrtle M., who are now living at home. Our subject is a lifelong farmer, and has always lived on his portion of the old homestead with the exception of the two years he was engaged in mercantile business in Claysville, as a member of the firm of Sheller & Campsey. In politics he was formerly a Republican, but of late years he has given his moral support to the Prohibitionists, not binding himself, however, to any party, as on many occasions he votes for the best man, regardless of politics. He and Mrs. Campsey are members of the Presbyterian Church, and are held in the highest esteem and respect in the community in which they live.

HENRY CLAY COOPER, a prominent citizen of Jefferson township, is a son of Erasmus Cooper, who was born in Allegheny county, Penn., and was united in marriage with Elizabeth Patterson, daughter of James and Sarah Patterson, who came to Washington county at an early day. He (James Patterson) purchased a farm of William Wells, who laid the foundation of the town of Wellsville. Their children were James, William, John, Hugh, Elizabeth (Mrs. Erasmus Cooper), Mary (wife of William Moore) and Sarah (Mrs. Robert Pogue).

To the union of Erasmus and Elizabeth (Patterson) Cooper children were born, of whom the following grew to maturity: William (living in this county), John (born February 15, 1836, residing in Eldersville), Robert (living in Drukesville, Davis Co., Iowa), and Henry C. (subject of this sketch). The mother died in 1846, and was buried at Perysville, Allegheny Co., Penn., leaving her youngest child but eighteen months old. In 1855 Mr. Cooper, accompanied by his sons, William and John, moved to Iowa and purchased a large tract of land, on part of which now stands the city of Des Moines. This property was sold in 1887 for $200 per acre. For his second wife, Erasmus Cooper married a Miss Logan, of Canonsburg, one daughter being born to their union—Mary Bethel (now living in Des Moines). Mr. Cooper died in 1856 at the age of fifty-five years. He had three brothers and one sister, viz.: John (killed by a fall), James, George Fitch and Sarah. Of the sons of Erasmus and Elizabeth (Patterson) Cooper, William came to Washington county, Penn., in 1863, having previously kept "bachelors' hall" together with his brother John in Iowa. Since returning to this county, William Cooper has been interested in the development of the Allegheny county oil field, with the Pioneer Oil Company, and is now living near Eldersville.

Henry Clay Cooper was born May 5, 1845, in Allegheny county, Penn., and upon the death of his mother, he and three brothers (John, William and Robert) were brought to Washington county, where he found a home with an Aunt Mary, the others being cared for in different families. Young Henry received a good common-school education, and on May 1, 1867, he formed a partnership with his brother John in mercantile business at Eldersville. The firm continued under the style of J. & H. C. Cooper until April 19, 1891, when our subject retired from active business. On December 18, 1889, he was married to Carrie V. McCarrell, daughter of Thomas R. and Elizabeth McCarrell, old settlers of this county.

Thomas McCarrell, grandfather of Mrs. Henry C. Cooper, was born in County Armagh, Ireland, in 1715, and when seventeen years of age came to America, and to Pennsylvania, making his first settlement near Philadelphia. Afterward he moved to York county, same State, and while there participated in the war of the Revolution, and married Eleanor Rusk, a native of that county. In 1793 they came to Washington county, making their final home near Eldersville. Their children were: Mary (wife of Robert Cresswell, a soldier of the Mexican war), Jane (Mrs. James Moore, of Muskingum, Ohio), Samuel (married to Elizabeth McConnell, of Hanover township), Margaret (unmarried) and Thomas Rusk. The father of this family died on the home farm in this county in 1835, the mother in 1815, both aged ninety years, and both are buried in "The Tent" cemetery. Mr. McCarrell was a Democrat in politics, and in religious faith a member of and for many years an elder in the Seeder Church of Brooke county, W. Va., known as "The Tent." Thomas Rusk McCarrell was born August 3, 1795, in Jefferson township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his primary education in the subscription schools of the vicinity, later attending an educational establishment in Ohio. While in that State he taught school about ten years. Returning to Pennsylvania, he married Ruhamah Kincaid, of Brooke county, W. Va., and one child, Ruhamah J., was born to them. This wife dying, Mr. McCarrell, eleven years later, married Elizabeth McComb, of Brooke county, W. Va., a daughter of Capt. John McComb, a native of County Down, Ireland, who came to this country when a young man. He became a noted Indian fighter, and was a Revolutionary soldier. In 1840, at the age of about eighty-seven years, he passed from earth, a lifelong Democrat, and a ruling elder in "The Tent" Seeder Church of Brooke county. The children born to Thomas and Elizabeth (McComb) McCarrell were Rachel E., Thomas A. and John A. (all three deceased), Elizabeth M., John T. H. (deceased) and Caroline V. (Mrs. Henry C. Cooper). The parents both died at the home place at the age of eighty-two years. Mr. McCarrell was a staunch Democrat, and a member of "The Tent" Church, in which he was a ruling elder for about fifty-five years.

Henry Clay Cooper is one of the best known business men in the western part of the county. His store in Eldersville is well filled with the various articles needed in a farming community, and his patrons are scattered throughout the county, many of his customers also residing in West Virginia.

JAMES NEEL (deceased). This gentleman was one of the best-known citizens and prosperous lumbermen of what is now the city of Monongahela. He was a son of Archibald Neel, a very prominent man, a large landowner, who developed coal mines on his land. He resided opposite McKeesport, where his property extended quite a distance, from directly opposite McKeesport down to Lock No. 2, on the river. He had a family of six children, of whom two are yet living: Mrs. Oliver and Jordan Neel.

James Neel was born September 25, 1817, in Millin township, Allegheny Co., Penn., opposite the town of McKeesport. He attended school during the winter time in an old log building located about four miles from the river, and worked on the farm during the summer, having, to quote his own words, "Little of school and lots of plow." At the age of sixteen years he began to learn the carpenter's trade with one William Whigan, and then followed that business for some time in Pittsburgh, Penn. In 1840, in company with his brother John, he embarked in the coal business on the opposite side of the river below McKeesport. He afterward purchased a sawmill at that town, on the present site of Wood's rolling mill, remaining there fifteen years, and afterward moving to Jefferson county, continued in the same line of business, and also bought thousands of acres of timber lands. He there erected and operated several sawmills, etc., and carefully investing his limited capital, soon amassed a fortune as a lumberman. He then went to the Clarion, and was in partnership with the extensive lumber firm of Blake, Neel & Rodgers, also erecting the planing mill in McKeesport. Prior to 1857 he formed a partnership with John Wampler at McKeesport, but some years later Mr. Wampler withdrew, and in 1870 a partnership was formed by Mr. Neel with William Wampler (a half-brother of his previous partner), which copartnership continued to the end of Mr. Neel's life. In 1870 he also entered into business enterprises at Monongahela City with Maj. Perry A. Foster, and fortune continued to smile on his efforts. After coming to Washington county, however, Mr. Neel lost much money in his investments, through his inability, owing to advanced age, to attend personally to his business affairs. His entire estate is now estimated at about $500,000, accumulated by his untiring energy. For some time he had been afflicted with a cancer in the stomach, and finally submitted to an operation at the St. Francis Hospital, Pittsburgh, which resulted in his death. He passed away July 24, 1892, at the age of seventy-six years, leaving a widow and two children, and was buried in the McKeesport cemetery.

Mr. Neel was thrice married: first to Susan Sampson, of McKeesport, a sister of Kuhn Sampson, who was a resident of Monongahela, and three children were born to them, as follows: Thomas, of Brookville, Jefferson Co., Penn.; Anna, widow of Ross Clark, who was a resident of Coal Centre; and William, deceased, whose widow is now in Brookville, Penn. For his second wife Mr. Neel married Margaret Cochran, of McKeesport, daughter of William Cochran; they had no children. Mr. Neel's third marriage was on January 29, 1857, with Nancy Cochran, who was born December 18, 1833, a daughter of Samuel Cochran, a resident of Indiana county, Penn.; the wedding ceremony taking place at Iowa Mills, Penn., Rev. C. L. Cummins officiating. To this union four children were born, as follows: Arabella, who died October 7, 1874, at the age of sixteen years; James H., now a resident of California; Charles C., living in Monongahela, and Nellie, deceased April 26, 1877, at the age of four years.

Of Mr. Neel it may truthfully be said that he was thoroughly self-made, and many a day would he be found, in all weathers, working side by side with his men. Frequently, in order to save his lumber and other property from flood or other danger, he would labor as long as eighteen to twenty hours a day; and on one occasion he remained for hours with his clothing wet and frozen nearly solid. He was at all times an example to his employes of industry and perseverance. He would frequently, with his own hands, raft his logs down the river, riding them over the rapids, an enterprise often accompanied with considerable danger. In those days there was no railroad from Kittanning to Pittsburgh, and many a time Mr. Neel would travel between those places on the old-fashioned stage coach, over roads so rough that the travelers would frequently have to alight, and on foot help to hold the old stage coach from tipping over the bluffs. Often, after paying his fare, would Mr. Neel walk, in order to allow some less robust fellow traveler to ride in the vehicle. A man of large and generous heart, he was ever anxious to accommodate others in such and other ways; and not a few now successful business men, who formerly had dealings with him, owe their success largely to the generosity and substantial assistance of Mr. Neel. In the conducting of his affairs he would frequently have to rise at three or four o'clock in the morning and set off down the river in a small skiff, rowing all the way to Pittsburgh; while sometimes he would take passage on one of the larger boats at Red Bank, a place lying between his home and the city. Mr. Neel was of a hearty, jovial disposition, fond of company, but quiet in his enjoyments, at all times speaking in low tones, and he surrounded himself with a multitude of friends. While not a member of any church, he was possessed withal of sterling Christian qualities, believing in deeds rather than in professions. During the later years of his life he was afflicted with partial deafness, which caused him to seek comparative retirement from society. He was of medium height, solidly built, and possessed of great physical strength, his weight while in health being in the neighborhood of 170 pounds. In his political preferences he was a member of the Republican party.

CLARK CROW was born August 6, 1825, on the farm where he is now living, in Allen township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of Lawrence Crow, and a grandson of Lawrence and Margaret Crow. The last mentioned ancestors were natives of Maryland, and in 1784 settled in Allen township, this county. Lawrence, the grandfather, applied for a patent August 31, 1784, and on December 16, same year, surveyed the tract called "Crow's Egg," which contained 295 acres, and became the permanent home of the Crow family, who lived there in block houses for many years.

Lawrence Crow, father of Clark Crow, was born in 1795, on the home place in Allen township, Washington county, receiving his early education in the country schools. On November 9, 1812, he was married to Mary Riggs, a native of that township, and daughter of William and Mary Riggs, the former of whom was a Methodist minister; both her parents were born in Maryland, and in 1773 came to Washington county, Penn., locating on the Monongahela river, where they died many years ago. To the union of Lawrence and Mary (Riggs) Crow there were children as follows: Elizabeth, born November 16, 1813, was married to James Donaldson, and died October 9, 1847, in Greenfield, Penn.; William J., born July 29, 1815, married Nancy Jackman, and died in Illinois in 1876; Mary Ann, born May 5, 1817, died June 21, 1856, in Pennsylvania; Margaret L., born April 11, 1820, was married to James D. Latta, and died in Washington county, Penn., January 20, 1853; Sarah, born May 10, 1822, was married to William Dunlavey, and died February 11, 1850; Clark, the subject of this sketch; and James, born September 10, 1828, married Sarah Ward, and died October 3, 1857, Clark being now the only survivor of the family. The father died in 1835, followed in 1865 by his widow. He was a Democrat in politics, and he and his wife were members of the First M. E. Church built in Allen township, this county, and known as the "Howe M. E. Church;" it was originally erected in 1820, taken down in 1872, and rebuilt in 1892.

Clark Crow, whose name opens this memoir, received a subscription school education, and assisted his father in clearing up the home farm. On April 30, 1851, he was united in marriage with Rachel, daughter of William and Rachel (Stewart) Latta, and a native of Allen township, this county. To this union were born three children: Ann Salene, Charles C. (deceased September 8, 1866), and James B. (deceased September 18, 1856). The mother of these children died December 18, 1859, and May 25, 1862. Mr. Crow took for his second wife Isabel Wilkin, a native of Coal Centre, this county, a daughter of Reuben Wilkin, who was born February 9, 1799, near Lost River, Hardy Co., W. Va., a son of George and Mary Wilkin, of West Virginia, who moved to Greenfield (now Coal Centre), Penn., in an early day.

Coming to Greenfield (now Coal Centre), East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., Reuben Wilkin was married April 2, 1826, to Bethsheba Dowler, a native of that township, born in 1808, a daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Dowler, and to this union were born children as follows: George W., born January 28, 1826, married September 13, 1849, to Margaret Ann Addis; Elizabeth, born June 19, 1828, died June 19, 1829; Emily, born May 29, 1830, died December 20, 1887; Henry D., born May 8, 1832, married October 18, 1860, to Anna Piper; Mary Jane, born June 14, 1834, married to Peter Corwin, November 23, 1837; Thomas, born April 7, 1836, married January 1, 1861, to Mary McMillan; Rebecca, born August 26, 1838, died September 30, 1838; Isabel, born October 3, 1839, wife of Clark Crow; Lucinda, born July 2, 1844, married October 28, 1878, to William S. Wighams; and Harriet, born February 25, 1847, married December 8, 1878, to Robert Moore. The father of this family died in 1882, having been preceded to the grave by his wife in 1869; she was a member of the First M. E. Church in Greenfield, built in 1838. Thomas and Elizabeth Dowler were members of the First M. E. Church in Allen township, which went by the name of the "Howe Church," of which mention has already been made in this sketch.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark Crow have always resided on the home place, which is one of the oldest farms in Washington county, and contains 190 acres of good land. In politics he is a Democrat, and has served faithfully as road supervisor, judge of elections and member of the school board. In religion he and his wife are members of the M. E. Church at Mount Tabor. Their children are Olive E. (Mrs. Samuel Winnett, living on the home farm) and Loretta (Mrs. W. A. Strowd, of East Pike Run township) (twins), Eldora (wife of J. M. McCracken, of Greene county, Penn.), William (married to Olive Crawford, and living in Allen township), Fred G., Lawrence C. and Edgar J., all three of whom are living with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Crow are the grandparents of six children living, and one deceased.

A A. MEALY, an old and well-known resident of Claysville, is a native of Washington county, Penn., born in Donegal township March 15, 1815. His early life was passed with his grandfather, George Mealy, who was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and was reared to manhood on the home farm. George Mealy was united in marriage with Mary Horn, a resident of the same county, and their children were as follows: John, Samuel, David, Margaret, Sarah, Maria, Elizabeth, George and William. In 1812 Mr. Mealy and his family started for Washington county, Penn., and after a long and tedious journey by emigrant wagons they arrived in Donegal township, and settled on the farm of 100 acres, which Mr. Mealy had previously purchased. It was partially cleared, and had some buildings on it. He was an energetic and progressive man, taking an active part in public enterprises. Politically he was a staunch Democrat, and a most ardent worker in his party. In religion he was a member and hearty supporter of the Presbyterian Church.

A. A. Mealy (grandson of the above pioneer) passed his early youth in attending to the farm duties on his grandfather's place, and during the winter season went to the neighboring schools. The school-house was like others of that day, a rude affair, but within those humble little cabins many of our most intelligent citizens received their first instruction in literature. When fifteen years of age Mr. Mealy was apprenticed to James Shannon, a shoemaker, and has since been engaged in that vocation, always recognized as one of the best workmen of Claysville. When twenty-two years of age he began business for himself, and opened a shop. On July 2, 1835, he was married to Jane, daughter of Hugh McCaskey, a native of Ireland, who in youth came with two brothers to America. Mr. McCaskey settled in Lancaster county, Penn., remaining there several years, and was married to Julia Haggerty, who bore him the following children: Mary (Mrs. Charles Knight), Sarah (Mrs. William Moore), Jane (wife of A. A. Mealy) and Margaret. When a young man Mr. McCaskey learned the tanner's trade, which he followed several years. He then conducted a general store at Pittsburgh for some time, but finally moved to Canonsburg, Washington county, and resumed his trade. In politics he was a Whig, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church. After his marriage, Mr. Mealy settled on his present home in Claysville, this county, and reared the following children: Margaret, wife of William Warrill; Julia A., wife of John Short; John, George and Anthony A. The mother of these passed away December 5, 1891, after a happy married life of fifty-four years' duration. Mr. and Mrs. Mealy celebrated their golden wedding July 2, 1885, when they had all their children present with them to participate in a most delightful family reunion. Mr. Mealy was appointed postmaster of Claysville in 1845, by the administration of James K. Polk, which position he occupied sixteen years. He has always taken an active interest in the welfare of the community, and in politics is an active member of the Democratic party. From early youth he has been a zealous member of the Presbyterian Church. The following is a record of his sons:

John Mealy was born in Claysville, this county, and received his elementary education in the town schools, which schools he afterward taught for several terms with great acceptance to the people. He graduated at Washington and Jefferson College, and then entered the Western Theological Seminary. After his graduation he was called to the Presbyterian Church of New Wilmington, Penn., of which he is now the pastor. "The church of Neshanock," New Wilmington, has been Mr. Mealy's only charge, covering a pastorate of twenty-five years. He has had in the meantime calls from a number of churches in the largest cities of the Union, but pastor and people being bound together by so many endearing ties, together with the accomplishment of a great and good work, have thus far made a separation impossible. He is an earnest preacher, and has ever been a power in Sabbath-school work. His pleasant and kindly disposition and cordiality of manner have always made him a favorite with old and young. Mr. Mealy was united in marriage with Ida Willmonth, and they had three children: Florence, Lavina and George. Mrs. Mealy died February 8, 1874, and for his second wife Mr. Mealy was married to Augusta Pomery, who has borne him one daughter, Jane.

George Mealy obtained his early education by self-study, and at the schools of Claysville, which he afterward taught. He then attended medical lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and Western Reserve, at Cleveland, Ohio, and graduated. He is now practicing his profession in New Wilmington, Penn. His wife was formerly Mary McEnall, and they have three children: Harry, John and Mary.

Anthony A. Mealy was also born in Claysville, and was educated at Westminster College, New Wilmington, Penn. He then entered the Western Theological Seminary, and graduated in 1877. He is now pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church at Pittsburgh, Penn. He was married June 22, 1882, to Bird Dalzell, and they have two daughters: Ellen and Lydia.

GEORGE YOUNG HOLMES. George Young Holmes, Sr., the oldest living representative of the family, was born at Saltcoats, Scotland, May 13, 1820. His grandfather, William Holmes, in his youth became a sailor, and so faithful was he in the discharge of his duties on shipboard, that he was rapidly promoted, rising from apprentice to the position of captain on a large vessel plying between Norway and Scotland. While superintending the lading of his vessel in a Norway port, he was accidentally killed, and his body was buried in that country about 1781 or 1782. His clothing and other effects were sent home to his grief-stricken family, in an old sea chest which half a century later was brought to America, and is still (1893) in existence. Some years prior to his death, Capt. Holmes married Elizabeth Brown, and resided at Saltcoats, a seaport then of considerable importance, producing large quantities of salt. Ship-building was also in a very flourishing condition then and for many years afterward. The family consisted of four children: Robert, William, Martha and Elizabeth. Mrs. Holmes, a woman of rare ability, possessing to a remarkable degree the energy characteristics of the Scotch people, began immediately the training and education of her little family, and she lived to see all of them respected members of society, reflecting honor upon her loving care.

The maternal grandfather, William Brown, then a master weaver, took Robert and William as apprentices at hand-loom weaving, a trade of great importance prior to the invention of the power-loom. They continued at this trade for some time, but Robert's taste inclined toward the study of medicine. With William's assistance, he was graduated from the University of Glasgow, attended the medical lectures at Dublin, and began the practice of medicine at Saltcoats, but within a year he died of typhus fever contracted from one of his patients. For some years William continued at his trade, and in his spare moments, by diligently applying himself to study, he became an excellent English scholar and a fine penman. For some time he held the position of clerk in the Irwin

Bank, and after his marriage engaged in the grocery business. He was then appointed postmaster and agent for the sale of Government stamped paper, which positions he retained until he emigrated to America. Although holding office under the Crown for many years with loyalty above reproach, he was an ardent Republican, and believed firmly in government by the people. In 1803 he married Elizabeth, fourth daughter of John McNilledge, of Glasgow. They had ten children, three of whom died in infancy. Margaret, the eldest, married and remained in Scotland, dying in 1836. The other children, namely: Robert, Elizabeth, Mary, Martha, George Young and Agnes Jane, with their parents, emigrated to America in 1830.

The deplorable condition of trade which had existed in Great Britain from the fall of Napoleon in 1815, until this time, induced him to sever the ties which bound him to his native land and seek a home and a grave in the Western World. On April 22, 1830, he, with his family, set sail on the "Rodger Stewart," an American-built vessel which had been captured by the British in the war of 1812. During the long voyage of six weeks and four days, he kept a journal accurately recording the incidents of each day, the condition of the weather, etc., and from this journal, still in existence, we take the following:

Friday, May 7, 1830.—It blew hard all last night and the ship rolled very much. George Young (George Y. Holmes, Sr.) was sent for a little water. Standing beside Robert, the ship gave a heavy roll. He ran to the lee side and struck violently against the bulwarks, then fell and gave a cry. Robert ran to his assistance and found that his thigh bone, right leg, was fractured. After a good deal of trouble and delay, we got it set and him put to bed in a small berth in the poop of the ship. He was rather uneasy, restless and pained, but behaved very well."

Early in the morning of May 13, the passengers were aroused from their sleep by the cry of "Fire!" Mr. Holmes, in his journal, says: "When the word was given 'The ship is on fire,' one general cry of agony and despair arose from the women and children such as I never heard before and I hope shall never hear again." The fire had its origin in the cabin, and had gained considerable headway before being discovered, but by the combined efforts of crew and passengers the flames were finally extinguished. The journal continues: "And now that the danger is over, ought we not to praise God for His goodness and His works of wonder." The remainder of the voyage was uneventful, and at length the "Rodger Stewart" entered the harbor of New York. On the day he landed Mr. Holmes wrote: "God's mercies are indeed new unto us every morning, and great reason have we to bless His name who has so far guided us in our way."

After securing comfortable rooms for his family in New York he presented letters of introduction to Mr. Buchanan, British consul. This gentleman received him cordially, and gave him a letter to the governor of Upper Canada. Accompanied by his son Robert, he set out on his memorable prospecting tour from New York to Albany, thence to Buffalo, thence to Toronto. Here he met the Governor and also a large land-holder, a Scotchman, named Stevens, who made him a tender of 200 acres of unbroken timber land, but not being entirely satisfied with Canada, they retraced their steps, re-entering the United States at Niagara Falls. Thence they journeyed southward until they reached Claysville, Washington Co., Penn., and being well pleased with this section they decided to locate upon the farm now owned by Mr. D. M. Campsey, one mile northwest of Claysville. Mr. Holmes then returned to New York and brought his family by water to Baltimore, Md., thence by road-wagon to the home which he had provided for them, and where he expected to spend the remaining years of his life. Two years later he purchased for $1,000 the farm of 120 acres, now owned by George Y. Holmes, Sr. Here he resided until his death in 1847. In his younger days he united with the Baptist Church in his native land, and for more than twenty years was pastor of the church in Salcoats. After coming to America he continued to preach to his friends and neighbors who would gather in the farm house on Sabbath days. He had been well acquainted with Sir Walter Scott, and through the reading of his works and his conversation with the novelist himself, he became imbued with the spirit of the antiquarian; he gained possession of many rare coins, of an old family Bible published in 1576, and of a clock which is still keeping good time at the age of one hundred and fifty years. His wife died in 1869 at the advanced age of ninety-one years.

At the death of his father, George Y. Holmes, Sr., purchased the homestead upon which he has lived continuously for sixty-one years. Of the Holmes family who emigrated to America in 1830, he and his youngest sister, Mrs. Agnes J. Laird, are the only living representatives. In 1846 he married Elizabeth, second daughter of John Snodgrass, and they had four sons and four daughters, all of whom are still living. Mr. Holmes is the only survivor of the fifteen Abolitionists of Donegal township, who voted the Free-Soil ticket until the formation of the Republican party. His life has been quiet and uneventful. Following in the footsteps of his father, he has been a consistent member of the Baptist Church for many years. Although not an ordained minister, he preached for the churches of this denomination located at North Wheeling, Buffalo, and Washington, Penn., and occasionally he occupies the pulpit of his pastor, Rev. S. L. Parcell, of the First Baptist Church of Claysville, Penn. Since the death of his wife, which event occurred June 20, 1884, Mr. Holmes has continued to reside upon his farm, which he still superintends, although seventy-three years of age and past active labor. Having inherited a love for good literature, he is an indefatigable reader of history, poetry and the better class of fiction. Thus he is spending the declining days of his life in peaceful enjoyment of comfortable circumstances, the result of many years of care and labor.

JAMES L. WELLS was a son of William Wells, who came to Pennsylvania from Virginia in 1800, and settled in Woodstock, Ohio, in 1852, from whence he moved to Zanesville, where he died. William Wells was a Methodist in religion, a Whig in politics, and a chair maker by trade. His children were as follows: sons—James L., Joseph, Dennis B., William, Benjamin and Westley; and his six daughters were: Martha, Eliza, Christiana, Jane, Matilda and Mary Ann. James L., the subject of this sketch, was born June 26, 1815, in Williamsport (now Monongahela), Penn., where he passed his early life.

He learned the brick and stone mason trade in Pittsburgh, Penn., and possessing a natural inclination for mechanical work became an expert boat builder. Politically he was a leading member of the Whig and Abolition parties, having materially assisted in the famous "Underground Railway." He was equally interested in educational matters, and served as president of the school board until the time of his death. When a young man Mr. Wells was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of Robert Mason, and their children were Sarah F., William W., R. M., Julius L. and Martha A. The father was a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church until that organization dissolved, when he became a zealous worker in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He died in September, 1888, and was buried in the cemetery at California, beside his wife, who had been laid to rest in 1874, leaving a memory sweet with the fragrance of every virtue.

Mr. Wells, in his younger days, was an active and powerful man, and possessed the courage to engage in any honorable calling promising adequate reward. He appears not to have started in life with a desire to become rich, but simply with an inflexible determination to achieve honorable independence, and that he succeeded none who knew him will deny. If he possessed one characteristic that dwarfed and overshadowed all others, it was personal independence—that trait in man's character that forbids him to "crook the supple hinges of the knee that thrift may follow fawning." From early manhood he conformed his life to the teachings of practical Christianity by that open-handed charity which brings hope and comfort to misfortune. His family relations were of the most pleasing and agreeable character, and his cosy home in Coal Centre (formerly Greenfield) marked him as a man of taste, and an advocate of system in all the details of life. In manner Mr. Wells was serious; by some he was even regarded as severe; yet beneath that thoughtful and meditative exterior there was a stratum of quiet humor, which came to the surface in conversation, and rendered him a most agreeable and entertaining companion. In the evening of his life, enthroned in the affections of his children, and enjoying the well-earned respect of his neighbors, Mr. Wells could review the events of his long and busy life without a blush.

His son, R. M. WELLS, M. D., the only male representative of the family now residing in Washington county, is a well known physician of Coal Centre, of which place he is a native, having been born there June 22, 1846.

Dr. Wells received his elementary education in the public schools of Coal Centre, this county. In 1861 he enlisted in Company D, Fifty-seventh Regiment, P. V. I., and served with the army of the Potomac until the close of the war. He commenced the study of medicine in 1870. In September, 1872, he began a course in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, and in 1871 entered the College of Medicine and Surgery at Cincinnati, Ohio, from which institution he graduated. He first began to practice his profession at Dawson Station, Fayette Co., Penn., later moved to Greenfield, now Coal Centre, and in 1889 moved to Davenport, Iowa. In 1890 he returned to his present home in Coal Centre (on account of the ill health of Mrs. Wells), where he enjoys a large and constantly increasing practice. On May 8, 1879, Dr. Wells was married to Susanna, daughter of John Wood. His brothers, William W. and Julius Lemoine, are in business at Moline, Illinois.

COWDEN. The grandfather of the present generation, John Cowden, was born in eastern Pennsylvania of Scotch-Irish parents, who had settled in the State several years prior to his birth. He was united in marriage with Anna Sloan, and soon afterward moved to Washington county. They settled on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, a part of the original George Washington survey, where the remainder of their lives was passed.

John Cowden, father of our subject, and son of John and Anna (Sloan) Cowden, was born in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, passing his boyhood on the home place. In 1820 he married Mary Kelso, also a native of this township. She was a daughter of Mark and Martha (Ewing) Kelso, natives of Allegheny county, Penn., who came to this county in pioneer days and died here. Mr. and Mrs. John Cowden began their wedded life on the farm now occupied by their son Robert, where the following children were born: Elizabeth, Joseph (a farmer of Cecil township), Mark K., Margaret B. (married R. B. Miller, of Canonsburg, and died in 1886), Jane, John, Robert and Mary (widow of Rev. R. C. Welch, pastor of the Buffalo U. P. Church; she is living in Philadelphia, and has three sons: Robert Lincoln, a U. P. minister, in Iowa; James M., an assistant U. P. minister, in Philadelphia, and John C., attending the medical college at Philadelphia). Mr. Cowden followed farming all his life. He was an active Whig, and in church connection he and his wife were members of the U. P. Seceder Church at Hickory. He died in 1854, his wife in 1883.

MARK K. COWDEN was born September 27, 1827, on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, receiving his education in the subscription schools of the vicinity. In early life he was united in marriage with Jane, daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth (Bell) Thompson, early residents of Chartiers township. Mr. and Mrs. Cowden began life on the farm where they yet reside. This contains 204 acres of well-cultivated land, and also a good gas well. They also own about seventy-eight acres near Hickory and are interested in sheep growing. They are members of the U. P. Church at Venice. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Cowden are: John (who lives in Hickory, married to Elizabeth Boyce), Thompson (living near Hickory, married to Sarah McKnight), Elizabeth (residing in Houstonville, wife of Harry McNary), Robert, William, Lida, Van-Emmon, Mary (Mrs. Joseph Little, of Cecil township), and Joseph Alexander (a farmer of Mt. Pleasant township, married to Anna Cummins). Mr. Cowden votes with the Prohibition party.

ROBERT COWDEN was born November 10, 1835, on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township, which is yet his home, and received a district school education. In 1859 he was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of Samuel and Mary A. (Miller) Allison, natives of Beaver county, Penn., who settled in Mt. Pleasant township about 1855. To Mr. and Mrs. Cowden children were born as follows: Elizabeth (wife of John Peacock, of Houstonville), John (deceased in his fifteenth year), Emma (wife of Robert Smith, of Mt. Pleasant township), Margaret, Jennie A., Robert and Joseph, the four last named living at home. The mother of this family died in February, 1877, and on September 15, 1880, Mr. Cowden married Margaret McDonald, a native of Beaver county, Penn., to whom one child, McDonald Cowden, was born. Mrs. Cowden is a daughter of John and Margaret (Barclay) McDonald. Mrs. McDonald resided in Washington county, prior to her marriage, after which they settled in Beaver county, Penn., the birthplace of Mr. McDonald. Both parents died in that county, the mother passing away in 1887. Robert Cowden inherited the old homestead of 260 acres, to which he has added about as much by purchase, all being in a good state of cultivation. He devotes considerable attention to stock, raising a high grade of Black-top Merino sheep. In politics he votes the Republican ticket, and in church relations he and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Venice.

JOHN COWDEN. The Cowden family have long been identified with the well-known, energetic and successful pioneer settlers of Washington county, Penn. The grandfather of the present generation, John Cowden, was born in eastern Pennsylvania of Scotch Irish parents, who had settled in the State several years prior to his birth. He was united in marriage with Ann Sloan, and soon afterward moved to Washington county. They settled on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, on a part of the original George Washington survey, and there the remainder of their lives was passed.

Isaac P. Cowden was born in 1798, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, where he grew to manhood, and in 1823 married Esther Nelson, who was born in 1799, on a farm in the same township where their son John is yet residing. Her father, James Nelson, was born in York county, Penn., came to Washington county when a boy, and, locating on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, married Ann Duncan, and passed the remainder of his life there. Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Cowden first settled on a farm near Hickory, this county, where children were born as follows: Lillie Ann (wife of Robert Thompson, San Jacinto, Cal.), John (Mt. Pleasant), Martha and Margaret (residing in West Middletown) and James (living in Sumner county, Kans.). The parents were both members of the Mt. Pleasant U. P. Church at Hickory. The father died in 1865, and in 1877 the mother passed away.

John Cowden, son of Isaac and Esther Cowden, was born October 23, 1827, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and spent his youth on the old homestead near Hickory, this county, receiving his education in the subscription schools of the township. In 1857 he married Louisa, granddaughter of Joseph and Martha (Paden) Scott, and daughter of Joseph Scott. The latter was born in the year 1801, in York county, Penn., coming with his parents when a boy to Hanover township, this county. He there married Isabelle Nelson, and settled on a farm in Hanover township, where he died in 1872, the mother passing away in September, 1886. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church at Florence, this county. They had six children, four of whom are living, viz.: Louisa (Mrs. John Cowden), William (a farmer of Beaver county, Penn.), Elizabeth (wife of Samuel Dennis, Wellsville, Penn.) and Joseph (residing on the old homestead in Hanover township, this county). John Cowden and his wife first settled on the farm of 234 acres which they still own, and have erected a comfortable dwelling. The following is a brief record of their children: Isaac Patterson, born November 25, 1859, married in 1883 Mary Alice Guthrie, who bore him two children: Elmer and Eiva (they reside in Chartiers township); Joseph Scott, born May 29, 1861, is a farmer of Sumner county, Kans., and was married, in 1891, to Miss Maggie Williams; Mary Isabelle, born March 23, 1863, was married in 1882 to James Guthrie, a carpenter of Canonsburg (they have two children, Nora and Ellsworth); Esther Ann, born February 16, 1865, was married in 1885 to John S. Hutchinson, a carpenter of Houstonville, and has two children: Jennie and John Cowden; Lillie, born November 23, 1866, died in March, 1871; James Nelson, born May 30, 1868, is living at home; William Anderson, born April 27, 1870, is also at home; John Alexander, born November 3, 1873, is residing on the home place. Mr. Cowden votes with the Republican party. He and his wife are both members of the United Presbyterian Church at Venice, this county.

J. G. HANNA. There is no more prominent figure among the prosperous citizens of Independence township than the gentleman of whom we write. He is a son of Richard Hanna, who was born in 1790, in County Down, Ireland, but, when young, moved with his parents to County Cavan. He learned the weaver's trade, and, like many others of his young countrymen, struggled heroically on until he saved enough to pay his passage to America, the Mecca of all oppressed and persecuted nations. In 1818 he embarked from Dublin, but when only a few weeks from shore, the ship sprang a leak. Hoping to reach port before the vessel sank, the crew steered for Cork, which was reached in time, and the passengers (for some reason not being allowed to land) were transferred to another ship bound for Halifax. After a voyage of twenty-one weeks, the good ship anchored at Halifax, where young Hanna followed his trade for a short period; then, as he had a distant relative in Washington county, Penn., he decided to attempt the journey thither. He had previously been employed at gathering stones, for not being able to secure steady work at his own trade, he accepted the only employment offered, rather than wait idly for more suitable work, willing to earn his bread in any honorable manner.

Would that some of our modern young men would profit by the lesson of this life, so plainly given in the simple facts that no moral is needed to point the application. Having very little money with which to pay the expenses of a trip to Pennsylvania, the sturdy young fellow invested his small savings in goods, which he attempted to sell on the journey to Washington county. This experiment, however, was only partially successful, and only by the strictest economy did he succeed in arriving at the end of his journey. He had finally reached West Middletown, six miles from his destination, when the soles of his shoes dropped off, but he passed on to the one or two houses then erected on the present site of Independence, where his relative resided. The long, tedious trip was accomplished, and the young traveler had just one cent in his pocket as capital stock to invest in new speculations. The reader who has followed the history of this brave youth so far will not ask, "did he despair?" Such men as he, like Washington, turn even defeat to victory; not that brilliant success immediately rewarded our heroic young pioneer, for, on the contrary, he began working as a farm hand at the very modest salary of $4 per month, at which he continued during the summer—in winter following his trade. Thus he struggled on for some time, and, although his small pile of savings did not increase with wonderful rapidity, each year some addition was made. In 1830 he joined a party, going to Richland (now Ashland) county, Ohio, and, upon his arrival there, purchased 160 acres of land and began the herculean task of clearing it, with his accustomed tireless energy. In 1834 he selected a life companion in the person of Mary Gregg, who was born in 1800, daughter of James and Elizabeth Gregg, both natives of County Donegal, Ireland, who had emigrated to America. Soon after their union, the young couple returned to Washington county, Penn., locating about a mile south of Independence, on a farm which became their permanent home. Quiet and unassuming in manner, disliking all forms of publicity, and finding his chief happiness in home life, Mr. Hanna was yet a remarkably clear-sighted business man, by natural and acquired gifts supplying the loss of a literary education, and, working in the face of poverty and against such odds, he conquered. At the time of his death, Mr. Hanna owned an estate valued at over $10,000, this vast accumulation being the fruit of those early years of heroic self-denial, toil and patient waiting. Politically he voted the Democratic ticket, and in religious faith was, with his wife, a member of the Associate Reformed Church. He passed to his well earned rest January 15, 1872, being followed by the wife of his youth, September 6, 1876. They left two children to mourn their loss: Elizabeth M. (Mrs. J. J. Stewart, of Cross Creek township) and James G.

J. G. Hanna was born June 5, 1837, on the home farm in Independence township. He received a common school education, and afterward attended one term at the Washington and Jefferson College. On February 26, 1861, he was united in marriage with Mary A. McCreary, who died July 19, 1865, leaving one daughter, Mary A. (widow of John T. Liggett), born June 27, 1865 (deceased April 28, 1891). For his second wife Mr. Hanna, on March 12, 1868, married Jane A. Scott, born September 5, 1844, in Brooke county, W. Va., daughter of John and Jane (Henderson) Scott. This wife died April 16, 1881, leaving the following children: Nettie Bell (Mrs. J. H. Anderson, of Pittsburgh, Penn.), Albert M. (deceased), Robert S. (deceased), a daughter deceased in infancy, Josie G., Birdie V. and Mabel J., all living at home. On January 3, 1883, Mr. Hanna made a third matrimonial choice in the person of Melissa J. Welch, who was born May 10, 1857, daughter of James M. and Jane (Lee) Welch, of Independence township. Two children were born to this union, viz.: Jane L. and Richard W. (deceased in infancy). The mother died October 6, 1885, and on December 28, 1887, Mr. Hanna and Margaret L. (who was born January 24, 1848, daughter of Walter and Mary (Welch) Denny) were united in marriage. To them one child, Mary G., was born June 11, 1892. They now reside in an elegant home on the border of the village of Independence, one of the pleasantest locations in Independence township. Soon after his first marriage Mr. Hanna located on a farm about a half mile south of Independence, and successfully followed farming, moving to his present beautiful home in 1868. He is a recognized leader in political, business and religious circles, and has settled up various estates, including the valuable property of his father. Although the Democratic party, with which he affiliates, is in the minority in Independence township, he has been elected to various township offices of honor and trust, men of both parties having voted for him, regardless of political lines, and at the present time he is justice of the peace. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is a hearty supporter, having served twenty years as secretary of the church officers, and always contributing liberally to the cause.

GEORGE W. WHERRY is a grandson of John Wherry, a native of Germany, who when quite young came to Washington county, Penn., where he married and reared the following family: James, William, Eli, John, Ellen, Mary, Elizabeth and Margaret, all of whom have passed away with two exceptions, William and Mary, who are residents of Somerset township, this county.

John Wherry, the third son of this family, was born on the old homestead in West Bethlehem township. He received a common school education, and was a man of no little practical knowledge, also a successful farmer. He married Catherine Weaver, daughter of George Weaver, who was one of the early settlers in West Pike Run township. To this couple were born nine children as follows: Emma, John, William, Elizabeth, Eleanor, George W., Eli (married Sarah A. Gregory), Mary and James. Emma is the wife of Samuel Grable, Washington county; John lives in West Bethlehem township, and is married to Elizabeth Bigler; William married Isadore Matthews, and lives in the same township; Elizabeth, who married Uriah Hill, died in 1885, at the age of thirty-six years; Eleanor married James Harvey Hire, and lives in West Bethlehem township, where Mary (Mrs. Henry Hathaway), Eli and James (who married Nancy Grable) also reside.

George W. Wherry, son of John and Catherine (Weaver) Wherry, was born August 9, 1855, in West Bethlehem township, and spent his youth in attending school, which was upon his father's farm, and in assisting with the farm work. On September 19, 1878, he married Lucy B., a daughter of Jacob Myers, an early settler of West Bethlehem township. To Mr. and Mrs. Wherry have been born six children, viz.: Grayson, born April 2, 18— (who died three days after birth); Homer M., born November 27, 1881; Vernon G., born September 1, 1884; Warren J., born April 10, 1887; Russell R., born May 27, 1890; and Donna L., born October 14, 1892. Mr. Wherry enjoys great popularity, and is considered one of West Bethlehem's promising young farmers. He is a staunch Republican, and takes an active interest in political questions. He resides on the old homestead of Jacob Myers.

REV. BANKHEAD BOYD was born in County Derry, Ireland, in 1809, a son of Hugh and Elizabeth (Scott) Boyd. For a brief period he studied the classics, and then with his father and mother came to America in 1821. The family settled in the bounds of the congregation of which afterward he became the pastor. In 1829 he graduated at Jefferson College, Canonsburg. He studied theology the required time (four years) in the Associate Theological Seminary, also near Canonsburg, which institution was then under the supervision of Rev. James Ramsey, D. D. He was licensed to preach in the summer of 1833, and was installed pastor of the Seceder Church, Pigeon Creek, in July, 1834. This relationship continued pleasant, useful and unbroken till his death, February 2, 1860, covering over a quarter of a century. As a sermonizer he was clear and methodical, thus greatly aiding the hearer in remembering the discourse. He sustained every sentiment by Scripture testimony. The doctrines he presented were strictly Calvinistic, and were highly calculated to make strong Christians in faith and good works. He treated sin, and especially Sabbath desecration, in a manner to convince the most callous of their dark and degrading character. As a pastor he was honest, faithful, conscientious. On communion occasions he very distinctly outlined the character of the worthy partaker of the Lord's Supper. A warm friend of the young, his instructions always pressed them to walk in the ways of truth and righteousness. Whilst it is true that "winter storms and summer's thunder can not break the sleep of death," yet with many in his old congregation and community his kind admonitions are still fresh and impressive in their influence. As the moderator of Session he was calm, decided and ever ready to promote whatever would advance the spiritual interests of his people. As a presbyter he was esteemed a wise and safe counselor. Possessing a cultivated and well stored mind, he was chosen a member of the board of managers of the theological seminary already alluded to.

On March 7, 1838, Mr. Boyd was married to Margaret, daughter of James and Abigail Hill Thome, the former of whom was a member of Session for many years. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Bankhead Boyd, viz.: (1) Hugh Wilson Boyd, born December 16, 1810 (he graduated at Jefferson College in 1863, completed his theological course in Allegheny Seminary, in 1868, and same year was licensed to preach by Chartiers Presbytery. As a licentiate he preached nine months in different Presbyteries. While engaged in his Master's work he contracted a cold which ended in a severe hemorrhage and resulted in his death June 12, 1869. "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter" is the Scriptural key that unlocks God's mysterious providences). (2) James Thome Boyd, born in July, 1843, died December 22, 1861. (3) Robert Erwin Boyd, born December 22, 1845, died May 18, 1848. (4) Lizzie Scott Boyd, born March 24, 1848, died July 2, 1868. (5) Abigail Thome Boyd is the only surviving child, and is the wife of Carson M. Berry (a sketch of whom follows). They reside in the old homestead, and are workers in the U. P. Sabbath-school and congregation of Pigeon Creek. The bodies of those that have bowed to the summons of the Pale Messenger sleep in the beautiful cemetery attached to this church.

[From the pen of Hon. John C. Messenger.

CARSON M. BERRY represents a prominent family of South Strabane township. His grandfather, William Gilmore Berry, was born December 2, 1781, in Lancaster county, Penn., which locality has been the home of the family for many years.

The parents of William Gilmore Berry came to Washington county when he was a small boy, and he there grew to manhood, receiving a good education. In 1804 he was married to Jane McConnell, who bore him children as follows: John (deceased), William, Matthew, James, Mary (who died during the winter of 1892-93), Elizabeth, Jane and Prudence (both deceased). Mr. Berry was among the first to engage in raising fine bred sheep, especially the breed known as Black Top. He first entered that business in 1821, and was afterward recognized as a leading authority in that branch of stock raising. In politics he was a Whig, and was one of the most pronounced Abolitionists, taking a prominent part in all political questions; he served several years as a justice of the peace. For many years he was a member of and ruling elder in the Associate Reformed Church at Robinson's Run, to which he gave liberal support. In addition to general farming, Mr. Berry was interested in a flouring mill. About the year 1850 he retired from active work, and took up his residence in Canonsburg, where he died October 26, 1866; his wife passed away February 25, 1848, and they are both buried in Canonsburg U. P. Church cemetery, they having been members of that Church.

John Berry, son of William G. and Jane (McConnell) Berry, was born in 1805 in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., and received a common-school education, to which he afterward added a valuable store of general knowledge. He was married in 1829 to Jane Eggleton, and the following children were born to their union: Jane, Rachel, William, John M., David W. and Carson M. Of these, John M. and David W. were members of Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I.; David W. was mortally wounded at the battle of Cold Harbor; John M. (still living) was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness. After his marriage Mr. Berry remained fourteen years in Cecil township, and then removed to North Strabane township, where he engaged in farming and stock raising, also managing a gristmill. His first wife died in 1844, and, for his second, he in 1851 married Mary Barr, who bore him one son, Joseph (now deceased). In politics John Berry was a Whig and Abolitionist always active in the interests of his party. In religious connection he was a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek.

Carson M. Berry was born December 22, 1843, in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his youth at home and in Canonsburg, receiving his education in the common schools. On November 22, 1871, he was united in marriage with Abigail Thome, daughter of Rev. Bankhead and Margaret (Thome) Boyd. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Berry settled on the farm in South Strabane township where they now reside, and three children have been born to them: Albert, Bankhead and Lizzie. Mr. Berry is a prominent Republican, and in religious connection he and his family are active members of the U. P. Church.

ROBERT HAWKINS, born in Lancashire County, England, in 1695, came to America in 1715, and in 1716 bought a tract of land of 100 acres of John Miles, of Baltimore county, Md., called "Margarets Mount," situated about eight miles from Havre de Grace, Md., and near the waters of Deer creek, in what was then Baltimore (now Harford) county, Md. In 1730 he bought another body of about 400 acres adjoining the first, of a man named Wells. He was married to Lydia Cruchet, of Anne Arundel county, Md., in 1739, and continued to live on his estate to the extreme age of nearly one hundred and six years, his death occurring November 5, 1801; his will being made April 1, 1796, and approved November 11, 1801. His wife Lydia died about 1805, aged eighty-five years. Robert Hawkins was strongly opposed to England's unjust and arbitrary control of the American Colonies, and prior to the Revolution ardently advocated a separation from the Mother Country. The writer has authentic information that during the war he gave over £2,000 sterling to the support of the American armies, and sent his three sons into the service to battle for the cause of freedom, his second son, Robert, Jr., dying in Washington's memorable camp at Valley Forge; the other sons, Thomas and Richard, remained in service until the close of the war. Robert and Lydia Hawkins had three sons (but no daughters), viz.: Thomas, born in 1741; Robert, born in 1745, and Richard, born in 1748.

Robert, the second son, died while in the American army, as above referred to; was a sergeant in the Maryland line; and left a widow, Elizabeth (maiden surname unknown to writer), and one son, also named Robert, who was born December 14, 1773. He inherited from his grandfather, Robert, the remainder of the latter's landed estate by will approved November 11, 1801, which was in part as follows, to-wit: "I will and bequeath to my wife Lydia all my remaining landed estate during her natural life, and then to go to my Grandson Robert, son of Robert, Jr., deceased, and to his heirs and assigns forever; my sons, Thomas and Richard being provided for, etc." The third Robert Hawkins' wife was named Ann (maiden surname unknown to writer), who was born in 1777, and died November 28, 1862. Robert lived on his farm in Harford county, Md., until his death March 7, 1847, leaving his estate by will to his children. The children of Robert and Ann Hawkins were Elizabeth, Mary, John, William, and George. Of these, Elizabeth married David Silvers; she died November 13, 1853. Their home was in Harford county, Md. Mary married John W. Hawkins, a second cousin, of Columbiana county, Ohio; both are still living. John lived on part of the original tract in Harford county, Md., and died about 1880. William, born September 11, 1799, lived on a farm near the old home (his wife's name unknown to writer); he died September 25, 1889. His children were three sons: John S., born December 22, 1841; William A., born March 5, 1843, and Albert T., born March 24, 1847, all now living near Churchville, Harford Co., Md. John S. and William A. served in the Federal army during the late Rebellion, as members of the Sixth Maryland Infantry. George, born March 11, 1809, died in South America (date unknown to writer).

Richard, the third son of Robert and Lydia Hawkins, was born in Harford county, Md., in 1748, and lived on part of the original farm deeded to him by his father June 10, 1777. He served in the American army from 1778 until the close of the war with England. The date of his death is unknown to writer. He was married twice; his first wife was Elizabeth Cox, who died a few years after her marriage. By this marriage he had one child, a daughter named Elizabeth, who married Gregory Barnes, of Harford county, Md., where they resided.

Elizabeth Barnes died in 1859. They had twelve children, of whom only four survive, viz.:—Mary, Hosea, James, and Robert A. Mary married a Mr. Bailey; she is now a widow living with her family near the old Hawkins homestead in Maryland, Hosea also living near; James lives in Mahoning county, Ohio, and Robert A. is a resident of Columbiana county, Ohio. Richard Hawkins' second wife was Avarilla Durbin (the date of her birth and death is unknown to writer). Their children were: Robert, Thomas, Casandra, Lydia, Hosea, Richard, John, Nancy and William. Robert moved to Beallsville, Washington Co., Penn., and married Ruth, a daughter of his uncle Thomas Hawkins; he lived on a farm and preached for a congregation of the Christian Church, of which he was a member; he died May 26, 1851, much lamented by the community. His wife Ruth died April 15, 1843. Thomas settled near New Lisbon, Columbiana Co., Ohio; married — Mosier, was a wealthy landowner, and lived to an advanced age; he has many descendants living in Columbiana, Stark and Trumbull counties, Ohio. Casandra married Edward Courtney; both are now dead; they lived in Stark county, Ohio. Lydia was married to three husbands—Vandegrift, Gallion and Barbour—and survived them all; they lived in Columbiana county, Ohio; she is now dead, but left descendants who live in different parts of the West. Hosea moved to Ohio, married, and his children and grandchildren still live in Stark and neighboring counties of Ohio. Richard also moved to Ohio; married Ann Touchstone; is now dead; a large number of his descendants still live in Ohio and other Western States. John and Nancy remained in Maryland; John married Mary Vandegrift, but the writer has no further knowledge of his family. Nancy married George Smith, of Harford Co., Md., and lived near Churchville; both are now dead, she being ninety-eight years old at decease; three of her children, viz.: Samuel, George and Cassie M., still reside near the old homestead; another son, Robert, lives in Virginia, and William, a minister, is in Tuscarawas county, Ohio; other of her children left descendants. William died when a boy.

Thomas Hawkins the eldest son of Robert and Lydia Hawkins, was born in 1741 in Harford county, Md., was married in 1763 to Sarah Hargrove, of Kent county, Md.; she was born in 1747. Thomas lived on part of his father's farm. In 1777 he joined the American army as a "sergeant of the Maryland line," and remained in the army until autumn of 1781, attaining the rank of lieutenant. During the winter of 1781 he bought of William Wilson, of Harford county, Md., a tomahawk right to a tract of land of 220 acres on the west side of the Monongahela river, now in the borough of Beallsville, Washington county, Penn. In the spring of 1782 he removed with his family to this western Pennsylvania wilderness, to found for himself and children a new home; and here surrounded by the original forest, and amid the vicissitudes and climatic changes of a newly settled country; contending for supremacy with the wild beasts, and subject to incursions from marauding bands of Indians, he built his cabin; and in the future saw his sons and daughters enjoy the comforts he was so anxious to secure. The State of Pennsylvania granted Letters Patent to Thomas Hawkins for this tract of land called "Smithfield," and of the original tract the ownership to 182 acres has never changed in name, being still owned by A. L. Hawkins, a great-grandson. Thomas Hawkins died May 15, 1826; his wife Sarah died April 15, 1827, and the remains of both lie in the family graveyard on the farm. The children of Thomas and Sarah Hawkins were: Absalom, Richard, Lydia, Elizabeth, Mary, Sarah, William, Thomas, Ruth and Ann.

His children were John, Cynthia and Matilda. John and Cynthia both died unmarried; Matilda married John Cooper and a daughter was born to them, named Sarah J. The husband John Cooper having died, Matilda married Thomas Howden, and both are now dead. Sarah J. Cooper married a Mr. Bentley who is now dead; she is still living near Monongahela, Washington Co., Penn. Absalom Hawkins died July 6, 1839. Elizabeth, his wife, died March 19, 1821. Lydia, daughter of Thomas and Sarah Hawkins, born March 2, 1773, married Joseph Fowler, of Washington county, Penn.; her children were William and Thomas H. The writer has no knowledge of William. Thomas H. was a physician, and practiced for many years at Beallsville, Penn.; was prominent in his profession; removed to Illinois in advanced years, and died there. Lydia Hawkins Fowler died at Cadiz, Ohio (date unknown to writer). Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas and Sarah Hawkins, born February 23, 1775, married Alexander McCoy, and moved to a farm near New Lisbon, Ohio. Both are now dead. (No dates). He lived a peaceful yet active life until old age grew on, when he relinquished the cares of his farm to his sons, and spent the last years of his life in quiet enjoyment. The children of Richard and Cynthia Hawkins were: Absalom, Elizabeth, James C., Matilda, Sarah, Richard C., Mary A., Casandra, Thomas H., William H., John C. and an unnamed infant daughter.

mediately adjoining the farm of his father. Soon after his marriage, in 1836, he moved on this farm, and carried on farming, sheep breeding, and the carding of wool and fulling of cloth. For several years he owned a general store in Clarksville, Penn., and bought wool for the general market for a number of years. He was successful in business, and retired in 1881 from active life (his sons assuming his business cares), and moved to a home opposite Clarksville, Penn., spending his declining years in quiet comfort. He and his wife were for many years members of the Baptist Church; in 1849 he built a church on his farm, and gave it a willing support, leaving by his will a generous annuity to its pastor. He was benevolent, a promoter of public enterprise, and many will remember his acts of charity. The children of James C. and Margaret Hawkins were as follows: Emeline W., Absalom W. H., son of James C. and Margaret Hawkins, born January 22, 1839, died November 10, 1876, unmarried; he was graduated from Jefferson College, Canonsburg, Penn., in the class of 1858, read medicine, graduating at the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia in the spring of 1861; was appointed by President Lincoln an assistant surgeon of the U. S. navy in May of 1861; in 1863 he was promoted past assistant, and in 1864 full surgeon; he was a ripe scholar, speaking and writing fluently, in addition to the English, the French, German and Spanish languages. On account of failing health he resigned from the navy in 1866, and was killed by the cars at Mansfield, Ohio. Cynthia A., daughter of James C. and Margaret Hawkins, born October 7, 1841; unmarried, and since the death of her parents has been living with her brother, A. L. Hawkins. [A sketch of Alexander L. Hawkins (the next in order of birth), son of James C. and Margaret Hawkins, appears further on.] Elizabeth W., daughter of James C. and Margaret Hawkins, born October 10, 1847, was married to John C. Sargent October 7, 1875, and died July 26, 1877, leaving a son, Harry H., now in his sixteenth year. James R., son of James C. and Margaret Hawkins, born October 3, 1852; was married to Decema Addleman, February 28, 1878, and has four children; he lives on a farm in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., and is engaged in breeding horses.

William N., son of James C. and Margaret Hawkins, born July 14, 1855, was married to Mary Ada Farquhar February 16, 1881, who died February 26, 1893, leaving five children. William N. owns and lives on the old farm of his father, on Ten-Mile creek, Washington Co., Penn.; he is extensively engaged in breeding fine draft horses.

ALEXANDER L. HAWKINS, the subject proper of this memoir, was born September 6, 1843. He was educated at George's Creek Academy and Waynesburg College, after which he taught school two terms. On August 7, 1862, he enlisted in Company K, Fifteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, filling the various grades of non-commissioned officer until the spring of 1864, when he was promoted to first lieutenant; in the spring of 1865 he was commissioned captain, and he was mustered out of service January 21, 1866.

He participated in the battle of Antietam, Md., and his regiment then being transferred to the "Army of the Cumberland," he was with that organization in its various engagements from "Stone River," until the close of the war. After hostilities ceased, he served on the staff of Maj.-Gen. Clinton B. Fisk until mustered out. In the fall of 1866 he went into the drug business in Pittsburgh, Penn., continuing for two years, when he sold his store, was married and moved on a farm in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. He was elected treasurer of his county in 1875, served as such during 1876, 1877 and 1878, and then returned to the farm, where he still resides. On January 1, 1877, Capt. Hawkins entered the National Guard of Pennsylvania as captain of Company H, Tenth Regiment; was with his company during the riots at Pittsburgh, Penn., in 1877; on February 27, 1879, he was elected colonel of the regiment; re-elected February 27, 1884, and re-elected February 27, 1889, and is still in command, being now the senior colonel in the State. He was with his regiment under the call of the governor of Pennsylvania for three weeks in April of 1891, during the labor strike in the coke regions of western Pennsylvania; was in command of a Provisional Brigade for a month during the strike of steel workers at Homestead, Penn., in July and August of 1892.

The children of A. L. and Cynthia H. Hawkins are: Clyde E., Jessie B. and Frank B. Of these, Clyde E., born November 16, 1869, entered Washington and Jefferson College, leaving at close of sophomore year in spring of 1891; was admitted as a cadet to the U. S. Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., June 1, 1891, by appointment of the Secretary of War, on recommendation of Hon. J. W. Ray, member of Congress from the Twenty-fourth District of Pennsylvania, and he is still there. Jessie B., born June 29, 1871, attended Beaver College, at Beaver, Penn., for one year; entered the sophomore class of the Western Female Seminary, Oxford, Ohio, in September, 1890, and is now in the class to graduate June 8, 1893.

Frank B., born July 11, 1871, is now in the freshman class of Washington and Jefferson College.

While none of the Hawkins family have attained distinction, it is a matter of pride that from Robert, the founder of the family in America, through the generations to the present, they have been quiet, law-abiding patriotic citizens, and all loyal to their Country.

THE HALLAM FAMILY. The Hallams descended from the middle classes of England, the family there embracing the historian and the poet. From here are descended Governor Helm, of Kentucky, Secretary Bristow, of President Grant's cabinet, President Polk and a long roster on both sides of the waters, who have never broken through the veil of honest obscurity. "Hallam is the proper way to spell the name. The substitution of the 'u' instead of 'a' in the last syllable is a corruption growing out of the freedom incident to backwoods life, and Republican simplicity, where heraldry is lost in the common level."

About 1770 two brothers, William and Henry Hallam, cut off from ancestral inheritance by the laws of entail and primogeniture, sought to lay foundations by their own enterprise in a field of more promise and a wider range than England extended to the portionless scions of her gentry and nobility. Imbued with the broadest spirit of religious toleration, so deeply rooted in the institutions of Maryland, they first located in Hagerstown, in that colony. Both married and became heads of families. Henry settled in Virginia, William in South Carolina, and there became one of the largest planters of his day. Both adhered to the fortunes of the colonies, and became Revolutionary soldiers. William was captured at the battle of Germantown, October 4, 1777. The British officer, to whom he was delivered after capture, insulted him and slapped him in the face with his sword, but paid the penalty of his temerity with his life, for the brave cavalier shot him dead instantly, and made good his escape. After peace was declared he settled in South Carolina. He was a cultured gentleman of the old school brood, enlightened and liberal, and in his will cut through the laws of primogeniture and divided his property equally among a large family of sons and daughters.

In that tide of emigration which came pouring its westward flood across the Alleghenies after the Revolution came William, Henry, John and Andrew Hallam, to the frontier settlement of Tennessee in 1795, and they settled on the historic Cumberland, in what is now designated as Smith county, Tenn., all sons of Henry, the Revolutionary sire; and with them came Rachel, daughter of William, the soldier, and wife of her cousin William, the pioneer. All were possessed of courage and marked individuality of character, and all were staunch friends and supporters of Gen. Jackson. Descended from these brothers may be here mentioned, prominent of the present generation, Senator Hallam, of Kentucky; John Hallam, the jurist and historian, of Arkansas, and a long list of eminent lawyers, doctors and divines, besides others previously referred to.

Joseph Hallam (grandfather of the Hallam brothers in Washington), who was descended from the Hagerstown branch, was born on the farm now owned by John G. Clark, of Franklin township, Washington county. His parents had come hither, bringing slaves with them, and died in this county. Joseph entered the hotel business and became proprietor of the old "Valentine House" (now the "Allison"), and died in the borough of Washington. He was married in Washington county to a Miss Zediker, and they reared a family of children as follows: Lewis, father of the Hallam brothers of Washington; John, living in South Strabane township, this county; George, deceased; Joseph, who allied himself with the Confederates, and remained in the South; Levina, deceased wife of William Wolf; Elizabeth, deceased wife of James McGuigan, also deceased; and Mrs. Hamilton Todd, of Richmond, Ind.

Lewis Hallam was a blacksmith by trade, and ran line teams over the National pike from Baltimore to the Ohio river, for the transportation of merchandise, and owned some of the finest teams that ever traveled over the road. He married Rosanna Teagarden, of West Finley township, and they then took up their home in Washington. They reared a family of eleven children, namely: Levina, wife of George H. Thurston, of Washington; Elizabeth, deceased wife of Hon. J. S. Stocking; Sophia, widow of George E. Parshall, of Washington; Joseph; George T.; Rosanna, at home; Lewis P.; Finley B.; John W.; Charles F.; and Robert H., all in Washington. The seven brothers in this family comprise the firms of R. T. Hallam & Sons, general contractors; Hallam Bros., proprietors of livery and dealers in ice, etc; Finley B. Hallam, attorney at law; and Robert H. Hallam, merchant. On November 27, 1876, the father died. At the breaking out of the Civil war he closed his business in Washington and took up the manufacture of wagons for the National Government in Wheeling, W. Va. At the close of the struggle he returned to Washington and again built up a large business. He was originally a pronounced Whig, Abolitionist, and later a Republican, but was never an active politician. After his death, his widow, with her sons, continued the business until in August, 1891, when she passed from earth.

FINLEY B. HALLAM was born November 25, 1856, at Monongahela, Penn., where his parents were living at the time. He was educated at the common schools up to eleven years of age, and then became a clerk at the old news depot for his brother in law, J. S. Stocking. He carried a news route and learned telegraphy, the old Pacific & Atlantic Telegraph office being in the same room. J. S. Stocking was the manager, but Finley B. in reality managed the business. After a time he gave up telegraphing, and took the position of line-man, repairing lines half way from Washington to Pittsburgh and Wheeling and Brownsville. He continued in this until the absorbing of the business by the Western Union. He had made up several studies while working, and after ceasing line-man's work he entered (1873) Washington and Jefferson College. Here he remained a short time, and then was with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, as telegraph operator, at Sandpatch, Connellsville, Broadford and Pittsburgh, in a few months reaching the management of the last office, the most important on the road. Two years later he returned and entered the class of 1879 as Freshman, he having made up studies, and at the completion of the year, his funds being gone, he resumed telegraphy. Going to the upper oil country, he took a position in the office of the superintendent of the Columbia Conduit Pipe Line Company, at Petrolia, filling also a temporary charge of the Pittsburgh and Parker office, of same line. In the winter of 1876-77 he left the Columbia Conduit and entered the service of the United Pipe Line (Standard), taking charge of a large pump station at North Washington, Butler county; there he remained a short time, and then went, in the spring of 1877, to the Argyle Pump station, at Petrolia. As the result of the absorption by the "United" of Antwerp, Atlantic and others, in Clarion county, he went to St. Petersburg (same county), headquarters for that district, first as telegraph operator, and then as bookkeeper for the same company. A few months later he was made chief bookkeeper, of eight or ten men. In the summer of 1878, in consequence of the exceptional growth of the Bradford field, the work became too heavy for one office, and so the Bradford field was cut in two, and the headquarters of the second division were made at Olean, N. Y., near the Pennsylvania line. Mr. Hallam was then called by the general manager of the line to take control of the Olean headquarters, having exclusive charge of all accounts, with a large force of assistants. While his promotion was exceptional, he was the youngest bookkeeper in the business. Having saved sufficient money to see himself through college, and having kept up his reading and study, he resigned his position in the fall of 1878, returned to college, entering the sophomore class, and finished with the class of 1881. He led his class, but from some cause, first honor was not awarded him, though second honor was offered him, which he declined to accept, feeling that he deserved first. He was given the salutatory address, but declined to make it, and was consequently suspended for insubordination, his diploma and degree being withheld. A man high in college affairs said to Mr. Hallam: "While first honor had by accident been nominally awarded to another man, yet your classmates, the faculty and everybody connected with the college will ever regard you as first honor man of the class of 1881."

His funds again gone, and the Mutual Union Telegraph Company having extended a new enterprise in competition with the Western Union, Mr. Hallam was offered by the officials the position of electrician and circuit manager with control as superintendent from Cumberland, Md., to Cincinnati, Ohio, with electrical headquarters at Washington, Penn. Here he remained fifteen months, when he was called to Washington, D. C., and placed in charge of the company's affairs there, and all points from Philadelphia to Cincinnati. He remained during the celebrated strike of commercial telegraphers, at the termination of which he resigned his position, gave up the telegraph business, and resumed the study of law at Washington, Penn., which he had incidentally pursued while in college. He was admitted to the bar of Washington county, November term, 1884, and has since continued in practice, his office being in the Murdoch Building. In January, 1885, oil developed, and he engaged in the oil business, leasing many fields, and drilling many wells. He was one of the plaintiffs in the equity suit against the Union Company et al., for the oil rights of the Davis property in South Strabane township, which produced $1,000,000 worth of oil, and which suit is still pending. In the oil business of Washington county, he was in a company composed of leading and wealthy business men.

Politically Mr. Hallam has been a worker in the Republican ranks since a boy, working for his party earnestly; was secretary of the county committee in 1891, and contributed much in time and money to the success of his party nominees. In 1892 he was candidate for the office of district attorney in Washington county, but the nomination was given to Mr. W. S. Parker, who had served one term. By the House of Representatives of Harrisburg (of 1891 to 1893) Mr. Hallam was elected transcribing clerk of the House, which position he held to the close of the session.

In December, 1890, Finley B. Hallam was married to Miss Rosa Alba, daughter of Dr. Charles Tengarden, of Tyler, Tex. Her grandfather, Dr. Oswin Tengarden, a double cousin of the mother of Finley B. Hallam, her husband, was general purchasing agent of medical stores for the Southern Confederacy, and his most intimate associates and friends were Jefferson Davis and Senator Reagan. Mrs. Hallam's mother was Florence Johnson, daughter of Dr. Johnson, of a well-known Southern family whose ancestry is traced to Dr. Samuel Johnson, the first of all lexicographers. No children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hallam.

JOHN W. HALLAM, general contractor, Washington, was born in that borough, February 24, 1859. At the age of ten years he commenced work as a clerk in a clothing store in his native city, where he remained until he was fifteen years of age, when he embarked for his own account in the general grocery business, being at that remarkably early age proprietor of a store in the borough for about three years. At the end of that time he sold out, and traveling South and West, spent a year from home. At the age of twenty years he began taking upon himself the responsibility of accepting contracts for various improvements in and about Washington, which was the nucleus to his present extensive business in that line. His brother had united with him, and since 1887 the firm name has been "R. T. Hallam & Sons," John W. being general manager and principal of the establishment. The line of work engaged in has been chiefly stone foundations, paving, sewer building, etc., and no firm in Washington county is better or more favorably known than this one for thorough and reliable work. During the year 1891 they contracted for and completed some 49,000 square yards of street paving, 30,000 feet of curbing and nine miles of sewers in the borough of Washington, besides some 5,000 yards of paving in Monongahela, amounting in all to over $200,000 of work.

On February 25, 1887, Mr. Hallam married Miss Katie H., daughter of — and Rebecca Brady, of Washington, and one son, Harold Herbert, has blessed this union. Mr. Hallam is a Republican, and has for six years served as a member of the borough council, his first election to any office being when he was but twenty-two years of age. Socially, he is a member of the I. O. H. and Jr. O. U. A. M. He has taken an active interest in all movements tending to the advancement of his native town, and has served as one of the directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Washington. As a man of thorough business principle, he is respected by all who know him, and of his personal habits it may be said of him that in no form does he use tobacco, and never during his life has he tasted liquor of any kind.

ROBERT H. HALLAM, merchant tailor, Washington, is a native of the borough, born July 21, 1865. His education was obtained at the public schools of the place, after which for six years he clerked for Thomas Morgan, dealer in dry goods. In 1888 he opened out a merchant tailoring and gents' furnishing establishment in Oak Hall, No. 20 North Main street, Washington, which establishment is allowed to be the best in the place, in that particular line. Mr. Hallam is one of the enterprising business men of Washington, wide-awake and progressive. In politics he is a live, active Republican. In church matters he is an Episcopalian; socially he is a member of the I. O. H. He lives at the old Hallam homestead on East Beau street.

Lewis F. Hallam, a member of the well-known livery establishment of Hallam Bros., at Washington, was born February 28, 1855, in Washington county, Penn. He learned and followed the blacksmith's trade for several years, then drove teams, and in 1878 embarked in the ice business, shipping from Wheeling, W. Va. On February 7, 1878, he was united in marriage with Jennie, daughter of Hugh Hallam, of Washington county, Penn., and she has borne him four children, as follows: Garnet, Jay, Opal and Baby. In 1880 Mr. Hallam opened the livery establishment, which has been most prosperous, and he has also been interested in oil wells, besides carrying on a business in sand and stone. In political opinion he is a staunch supporter of the principles embodied in the Republican party, and socially he is a member of the I. O. H.

DONALDSON FAMILY. A biographical record of the pioneer residents of Washington county would be incomplete, were not prominent mention made of the Donaldson family of Robinson township, who have been intimately connected with every movement tending to the advancement of the interests and welfare of the community at large. The first member of this prominent family, of which we have a record, was one James Donaldson, who came from Ireland to America in early pioneer times. He settled on a farm in Washington county, and accumulated considerable property. He left the following children: Thomas, Andrew, John, Richard, and four daughters, the names of two of them being Elizabeth and Jane.

Andrew Donaldson, the second son in the above-named family, was born in 1789, and reared in Washington county, attending school at the log schoolhouse with its slab benches, puncheon floor, greased paper in lieu of window panes, and other primitive contrivances which served to answer the purposes of our modern articles of school furniture. In early manhood he married Miss Jane McBurney, who was born May 23, 1793, daughter of John McBurney, a resident of this county. They began wedded life on a farm located midway between Bavington and North Star, where they lived about twenty-nine years and reared children as follows: Sally, Jane, Mary Ann, Elizabeth

James Donaldson

(deceased), Esther (deceased), James, John M., Margaret, Thomas and one deceased in infancy. Andrew Donaldson was a counselor and adviser of the Democratic party, and held several township offices. In religious faith he was for many years a member and ruling elder of the Associate Reformed Church, which afterward became a part of the Robinson United Presbyterian Church. He died in 1843, in his fifty-fourth year, deeply mourned by the entire community.

JAMES DONALDSON was born October 25, 1828, on the old homestead in this county, receiving in the country schools the basis of an education which he afterward acquired by private study of all available and useful books. On March 27, 1851, he was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Bigger (also a resident of this county), born October 25, 1826, a daughter of Samuel Bigger, whose father, Thomas Bigger, came from Ireland in early pioneer days. James and Elizabeth (Bigger) Donaldson after marriage settled on the Crawford farm, where they still remain. They have had children as follows: Andrew, Samuel Bigger, Jane E., Thomas R., Matthew J. and John M., of whom Samuel B. is married to Miss Jean Newell, daughter of Rev. John Newell, D. D., of Allegheny county, Penn. Mr. Donaldson has been a very successful business man, for one who began life in comparatively ordinary circumstances, and he now owns over 230 acres of very fine land, upon which a beautiful dwelling has been erected. He is an ardent member of the Democratic party. He was the candidate of the Democratic party for Assembly: first in 1868, and was defeated by fourteen votes; again, in 1872, he was candidate of same party for same office, but was again defeated, his District being largely Republican. It may be here added that at the time Mr. Craig was nominated, Mr. Donaldson's name was selected by the conferees of his own county in connection with the nomination for Congress, but he refused to allow it to go before the meeting of conferees, whereupon Mr. Craig's name was selected and made the unanimous choice of the convention. He has served many years as justice of the peace, and has held several township offices. Being a popular and much respected citizen, a genial gentleman and sympathetic friend, Mr. Donaldson is frequently asked for counsel and advice by many of his acquaintances. He possesses deep religious views, a strong personality, and has been a consistent member and liberal supporter of the Robinson United Presbyterian Church.

JOHN M. DONALDSON was born July 25, 1831, on the farm of his father, and grew to manhood, assisting with the farm duties. In 1855 he was married to Miss Martha M. Bigger, and then settled on the farm where they are now living, which in connection with 109 acres presented to them by Mrs. Donaldson makes them a home of 279 acres. To this union the following children have been born: Andrew, born February 18, 1856; Jane M., born August 20, 1857; Thomas B., born July 28, 1859; Sarah C., born April 16, 1861; Mary E., born January 28, 1864; Emmett T. (deceased), born August 26, 1865; Elizabeth H., born March 3, 1867; James W., born February 16, 1869; Margaret B., born February 23, 1870; Richard M., born April 27, 1873, and Holland H., born August 16, 1876. In politics Mr. Donaldson has always been a strong member of the Democratic party, and cast his first vote for Franklin Pierce. He has been an active worker and elder in the United Presbyterian Church for twenty-five years, and is a citizen of whom any community might well be proud.

HAMILTON MCKINNEY BELL, usually known as "H. K. Bell," is one of the most successful farmers and business men of Morris township, Washington county. Hamilton Bell (great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch) emigrated from Ireland to America some years prior to the Revolutionary war. His son Hamilton (whose commission is still in the possession of his grandson, Hamilton McKinney) was an officer in the Revolutionary army; he married Miss McKinney, a Scottish lady. Both father and son died of yellow fever in 1808.

Raphield Bell, father of Hamilton McK. Bell, was born March 7, 1807, in the same house where his ancestors died, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., on the farm now owned by Thomas Boone. His school advantages were very limited, but by perseverance he managed to secure a fair education for that period, and he subsequently taught school. He learned the trade of a millwright, and for some time owned and managed the "Graham Mill," now known as the "Hague Mill," in Buffalo township. He was married to Margaret Woods (born May 15, 1814), of Washington county, Penn., daughter of Nathaniel and Margaret Welch Woods, both natives of Ireland, the former of whom was a soldier in the war of 1812. Raphield and Margaret (Woods) Bell had eight children, of whom the following is a brief record: Hamilton McKinney is the subject of this sketch; Eliza Jane is the wife of James Patterson, of Peters township, this county; Sample Swaney is an invalid, having been injured at Gettysburg, July 2, 1863, and is now residing in Claysville, this county; Hazlett M. is an undertaker in Finleyville, Union township, Washington county (was wounded at Chancellorsville, May 3, 1863, by the explosion of a shell); Joseph Thompson is a carpenter, residing in Claysville; R. T. and James M. are millwrights, both also being residents of Claysville; Theodore Frelinghnyson died February 20, 1819, aged one year and nineteen days. The father died August 15, 1872, aged sixty-five years, five months and eight days, and the mother September 30, 1834, aged forty years, four months and fifteen days.

Hamilton McKinney Bell was born May 30, 1837, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., near the route of the Hempfield Railroad, now called the Wheeling and Pittsburgh Division of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad. In early life he had learned of his father the trade of a millwright, and from 1853 to 1855 he conducted a grocery store at Ewings Mills, in Chartiers township, now called "Meadow Lands." After leaving the grocery business Mr. Bell began to learn more thoroughly his trade, and followed the business of millwrighting until his enlistment, August 22, 1861, at Wheeling, W. Va., in Company B, First West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry (for three years or during the war; but he served his country three years and five months on his first enlistment), which was led by Capt. Farabee, subsequently by Capt. H. P. Boon; said company was composed principally of men from Washington and Greene counties, Penn. Our subject was a duty sergeant at the organization of said company, and was promoted to commissary-sergeant and afterward to quartermaster-sergeant. He was mustered in at Camp Carlisle on the island in the Ohio river, Wheeling, W. Va., and took part in several battles, among which may be mentioned Blumery Furnace, Winchester, Port Republic, second Bull Run, and several other engagements; was taken prisoner at Berlin, Penn., June 30, 1863, by the Seventeenth Virginia Confederate Cavalry, and from there was taken to Gen. Early's headquarters in Berlin, where he was questioned by the General concerning the past and present movements of the Federals; but true to the country which was dearer to him than liberty or life, the brave soldier turned a deaf ear to all questions of the Confederate leader, only replying: "I am not commanding the army of the Potomac." He then asked the General if he knew the nature of the oath a United States soldier was required to take, to which the latter replied that he did. Mr. Bell then remarked to the General that it was not befitting either a gentleman or a soldier to endeavor to get a prisoner of war to perjure himself by giving the enemy any intelligence of the movements of an army that he knew of; whereupon Gen. Early said: "I will not ask him any more questions." Mr. Bell was then turned over to the Fifth "Louisiana Tigers," and while a prisoner he witnessed the three-days' fight at Gettysburg, employing his time during the first day in helping to dress the wounds of his fellow-prisoners and directing them to hospitals. On the evening of the third day of the battle, he, with about fourteen hundred other prisoners, was sent under a flag of truce to Carlisle, Penn., arriving within our lines July 4; thence went to parole camp at West Chester, Penn., on July 5, 1863, and finally to Camp Stoneman to be remounted and equipped for duty. He was honorably discharged January 21, 1865, and returning home settled in Prosperity, Morris township, whither he had come prior to his enlistment. Here he resumed his trade of a millwright, but was soon compelled to abandon it on account of ill health, having contracted asthma during the war. On June 3, 1868, Mr. Bell was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Ann, daughter of Simeon McClain, of Franklin township, this county, who was a son of John McClain, Esq., and brother of James McClain and John McClain, Jr.

Mr. Bell has been for the past twenty five years engaged in the banking and money-lending business, in which he has been successful. He is temporarily residing on his Highland farm, on the road leading from Prosperity to Sparta, in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn. In politics he is a war Democrat, and with his wife is an active member of the Presbyterian Church of Upper Ten-Mile.

R S. H. KEYS, M. D., the oldest practicing physician in Monongahela, traces his lineage to Hibernian ancestry. His grandfather was born in Ireland, and in an early day set sail for the New World. After arriving in America he located permanently on a place now known as the Miller farm, near Beallsville, Washington Co., Penn. Politically he voted with the Democratic party, and in religion was a member of the Episcopal Church. His children were Andrew, Thomas and Hugh.

Hugh Keys was born in 1790, in the "Emerald Isle," and with his parents came to America where he learned the shoemaker's trade. In 1810 he was married to Elizabeth Irwin, a native of Maryland, whose parents died when she was very young. The newly wedded couple first located in Baltimore, Md., then moved to Hillsborough, Washington Co., Penn., where he conducted a hotel for many years. He finally moved to Fayette county, Penn., and there followed his trade for several years. He was actively identified with the Democratic party, and held various local offices, having in 1840 been elected canal commissioner under Van Buren, which position he held until his death. He was a leading member of the Episcopal Church. He died in October, 1841, his widow on January 23, 1886, in her ninety-sixth year. They were the parents of the following children: Mary, wife of James Thompson, of Beallsville; William; Margaret, married to R. S. H. Henderson, of Lawrence county, Penn.; Andrew, in Fayette county; Sarah, married to Nelson Randolph, also of Fayette county; John; Christian; George; James; Hugh; R. S. H. and Thomas, all now deceased except Andrew and R. S. H.

Dr. R. S. H. Keys was born March 12, 1832, in Fayette county, Penn. When twelve years of age he left home, first entering the general merchandise store of E. C. Roddy, in Upper Middletown, Fayette county, and then worked for his brother, John Keys, M. D., at Bentleyville, Washington county, remaining there several years. He finally entered his brother's office, and after studying medicine and dentistry for about seven years, took his brother's place. On August 23, 1856, Dr. Keys married Elizabeth, daughter of John and Julia Holland, of Bentleyville, and continued to reside in Bentleyville until 1862. He was then commissioned lieutenant of Company D, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry, and went to West Virginia and the Shenandoah Valley, but returned to Bentleyville the same year. In the spring of 1863 he came to Monongahela, where he has since followed his profession with eminent success. He is a staunch advocate of the principles embodied in the Democratic party, and has served as a member of the school board of the city. In religious faith he is a member of the Episcopal Church. To his marriage with Elizabeth Holland the following children were born: Julia, wife of George R. Smith, of San Francisco, Cal.; Lizzie, wife of Charles Oldfield, also of San Francisco; Harry K., in the West; John, a boatman on the Monongahela; Vol. O., Catherine and Sophia, all three deceased; and James Stockdale, at home. The mother of this family died September 6, 1881, and for his second wife Dr. Keys married, June 6, 1883, Mrs. Emeline Howe (a native of Monongahela), widow of Maj. S. B. Howe (to whom she was married in 1864), and daughter of Ira R. Butler, of Carroll township, this county. Maj. S. B. Howe was a native of Washington county, Penn., born May 2, 1835, was educated in California, same county, and there learned the trade of brick molding, which he followed several years. He served during the war of the Rebellion, having enlisted in the First West Virginia Veteran Cavalry at its organization, and was soon promoted to second lieutenant and captain, respectively, in which latter rank he distinguished himself in many hard-fought battles of the years 1863-64. In the campaign of 1864 he was selected and detailed by Gen. Averill to command the company of scouts, in which capacity he performed some of the most daring exploits of the war, and received the highest encomiums from the commanding general. In February, 1865, he was commissioned major, and immediately, in command of the First Regiment West Virginia Veteran Cavalry, started on the great raid of Gen. Phil. H. Sheridan up the Shenandoah Valley and to the James river. After this historic event he performed, among other prodigies of valor and generalship, at Little Sailor's creek, an important part, his brigade making the best and most successful charge of the war, capturing Gen. Ewell and his entire corps, cannon, battle-flags, etc.; in fact, it is said of him that he was "second to no regimental commander." At Appomattox Courthouse, April 8, 1865, he was killed at the close of that obstinate engagement, at the hour of midnight, whilst gallantly leading his regiment in his final charge, and the following day Gen. Lee surrendered.

Dr. Keys now confines himself to city practice, and at special points on the line of railroad, having practically retired from country work, it being too fatiguing. He is a Knight Templar.

MISS NANCY SHERRARD, for nearly twenty years principal of the Washington (Penn.) Female Seminary, is a native of Ohio, born in Jefferson county. Her parents were Robert A. and Jane Sherrard, the former of whom was well known in the community in which he lived, and was noted for his upright character and earnest convictions of duty, the latter a woman of much strength of character. From both parents Miss Sherrard inherited strong religious impressions, which have always been carried into her life. After attending the public schools of her native county, she entered the Steubenville (Ohio) Female Seminary in 1847, and was graduated from that institution in 1851. After an extended experience as a teacher in seminaries and other excellent schools, she was, in 1874, elected principal of the Washington Female Seminary, entering upon her duties in September of the same year.

This excellent and time-honored school was established in 1836. From that time until the present it has always had the reputation of keeping abreast with other institutions of its class. It has been noted for the excellence of its teachers in all departments, and the Christian influences which have been exerted in the school and which have gone out from it. The school has steadily increased in numbers and influence, until the catalogue for 1892-93 shows a larger attendance than ever before.

GH. P. CHRISTMAN, M. D., a leading homeopathic physician in the county, with residence in Washington, is a native of the Keystone State, having been born in Upper Uwchlan township, Chester county, February 12, 1859. His ancestors on the mother's side came to this country from Maxton Parish, in Scotland, and settled in Chester county some two hundred years ago, his great-great-grandfather, George Maxton, having been the keeper of the once famous hostelry known as the "Yellow Springs" Inn, at one time a fashionable health resort, at which place he had the honor of entertaining George Washington. Our subject's ancestors on the father's side came to this country from Schleswig-Holstein (then a province of Prussia), landing at Philadelphia September 15, 1730; they also settled in Chester county, and became a prominent family in the affairs of the county.

William Davis Christman, father of Dr. Christman, a native of Chester county, served with distinction in the Union army. He married Zilpha A. Maxton, of the same place, and they became the parents of three children, viz.: Cora (who died in young womanhood), G. H. P. and Frederick B., the latter at this time (1893) being engaged in business in Chicago.

The subject of this sketch passed his boyhood and youth principally in West Chester, Chester county, receiving his education in the common schools and graduating at the high school (being the only male member of his class); he also received private instruction from Prof. Franklin Taylor, late superintendent of the schools of Philadelphia. In 1877 he commenced the study of medicine in West Chester under Dr. Joseph E. Jones, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania; then entered the Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia, graduating with honors March 10, 1881, and afterward attended lectures in New York. At Baltimore, Md., and at Wilmington, Del., he was assistant to well-known physicians of those places. He practiced medicine in Philadelphia for a time, and came to Washington, Penn., in 1890, where he has since been engaged in a lucrative practice which is rapidly expanding. Politically the Doctor is a straight Republican, and while a resident of West Chester was especially active in the interests of his party. The Doctor is unmarried and resides with his parents.

JOHAN M. FULTON, dentist, Washington, is a native of the county, born in South Strabane township, July 14, 1858, a son of Samuel Fulton, also a native of South Strabane township. The family are of Scotch-Irish extraction, and John Fulton, grandfather of subject, came to this county in an early day, settling in the original township of Strabane, where he died. He had married Hannah McMillan, granddaughter of John McMillan, who founded the college at Canonsburg. She died in 1891 at the age of seventy years, the mother of the following children: Samuel (deceased); James R., in South Strabane township; Thomas, in Illinois; William and John, both in South Strabane township; Elizabeth, wife of William Pry, in Virginia; Belle and Robert. The grandfather, John Fulton, died in 1869, at the age of fifty-nine years.

Samuel Fulton received a liberal education at the common schools of his native township, and at Jefferson College, where he took a literary course and graduated in the class of 1857. He then studied dentistry in Washington, and subsequently entered into partnership with one Robertson, in 1866, which continued for a short time when he bought out his partner's interest in the business, and continued with eminent success up to his death, which occurred February 11, 1890, when aged fifty-seven years, the result of an attack of the "grip." He was originally a Democrat, but in the later years of his life was a pronounced Prohibitionist. In 1857 he was married to Miss Margaret J., daughter of John Rankin, of North Strabane township, and five children were born to them, as follows: John M. (subject of sketch); Mary Hannah, wife of Rev. John Scouller, in northwestern Pennsylvania; Ollie Belle (married to George Walker), now deceased; Anna H. and Ada M., the last named dying from the effects of the "grip." The mother is yet living in Washington.

John M. Fulton, the subject proper of this memoir, received a thorough common-school training, and began studying his profession in his father's office. In 1879 he entered the Pennsylvania Dental College at Philadelphia, from which he graduated in 1881, and he then at once commenced the practice of dentistry in Washington, in partnership with his father, which existed until the latter's death, since when our subject has continued the business alone. He is well skilled in his business, and has a wide circle of friends. On December 4, 1883, Dr. Fulton was married to Elizabeth, daughter of John E. and Julia A. (Winters) Bell, of Washington, to which union two children have been born—John Donnan and Samuel Floyd. The Doctor is a member of the Second Presbyterian Church, and in politics is a Democrat.

The Bell family are prominent in Washington county. Thomas Bell and Agnes Scott were married February 3, 1814, and became the parents of ten children, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: Robert, March 3, 1818; William, October 23, 1820; John E., September 24, 1822; Rachel, August 2, 1824; Josiah S., June 23, 1826; Thomas C., July 24, 1828; Esther, January 13, 1831; Violet, August 5, 1832; Boyd and James. Of these, John E. married Miss Julia A. Winters, and their children were as follows: Millie (now deceased), Greta (wife of John Donnan, of Washington), Lula (wife of John Sweeney, of Elm Grove, Penn.), Sadie (wife of Dr. Thistle, of Washington), Carrie (wife of Horace P. Rose, of Johnstown, Penn.), and Elizabeth (wife of Dr. John M. Fulton). The father of this family died December 29, 1874, in Washington; the mother is still living, and is now in her seventy-third year. Mr. Bell was a Republican, and held the offices of county treasurer, prothonotary, clerk of commissioners, and at the time of his death was Deputy United States Collector of Internal Revenue, all of which incumbencies he filled faithfully and to the satisfaction of all. He was a most highly esteemed citizen, and after his death was much missed in the community, for his uprightness and integrity of character had won him hosts of friends. His widow, Mrs. Agnes (Scott) Bell, is a daughter of Alexander and Rachel (McDowell) Scott, and a granddaughter of Josiah and Violet Scott. Alexander Scott (born in December, 1763) and Rachel McDowell (born November 17, 1773), were married November 18, 1790, by Rev. John McMillan, and were the parents of children, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: Violet, August 15, 1791; John, January 7, 1793; William, April 8, 1794; Agnes, January 24, 1796; John, September 29, 1798; Sarah, January 30, 1801; Josiah, December 1, 1803; James, March 26, 1807, and Rachel, August 18, 1810.

JOHAN M. STOCKDALE. "Hic et ubique" might justly be applied as the motto of the sturdy Scotch-Irish race, who have so deeply made their impress, the wide world over, as champions of liberty and civil rights, and are ever to be found in the van of civilization and progress. Of such strong, hardy and brave people comes the gentleman whose name appears at the opening of this biographical sketch.

Mr. Stockdale is a native of Greene county, Penn., born in 1824, a son of William and Hannah Stockdale. James Stockdale, the grandfather of John M., came from the North of Ireland about 1787, on a visit to America, and was led by circumstances to remain. Having exhausted his funds in traveling about the country, he began milling, which business he had learned of his father in Ireland, intending to make money enough to return home; but the Fates ordered otherwise, for he fell in love with and married Miss Weir, and never went back. In 1790 the young couple settled in what was then Washington (now Greene) county, where were born to them children as follows: William, Nancy (now Mrs. Robert Patton, of Fayette county, Penn.), Sarah (wife of Maj. James Ringland) and Elizabeth, wife of Squire Benjamin Jennings, of Waynesburg, Greene Co., Penn. The mother of these children died in 1823, and the father in 1840, at the age of eighty-six years.

William Stockdale, father of our subject, was born in 1792, on the homestead in Morris township, Greene Co., Penn., and was brought up there. He married Hannah McQuaid, a daughter of John McQuaid, of Washington county, Penn. Their residence was the old home place, where they passed the remainder of their lives. The children born to them were: (1) James, whose death, at forty-five, was the result of an accident at a railroad station in Lancaster, Ohio; he had lived for a number of years in Baltimore, and was twice a member of the Legislature of Maryland. (2) John M. (3) Robert P., who lives in Mt. Pleasant, Henry Co., Iowa. (4) Thomas R., who left Jefferson College (Penn.) with the class of 1856, and located in Summit, Miss., where he continues to practice law; he has represented his District for several terms in Congress, and is now a member. (5) Mary, the wife of Dr. Thaddeus Dodd. (6) Isabella, who married H. B. Lindley, of Morris township, Washington county, and (7) Sarah P., who married Joseph B. Wise, Esq., of West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. The father died at the age seventy-one years, on the farm upon which he was born, and the mother in 1873, aged seventy-six years.

John M. Stockdale was born and reared on the farm, was sent to an academy to prepare for college, and graduated from Washington College in 1849. He studied law with T. M. T. McKennan, and his son Judge William McKennan, of Washington, Penn., and was admitted to practice in 1852. In 1853 he became the owner and editor of the Waynesburg (Greene county) Messenger, the only Democratic newspaper in the county. In 1854 he was elected, on the Democratic ticket, to represent Greene county in the State Legislature, and was re-elected in 1855. In 1856 he went to the Northwest for recreation and health, but became connected with business matters in Fort Dodge, on the Des Moines river, Iowa, and remained there until 1865. In the meantime he was appointed (in 1857) Register of the Government Land Office in Fort Dodge, which he held until July, 1861. During his residence there he dealt very largely in real estate, having bought and sold more than two hundred thousand acres of land, as the records show; but the Civil war depressed or destroyed, for the time, nearly all land values in the Northwest, and made real estate a hazardous investment. In 1863 Mr. Stockdale, in his absence, was nominated for the State Senate from his district in Iowa, but declined to accept the nomination. In 1864 he was an elector on the McClelland ticket. In 1865 he removed to the city of Baltimore, where he engaged in the wholesale drug trade in the well-known house of Stockdale, Smith & Co., on the corner of Howard and German streets, and also in a Petroleum Oil Refinery near the shipping wharves, until the Standard Oil Co., by methods now well known, secured control of all pipe lines and means of transportation, including heavy special rebates that crushed all competitors.

In 1881 Mr. Stockdale removed to Washington, Penn., and published the Review and Examiner until 1886 when he retired from journalistic work and is now in a law office in Washington. In 1884 he received the nomination of the Democratic party for Congress in a District embracing Washington, Beaver and Lawrence counties. In 1883, when the project was untested by experience, he applied for and secured a State Charter, for the transportation and consumption of natural gas for "heat and light." The prosecution of the project by a company of enterprising citizens resulted in the development of natural gas and oil in the immediate vicinity, stimulating enterprise, and Washington, Penn., is now the most beautiful, attractive and flourishing town on the waters of the Ohio.

In 1857 Mr. Stockdale married Miss Martha, daughter of Abner Clark, of Ten Mile Valley, Washington Co., Penn., whose grandfather was an early settler of the county. She has a sister, Mrs. Logan, of Philadelphia, Penn., and two brothers, William E. and James E. Clark, both married and living in Washington, D. C. One child, Elizabeth C., has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Stockdale, and lives with them at their home on East Wheeling Street, Washington, Pennsylvania.

S C. CARMACK. This gentleman, the genial and popular landlord of the well-known and widely patronized hotel in Monongahela, known as the "Sheplar House," comes of German ancestry.

Peter Carmack, the first of the family known to have been born in America, was reared and married somewhere "east of the mountains," and in an early day came to Bedford county, Penn., settling in the town of St. Clairsville, where he followed his trade of shoemaker during the rest of his life. He was in politics an Old-line Whig. The children born to him, eight in number, were Abraham, Daniel, Peter, Rachel, Susanna, Maria, and two whose names are now unknown. Of this family, Abraham Carmack was born in Bedford county, Penn., and at the early schools of St. Clairsville received a fairly liberal education for those days. Learning blacksmithing, he followed that trade in his native county, in Somerset county, and for a time in Monongahela, whither he had come in 1839. Shortly after his arrival here, he took up the trade of stone mason which he followed during the rest of his life. He died in 1864, a Democrat in politics, and a member of the Baptist Church. He married Susanna Wickham, of Hancock, Md., and the following named children were born to them: Josiah W., Zachariah, Hezekiah, Zephaniah, Jeremiah, Ameriah, Soriah, Maria, Annah Sophia, Margaret Keziah, and Rachel Soriah and Savanah. The mother of this family departed this life in 1884.

In 1852 Hezekiah Carmack married Miss Louisa Crall, of Monongahela, and they had two children: S. C. and Susie V. Mr. Carmack went to California in March, 1852, by the overland route, the trip occupying five months, and while en route he fell exhausted from thirst. A friend ran three miles for water, and returned with some just in time to save the life of the nearly expiring man. When he arrived in Sacramento, Mr. Carmack worked for a time at his trade, that of molder, and then took up land and commenced farming, but a disastrous flood came, which so discouraged him that he betook himself to the mountains, there to try his luck at mining. Here he, I. Shelby Crall and Lenard Savage located the "Savage Mine" at Virginia City, Nev. After leaving that place, Mr. Carmack located in North San Juan, where he built a saw-mill, at the same time interesting himself in mining. He afterward sold out and proceeded to Chico, Butte Co., Cal., and again took up farming, including the raising of stock, which he is yet engaged in at the same place. In politics he is a straight Democrat.

S. C. Carmack, the subject proper of this sketch, was born February 28, 1862, in North San Juan, Cal., where he received his education. In 1882 he came to Monongahela, and here for some three years worked in Mark Boreland & Son's clothing store, and then for H. Landefeld two years. In April, 1892, he took charge of what is now known as the "Sheplar House," a hostelry he conducts with characteristic ability, care and judgment, and where he is building up a reputation as caterer for the traveling public and others, second to none in the county. On April 13, 1888, while employed in the store of M. Boreland & Sons, Mr. Carmack was married to Lillie, daughter of the late James P. Sheplar (of whom a brief sketch follows), and one child, Prescott, has been born to them. In his political preferences Mr. Carmack is a Republican.

JAMES P. SHEPLAR (deceased), who in his lifetime was one of the best representative men of Monongahela, was a native of the county, born in Peters township April 21, 1822, a son of Philip and Mary (Hill) Sheplar, the former of whom first saw the light in Washington county, where he was reared and educated. He married Mary, daughter of Henry Hill, of the same county, and the children born to them were John (deceased), Jacob (in Davenport, Iowa), James P. (deceased), Henry (deceased), Nancy (wife of Capt. James Campbell, of river fame, now residing at Huntington, W. Va.), Marvin (deceased), Samuel (on a stock ranch, Santa Rosa, Cal.), Josephine (wife of Dorville Libbey, in San Francisco, Cal.), and Cyrus (deceased). Philip Sheplar was all his life an enterprising agriculturist in the county, and for years was proprietor of the "Nation Hotel" in Pittsburgh. In politics he was a Whig and Republican, and in church connection a Baptist. He died in Pittsburgh about the year 1862.

James P. Sheplar attended the common schools of the neighborhood of his boyhood home, and when eighteen years of age went to West Alexander where he learned blacksmithing with a man named McGowan. Afterward he worked at his trade in Washington, Manchester, Connellsville and West Newton, and later was engaged in peddling stoves in Washington county. In 1852 he went to California by the overland route, the journey taking from March to July 4, following, and here followed his trade for a short time until he commenced mining; but at the latter occupation he did not long remain, for we find that he soon returned to his old trade among the "gold diggers." Returning to Washington county in 1852, he concluded to make his future home in Monongahela, and having purchased the "Hempfield House," he successfully conducted the same until 1883, when he retired from the hotel business and removed to a comfortable dwelling he had erected in the same town. Some time after taking the hotel he changed its name to "Sheplar House," by which it is now known. In connection with the hotel business Mr. Sheplar at one time dealt largely in sheep, leaving the "House" in the care of his wife while he was absent in Texas buying sheep. There he left them, however, as the war was then in progress, and returned to Washington county, but afterward revisited Texas and sold of his purchase what of the sheep could then be found. He also paid no little attention to the oil development in the vicinity of Oil City, Penn., being interested in several wells there.

On September 10, 1851, Mr. Sheplar was married to Sarah A., daughter of Abraham Teeters, a native of Monongahela, where he was educated and learned the trade of hatter, which he followed some years. He married Nancy Marshall, of Maryland, and their children were Eliza, Mahala, Washington, Marshall, Sarah A., Susan, Daniel, Bird and John, of whom but two survived: Sarah A. (Mrs. Sheplar), and Washington (a resident of Chicago). In politics Mr. Teeters was an active Democrat, in religion a prominent member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, being an officer in the same. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Sheplar were as follows: Josephine (now living at Riverside, Cal., the widow of I. B. Miller), Wilbert (in San Francisco, Cal.), Cora and Arba (both deceased), and Lillie (Mrs. S. C. Carmack). Mr.

Sheplar died September 18, 1891, aged nearly seventy years; his widow is still a resident of Monongahela, at the old hotel site. Mr. Sheplar was a conservative business man, careful and prudent, and at the time of his death was the owner of eleven distinct properties in Monongahela, his estate being computed as worth something over $60,000. In early life he was a Whig, but in 1856 he changed his politics, and from then till his decease was an enthusiastic Democrat. He frequently served his city as councilman (at one time as president of the council), school director, etc., and twice was placed in nomination by a Democrat county convention, once for treasurer and once for assembly; he also was once a candidate for the position of sheriff. In religion he was an Episcopalian, and was one of the original vestrymen of St. Paul's Church in Monongahela. Socially he was a leading member of the I. O. O. F., having been one of the organizers and charter members of the Lodge in Monongahela. At a meeting held in Council Chambers, Monday, October 5, 1891, the members of the Select and Common Councils of Monongahela passed appropriate in memoriam resolutions upon the death of their justly esteemed friend and colleague.

CARSON, JACKSON and ALEXANDER S. The Carson family have for many years been prominently identified with the leading citizens of Washington county, and a record of the ancestry of the gentlemen, whose names introduce this sketch, will be found at page 1268 in this volume.

Thomas G. Carson was born, about the year 1792, on the home farm in Fallowfield township, Washington county, and received his education in the county schools. In early life he married Elizabeth Scott, a daughter of Parker and Sarah (Carson) Scott, natives of the county, and who lived on a farm in Fallowfield township. They had a family of one son and twelve daughters, one of whom, Lucy Ann, is yet living, near West Belle Vernon, the wife of John Sphar. The children born to Thomas G. Carson were Thomas, Parker, Lucy Ann, Charlotte, Sarah, Washington, Jackson, John and Alexander S. Thomas G. Carson was an ardent Democrat, and in religious faith he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. They passed their lives on the old place where Mrs. Carson died in 1858. Mr. Carson was then married to Esther Melvaine, a native of Somerset township, this county. He died in 1880, having passed his eighty-fourth year. The following children were born to his first marriage: Thomas (who died near Rushville, Ind.), Charlotte, wife of Joseph Rider (in Fallowfield township), Parker; Washington; Jackson; John, in East Pike Run township; Lucy Ann; Sarah (unmarried) and Alexander S.

JACKSON CARSON was born April 3, 1827, on the old homestead in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and received a subscription-school education. On October 3, 1852, he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of John B. and Sarah (Scott) Carson, special mention of whom will be found at page 1268. After his marriage Mr. Carson settled on the 140 acres in Fallowfield township which is now his home, running in debt for same; he also owns 139½ acres in East Pike Run township. He has made many improvements on both farms, and has erected fine residences and three barns on his land. This fine property is the fruit of patient toil and ceaseless industry. He takes some interest in politics, voting with the Democratic party, and has filled many township offices. Three sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Carson, namely: William Henry, deceased at the age of twelve years; Isaac Newton, married and living in East Pike Run township, and John Wesley, a widower, living at home.

ALEXANDER S. CARSON was born May 10, 1838, on the homestead in Fallowfield township, where he now resides, and was educated in the schools of his district. In December, 1871, he was married to Annette, daughter of Henry and Emily (Duvall) Hanan, all three being natives of East Pike Run township, this county, where the marriage took place. Her father died in 1868, and her mother in February, 1892. Mr. and Mrs. Carson began wedded life on the farm of 130 (now 206) acres in Fallowfield township, where she died in November, 1880, leaving one son, Walter. In 1882 Mr. Carson married Elizabeth Myers, a native of Somerset township, this county, daughter of John and Mary (Ross) Myers, who were born in Germany, and about the year 1854 came to America, locating in Washington county, where both died. To this union four children have been born, namely: Jesse, Frederick Ross, Harry Fell, and Elmer Clarence. Mr. Carson's farm is well conducted, and on it, in addition to general agriculture, he raises a fine grade of Short-horn Jersey cattle. Politically he votes with the Democratic party, and he has held local offices; Mrs. Carson is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek.

JAMES AGNEW, a prosperous farmer of Mt. Pleasant township, is a son of James Agnew, whose father was a pioneer settler of Washington county, coming here in about 1784. James Agnew, father of subject, was born in 1803, in Chartiers township, this county, and was reared and educated on his father's farm. He was united in marriage with Nancy Jane Buchanan, a native of Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and the young people began life in a rude log cabin, on a farm now owned by their descendants, which was then as unbroken forest. The children born to these pioneers were Elizabeth, deceased wife of Joseph Porter, of Canton township; two sons that died in infancy; James and Nancy Jane (twins; Nancy Jane is the wife of William Stewart, of Washington, Penn.). The father of this family died in 1880, in Mt. Pleasant township, his wife having passed away many years prior to his death. He was an active member of the Democratic party.

James Agnew was born in 1842 on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township which he now owns, and received his education in the common schools of the neighborhood. In 1881 he was married to Rebecca McDowell, a native of the same township, and daughter of John and Margaret (Miller) McDowell, also natives of Mt. Pleasant township, where they passed their married life. Mr. McDowell died in 1886, his wife several years before. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church. After his marriage to Rebecca McDowell, James Agnew settled on the farm of 115 acres, which he has since been employed in managing. Mr. and Mrs. Agnew are members of the Presbyterian Church at Mt. Prospect, and are always ready to do all in their power to further any laudable object.

MATTHEW TAYLOR, who in his lifetime was a representative of one of oldest and most prominent families in the county, was born March 5, 1817, in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn.

His grandfather, Henry Taylor, was a native of Wales, and about the year 1770 took a "tomahawk right" of 1,200 acres of land in this county, and added thereto until the amount aggregated some 1,700 acres, all lying in what is now South Strabane township. He was a member of the M. E. Church, a Whig in politics, and was the first judge of the courts. He married Jane White, and by her had seven sons and six daughters, of whom Matthew (the eldest) was the first white male child born west of the Alleghanies, his birth occurring on the property above referred to. Matthew married Nancy, daughter of Thomas Hutchinson, on February 14, 1803, and settled on part of his father's tract. The children born of this union were Henry, born March 6, 1804; Jane, born August 12, 1807, married Oliver Lindsey; Thomas, born September 21, 1805, married Susan Donington; Mary, born April 8, 1809, married John McFarland; James, born April 11, 1811; Julia, born April 4, 1814, married Hugh Reynolds; Eliza, born March 12, 1805, married Andrew VanEman; Matthew and George (twins), born March 5, 1817, the former of whom is the subject of this sketch, the latter married to Jane Munnell; Rachel, born March 28, 1824, married Workman Hughes; and William, born April 3, 1830.

Matthew Taylor.

These were all born where the family now reside. Mr. Taylor died June 19, 1852. By profession he was a civil engineer. He was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, and in politics was a Whig. Mrs. Taylor died March 19, 1877.

Matthew Taylor, whose name appears at the opening of this biographical sketch, was educated at the subscription schools in his locality, and was brought up to farm life from early boyhood. On May 26, 1864, he married Jane, daughter of George Forrest, a native of Edinburgh, Scotland, who when but a boy moved with his parents to Penrith, Cumberland, England, and when eighteen years of age he moved to London, where he married Miss Alice Rhodes, of that city. The children born to this union were Alice (Mrs. Hugh W. Boyle), Emma (Mrs. John B. Hallam), George, Jane (Mrs. Matthew Taylor), Robert R., Mary (Mrs. John Munce), Richard R. and J. R. To Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were born three children, viz.: George Forrest, Rachel Mary and John Richard. Mr. Taylor passed from earth October 15, 1889, and was buried in Washington. For many years he was connected with the M. E. Church, of which he was a trustee. In politics he was an Abolitionist, later a Republican, and held many offices of trust in the township. The fine farm, whereon his widow continues to reside, was improved by Mr. Taylor himself, and he built the commodious and elegant brick family residence.

THOMAS LILLEY, a prominent and highly respected agriculturist of East Pike Run township, is a grandson of Walter Lilley, who was born in Ireland, and immigrating to America died in Chester county, Penn.

Thomas Lilley (father of subject) was born and reared on a farm in Chester county, and coming to Washington county in 1801, bought 160 acres in East Pike Run township, where he followed the blacksmith trade in connection with farming. In 1810 he erected a large stone house and barn upon the place. He was an active worker in the Whig party, and in religious faith he and his wife (who was formerly Ruth Woodard) were members of the Society of Friends. They were the parents of ten children, of which large family Thomas is the only one yet living. The father died in 1840, aged sixty-eight years, followed by the mother in 1845, who had passed her seventy-fifth year.

Thomas Lilley, whose name opens this sketch, was born October 12, 1814, on the farm in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., where he is yet living. He attended the subscription schools when a boy, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. In 1842 he was married to Susan Ulery, born in 1815, in this county, a daughter of Stephen and Christina Ulery, who were of German descendant and pioneer settlers of Washington county. To the union of Thomas and Susan (Ulery) Lilley six children have been born, namely: Jacob, Thomas E., Simeon, Ruth J. (wife of John Elliott), Eli (deceased), and Stephen (deceased). Mr. Lilley owns the old homestead, consisting of 230 acres of prime land. In politics he is a Republican, and has served as school director for several years. His wife is a member of the M. E. Church.

ELIS N. LILLEY, who in his lifetime was an influential citizen of California, Penn., was a son of Ellis Lilley (who was a native of this county) and a nephew of Thomas Lilley, a sketch of whom precedes this. In early manhood Ellis Lilley was united in marriage with Elizabeth Phillips, also a native of this county, and the young couple settled permanently on a farm in East Pike Run township. They were the parents of six children, namely: Solomon, Ruth (wife of B. C. Jackman), Thomas, Ellis N., Elizabeth (wife of Dr. Johnson) and Phoebe (married to Arthur Hulis). Mr. Lilley was a leading member of the Westland Quaker Church, and in politics was a Whig and Republican. He and his wife were buried in the home cemetery.

Ellis N. Lilley was born July 19, 1837, on the farm in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., where he received the advantages of a public-school education. After leaving the public school he devoted some time to teaching, and he entered this work with his characteristic energy, which meant success. He proved a power for good, which was felt long after he was gone. He was married November 1, 1866, by J. C. Momyer, pastor of Greenfield C. P. Congregation, to Kate, daughter of Dr. Lewis Marchand, a native of Westmoreland county, Penn. The latter attended the public schools, and deciding to study medicine entered the office of a physician, with whom he remained several months. He then took a medical course, and after graduating began to practice his profession at Uniontown, Penn., where he continued to reside until failing health compelled him to seek rest in his country home. He was married to Sarah Sackett, a native of Fayette county, Penn., who bore him children as follows: Samuel, Rachel, Elizabeth, Louisa, Caroline, Lucius and Kate (Mrs. Lilley). Dr. Marchand possessed as a family heritage the receipt for the cure of hydrophobia, from which many wonderful cures have been reported. He was an ardent Whig and Republican in politics, and in religious faith was a leading member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Ellis N. and Kate (Marchand) Lilley resided on the home farm until 1881, when, his sight failing, he moved to California, same county. He died July 25, 1891, leaving three children, viz.: Sarah, Henrietta and Wilbur. He was buried in the Marchand family burying ground, across the river from California. In political opinion Mr. Lilley was an enthusiastic Republican, and in religious faith he gave liberally of his time and money to the support of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He was deeply interested in the founding of the Southwestern State Normal School at California, Penn., and put his first earned money into it. He served as trustee until his health failed. Patience in sickness and trouble, and a kind heart that reached all the poor and needy, were his notable characteristics, and by everybody could this be emphasized.

JACOB M. STEWART. The Stewart family are numbered with the leading pioneers of this county, and have ever been distinguished as successful, enterprising and popular citizens. Archibald Stewart was born in Ireland, and coming to America in early manhood, was married to Rebecca Reed, a native of Pennsylvania. They settled in Chartiers township, Washington county, where he followed farming and blacksmithing. Their children were: James R., Mary (wife of Samuel Griffith, of Hickory, Mt. Pleasant township, this county), Jane (deceased in 1883, wife of William S. White, of Canonsburg), Joseph (deceased in Illinois, where he was married), William (married and living in Villisca, Iowa), Margaret (deceased in 1872, wife of David Miller, of this county), Sarah (married to Andrew Miller, of Mt. Pleasant township), and John (deceased in 1886, in Donegal township, this county). The father died June 5, 1812.

James R. Stewart was born in 1812, on the home farm in Chartiers township, where his widow is now living. He received a meager education in the district schools, then learned the blacksmith's trade of his father, which he afterward followed in connection with farming. On May 23, 1839, he was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Miller, a daughter of Jacob Miller, who was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and there married to Jane Filston, also a native of eastern Pennsylvania. Soon after their marriage, the young couple came to Washington county, locating near McConnell's Mills, in Chartiers township. Some years later they moved to the old Col. Robert Miller farm, where the following children were born: Rachel (wife of Thomas Sproat, living in South Strabane township), Mary (wife of Samuel McNary; both were twice married), Nancy (wife of John Boon), Jane (wife of Richard Sproat, in Ohio), Samuel (a wagon-maker of Hickory, Mt. Pleasant township), Catherine (wife of James McDowell, of Mt. Pleasant), Jacob (who married and moved to Ohio), Margaret (was married to John McDowell, of Mt. Pleasant township), Sophia, Robert W. (deceased in August, 1891), Elizabeth T. (Mrs. James R. Stewart) and Sarah (unmarried). Of this family Mrs. Stewart is the only living member. The father was an active member of the Washington Presbyterian Church. In politics he voted with the Democratic party.

After his marriage, James R. Stewart settled on the home farm, where his widow is yet living, and continued to follow his trade in addition to farm work. He was actively interested in religious work, he and his wife being earnest members of the Chartiers Cross Roads United Presbyterian Church. In politics he voted the Republican ticket. Mr. Stewart died May 22, 1880, mourned by the many friends who knew and valued his sterling worth. He left a widow and two children: Rebecca and Jacob M. Rebecca Stewart was born on the home farm in Chartiers township, and on October 20, 1864, was married to William H. Thompson, a native of Canonsburg. He was born May 17, 1837, and is the eldest son of Joseph Thompson, who married Emily Galby, and lived near Canonsburg until his death. William H. and Rebecca (Stewart) Thompson settled in Canonsburg after their marriage, where he followed his trade of wagon-making, finally moving to the farm. He was an active worker in the Republican party, and in religious faith a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg. He died February 1, 1873. Mrs. Thompson is living on the home place. She has had five children, viz.: James Stewart, born February 10, 1867; Joseph (a graduate of Duff's Commercial College, Pittsburgh, Penn.), born January 30, 1869; Elizabeth Emma, born December 8, 1872 (deceased in infancy); Millie R., born February 26, 1872, and an infant, who died in 1871. The mother has given her children the advantages of a good education. Mrs. Stewart is a worthy representative of her family, which has been one of the earliest in the county, and is ever ready to aid in any enterprise to promote the public welfare.

Jacob M. Stewart was born September 28, 1842, on the home farm in Chartiers township, and attended school in District No. 3, Chartiers township, and after leaving school assisted in clearing and improving the home place. On May 28, 1861, he was united in marriage with Rebecca J., daughter of Rev. John Todd, who was born near Green Garden, Beaver Co., Penn., and was married in Canonsburg, Washington county, to Rebecca Thompson, a native of Canonsburg. He was a minister of the United Presbyterian Church, and first settled in Jefferson county, Penn., but afterward moved to Washington, Iowa, thence to Burgettstown, Penn., where he and his wife died.

To Jacob M. and Rebecca J. Stewart five children were born, viz.: Blanche L., Frank L., Grace

Mabel, Edith Rebecca and Myrtle May. The mother of this family died March 9, 1879, and December 28, 1881. Mr. Stewart was married, at Hickory, this county, to Lizzie J., daughter of John and Jemima (Buchanan) Grounds, natives of this county. Both parents are yet living in Hickory, this county, and the father has passed his ninetieth birthday. Mr. Stewart received 133 acres from the paternal estate, and he has added 110 acres to the original tract, making a good farm, which is well stocked, and improved with all necessary buildings, the handsome brick residence having been erected before the death of his father. Jacob Stewart votes the Prohibition ticket, and has served as a member of the school board, and in various offices of trust. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Hickory, of which he is an elder.

ALLEXANDER DEVORE is a son of Andrew Devore, who was born in Washington county, Penn., where he was married to a Miss Steele, of Redstone, Penn. She bore him five children, as follows: Henry, Lydia A. (Mrs. Crookham, living in this county), Eliza (Mrs. Seeley), David (deceased) and Alexander. The mother died in 1880, aged seventy-five years, having been preceded by the father, who passed away before the birth of his youngest son.

Alexander Devore was born March 20, 1830, on the home place in Nottingham township, this county. On January 15, 1851, he was united in marriage with Miss Martha Thomas, of this county, and the following children were born to their union: Jonathan T., Abigail A., Elizabeth J., Liverton D. and Nancy B. The mother of this family died in 1865, and October 11, 1867, he was married to Elizabeth Robb, who has borne him eleven children, five of whom are yet living, viz.: Edwin L., Owen W., Oscar C., Maud and Lydia A., all at home.

Mr. Devore began life on a farm, at the age of sixteen years, without a penny to pay his expenses. He worked for board and clothes until twenty-one years of age, when his employer, Andrew Crouch, gave him $100. With this small amount as capital he rented a farm, and then began saving his money until able to purchase one. When the war began he secured many recruits for the army, and on February 14, 1865, sent as his own substitute, one Matthew Crookham, who received an honorable discharge at the close of the war. In 1865 Mr. Devore bought sixty-seven acres in Somerset township, which he sold after the war was over. He then purchased the home place of eighty acres in Nottingham township, to which he has added from adjoining farms, now owning 207 acres of well-cultivated land worth from $80 to $90 per acre, and has erected a fine house and barn on the place.

Mr. Devore has engaged somewhat extensively in stock, and now has over 300 sheep, twenty head of different stock of cattle, and twelve horses, of the best grade of stock.

JJ. CHESTER. Among the prominent agriculturists of Allen township, none are more deserving of special mention than this prosperous gentleman, whose name has from an early time been associated with the best interests of Washington county.

Many years ago Joseph and Elizabeth Chester, natives of eastern Pennsylvania, came to Washington county, and there made a home on a tract of land which he patented. Among the children who came to this pioneer couple was one son, S. A., whose brothers were Morrison, who resided in Guernsey county, Ohio, and died January 21, 1893, and Benjamin, who died in California.

S. A. Chester was born March 16, 1818, on the home farm in Allen township, Washington county. He was there married to Margaret Jackman, who was born on the farm their children now occupy. Mr. Chester affiliated with the Whig and Republican parties, and served in many local offices. Mrs. Chester died about the year 1871, leaving the following children: Joseph W. (who died in 1873 in Vernon county, Mo.), John A. (living in Moundville, Vernon Co., Mo.), Elizabeth Ann (deceased at the age of eight years), J. J. (whose name opens this sketch), James Harvey (who died in 1875 in Allen township), Margaret Ann (deceased wife of Irving McKenna, of Fayette City), Jane A. (deceased wife of Allen Ailes, of Columbus, Kans.), S. T., and Fremont (who died when twelve years of age). S. A. Chester died in March, 1888.

J. J. Chester, the fourth son of S. A. and Margaret Chester, was born July 4, 1846, in Allen township, Washington county. He attended the home schools and assisted on the farm during boyhood. On August 15, 1863, he enlisted at New Brighton, Penn., in Company A, Forty-sixth P. V. I., for three years, or during the war. He was mustered into service at New Brighton and assigned to the old Twelfth, Army of the Potomac, which, combined with the Eleventh, formed the Twentieth corps, army of the Cumberland. Mr. Chester participated in the battles of Lookout Mountain and Resaca, at which latter he received a gunshot wound in the face and right arm. He was taken to the hospital at Chattanooga, Tenn., thence transferred to Pittsburgh, Penn., and on May 18, 1865, received his discharge, returning to Allen township. On September 8, 1869, Mr. Chester was united in marriage with Miss E. A. Gatts, who was born in West Virginia, a daughter of C. D. and Mary (Riggs) Gatts, also natives of West Virginia, and who, while crossing a railroad track were accidentally killed.

The paternal grandfather of Miss Gatts was a native of Washington county, Penn. After their marriage (the ceremony having taken place in Virginia) Mr. and Mrs. Chester first located on the home farm in Allen township, Washington county, but in 1878 he bought the 107 $\frac{3}{4}$  acres of land which they now occupy, and where he has since followed farming. The children born to them were Avolena, living in Los Angeles, Cal.; Raymond H.; Christian L.; Lydia May, deceased at the age of seven weeks; Blaine, and Neva, the last named being deceased. Mr. Chester takes an active interest in the success of the Republican party, and is a member of the "Harry Billingsley" Post No. 168 G. A. R., at California, this county. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Mount Tabor.

ALLEXANDER McCLEERY, one of the oldest native-born citizens of West Finley township, if not the oldest, was born July 28, 1820, and is of Irish descent.

His grandfather, John McCleery, was married in 1788 to Miss Jane Brooks, in County Down, Ireland, and December 15, 1789, they set sail from Londonderry for America, landing at New Castle, Del., February 13, 1790, after a long and perilous voyage of eight weeks and four days, during which they encountered a severe storm which threatened their destruction. They brought with them their eldest child James, who became the father of Alexander McCleery, and from Delaware they proceeded to Winchester, Va. In Winchester they remained until late in the year 1799, when they emigrated to Washington county, Penn., and settled in Donegal township for several years, his last place of residence there being on the farm of Joseph Hupp (deceased), on the waters of Buffalo creek. While moving they spent their Christmas on the Alleghany mountains. The roads across the mountains were difficult to travel at that time, and when starting on their journey from Winchester, they were weighed as freight and charged accordingly. John McCleery, grandfather of Alexander McCleery, continued to work at his trade of shoemaking and at farming. He and his wife were the parents of six children, namely: James (who as above stated was born in County Down, Ireland, October 15, 1789), Nancy, Betsey, Jane, Thomas and John, none of whom ever married except James and Thomas. The family continued to live where they had first settled on Buffalo creek, Donegal township, until the spring of 1818 (on August 26, 1816, the husband and father, John McCleery, died), in which year they removed to West Finley township, and bought a tract of 106 acres of land entirely in the woods, built their cabin, cleared up a large portion of the land, and made a good living and some money besides. About the fall of 1848 they sold the farm and removed to the State of Illinois, settling in Adams county. (The farm they had settled on in West Finley township is at the present time owned and occupied by Mr. George S. Eckles). They are all now dead but Jane, who is over ninety years of age. Thomas McCleery and Miss Martha Lawson were united in marriage about the year 1823, and settled in Marshall county, Va. (now W. Va.), and lived there till the fall of 1833, when they emigrated to Adams county, Ill. They reared four sons and seven daughters, some of whom are dead, the rest of them are married and living in the West; the parents are both deceased.

James McCleery, father of Alexander McCleery, was reared on his father's farm to the life of an agriculturist, and his education was obtained at the subscription schools of the period. He and Miss Catharine Forbes were united in marriage March 21, 1818, and settled on the first day of the following April in West Finley township, on a farm he had bought the previous year, and which is now owned and occupied by Mr. John McCammon. Alexander Forbes (father of Mrs. James McCleery) and a Miss Boyd were united in marriage about the year 1774, in York county, Penn., and several years later they migrated to Washington county, settling first on the waters of Pigeon creek, Washington county, afterward in Donegal township. They were the parents of four children: Mary, Catharine, Sarah and John. At this time there are none of the Forbes family living in Washington county, all having either died or moved to other parts. Our subject well remembers his mother telling about the insurgent army of the whisky insurrectionists passing her father's house, when on their way to Inspector Neville's residence. They compelled her husband to go along with them, and he started with the crowd (some 500 or 600 men), but after proceeding several miles he observed that the men were traveling at loose ends, no military discipline being observed, and so decided to make his escape from among them. Accordingly, an opportunity presenting itself, being near the rear he slipped into the brush by the roadside, and laid down behind a log for some time till all stragglers had passed. He then sped homeward by a different route from the one he had come by, so as to avoid any straggler that might have lagged behind. The burning of Neville's house history says was done July 17, 1791, so Alexander Forbes and his wife must have first settled on the waters of Pigeon creek sometime prior to that year.

James and Catharine McCleery were the parents of six children, as follows: John, Alexander,

Alexander McLeery

James (who died when eight years old), Joseph, Thomas and Jane. Of these John married Sarah Irwin in 1844, and emigrated to Fairfield, Iowa (he and his wife are now both deceased); Joseph married Sarah Patterson in 1855, and in 1870 moved to Marshall county, Iowa, thence to Holt county, Neb; Thomas married Sallie Davidson, and lives in West Finley township; Jane, on May 12, 1851, married Henry Giles, who died in West Finley township in October, 1875 (she is now living in Claysville, Washington Co., Penn.). The parents continued to live where they first settled and there the father died October 28, 1859, aged seventy years, the mother on May 27, 1864, aged seventy-seven years.

Alexander McCleery, the subject proper of this memoir, was reared to the vocation of a farmer. The first school he attended was in a vacant cabin, prepared for a school-house by cutting out a log on each of the three squares nearly the whole length of the square (the chimney or fireplace being on the other square), and greasing paper and pasting it to the logs above and below the opening to allow light for the school. The seats were made of small chestnut logs, flattened on the top for the scholars to sit on, which were supported by two-inch pins in the under side, thereby making the seats as high as a chair. At that cabin he attended two terms of five months each, with five or six weeks' vacation between terms of school, and at no school thereafter did he make as good progress. He got all his schooling at the common schools—first at subscription schools, afterward at the free schools.

They did not have school every winter. After the two terms in the cabin, people interested in schools concluded to build a new school-house by voluntary labor, and the work was parceled out in about this order: one man was to hew two logs, another four logs, another seven, and so on, according to the number of scholars each had to send; a cabinet maker, named Daniel Sutherland, for his share made the door and window-sash, and laid the floor; stone masons built the chimney for their part—so there was no money paid for anything except the glass and nails. The work moved slowly, and it was about the fourth winter before school opened in the new building. School was held in this building seven winters on the subscription plan, when the free school system was adopted, which caused another halt in the schools for several years, or until enough taxes were collected to build a new frame school-house. After the new house was built, Mr. McCleery attended four terms, and got through all the branches taught in common schools at that time.

When nearing his twenty-third year, Mr. McCleery left his father's home, and for three years labored on the farm of James Davidson, West Finley township; and on the latter's death the family employed him to manage the farm and stock, in which capacity he worked five years. On March 13, 1851, Alexander McCleery and Miss Mary Davidson (eldest daughter of James Davidson) were united in marriage, and on the 24th day of the same month they moved to the farm on which he has ever since resided. Their family numbered four children, namely: William D. (now a practicing physician in Hanover town, Columbiana Co., Ohio; is married to Miss Lida Brown, and they have three children—two girls and one boy), James (married to Miss Lula Sutherland, of West Alexander, Penn., and living on his farm in Hopewell township; has two children—one boy and one girl), Henrietta (married to R. G. Buchanan, of West Virginia; they are living in Ohio county, W. Va.; they have five children—four girls and one boy) and Robert D. (still at home, unmarried). The mother of these children died March 31, 1863, and Mr. McCleery married, October 5, 1870, Miss Lizzie Ackley, daughter of Joshua Ackley, of Greene county, Penn. She died December 7, 1871, leaving a young daughter, then two months old, named Mary Lizzie, who is still living at home with her father.

The McCleerys all belonged to the old Whig party until after the Harrison campaign of 1840, when the Anti-slavery question arose, at which time they joined the Abolition party, and so remained until the Republican party made known its principles, since when they have voted and worked with the latter.

Alexander McCleery united with the Free Presbyterian Church in 1851, and remained with it until it disbanded in 1868, after which he united with the Presbyterian Church in West Alexander, in charge of Dr. W. H. Lester, and has been one of the elders for a number of years. He has been repeatedly called to fill the various township offices: served four full terms as justice of the peace (his successor is his brother Thomas), and served one term as county commissioner of Washington county; of late years he has had to decline the office on account of increasing deafness. Mr. McCleery has succeeded in his financial affairs beyond his early expectations, and is the owner of 282 acres of land, where he now lives. His son, Robert D., has 103 acres which he aided him to pay, making a total of 385 acres in a square tract, beside 170 acres in Hopewell township, Washington county, he paid $65 per acre for, and which he has deeded to his two sons, James and Robert D.; James owns it all at this time, and lives on the farm. Mr. McCleery spent a considerable amount of money sending his older children to college; but with all his liberal outlays he is entirely free from debt.

WILLIAM MASON CAMPBELL ranks among the first of the prominent and successful business men of Cross Creek township. The pioneer of the family of whom he is a prominent member was one John Campbell, who about 1780, came from York county, Penn., to this county, finally settling on a farm of 191 acres in Cross Creek township. In those early days the Redmen yet roamed through their native forests, looking with jealous eye and lowering brow upon the pale-faced intruders. Of the many traditions rife concerning the adventures of John Campbell, the following is told: While he was mowing a small meadow near his house, a sudden and peculiar noise broke the silence; turning hastily he discovered several Indians advancing toward him. He fled to the house, the Indians in hot pursuit, but managed to get inside and bar the door before they could overtake him. He then opened fire on them through the windows and succeeded in driving them away. On March 31, 1772, John Campbell was married to Miss Mary Hammond, a native of York county, Penn., and to this union children were born as follows: Ann, March 27, 1773; Griselda, February 19, 1775; John, January 30, 1777, William, August 11, 1779; James, November 9, 1781 (these three sons settled in Belmont county, Ohio); David, March 25, 1784; Charles, October 31, 1786; George, June 5, 1789 (the latter three remained in Cross Creek township); Mary, February 4, 1792, married to William Fulton, of Mt. Pleasant township; and Elizabeth, October 9, 1793, wife of William Rea, all now deceased. The father died August 13, 1807, aged sixty-three years, the mother on March 18, 1817, aged sixty-four years.

Charles Campbell was born and reared on the home farm in Cross Creek township, and in his boyhood received a common school education, which was afterward supplemented by current reading. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade, but a few years later devoted his attention to tilling the soil. On February 22, 1810, he was married to Miss Esther Mason, also a native of Cross Creek township, and after their marriage the young people settled on the home farm. They reared children, whose names and dates of birth are here given: Lucinda, January 9, 1811; Mary, February 27, 1812; Elizabeth, August 7, 1813; John, July 23, 1815; William Mason, November 10, 1816; Louisa, February 25, 1818; David, March 20, 1820; Hannah, April 10, 1822; and Easter, July 23, 1824. Of these but one survives, William Mason. The father of this family died June 4, 1832, the mother having passed away February 1, 1825, aged about thirty five years. They were both members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he was an elder many years. He was a man of considerable ability as a writer in his day.

William Mason Campbell was born on the old homestead which was patented in 1787 by his grandfather, who had taken out a warrant in 1785. He attended the schools of the day, then held in rude log cabins erected for that purpose, the only light afforded coming through window panes made of greased paper. In September, 1842, Mason Campbell (as he is usually called) married Isabella Ramsey, of Buffalo township, this county, and one son came to their union, David, born November 14, 1851 (he studied at Oakdale Academy, and is now a professional teacher of McKeesport, Penn.). The mother died a few days after the birth of her son, and was interred in the cemetery at Mt. Prospect, this county. On January 3, 1856, Mr. Campbell was united in marriage with Annie E. McIlvaine, of Mt. Pleasant township, who bore him the following children: William C., born October 28, 1856, Mary E., born March 30, 1858; Jennie, born February 6, 1860 (wife of Edward McNary, of Ingram, Penn.); Charles L., born February 15, 1862 (a practicing physician of Hickory, this county); John L., born August 11, 1864 (a farmer and ranchman of Wyoming); Annie L., born July 17, 1867 (wife of Robert Farar, a merchant of Hickory, Penn.); James C., born March 18, 1870 (a student in the mercantile college at McKeesport), and Alexander M., born June 22, 1874 (living on the home farm). Soon after his marriage Mr. Campbell settled on the farm of 186 acres of fine land in Cross Creek township, where he is now engaged in farming and stockraising, usually keeping about 300 sheep. Politically he has always been a staunch Republican, and has held many township offices, notwithstanding the fact that his township is strongly Democratic. In religious faith Mr. Campbell has been a member of the Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church since a young man, and has been an elder in same for about forty years.

WILLIAM MARTIN, a prosperous farmer and substantial citizen of Smith township, is of Irish descent. James Martin, his grandfather, was born in Ireland, where he was married, afterward coming to America and locating permanently in Jefferson township, Allegheny Co., Penn., where they lived to an advanced age. The children born to this pioneer couple were: James (who was a shoemaker of Holmes county, Ohio), John (a former resident of Ohio), Robert (who lived in Ohio), Ann (first married to David Canada, then became Mrs. Deerfield, and resided in southern Indiana) and William. All of this family are now deceased, there having been thirteen children, of whom those named lived to a mature age.

William Martin was born July 4, 1802, in Jefferson township, Allegheny Co., Penn., and received a common school education. He learned the carpenter's trade, passing his earlier life in the pursuit of that vocation, and assisting with the farm duties during the busy season. On March 9, 1826, he was united in marriage with Jane Walker, who was born October 6, 1800, in the eastern part of Pennsylvania, but came when a small child with her parents to Washington county. The children of William and Jane (Walker) Martin were as follows: Nancy, born March 5, 1827 (first married to William Figley, now the wife of Robert Deerfield, of Nebraska); Margaret, born September 6, 1829, (Mrs. James Arbuckle, of Pine Run, Jefferson township, Allegheny Co., Penn.); John, born December 19, 1831 (deceased September 13, 1851); William (mentioned below), born September 24, 1833; Morgan, born March 28, 1835 (drowned July 11, 1848); Eliza J., born March 4, 1837 (deceased October 17, 1870); Prudence Ann, born May 30, 1840 (Mrs. Joseph Castor of Union township, Washington county); Robert J., born November 19, 1843 (deceased January 12, 1864), and Perry A., born September 11, 1846 (a carpenter of Union township, this county). After his marriage the father of this family first settled near Finleyville, Washington county, and followed the carpenter's trade, also making grain cradles. In 1855 he located in Jefferson township, Allegheny county, where he died March 11, 1874, and October 1, 1884, his wife was laid to rest beside him. In politics he was a life-long Democrat, although politicians of other parties made frequent attempts to change his views. He and his wife were highly respected members of the community.

William Martin was born in Union township, this county, was reared on his father's farm, and educated in the country schools. On September 4, 1862, he was united in marriage with Kate, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Bebhanna) Shepler, born November 8, 1835, in Snowden township, Allegheny Co., Penn. The children born to William and Kate Martin are as follows: John A., born September 3, 1863 (living on a farm near Oakdale, Allegheny Co., Penn.); Sarah, born March 14, 1865 (Mrs. William Snyder, of Snowden township, Allegheny county); Mary (Mrs. S. Watters, a farmer near Oakdale, Allegheny county); James S., born July 2, 1869 (living at home); William, born February 9, 1871 (living with his parents); Jane, born March 20, 1874 (deceased August 15, 1877), and Thomas S., born July 26, 1878 (deceased June 4, 1879). Mr. and Mrs. Martin first settled in Jefferson township, Allegheny county, then moved to Snowden township, same county, remaining there some time. In 1881 he located near Finleyville, Union township, this county, and in 1886 settled on a part of the old "Phillis tract," one of the oldest farms in the county, lying about one and a half miles west of Bulger, in Smith township. It was the first piece of land in the county for which a genuine title was made out. Mr. Martin is a successful farmer and gives considerable attention to dairying, and by industry combined with careful management, has amassed a competence. He began life with little capital save the valuable inheritance of good principle instilled by his father, but since his marriage has had the assistance of a good business manager in the person of his wife, who superintends her household with careful economy. Politically William Martin has always been a Democrat, and in religion he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church of Burgettstown.

JOHN L. MCGOUGH, one of the representative and prosperous young farmers of Hanover township, is a descendant of a well-known pioneer family. His grandfather, named Robert McGough, was born in Ireland, and when a young man came to America, first locating in Jefferson township, Washington Co., Penn. He there married Mary Provines, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, who came to America with her parents in early girlhood. To this union were born children as follows: William, went to Jefferson county, Ohio, where he died; John, of Columbiana county, Ohio; Mary Ann, widow of E. S. Campbell; Robert, of whom a sketch follows; Sarah (Mrs. Absalom McCullough) and Rebecca, widow of James Neil, Wellsville, Ohio, twins; Samuel of Wellsville, Ohio, and Andy (deceased). The only capital of Robert McGough was a good supply of energy and industry. Year after year saw his possessions increase, and at the time of his death he owned six farms, with which he gave all his children a good start in life. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion he and his wife were members of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown. They were buried in the Burgettstown U. P. cemetery.

Robert McGough, son of Robert and Mary (Provines) McGough, was born in 1831, in Jefferson township, and received a good education. He partially learned the surveyor's profession, but devoted most of his life to farming. In 1860 he was married to Mary M. Lee, daughter of John Lee, of Jefferson township, who bore him the following children: John L., William W. (a carpenter of Steubenville, Ohio), Mary (wife of William Anderson, of Jefferson township) and Samuel B. (deceased in youth). After his marriage Robert McGough lived for some time with his father in Jefferson township, and in 1861 came to Hanover township, locating on the farm where he died in October, 1880, and was buried in Burgettstown. He was an excellent judge of cattle, and devoted considerable attention to that department of agriculture. In politics he affiliated with the Democratic party—and held various offices in the township. After his death Mrs. McGough resided for seven years on the old home farm, then removed to Steubenville, Ohio, where she is living.

John L. McGough was born December 25, 1860, in Jefferson township, having been but an infant when his parents removed to Hanover township. He was reared to manhood on the farm which is his present home, receiving a common-school education. On September 25, 1884, he was married to Belle Stephenson, who was born May 14, 1860, a daughter of David and Rachel (Noah) Stephenson, of Jefferson township. To this union two children were born: Vance L. and Elsie D. Mr. and Mrs. McGough have always resided on the home place, following farming and stockraising. The spirit of progression, so characteristic a trait in the lives of father and grandfather, is equally marked in the acts of John L. McGough. Politically he is a Democrat, and in religion both he and his wife are members of the M. E. Church.

WP. FULTON, a prosperous and well-known liveryman of Canonsburg, is a grandson of William Fulton, whose parents were of Scotch-Irish descent, and first located in Baltimore, Md., where many of the family yet remain. The branch of which William was a member finally settled in Smith township, Washington Co., Penn. He was born in Maryland, and was a young man at the time the family moved to the county. He was married to Mary Campbell, whose parents were also pioneer settlers of Washington county, and the young people settled on the old homestead in Mt. Pleasant township, this county. They were both members of the Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church.

George Fulton, a son of William and Mary (Campbell) Fulton, was born on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, where his early education was received. When a young man he was united in marriage with Jemima J., daughter of Benjamin and Rebecca Pinkerton. He always followed agricultural pursuits on the old place, where his children were born as follows: David, Minerva (wife of John Christie), W. P., Greta O. and Lulu M. The father took an active interest in all public movements, and voted with the Democratic party. In religion he was a member and liberal supporter of the Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church. He and the wife of his youth lie side by side in the Mt. Prospect cemetery.

W. P. Fulton was born August 10, 1865, on the old home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and attended the neighboring schools. In 1888 he took a trip West, remaining one year in Nebraska, then returning home settled in Hickory, this county. In March, 1891, he purchased the C.

R. McCloy livery establishment, which he is now conducting. He is an active politician of the Democratic party, a progressive citizen and energetic man.

JAMES PROVINES, a well-known farmer of Jefferson township, was born February 13, 1816, on the farm which he now owns. He is a son of William Provines, whose father, John, was born and reared among the hills of Scotland, where he was married, and whence, a few years later, he moved to Ireland. William, the son of John Provines, was born in Scotland, and came with the family to Ireland when a boy. He was there reared to agricultural pursuits, and was married to Rebecca Hemphill, a native of Ireland. William Provines remained in Ireland about ten years after his marriage, and there his three eldest children—Mary, Samuel and Andrew—were born. In 1812 the family came to America, locating in Washington county, Penn., where children were born as follows: John, Robert, Margaret, James, Sarah, Jane and Rebecca.

James Provines was early trained to agricultural pursuits, and has always followed that vocation. He was first married November 13, 1851, to Mary Campbell, of Smith township, Washington Co., Penn.; she was born January 4, 1817. After their marriage the young people settled on the home farm, and four children were born to them, namely: Mary S. (living with her parents); Rebecca H., wife of W. P. Shillito; John C., and Margaret, the two latter being deceased. Mrs. Provines died November 20, 1856, and Mr. Provines was afterward married March 7, 1861, to Mary L. Mortland, who was born January 16, 1824, a daughter of Robert and Jane (Provines) Mortland, natives of County Tyrone, Ireland. Politically Mr. Provines is an active Democrat, although not a strict partisan. He has been an earnest member of the United Presbyterian Church of Burgettstown for many years, and is one of its most liberal supporters.

CAPTAIN J. FULTON BELL, a gallant officer of the Civil war, was born near Jefferson, Greene Co., Penn., August 23, 1841. His father's ancestors in this country were of Scotch descent, and his paternal grandmother was a near relation of Harrod, of Boone county, Ky., fame, hence the bravery and daring of the descendant.

The parents of Capt. J. F. Bell were both natives of Pennsylvania, born in Morgan township, Greene county, the father, Levi Harrod Bell, on March 12, 1807; the mother, Sarah Fulton Bell, on July 2, same year. They were married February 2, 1826, and had a family of three sons and ten daughters, as follows: Mrs. Catherine Greenlee (deceased), born August 9, 1828; Rachel, born January 4, 1831, died September 19, 1837; Jane, born March 15, 1832, died November 2, 1852; Mrs. Elizabeth Galbraith, born March 20, 1834, now living in Des Moines, Iowa; Mary, born July 23, 1836, died March 22, 1837; Sarah F., born December 31, 1837, married to Col. Hiram Milligan Miller, late of the Second Missouri Cavalry, and now in Kahoka Mo.; Mrs. Letticia Reynolds (deceased), born December 1, 1839 (she was a student at Lewisburg (Penn.) Seminary (Baptist), now Bucknell University, and graduated from same); Capt. John Fulton (subject of sketch); Mrs. Elizabeth Hughes, born July 7, 1843, now living near Des Moines, Iowa (she was a student at same seminary as her sister Letticia); Isaac, born February 24, 1845, now in Kahoka, Mo.; Mrs. Margaret Anne Shaw, born December 15, 1846, now a resident of St. Paul, Minn.; James McVay, born April 13, 1848, residing in Morgantown, W. Va.; and Emma, born July 15, 1850 (deceased). The father of this family died in 1862, in Amwell township, Washington county, and was buried at Mt. Hermon; the mother passed away in 1871 at St. Francesville, Mo., and her remains lie interred near that place. Mr. Levi H. Bell was ordained one of the deacons of Jefferson Baptist Church, and on his removal to Washington county was ordained a deacon of Mt. Hermon Baptist Church.

Sincerely yours
J. F. Bell

Capt. J. Fulton Bell lived near Jefferson, Greene county, until he was nineteen years of age, and in the summer of 1860 he attended George's Creek Academy, Fayette county, Penn. He removed with his father to Washington county in November, 1860, the latter having purchased what is known as the old "Paul Farm," it being a portion of the old "Cook Patent." On August 22, 1862, he enlisted at Amity, Washington county, in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., and was promoted June 21, 1863, from the rank of corporal to that of sergeant. On November 1, 1863, he became first sergeant; on July 20, 1864, near City Point, Va., he was commissioned, by Gov. Andy Curtin of Pennsylvania (known as the "War Governor"), first lieutenant. On May 17, 1865, he became captain of his company, in which capacity he remained until mustered out May 31, 1865, near Alexandria Va. Having been promoted from the ranks, he was afterward known as "the boy who went out as eighth corporal, and came back as captain." The regiment in which he served (One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I.) ranked third in casualties, and was perhaps entitled to the first place in regard to enlistments and length of time in service. On the second day at Gettysburg, near Little Round Top, or "Devil's Den," this regiment lost 276 officers and men in less than an hour, Col. Richard P. Roberts and Capt. David Acheson, senior captain, being among the number. This regiment was in service thirty-three months, and took part in some twenty-five engagements, beginning at Chancellorsville and ending at Appomattox. After his return from the war Capt. Bell engaged in farming (having purchased in 1868 the home farm) and stock raising, of which he has made a success.

On May 6, 1868, the captain was married to Lydia Ross, daughter of Judge Benjamin and Hannah (Johns) Ross, of Ruff Creek, Greene Co., Penn., who were born March 17, 1802, and June 9, 1811, respectively. They were the parents of eleven children, as follows: Mrs. Catherine Cox (deceased), born September 20, 1829 (she was educated at a school in Chester county, Penn.); Mrs. Rachel Dunn (deceased), born July 7, 1831; Thomas, born October 8, 1833 (crossed the Plains to California in 1858); Elizabeth Ann (deceased), born December 2, 1835; Abner, born March 30, 1838 (he is ex-State senator and ex-sheriff of Greene county); Jacob, born July 17, 1840 (he served in the Anderson troops in the Civil war); Mrs. Lydia Bell, born January 6, 1843; Benjamin F., born November 18, 1846 (he spent several years in the mines of Colorado); Nathaniel (deceased), born August 12, 1849; Hannah Maria (deceased), born June 9, 1853; and Heath J., born July 12, 1858 (is at present district attorney of Greene county). Capt. Bell and his wife have five children, Benjamin Harrod (was for two years a student of Monongahela College), Sarah Frances (educated at Waynesburg College), now engaged in teaching, Lyda Emma (attending Washington Female Seminary), Abner Ross, and James Franklin.

Politically the Captain has always been a Republican, and with the exception of one year has been commander of Philo Paul Post No. 458, G. A. R., ever since it was organized, in October, 1884. In 1890 he was enumerator for the second precinct of Amwell township. Capt. Bell is one of the most highly esteemed residents of Washington county, enjoying the record of an honorable career in the service of his country, and he has faithfully discharged his duties of a private citizen in all times of peace. Both the Captain and Mrs. Bell are members of Mt. Hermon Baptist Church (Washington county), as are their three eldest children, the former being elected to the office of Deacon several years ago. On the contemplating of the building of the Waynesburg & Washington Narrow Gauge Railroad, Capt. Bell was a member of one of the soliciting committees to raise money and procure the right of way, and was in a measure successful, subscribing several shares of stock. After the completion of the road he was elected one of the directors and reelected for two successive terms.

JOHNS FRESHWATER, a leading farmer and small fruit grower of Hanover township, is a native of Brooke county, W. Va., of which locality his ancestors were early residents. This gentleman and his family are descended from three brothers who came into West Virginia soon after the beginning of the present century, and located in the territory which is now Brooke county.

The brothers were named, respectively, Reuben, Archibald and David, who came from east of the mountains, and were born east of the mountains. Of these, Archibald was the grandfather of our subject. After locating in West Virginia he was married to Sarah Gardner, a native of Jefferson township, Washington county, who bore him the following children: John, who went to Armstrong county, Penn., afterward settling in Pittsburgh, Penn.; Archibald, of whom a sketch is given; William, moved to Van Buren county, Iowa; Fanny, married to Josiah Jones, a resident of Wellsburgh, W. Va.; David, moved to Wood county, W. Va.; and Elizabeth, wife of Samuel Wright, resided near Chambersburgh, Penn. Of this family David is the only one living. The parents passed their lives on the farm in Washington county, where the father was a successful agriculturist, and where he died in 1856 at a ripe old age. After his death his widow remained for some time on the home place, then went to Wood county, W. Va., and lived with her son, David, until she too was called to enter the "valley of the shadow of death."

Archibald, son of Archibald and Sarah (Gardner) Freshwater, was born March 16, 1814, in Brooke county, W. Va., remaining on the farm during his boyhood and attending the subscription schools. In 1837 he was married to Elizabeth Trax, who bore him the following children: William, a farmer of Hanover township, born July 22, 1838; Archibald, deceased farmer of Hanover township, born October 6, 1839; Sarah Ann, deceased wife of David Smith, of Hanover township, born February 28, 1841; David, born June 9, 1843; Elias, a blacksmith of Paris, Penn., born March 22, 1845; John, whose name opens this sketch; Mary Jane, of Colliers, W. Va., born September 22, 1849; Elizabeth Amanda, Mrs. James Caldwell, of Hanover township, born March 5, 1852; and James, a farmer of Hanover township, born December 5, 1854. After his marriage Archibald Freshwater rented a farm in Hancock county, W. Va.; remaining there for some time, then went to Brooke county, W. Va., and in 1853 came to Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn., where his latter days were passed in agricultural pursuits. He died in 1883, having been preceded by his wife in 1876, and both now lie buried in the Paris cemetery. Mr. Freshwater was a member of the Methodist Church, his wife having been identified with the Baptist Society. In politics he was a Democrat.

John Freshwater was born February 10, 1847, and when but six years of age came with his parents to Washington county. He attended the common schools of the home district, and when a young man began to learn the blacksmith trade, but after serving three months of an apprenticeship gave up the trade, and later was employed on the P., C. & St. L. R. R. for two years. On December 15, 1870, he was united in marriage with Margaret Wells, who was born June 23, 1847, in Brooke county, W. Va., a daughter of James and Margaret (Crall) Wells. The Wells family were among the leading pioneers of Brooke county. The children of John and Margaret Freshwater are as follows: Lawrence A., Fred C., Emma F., Harry B., John W., Oscar C., Beulah J. and Lydia E., all of whom are living at home. Mr. and Mrs. Freshwater began wedded life on a farm in Hanover township. In 1881 he purchased the "Matthew Russell" farm, where he has ever since resided. In addition to farming he is extensively engaged in the raising of small fruits and berries, and belongs to the progressive, wide-awake type of agriculturists. In politics he is a Democrat, and is a highly esteemed citizen of the community. Mrs. Freshwater is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

REZIN C. WOODFILL. Among the pre-Revolutionary settlers of Washington county was Joseph Woodfill, who was born September 17, 1754, and six years later came to East Bethlehem township, Washington county. Here he studied after the fashion of boys of that period, and became a Methodist Episcopal preacher. His marriage with Miss Catherine Gudsbell took place October 20, 1777, and to this union the following named children were born: Joseph, Catherine, Mary, Elizabeth, Rezin and John.

Rezin Woodfill was born December 20, 1792, in East Bethlehem township, and there was reared to manhood in a pioneer log cabin. His educational advantages were necessarily limited, as opportunities were few, and time was money in those early days. On December 4, 1817, he married Miss Sarah Dotson, and to this union were born: Joseph D., July 30, 1819 (a farmer of East Bethlehem, who married Mary White, November 7, 1841, and they are the parents of Andrew, Margaret, Ella, White, Oliver, Mary and Bert Woodfill); John B. (a farmer of Fayette county, Penn.); William M. (a grocer in Washington borough); Mary (widow of S. Bromfield, of Fayette county, Penn.); Andrew (who died while at college, Meadville, Penn.); James (who died at California, Penn.); Melinda (deceased); Charles W. (a physician, who died in Preston county, W. Va.); Rezin C. (the subject of this notice) and Lizzie Ball. The father of this family voted with the Republican party, and in religious affairs affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Both parents are numbered with the majority.

Rezin C. Woodfill, son of Rezin and Sarah Woodfill, was born July 9, 1833, on the home farm. Having received the education which the schools of the district afforded, he set out for Iowa with the intention of remaining in that State; but his health failing, he returned to Pennsylvania, and worked for his father on the home farm; after his mother's death he bought the interests of the other heirs in the estate. On October 11, 1862, Mr. Rezin was married to Maggie C. Ridlingshafer, of Brownsville, Penn., and to this marriage were born William J. (a carpenter), Charles R., John C., Frank G., Jesse S., Ollie B., Le Roy, Sallie J., Annie L. and May L. With the exception of John C. and Frank G., who are clerks at Brownsville, all reside with the parents. All are members of the M. E. Church. Mr. Rezin C. Woodfill is a Republican. The home farm embraces seventy-six acres of fertile land, which is devoted to agriculture.

CHRISTIAN HOOTMAN is a well-known and prosperous representative of one of the pioneer families of Washington county. He is a grandson of David Hootman, who was of German birth, and as a Hessian soldier, in the pay of the British, came to America in the Revolutionary war. No sooner did an opportunity offer, than the brave young German deserted from the British ranks, and enlisted as a drummer boy with the patriots in their struggle for liberty.

After the close of the Revolution, he remained in America, and it is supposed located in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., about the year 1780, where he remained until his death, in 1859, after a life of nearly a century. He was married in Washington county, and to this marriage were born: Henry, Jacob, John, David, Christopher, Mrs. Fannie Miller, and Mrs. Catherine Shaler. Mr. Hootman was a Democrat, and held several offices in the township.

David Hootman, father of the subject of this sketch, was born in 1793, in Donegal township, this county, where he passed his whole life. He attended the rate schools, and became a very well-informed and successful man. When about fifteen years of age he learned the blacksmith's trade, and after an apprenticeship of four years, opened an office on the Monongahela pike. In 1815 he married Nancy, daughter of Benjamin Parkson, of Nottingham township, and she bore him nine children: Benjamin, David, John, Clarinda, Polly, Mrs. Nancy Hill, Christian, William and Anderson. David Hootman began life with 6½ cents, and at his death the estate was valued at $40,000. For many years he was captain in the State militia, and at one time was a candidate for the State Legislature, having been a prominent man in the Jeffersonian Democratic party. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek. Mr. Hootman died in 1868, followed by his wife in 1878. Washington Parkson, a brother of Mrs. David Hootman, was a prominent actor in the Whisky Insurrection, and the pardon which he received from George Washington is still in the possession of Mr. Hootman's brother.

Christian Hootman was born in 1828 in Nottingham township, and attended the home schools during his boyhood. When a young man he was united in marriage with Ursula Myers, who has borne him the following children: David H. (deceased), William W., James P., Jerry M., and Dora A. Mr. Hootman has served his township in various offices, and votes the Democratic ticket. He owns 120 acres of the old home place, having remained at home until the death of his parents. He and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek.

JAMES C. WALKER, a wealthy and influential farmer of Jefferson township, is a son of James Walker, whose grandfather, David, was born in New Jersey, and was there married to Elizabeth Elliott, of the same State. Soon after their marriage David and Elizabeth Walker moved to Huntingdon county, Penn., and, about 1772, settled near a little town called Barnt Cabins. Here the following children were born and reared: Alexander, John, David, James, Martha, Sarah (Mrs. Cree), Susan, Polly and Isabella, all of whom are now deceased.

Alexander Walker was born May 10, 1773, in Huntingdon county, Penn., and worked on the home farm until 1795. He then came to Washington county, settling in Jefferson township on the place now owned by his son Samuel. Here Alexander Walker was married, October 26, 1800, to Elizabeth Norris, who was born December 8, 1778. The young people settled on the home farm, which Mr. Walker managed in connection with distilling, the latter being at that time as important an industry as milling. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Walker were as follows: Elizabeth, born February 22, 1802; John, born June 8, 1803; David, born September 19, 1804; James, born January 1, 1807; John N., born June 24, 1808; Susanna, born December 22, 1809; Alexander, born June 21, 1811; Mary Ann, born February 7, 1814; David S., born July 6, 1816; Isabella, born November 17, 1818; Drusilla, born February 16, 1821; and Samuel, born April 18, 1823. The father of this family died September 8, 1854, and was followed by the mother December 17, 1855.

James Walker (the father of subject) passed his youth on the old Walker homestead, and October 9, 1828, was married to Elizabeth Graham, a native of this county. They have passed all their wedded life in the old house on the home farm, where six children have been born to them, namely: Olivia, born in March, 1830; John G., born in August, 1831; Alexander, born in August, 1833; William W., born in August, 1836; Ann D., born August 28, 1838; and James C., born August 14, 1842.

James C. Walker was born and reared on the old farm, and in early manhood was united in marriage with Eliza, daughter of William Vanordstrandt, a native of Washington county. After his marriage James immediately bought out the interest of the other heirs in the homestead, and made it his permanent home. One daughter blessed this union: Anna E., born in 1862 (now married to B. B. Stroud, of Independence). The mother died October 12, 1862, and Mr. Walker married Hannah E. Caldwell, November 21, 1867, of Hanover township, who bore him two sons: Norris, born November 24, 1868, and James, born February 5, 1873. Mrs. Hannah E. Walker died January 26, 1875, and March 20, 1878, Mr. Walker married Belle Sutherland, of Smithfield, Ohio. They have three children, namely: Mary M., born May 3, 1881; John Sherman, born January 9, 1883; and Bessie Graham, born April 19, 1884. Mr. Walker is a farmer and stock raiser, and owns 200 acres of fine land, upon which he has erected a handsome residence. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and in religion a liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church.

A M. HANLIN. The Hanlin family for almost a century have been identified with the progress and development of Hanover township. They have assisted in the advancement and support of all enterprises which have served to place this township in its present position among the magnificent galaxy of townships contained in Washington county, Penn.

The present generation of this family trace their ancestry to four brothers, John, William, James and Alexander, who were children of Alexander and Nancy (Stewart) Hanlin, and natives of County Tyrone, Ireland. The father dying in County Tyrone, the family, consisting of the widow, four sons and three daughters (Elizabeth, Nancy and Jane), came to America in 1792. Their first location was in Lancaster county, Penn., where the sons engaged in various kinds of employment. Energy and health formed their sole capital. One daughter, Nancy, was married in eastern Pennsylvania, and there passed her days. Between 1795 and 1800 the other members of the family came farther west, locating on the waters of Buffalo creek, in Washington county, on the "Lawton Farm." The brothers continued to work in partnership until the beginning of the present century, when James purchased land near Paris, Hanover township, this county, and followed the river, making trips to New Orleans. He was married to a Miss Mills. William, John and Alexander jointly purchased of one John Campbell a large tract of land near Harmon's creek, in Hanover township, to which they moved. William was affianced to Anna, daughter of John Fulton, of Hanover township, and his wedding day was set, but he died before the marriage was consummated. John Hanlin was born in 1771 in County Tyrone, Ireland, and in 1823, married Nancy Hanlin, a distant relative and native of Ireland. Her parents came to America, locating in Stenbenville, Ohio, leaving their infant daughter with an aunt in Ireland, with whom she crossed the ocean when but two years of age. To the union of John and Nancy Hanlin the following children were born: A. M., Margery (unmarried, living with her brother in Hanover township), William, John (a farmer of Hanover township), James (deceased) and Eliza (unmarried, living with her brothers). After his marriage John Hanlin located on that portion of the original tract which the three brothers had purchased, where he resided the remainder of his life. He died in 1846, a respected citizen, kind hearted and generous. In 1878 his widow passed away at the advanced age of eighty-six years. She was buried beside her husband in St. John's Protestant Episcopal cemetery, Brooke county, W. Va. They were both members of that church.

A. M. Hanlin was born June 18, 1824, on the old farm which is yet his home, where he was reared to manhood, and attended the country schools of the time. He married Rowena Swearingen May 1, 1860. She was born in 1832, and was a daughter of Capt. Samuel Swearingen, of Beaver county. Their children are as follows: Lewis S., Anna E., Samuel A., James L., and Maud L., all of whom are living at home. Mr. Hanlin has always resided on the old place, being engaged in general farming and stock raising. He has given considerable attention to the sheep industry. He was first a Whig, then a Republican, having taken an active interest in politics, but now gives way to the younger politicians. Both he and his wife are members of the Disciple Church.

THE ANDERSON FAMILY are among the most prominent and esteemed citizens of Cross Creek township. They trace their ancestry to one Francis Anderson, of Butler county, Penn. He was of Scotch parentage, and when a young man came west to try the hard and perilous life of a hunter. In this vocation he soon achieved a reputation as one of the most skilled and successful hunters of the day. In a short time, he had saved a portion of his earnings, and buying a small farm, combined agricultural pursuits with his former vocation. As old age drew near, the excitement and danger of life among the forests lost its power to charm, and he longed for the more quiet, if less eventful, life of the home. He retired from the ranks of Nimrod's followers, being at that time the owner of over 1,000 acres of land, and devoted the remnant of life to agricultural pursuits. With his children and grandchildren around him, the old hero would then relate exciting tales of adventures with panthers, bears and other wild animals of the forest. Thus living again the hunter life, he would for the time forget his surroundings, and with flashing eye and panting breath describe some fierce contest with savage beasts. In peace and comfort the old man passed his declining days, and died at a good old age, leaving children as follows: John, Francis, Robert, James, Samuel, Elizabeth, Jane and Sarah, of whom Elizabeth and Sarah are living.

Robert Anderson was born June 17, 1809, in Butler county, Penn., where he grew to manhood on the farm. At the age of nineteen years he began working on the Pennsylvania Canal, thus earning enough money to enter an academy, which he attended for some time. He then entered the Jefferson College, of Canonsburg, Penn., graduated in 1832, and began the study of medicine under the celebrated Dr. Jonathan Leatherman, of Canonsburg. While pursuing his medical studies, the young man frequently taught short terms of school, finally graduating from the Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia. He began to practice his profession in the town of Hickory, Washington county, but soon after came to Cross Creek village, remaining there until his death. Robert Anderson was united in marriage with Miss Agnes Cochran, a native of Canonsburg, a daughter of the late Henry Cochran, a prominent farmer and stock raiser of that place. The children born to this union were: Henry C., Jane, Lizzie, Francis, James E., Robert and Joseph. Mr. Anderson was a member of the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church. In politics he was a staunch Republican, being one of the leaders of that party. In the year 1860 he was elected to the State Legislature, holding that office two years, meanwhile winning a reputation for strict integrity and honor as well as intellectual power. Of his children there are yet living: Henry C., Robert and Joseph.

Henry C. Anderson (the eldest son) was born November 9, 1834, at Canonsburg, and when but two years of age was brought to Cross Creek village by his parents. He passed his youth on the farm which his father purchased soon after arriving in Cross Creek, and attended the academy at that place for several terms, thus laying the foundation for the extensive literary work in which he has been employed. After leaving school he selected as his life companion, Margaret J. McFarland, daughter of Andrew McFarland, a tailor of Grant City, Mo. Their children are as follows: Flora, Francis, Emma, Charles E., Cassius B., Hattie May, Laura Jeanette, James L., Sarah Isadore and Robert Harold. Henry C. Anderson is an ardent Republican, is connected with Grange, and for many years has been a correspondent of the Farmers' Friend, of Mechanicsburgh, also of the Presbyterian Banner, of Pittsburgh. He has written much valuable history for the county papers, and in church work has been superintendent of the Presbyterian Sabbath-school four years.

ROBERT ANDERSON was born October 8, 1846, in Cross Creek village. He remained on the farm during boyhood, assisting in agricultural work, and receiving a common school education. He afterward attended the Duff Business College, from which he graduated in 1865. He married Sarah N. Stephenson, of Smith township, Washington county, daughter of Mark Stephenson, a prominent farmer of that neighborhood. They have three children: Nannie I., Robert S. and Edna O., all living at home. After his marriage Mr. Anderson settled on the place in Cross Creek where he has since resided, with the exception of three years, during which time he kept store in Cross Creek village. The farm consists of 120 acres of good land. Robert Anderson is a member of the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church, to which he gives liberally. In politics he is a Republican, being an active and influential member of that party, having served his township as road supervisor and census enumerator. Mr. Anderson is one of the most respected citizens of the community, and a successful, honorable business man.

GEORGE JEFFERSON LONG. This well-known citizen of East Pike Run township was born at Brownsville, Fayette Co. Penn., November 9, 1826. He is descended from the early Irish colonists of Maryland.

Luke Long, paternal grandfather of our subject, was born in Harford county, Md., early in the eighteenth century, and there passed his entire life, as an agriculturist. His wife was a Miss Whittick, also a native of Maryland, who bore him three sons and two daughters: John (father of George Jefferson), James (who when a young man took a trading boat down the Ohio, and was never after heard of), Isaac, Mary and Priscilla, all of whom died unmarried except John. In religious faith these children were Methodists, and in political affiliations the sons, like their immediate antecedents, were Democrats. The father of this family died at the patriarchal age of ninety-seven years, the mother at the age of fifty-six.

John Long married Eliza, daughter of Jonathan and Jane Worrell, who were the parents of children as follows: Stephen, Samuel, George, Nathan J., Leonard, John, Eliza, Jane and Elmira. Of these Stephen (of Lancaster county) died leaving four children—two daughters, and two sons George and Leonard; Samuel married a Miss McClain, and had five children; George wedded a Miss Hall, and had two children; Nathan J. married a Miss Hall and had children as follows: Albert, Jane and Samuel; Leonard married Melley Stew, and died leaving no heir; John wedded Hannah Worrell, and had by her the following named children: Hiram, Nathan, William, Dix, John, Samuel and Ann; Jane was married to Robert Raley, and had children; Elmira became the wife of John Bowers, and their children were Frank, John and Mary. The Worrells were of Dutch descent, Whigs and Republicans in their political predilections. Shortly after marriage John and Eliza (Worrell) Long moved to Brownsville, Penn., where children were born to them as follows: Isaac, Mary Jane (married to Isaac Wright and had children of whom Luke, William, Samuel, Elizabeth and Mary survive), George J., John H., Sarah Ann (married to F. N. Duval, and has children), and James L. The last named, who is a resident of Reynoldsville, Penn., and a carpenter by trade, married Louisa Powell, of California, this county, and has one daughter, Kate V., with whom her father resides, her mother having died in 1888. John H. and James L. both served in the Civil war. John Long, the father of this family, was a painter. He was born in Hartford county, Md., died at Coal Centre, Penn., April 2, 1864.

George Jefferson Long was, as has already been stated, but a child when his mother died, and the family, bereft of a loving mother's care, were all separated and widely scattered, to live in new homes. On New Year's Day, 1839, then a lad of some thirteen summers, our subject became one of the family of Isaac Ailes, in the house where now resides Coleman Ailes, and here the orphan boy found a home in truth; so kind to him were these noble people that a stranger could not distinguish, from any word or act, that he was other than one of their own progeny. Here he remained until attaining his majority, in the meantime learning the trade of carpenter, which he followed to some extent in after life. In 1861 he commenced the business of undertaker at Coal Centre, which he has since successfully carried on, although he is now comparatively retired.

At the age of thirty-five Mr. Long was united in marriage with Frances, daughter of Andrew H.

and Mary Holmes, and one son blessed their union, named Walter A., now in the coal business at Cincinnati, Ohio. Mrs. Long was called to her final rest May 13, 1883. She, as has always been her husband, was an earnest supporter of the M. E. Church. Mr. Long united, June 22, 1869 with the Pike Run I. O. O. F., at California, and was a charter member of Vista Lodge at Coal Centre; he has filled all the Chairs in the Lodge, and is a member of the Encampment. In politics he acts with the Republican party.

ALBERT R. COLWELL traces his genealogy to his grandfather, James, who was the first of his family to locate in America.

James Colwell was born, reared and married in Ireland. Emigrating to America, he located near Paris, in Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn. In the midst of the forest his cabin was erected, and he passed the remainder of his life as a "tiller of the soil." He and his wife died, and were buried in the Paris cemetery. James Colwell was a prominent man, highly respected by all, and was elected squire by the Democratic party, of which he was an enthusiastic supporter. The children of his family were as follows: Samuel, whose life was passed on the home farm; William lived in Carroll county, Ohio; Joseph resided in Hanover township, this county; Elizabeth married Matthew Russell, of Hanover township; Thomas; Jane, Mrs. Parks; Andrew; Robert and James. All are now deceased.

Andrew Colwell was born in 1808 on the farm where his father located on coming to this county. His active, energetic spirit became apparent from childhood, and when a young man he took charge of the home farm, which prospered under his care. In 1838 he married Isabella McGonnigle, who was born about 1811, in Hanover township. She was the daughter of William McGonnigle, a native of Ireland, who was there married, and coming to America located in Maryland, and came to Hanover township about the beginning of the present century. Five children were born to Andrew and Isabella Colwell, namely: Robert, residing in Brooke county, W. Va.; James, of Newton county, Mo.; Albert R., our subject; William H., living in Brooke county, W. Va.; and Martha E., Mrs. John Freshwater, of Toronto, Ohio. After his marriage Andrew Colwell continued to reside on the old farm until 1854, when he went to Hancock county, W. Va. Beginning life with little capital, he improved every opportunity, and at the time of his death owned over 400 acres of land in Pennsylvania and West Virginia. He was among the first to engage extensively in the wool industry, in which he was very successful. Politically he was a Democrat until the time of Henry Clay's nomination for President, when he joined the Whig party, finally becoming a Republican. Both he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church. He died in 1870, and was buried in the cemetery at Paris, this county, where his wife was also laid to rest in 1880.

Albert R. Colwell was born February 27, 1842, in the old home in Hanover township, which he now owns. He attended the common schools of his neighborhood, and worked on the farm until his enlistment, August 9, 1862, at Wellsburg, W. Va., in Company K, Twelfth West Virginia Infantry. His first active engagement was at Winchester, Va. He was wounded June 9, 1864, at New Market, having been shot through the side, and was sent to the hospital at Martinsburgh, remaining there three months, then rejoined his regiment, and served until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged, and returned to Brooke county, W. Va. On May 29, 1877, he was married to Mary Criss, who was born in 1854, a daughter of Nicholas and Nancy (Wilson) Criss, of Hanover township. The young people first settled in Brooke county, W. Va., on a farm owned by his father, and in 1891 came to the old home place where he was born, and is now residing. Mr. Colwell follows general farming, and is a leading agriculturist of Hanover township. In politics he votes the Republican ticket, but devotes his principal attention to private business. Mrs. Colwell is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church of Eldersville, Penn. They have one daughter, Nancie Evelyn, who was born November 13, 1879.

ELMOR H. GRIFFITH is a member of one of the oldest leading families of Washington county, and is himself a prominent, progressive citizen of East Bethlehem township.

Some time between the years 1682 and 1690, over a couple of centuries ago, there left their native Welsh home and well-to-do parents, five brothers named Griffith, who, having set sail for America, landed, after a tedious and stormy passage across the Atlantic, at New York. Here they remained together for a short time, and then separated, drifting in various directions, William, one of the five, coming westward and making a permanent settlement in what was then Newcastle county, Md., at that time the home of the "Pennamites." Here he passed the rest of his life, dying at the advanced age of one hundred and five years.

William Griffith, son of this avant-courier of the family under consideration, was born in Newcastle county, Md., in 1714, and in 1735 he moved to Beaver Creek, York Co., Penn., where the remainder of his days was passed. He married Esther Hussey, daughter of Richard and Marion Hussey, the former of whom died in 1785, the latter in 1807. William Griffith departed this life September 21, 1778, his wife having preceded him to the grave in the spring of 1762. He was a rigid and zealous follower of the faith of the Society of Friends, scrupulously honorable in himself, and severely exacting that the same quality should exist in all others. He and his wife reared a large family of children.

Jacob Griffith, son of William and Esther (Hussey) Griffith, and grandfather of the subject of this sketch was born February 27, 1757, in Pennsylvania. In 1796 he came to Washington county, Penn., when, as one of the pioneers, he endured all the hardships incident to the clearing and opening of a new country. He was somewhat small in stature, but nevertheless strong and athletic, quick of foot, and even when an old man he could walk with greater rapidity and apparently less exertion than when he was many years younger. When he came here he was in very moderate circumstances, but was able to buy a small farm in what is now West Pike Run township. On April 16, 1778, he married Lydia Hussey, who bore him children as follows: David, Isaac, Israel, Jason, Esther and Amos, all long since deceased. The father of this family died August 2, 1841, on the home farm in West Pike Run township. Like his father, he was in religious faith a Quaker. His wife met with an accident four years prior to her death which crippled her for the rest of her days. In fact, she never left her bed until death relieved her of her sufferings September 21, 1813. Of their children, Israel, father of Elmor H., was born December 28, 1784, in York county, Penn., coming to this county in 1796, where he received a good education at the subscription schools, which he supplemented with close study and a considerable amount of reading at home. In early life he was trained to the arduous duties of farm life, and when old learned the trade of a cooper, and later that of miller. For several years he owned and conducted the West Pike Run saw and flouring mills, and during the winters of his earlier life taught the district school, which was held in an old log cabin, furnished with the most primitive seats, desks, etc. On November 27, 1826, Mr. Griffith married Letitia Shaw, who was born December 14, 1784, a daughter of Samuel Shaw, an early settler of eastern Pennsylvania, and the following named children were born to them: Eliza, born September 30, 1807, now living in Marshall county, Iowa, the wife of Milton Marsh; Joel, born October 13, 1809, who, a miller by trade, conducted his father's mill (he was the father of a large family, who are now residents of Alliance, Ohio); Eli R., born June 14, 1811, also deceased; Hannah, born January 25, 1818, married John Marsh, and now lives in Marshall county, Iowa; Israel, born May 29, 1820, also a resident of that county, and Elmor H., the subject of these lines. The mother passed away August 30, 1849. Politically, Israel Griffith was originally a Whig, and afterward, on the formation of the party, a Republican. In religion he followed in the footsteps of his forefathers, and he was a man remarkable for his extremely temperate habits, sturdy manhood and sterling integrity, commanding the esteem and respect of all with whom he came in contact. He died in 1862.

Elmor H. Griffith was born December 23, 1827, on the old homestead farm in West Pike Run township, where he was reared, and where he has passed his entire life with the exception of the summer of 1841, which he spent visiting the homes of his brothers and sisters in Iowa. He at one time entertained an idea of moving to and making a new settlement in the "Far West," but ill health dissuaded him. In his boyhood he attended the common schools of his district, and being an apt scholar succeeded in securing an education better than the average in these early days, so that he was well qualified to teach school, which he did with eminent success during some of the winter months in his earlier manhood, the remainder of the year being occupied in the cultivation of the farm products, and in the management of his father's mills. In 1856 Mr. Griffith married Cynthia, daughter of Thomas Heald, of Columbiana county, Ohio; by which union there were no children. Mrs. Griffith departed this life May 25, 1883, and our subject married, in 1885, Miss Emma McConnell, who was born March 22, 1846, a daughter of Austin and Edith McConnell, the result of this union being three children, as follows: Austin Oliver, born April 29, 1886, died April 24, 1891; Edith, born January 2, 1888, and Carrie Augusta, born May 20, 1891. Mr. Griffith is a "dyed-in-the-wool" Republican, and at this writing is filling the office of justice of the peace. In 1865 he embarked in general mercantile business at Centreville, which he is still conducting, at the same time devoting some attention to the repairing of clocks, watches and jewelry, a varied stock of which he always carries. He is a liberal supporter of the Methodist Church which he attends, while his wife, a devout Christian lady, is a faithful member of the Society of Friends.

DAVID WAUGH is a native of County Down, Ireland, having been born there May 24, 1828. He is a son of James Waugh, who was also born in County Down, Ireland, about 1778, and grew to manhood on the home farm. On February 18, 1798, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Cummings, a native of the same county, and then settled upon a farm of his own, where the following children were born and reared: Elizabeth, Jane, Mary (living in San Francisco), Margaret (deceased), Susanna (living in Ireland), James (also living in Ireland), John (deceased in Ireland), Isabella (living in Australia), David (subject of this sketch), Joseph and Alexander. The parents of these children passed their entire lives in the Emerald Isle, toiling for the welfare of their children, and were long since laid to rest.

David Waugh assisted his father with the duties of the farm until he attained the age of twenty years, when he came to America, landing in New York with 25 cents, which he spent the next day to get a tooth extracted. He located in Montgomery, a town situated about ten miles from Philadelphia, Penn., which home was but a few rods from the present residence of John Wanamaker. Five years later he came to Pittsburgh, Penn., where he lived eleven years, and finally made a permanent home in Washington county, Penn. While living in Montgomery he was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Dongan, daughter of William Dongan (a native of County Tipperary, Ireland, where Catherine was born), and they have had four children, of whom the following is a brief record: James resides in Allegheny City, Penn., and is a veterinary surgeon; William is living in Texas, and is a veterinary surgeon of the Third United States Cavalry; Maggie J. is married, and living in Taylorstown, Buffalo township, this county; David remains at home, and assists his father on the farm. Since the day Mr. Waugh landed in New York, and began work for a farmer near Montgomery, he says he has found no time for one idle day. By perseverance and the practice of strict economy, he now owns 156 acres of land, and has given his children a good start in life. He is a Republican.

P. congregation of Pigeon Creek; in his liberality, spending of time and labor unrequited. He was an efficient leader in the erection of the elegant church building in which that congregation now worships. Dying before he had attained his three score years, his mantle has fallen on his only son William, who is worthily following his father's footsteps.

(2) WILLIAM WEIR, a prosperous farmer and stock raiser of Somerset township, of which he is a native, was born December 12, 1842. On May 14, 1856, he was married to Miss Catharine Wilson, who was born December 26, 1831, a daughter of James Wilson, and died February 26, 1889. I., was wounded at Gettysburg, July 2, 1863, and died in rebel hospital, July 5, same year. (5) Mary Jane, born June 14, 1842. This farm, at his death, had been in the Weir family name for nearly 100 years. Of a quiet, steady, even temperament, it was remarked of him that he was rarely if ever seen angry. By constant industry, frugal economy, and good management, he was possessed of a large personal property and valuable real estate at his decease. Like his brother, Thomas, he was ever reliable and trustworthy. For the last fifty years or more of his life he was never free from civic trusts of some kind or other, in Church or State. In many such trusts, large, financially, he was seemingly weighed in the balance, but never found wanting. Born a Whig, he consistently voted with that party until, with the change of name in 1860, he was with the Republicans, but he was never a political aspirant for office. He united as a member, in his mature years, with the U. P. Congregation of Pigeon Creek, where from a child he had been a regular and constant attendant upon Divine worship, and a liberal supporter thereof.

The following additional matter was written by Col. John Scott, of Nevada, Iowa: In the old cemetery near Washington, Penn., repose the ashes of one of the pioneers, over which is this inscription: "In memory of Josiah Scott, who died on the 20th day of February, 1819, aged 84 years. Having sustained a character exemplary for honesty, piety and usefulness, he came to the grave in a full age, as a shock of corn cometh in his season. Job, 5th chap. and 26th verse."

Josiah Scott, the youngest son of (2) Abraham Scott, was born in Chester county, Penn., in 1735. His father was born in the same county in 1677, and was a son of Hugh Scott, a native of the North of Ireland, who came to Pennsylvania about 1670. At least two of the sons of Abraham Scott, Hugh and Josiah, were pioneers in the county of Washington. They lived to an advanced age, both dying in 1819, and each of them leaving a numerous posterity, now widely separated. Josiah Scott married Violet Foster in 1760.

He was a blacksmith—a maker of edge tools, especially of sickles—and was a skillful and rapid reaper, being stout, muscular, and robust. He was of vigorous constitution, plain and simple in manners, habits, and tastes, and noted for his strong common sense and sound judgment. He was for many years an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and was highly respected for his ability and many virtues. His early home was at Peach Bottom, where the Susquehanna river crosses the State line. From thence he removed to the wilds of Washington county, and became a resident of Cattish, now Washington. This change of location occurred in 1773-74. He worked at his trade and at farming till his death, at the age of eighty-four.

To Josiah Scott and Violet (Foster) were born eight children, six of whom reared families, whose descendants are in many States. The two elder sons, Alexander and Abram, married, respectively, Rachel and Rebecca, daughters of Hon. John McDowell, and Agnes (Bradford), his wife. The late Hon. Josiah Scott, of Bucyrus, Ohio, a distinguished scholar and jurist, for many years a judge of the Supreme court of Ohio, was a son of Alexander Scott. The late Hon. Josiah Scott, of Cadiz, Ohio, a member of the convention which passed the Constitution of that State, and his brother, the late Hon. William Scott, of Guernsey county, Ohio, were sons of Abram Scott. The latter was a minister in the Presbyterian Church; so, also, was his brother James, who for more than forty years was pastor of a church at Mt. Vernon, Ohio. Josiah, the sixth child of the first Josiah, became a farmer, settled in Columbiana county, Ohio, and reared a large family. The elder daughter of Josiah, Sr., Mary, married William Cotton, and settled in Beaver county, Penn. The younger daughter, Elizabeth, married Robert Stevenson, and also settled in Beaver county. Their descendants are numerous, and widely scattered. By a second marriage Josiah Scott had four sons. Robert settled in Carroll county, Ohio, and has many descendants. Hugh and Gen. Sam. Scott remained in Washington county, where they are still represented. John died on the old homestead, near Washington, in his early prime, leaving a family of three daughters, Mrs. Workman Hughes being one of them.

Among the representatives of this old blood of Washington county may be named Hon. A. W. Scott, of Toledo, Ohio; Rev. W. W. Colmery, D. D., of Oxford, Ohio; Rev. R. C. Colmery, of Sandusky, Ohio; Rev. D. R. Colmery, D. D., of Los Angeles, Cal.; Rev. Alexander Scott, of Denver, Col.; Col. John Scott, of Nevada, Iowa; Prof. E. M. Cotton, of Chester, Iowa; Dr. J. E. Scott, of Chicago, and Hon. Lawson Scott, of Mendota, Ill.; all of whom are great-grandsons of "Old Josiah."

IRA BEBOUT, prominent in agricultural circles as a well-to-do farmer and successful stock-raiser, is a native of Jefferson county, Ohio, born September 4, 1828, a son of Peter and Isabella (Cooper) Bebout.

John Bebout, grandfather of Ira, was a native of Holland, whence, when a boy, he came to America with his parents, who made a settlement in New Jersey. Here John learned the trade of tanner, which, in connection with farming, he carried on in New Jersey and afterward in Washington county, Penn., for a period in all of some thirty years. In 1796 he came to this county, and purchased a tract of land (covering 300 acres) in what is now North Strabane township. At that time men never went abroad without their guns and a plentiful supply of ammunition. Here Mr. Bebout lived until he was seventy years of age, when he moved to Mercer county, Penn., and there died. He was a member of Dr. McMillan's Church (Presbyterian), and while in New Jersey was an elder in the church there. As a Revolutionary soldier he served under Gen. Washington, rising from the ranks to a captaincy, and receiving a pension. He was the father of nine children, William, Sarah, Peter, Susan, Elizabeth, Israel, Ira, John and Mary.

Peter Bebout was born in New Jersey in 1776, and was twenty-one years old when he first came to this county. In 1804 he moved to Ohio, where he took up a piece of wild land which he cleared and cultivated and lived on until 1830, when he returned to this county and settled in North Strabane township, taking a portion of the home place his father had bought, and which he materially helped to improve. He died in 1859. Mr. Bebout was twice married, first to Betsey Kinney, who bore him children as follows: John, William, James, Levi, Peter, Israel, Sarah and Elizabeth. The mother of this family dying, Mr. Bebout married Isabelle, daughter of Joshua Cooper, of Jefferson county, Ohio, and the children of this marriage were Mary (Mrs. William Hays), Susan (Mrs. William Bebout), Ira (our subject), Margaret (Mrs. Cephas Cochran), David, Isabel (Mrs. John Crouch), Stephen (deceased), Joshua, Caroline (Mrs. Joseph Maines), Jane and Hermon H. Bebout. In politics Mr. Bebout was a Democrat; in religious faith a Presbyterian. He served in the war of 1812, under Gen. Harrison, until the close of the struggle.

Ira Bebout, after a thorough educational training at the common schools of his native district, settled down to regular agricultural pursuits on the old home place, and by his own unaided efforts made a success of all his undertakings, being a thoroughly representative self made man, enterprising and progressive. He was twice married.

first time October 6, 1856, to Mrs. Jane Hamilton (nee Hamilton), a native of Ireland, who came to the United States at the age of seventeen, and was married to Charles Hamilton, a second cousin, who died. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bebout were Isabella (Mrs. W. A. Patterson, who died August 20, 1892), Elmira (Mrs. William Scott), and Elmer, who married Jane Thomas, living in Hamilton county, Neb., where he carries on farming operations. This wife dying in October, 1884, Mr. Bebout married, for his second wife, Mrs. Anna Raney, of Nottingham township. Our subject, in his political preferences, was originally a Democrat, but since the outbreak of the Rebellion has allied himself with the Republican party. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church of Monongahela City, formerly of Dr. McMillan's Church, and of the U. P. Church at Munnstown. He owns a fine residence on Main street, where he resides, renting his farms. He enjoys the confidence and respect of all.

JOHN C. VAN KIRK. Among the many well-known and highly esteemed families of Amwell township, the name of Van Kirk ranks with the first. Jacob Van Kirk, grandfather of our subject, was a native of New Jersey, where he married Elizabeth Lee and in 1785 moved to Washington county, Penn. To this couple were born four children: Enoch, born April 14, 1796; Joseph, born January 17, 1798; Ann, born February 13, 1806; and Leah, born May 19, 1817.

Joseph Van Kirk was born in Washington county, Penn., and passed his entire life in Amwell township, the farm on which he was born. On February 27, 1823, he was united in marriage with Eliza Corwin, and his children were as follows: Hiram, Charles, William (deceased), Mrs. Charlotte McElree (deceased), Mrs. Anna Van Kirk, Mrs. Sarah Van Kirk (the latter two having married distant relatives of the same name), Norma (deceased) and John C. Joseph Van Kirk was a captain in the Pennsylvania State Militia, and was one of the most energetic and active citizens of Amwell township. After a long and useful life he passed to his long home August 24, 1878, at the ripe age of eighty-two years.

John C. Van Kirk was born September 15, 1828, on the old home farm in Amwell township, which is now owned by his brother Charles. His youth and early manhood were passed in assisting his father to fell the forest trees and transform the rugged hills and valleys into fertile fields of grain. On April 1, 1851, he was married to Esther Buckingham, who died September 2, 1855, leaving a child that died four days later. On February 19, 1857, Mr. Van Kirk wedded Mary McClanahan, who bore him two children: Irena M., born March 27, 1858, and Catherine F., born March 30, 1861, both of whom are yet living at home. Our subject has a well cultivated farm of 244 acres, which is considered one of the best in the township, and stands a solid witness to the thrift and prosperity of the owner. He has ever been foremost in all matters of public interest, and while an adherent of the Democratic party, has always voted for what in his opinion would result in good to the largest number, irrespective of party lines. His family are Presbyterians, though he himself is not a member of any church.

JOHN S. PATTERSON, a well-known representative of one of the oldest, most influential and prosperous families of Cross Creek township, is a lineal descendant of James Patterson, the earliest pioneer of the family name. James Patterson immigrated to America in 1728, settling in Little Britain township, Lancaster Co., Penn., where he was married and reared a family of ten children, of whom the sons were William, John, Samuel, James and Thomas.

William Patterson was born in 1733, and was first married to Rosanna Scott, who bore him children as follows: Mary, Moses, Samuel, Thomas and James. The mother died April 5, 1769, and on April 10, 1770, William Patterson was again married, his second choice being Elizabeth Brown, and ten children were born to the latter union: John, Rosanna, William, Nathaniel, Rachel, Elizabeth, Josiah, Hannah, Nathan and Eleanor. In 1779 the family removed to Cross Creek township, this county, settling on a farm now owned by R. M. Patterson. The father was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He died June 29, 1818, and his wife passed from earth about 1828.

Nathan Patterson, a son of William and Elizabeth (Brown) Patterson, was born September 11, 1788, in Cross Creek township, this county, and on October 14, 1816, was married to Lydia Houston. The young couple settled in Cross Creek township, and reared the following children: Daniel, William J., John, Nathan and Mary. The father of this family died in February, 1846, at the age of fifty-eight years.

William J. Patterson was born May 10, 1820, on the home farm, and passed his boyhood in attending to the agricultural duties. He began the milling business in early life, and always followed that vocation. He was first married on May 5, 1849, to Elizabeth Reed, of Washington county, and they had one child, Agnes A. Mrs. Patterson died August 17, 1857, in Iowa, and Mr. Patterson was afterward married to Eliza Snodgrass, of Allegheny county, Penn., daughter of Robert Snodgrass, one of the pioneer lumbermen of that county. At this time he bought and moved upon the Patterson's Mills property. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Patterson: Lydia H., Hannah M., Lizzie M. (a student in a seminary at Washington) and John S. William J. Patterson was a life-long Democrat in politics, and in religious connection was an elder in the Union Presbyterian Church of Patterson's Mills until 1876, when he withdrew from that body, and united with the Presbyterian Church at Independence, this county, of which he was also an elder. He died September 4, 1889, followed by his widow January 28, 1892.

John S. Patterson was born July 12, 1860, on the old Patterson homestead, where he remained, assisting with the duties of the farm and mill until he arrived at man's estate. His early education was received at the common schools. He then took a course at the Cross Creek Academy, and finally graduated from Duff's Commercial College of Pittsburgh. On June 3, 1886, he was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Dunbar, daughter of William Dunbar, a resident of Cross Creek township, this county. In political matters Mr. Patterson has followed in the footsteps of his forefathers, and votes the straight Democratic ticket. He is an honorable and conscientious Christian gentleman, who well merits the esteem in which he is universally held, and in religious faith is a member of and elder in the Presbyterian Church of Cross Creek.

ABRAM ELLIOTT, one of the prosperous and enterprising farmers of Morris township, was born April 20, 1817, near the place where he now resides. William Elliott, a native of Maryland, located near the present residence of Abram Elliott, about three miles west of Prosperity, in the early days of the county. He reared a family of seven children, of whom William Elliott, the father of Abram was one. For the past twenty-five years however, he has given his attention to his farm, where he was reared. He was married in 1840 to Mary Ashbrook, who was born in 1815, a daughter of Simon Ashbrook, of Buffalo township. To their union one child has been born, Jemima, who was born August 24, 1843, and still makes her home with her parents. Though not an active politician, Mr. Elliott is a strict adherent to the principles of the Democratic party.

ISAAC C. AILES, who is a member of one of the oldest families of Pennsylvania, is of early Welsh ancestry. Stephen Ailes was born and passed his whole life in Chester county, Penn., where his son Amos was born in 1751, and grew to manhood. In early life Amos Ailes was married to Ann, daughter of Joseph Brown, a farmer of Chester county, Penn., and soon after they came to Washington county, locating on a tract of land in East Pike Run township, which had then been in the possession of Joseph Brown for about two years. At the time Amos Ailes settled upon it, the place was an unbroken wilderness, inhabited only by wild beasts and wandering Indians. Two young girls named Scott were killed by the Redmen about this time, and Mrs. Ailes shot a deer in her doorway soon after their arrival. In this wild forest home children were born to these pioneers, and reared, as follows: Joseph, Stephen, Aaron, Mary (wife of Eli Gause), James, Sarah (wife of John Waites), Isaac and Amos. Mr. Ailes was a Whig in politics, and in religion a member of the Society of Friends. He died in February, 1835, and was buried by the side of his wife in the Westland cemetery in East Bethlehem township, Washington county.

Isaac Ailes was born March 21, 1794, on the home farm in East Pike Run township, Washington county. He attended the Union school-house, which was one of the first erected in East Pike Run township, and built over a century ago. On May 24, 1824, he was united in marriage with Nancy, daughter of Nathan Coleman. Mr. Coleman was born and reared in eastern Maryland, where he was married to Elizabeth Duncan. In 1802 they came to West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and a few years later moved to Ohio. Their children were Sophia (wife of Elisha Mayhorn), Maria (married to Nathan Rice) and Nancy (wife of Isaac Ailes). After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Ailes settled on the home place where they passed the rest of their lives. He was a Whig and Republican, and in 1840 was elected justice of the peace, holding that office until 1850, also serving as school director several years. He was an energetic, enterprising man until rheumatism compelled him to retire from active work and spend the last twenty-eight years of his life an invalid. He died February 28, 1874, having been preceded by his wife in August, 1872, and they were buried in the home cemetery. Mrs. Ailes was a devout Methodist, while Mr. Ailes was reared in the Quaker faith. Their children were born as follows: Ann (wife of Samuel Sickman), Jane (married to Wesley White), Matilda (wife of William Stockdale), Isaac C., and Stephen H. (deceased).

Isaac C. Ailes was born December 4, 1834, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the home schools during his boyhood, afterward taking charge of the home place. On February 6, 1855, he was united in marriage with Margaret M., daughter of Jacob Snyder, who was a son of Nicholas Snyder. The latter was a native of Westmoreland county, Penn., where he grew to manhood, and was married to Eva Hough, who bore him the following children: John, Jacob, Mary, Charlotte (wife of Joseph Krepps), William, Henry, Joseph, David, Louisa (wife of William Norcross), James and Margaret (married to Harvey Seymour). The father of this family was a Democrat in political opinion, and in religious faith a member of the Lutheran Church. Jacob Snyder was born in 1804, on the home place in Westmoreland county, where he was reared and educated. He was married to Hannah, daughter of Thomas Stockdale, a native of Washington county, Penn., born November 15, 1808, and to their union were born eight children, namely: Stockdale, Allen (deceased), Amy A. (deceased), Margaret M. (wife of Isaac C. Ailes), Charlotte (deceased), William, Louisa (wife of Philip Smith) and Deborah A. (deceased wife of Caleb Porter). Soon after his marriage Mr. Snyder moved to a farm in Fayette county, same State, where the remainder of his life was passed. Politically he voted with the Democratic party, and in religion was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which he was an elder for forty years.

Isaac C. and Margaret M. (Snyder) Ailes began wedded life on the home place in East Pike Run township, where they are yet living. They have had five children, as follows: Allen H. (married Jenna A. Chester, March 21, 1877, and the same year they moved to the State of Missouri; she died August 21, 1881, and he died November 21, same year, leaving one son, Renauld, who, when about two years old, was sent to his grandparents on the home farm); Anson A. (married to Lizzie M. Lytle, of Allegheny county, Penn., and they reside on the home farm); Rilla A. (deceased); Irena (married to James H. McCrory, and living on an adjoining farm; they have four sons: Ralph A., Albert J., Clarence H. and Ira C.); and Luella (remaining at home). Mr. Ailes is a staunch member of the Republican party, and has served his township for twelve years as township auditor. He has been president of the California National Bank since its first organization, August 6, 1891, with William H. Binns as cashier. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, giving it liberal support, and has been Sunday-school superintendent at the Union schoolhouse near the home place.

RW. DODDS, an energetic and prosperous young farmer of Donegal township, is a native of Washington county, Penn., born September 12, 1858, in Independence, Independence township.

His grandfather, John Dodds, was born in 1771, in County Donegal, Ireland, and when but a mere boy ran away to sea, first becoming an apprentice on a British merchantman bound for India. He followed a sailor life for some time, but at length became tired of adventure, and when ashore one day while his ship was in the harbor of Philadelphia, he concluded to remain on land, and did so. He afterward entirely abandoned "a life on the ocean wave," and deciding that a home in the forest wilds offered superior attractions to "a home on the rolling deep," he came west, walking the entire distance from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, Penn. On his arrival in the latter city he engaged in the river trade with Malcolm Leech, taking merchandise to New Orleans, which at that time was a good market, the return journey to Pittsburgh being made on foot. After steam power was applied to river navigation, this practice was abandoned, and he did but little in that business after 1836. In 1818 John Dodds was united in marriage with Sarah McKeever, of West Middletown, Penn., who was born in 1797, and they had the following children: Agnes (deceased), Thomas (deceased), James, Margaret (widow of Lewis Applegate, of Brooke county, W. Va.), Mary Ann (Mrs. William Dodds, of Washington, Iowa), John (also living in Washington, Iowa), and William (deceased). Soon after his marriage Mr. Dodds purchased the farm known as the "Old Dodds homestead," lying two and one-half miles south of Independence. In 1826 he moved to West Middletown, in order to secure better educational opportunities for his children, but ten years later he returned to the farm, and lived a retired life. He was of a very generous disposition, and many poor Irish emigrants received money from him to pay their passage to America. Among the number he brought a brother and family from Ireland, and purchased a home for them in Harrison county, Ohio. Politically he was a Whig, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church. He died in 1850; his widow is now living with a daughter in Iowa, almost a century having passed over her head.

James Dodds, father of subject, was born February 26, 1822, on the farm in Independence township which is his present home. He received a common-school education, working on the home farm during his younger years. In 1848 he was married to Elvira Vance, who was born in 1828, daughter of James Vance, and they had three children: James V. (residing in Independence township), Joseph C. (living at home), and R. W. Mr. Dodds resided on the home farm in Independence township for some time after his marriage; then farmed two years in Brooke county, W. Va., and afterward lived in Independence seven years, where he was dealing in stock. In 1859 he purchased the "home farm," upon which he is now living. Mr. Dodds has traveled a great deal, and is a representative man of his neighborhood. In politics he is an active Republican, and has held various township offices.

R. W. Dodds was brought from the village of Independence to the old home farm in Independence township at an early age, and obtained a common-school education at the schools of the township, as well as the necessary experience for the making of a prosperous farmer. On December 21, 1882, he was married to Laura Hair, who was born November 7, 1864, in Fayette county, Penn., a daughter of Abraham Hair, of Donegal township, and to their union the following children were born: Mary, Alma, Bertha M., Carrie and James A. Mr. Dodds lived with his parents some time after his marriage, and in 1887 purchased a part of the "Dickey tract," located in Donegal township, about one and one-half miles south of Dunsfort, near the West Virginia line. He has since been engaged in general farming and stockraising. He is a very progressive and energetic young agriculturist, sure to succeed in life. In political opinions he is a Republican.

JOHAN M. McILVAINE, a prominent farmer of Mt. Pleasant township, is descended from one of the earliest pioneers of Washington county. He is a son of Guyan and Jane (Ferguson) McIlvaine, and a grandson of Greer and Elizabeth (Morrow) McIlvaine. The last mentioned couple were natives of Lancaster county, Penn., of Irish descent, and were married in their native county. Greer McIlvaine, with his wife and brother George, came to Washington county, Penn., in an early day, and on May 20, 1788, took out a warrant for a tract of land in Somerset township containing 407 acres. This was surveyed to him February 11, 1789, as "Calydon." To Greer and Elizabeth (Morrow) McIlvaine were born the following children: John, Guyan, Greer, George, William, Andrew, Margaret (Mrs. William Deniston), Mary (Mrs. James Greenlee), Ruth (Mrs. Joseph Moreton), Catherine (Mrs. Samuel Smith), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Campbell), Esther (Mrs. Thomas Carson), Ann (wife of Joseph Scott), and Eleanor (married to David Scott). Greer McIlvaine and his wife were members of the old Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church.

Guyan McIlvaine was born about 1792, in Somerset township, this county, and was reared on the home farm. He was first married to Jane Ferguson, who was also born in Somerset township, and four children were born to this union: Lydia (widow of John Phillips, living in Greene county, Penn.); William Greer (married in Vicksburg, and died in 1882 at Memphis, Tenn.), Robert F. (living in Rochester, Beaver Co., Penn.) and John M. (our subject). The mother of these children died in 1823, and about 1830 Guyan McIlvaine selected a second wife in the person of Jane Bratton, a native of Lancaster county, Penn. Their children were Harvey (living in Kansas), Ann Eliza (wife of William M. Campbell, of Cross Creek township), Joseph Lawrence (an editor, residing in New Philadelphia, Ohio), Isabella (a maiden lady, living in Mt. Pleasant township), Mary Esther (also unmarried), Boyd (living in Illinois), James A. (living in Mt. Pleasant township, this county) and Martha Ellen (wife of Harper Symonton, of Mt. Pleasant township). Guyan McIlvaine followed agricultural pursuits all his life. He served as a soldier in the war of 1812.

John M. McIlvaine was born in 1821, in Somerset township, on the home farm. His boyhood was passed in farm work, and in attending the schools of the township and of Hickory village. He came to Mt. Pleasant township at the age of fourteen years. In 1856 he was married to Margaret Ann Carter, daughter of William and Ann Carter, natives of Scotland, who settled in Mt. Pleasant township in an early day, and there passed the rest of their lives.

John M. and Margaret Ann (Carter) McIlvaine began their married life on a farm south of Hickory, this county, where three children were born to them, namely: Anna Jane, Maria Belle and William Elmer (a carpenter, married to Miss Anna Leach, of Smith township). The mother died in 1864. In 1881 Mr. McIlvaine bought a farm of seventy-five acres, which is in a prosperous condition. He is active in politics, and casts his vote with the Republican party; at a special election held in May, 1842, he cast his first vote for Thomas M. T. McKennan for Congress, to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Joseph Lawrence. In religion he is connected with the Presbyterian Church at Mount Prospect.

JOHN BIRCH. This venerable and justly honored citizen of Claysville is a native of the Keystone State, born August 5, 1810, in Cumberland county, near Shippensburg.

John Birch, his paternal grandfather, was by birth an Irishman, of Scotch descent. He early learned the trade of a weaver, which he followed nearly all his life, both in his native land and in America, and for twelve years he served as a soldier in the British army. He was married in his native country to Miss Jane Bright, and the children born to them were William, Valentine, James, Jane, John, David, Thomas and Ann. In 1801 he came with his family to America, and made a home in Cumberland county, Penn., for a short time; then came to Washington county, settling in Amwell township, where he continued to follow his trade of weaver to the day of his death.

William Birch, eldest son of the old pioneer, was born in Belfast, Ireland, February 3, 1788, where his early education was received. Coming with the rest of the family to this country, as above related, he completed his school training in Cumberland county, Penn. In the course of time he formed a partnership with a Mr. Campbell in the manufacture of various kinds of cloth, in which business he remained for several years. While yet a young man he was married to Elizabeth Mitchell, who was born in 1791, in Cumberland county, Penn., a daughter of John Mitchell, a Scotch-Irishman, who came to this country about 1760, and the children born to this union were John, Mary, William, David, George Bright, Thomas L., Drusilla, Margaret J., Mitchell, Joseph and Elizabeth. Mr. Birch and family in 1818 emigrated from Cumberland county to Washington county, locating on a small farm in Amwell township for a couple of years, and then moving to the farm now occupied by W. C. Ramsey, in Canton township, on which they remained four years. From there they came to Buffalo township, where they resided ten years, and from here proceeded, in 1835, to Holmes county, Ohio, where he lived until the death of Mrs. Birch, which occurred in 1814, when the bereaved husband went to Fulton county, Ill., thence to Birmingham, Van Buren Co., Iowa, where he died April 20, 1879. Politically he was an Old-time Whig, and in religion a Presbyterian.

The boyhood and early youth of John Birch were passed on the home place in Cumberland county and in Canton township, this county, in the subscription schools of which latter he received his education. At the age of sixteen he was apprenticed to Jacob Sharp, a tanner, with whom he remained four years, at the expiration of which time he commenced as a journeyman, working nearly a year for Mr. Sharp. He then, in 1832, came to Claysville, and here entered the employ of a tanner; but it was not long before he commenced on his own account by starting a tannery in that borough, which he operated for fifty years with every success. On May 5, 1835, he was married to Harriet Reed, who was born in Amwell township, Washington county, October 15, 1815, daughter of James Reed, and by this union were the following children: George W. F., born March 26, 1837 (was educated at Washington and Jefferson College, and is now a Presbyterian minister in New York City); Francis A., born April 26, 1840, died September 13, 1863 (also educated at Washington and Jefferson College); William T., born September 2, 1842, died February 4, 1864; Edward P., born February 1, 1845, died 1847; Henry B., born January 9, 1849; John M., born July 7, 1851 (was educated at Washington and Jefferson College); Elizabeth M., born June 1, 1854 (married to Rev. J. J. McCarrell, of McKeesport, Penn.); Thomas F., born May 18, 1856 (educated at Washington and Jefferson College), and Harriet J., born January 9, 1860 (married to Frank T. Wray, a druggist of Apollo, Armstrong Co., Penn.). The mother of this family died June 14, 1877, and on February 28, 1882, Mr. Birch was united in marriage at Beaver Falls, Penn. with Elizabeth, daughter of Dr. Samuel P. Todd, who was born February 24, 1792, in New York. He studied for the medical profession at Schenectady, N. Y., and commenced practice in New York, proving an able and successful physician. He was married to Susan, daughter of Aaron Kerr, a native of New Jersey, and she bore him eight children. Dr. Todd was a member and warm supporter of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics he was an active Whig.

Mr. Birch has always been a strong Democrat, and has served with commendable zeal in various positions of trust. His first office was that of justice of the peace, to which he was four times re-elected; in 1848 he was elected county commissioner, serving three years; in 1860 he was one of the census enumerators; in 1875 he was nominated and elected representative to the State Legislature, receiving a flattering majority of over one hundred votes in a Republican county. Mr. Birch and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he has been trustee and a liberal supporter for years.

NATHAN ROSEBURG TANNEHILL, a prominent farmer and stock raiser of Chartiers township, and breeder of Registered National Delaine Merino sheep and Registered Jersey cattle, was born October 13, 1847, in Chartiers township on the farm where he now resides, and in the same house where he and his children live and were born.

His grandparents, John and Catherine Tannehill were natives of County Antrim, Ireland. John Tannehill, in company with three brothers—Nathan, Adamson and James—came from Ireland to this country, and were soldiers in the war of the Revolution. John settled in Washington county and here dying was buried in Oak Spring cemetery in Chartiers township.

Nathan Tannehill, father of Nathan Roseburg Tannehill, was born near Miller's run, some two and one-half miles from Noblestown, and received his education in the common schools of the district. The father of this family, who was a prominent man in his township, died September 18, 1878, in the eighty-seventh year of his age, the mother following him across the dark river May 2, 1880, when in her seventy-fifth year.

Nathan R. Tannehill was educated in the common schools, and graduated from Duff's Business College, in Pittsburgh, Penn. He was married November 7, 1877, to Miss Mary C. Sample, who was born in West Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., a daughter of Robert and Mary Elizabeth (Burns) Sample, both also natives of West Finley township. Robert Sample was a son of David Sample, who came from County Derry, Ireland, and settled in what is now West Finley township, this county. Elizabeth (Burns) Sample was a daughter of David Burns, who was a son of Robert and Catherine (Sutherland) Burns, latter a daughter of George Sutherland, and both of whom were over seventy years of age at the time of their death. Mr. and Mrs. Nathan R. Tannehill after their marriage took up their permanent home on the farm in Chartiers township, which was willed him by his father. They have three children: Robert Nathan, born November 11, 1880; James Smiley, born July 24, 1883, and Newton Alexander, born September 23, 1886. The parents are members of the Chartiers U. P. Church at Canonsburg. Mr. Tannehill is a member of the National Delaine Merino Sheep Association, and is recognized as a leader among the agriculturists and stock breeders of the county. He owns 185 acres of well cultivated land—112 in one tract and seventy-three in another. In his political affiliations he is a staunch Republican.

DAVID HIGBEE. The earliest ancestors of the Higbee family in America were two brothers, who left England about 1680, accompanied by an aged father who died on the passage. The brothers, with their families, settled on Long Island. They had left England on account of religious persecution, and they belonged to the class called Puritans or Nonconformists. Two sons of one of these brothers settled in New Jersey, one, named Peter, near New Brunswick, and the other, whose name was Abijah, near Princeton.

Peter Higbee was born about 1690, and married about 1721. He had seven sons and one daughter, of whom five sons died early; the surviving sons were named Obadiah and Abijah. Obadiah was born in 1732, and was married to Anna Brown November 13, 1762. He settled in New Jersey, and, as also his father, was a farmer. He had no son old enough to do military duty during the continuance of the Revolutionary war, but two young men raised by him entered the army and did good service, while he acted at times as a courier for the Continental armies. In 1784 he sold his farm in New Jersey, and moved to Washington county, Penn. Wishing to look around before purchasing, he rented from Henry Magner a farm near what is now called Finleyville, formerly Rogue Alley. He had accepted, in a large measure, Continental currency for his New Jersey farm, and this became worthless before he purchased, entailing a very serious loss, and making it necessary for him to rent for some years. Nothing daunted, he persevered, and in about ten years was able to buy a farm in Allegheny county, near Castle Shannon.

Obadiah and Anna Higbee had eleven children, six sons and five daughters, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Mary, December 1, 1764; Sarah, February 12, 1767; Abigail, July 1, 1769; Stephen, July 5, 1771; Joseph, November 25, 1773; Benjamin, April 11, 1776; Rhoda, January 1, 1779; William, January 7, 1781; Obadiah, February 11, 1782; Anna, June 1, 1786; Samuel, March 29, 1791. Of this family all lived to have families of their own, except William, who died in his first year. Mary and Sarah remained in New Jersey at their grandfather's (Mary married Edward Riggs, and moved to Allegheny county, Penn., near Library; Sarah married Abijah Applegate, and lived near Heightsdown, N. J., where numerous descendants are still to be found); Abigail married Major Edward Wright, and settled in Lawrence county, Penn., near Mt. Jackson; Stephen settled near Warren, Trumbull Co., Ohio; Joseph remained on the old homestead, which is still owned by his son James; Benjamin settled near Finleyville, Washington Co., Penn., where he died at an advanced age, leaving a numerous family (some of his descendants occupy a part of his old farm yet); Rhoda married a Mr. Hull, and settled on the Shenango river in Mercer county, Penn.; Anna married Mr. Fletcher, and settled in southern Ohio; Samuel settled in southern Ohio.

Obadiah Higbee, son of Obadiah and Anna Higbee, married Sarah Phillips, daughter of Joseph Phillips Esq., who came from Wales. They settled in Upper St. Clair township, Allegheny Co., Penn., eight miles from Pittsburgh, and they had eleven children, five sons and six daughters: (1) Jesse, the oldest son, born August 18, 1808, and still living in Iowa, had eight children—six living and two dead; three live in Iowa, one in Missouri and two in Kansas. (2) John, born February 4, 1810, died in 1832 leaving no family. (3) Joseph P., born May 23, 1812, settled on a part of his father's farm, which he occupied until his death, September 25, 1892; he had four children—one son and three daughters; his son John is an active partner of the firm of Bryce, Higbee & Co., largely engaged in glass manufacturing, Pittsburgh, Penn.; two daughters also survive him: Mrs. Kelso and Mrs. Lesnett. (4) Anne Higbee, born August 18, 1814, married Samuel Blackmore, grandson of Samuel Blackmore, one of the pioneer settlers of Washington county; one daughter survives them, Mrs. Galley. (5) Mary, born August 25, 1816, married Josiah Phillips, a grandson of Rev. David Phillips, the first pastor of Peters Creek Baptist Church; Josiah's death occurred about one year after their marriage; one daughter survives him; about eight years later the widow married James Boyer, a son of one of the pioneers of Washington county. (6) Obadiah, born December 21, 1818, married Eliza Riggs, and after a short stay in Pennsylvania settled on a farm in Iowa, near Iowa City, where he lived up to within three or four years of his death, when he moved into Iowa City, remaining there until his death, which occurred March 11, 1890; he had five children: Caroline, D. Webster, Sarah, Obadiah F. and Lizzie, all living but Caroline. (D. Webster is a prominent lawyer of Iowa; Obadiah F. is a physician of more than ordinary ability residing at Shireoaks, Union township, Washington Co., Penn.); (7) Sarah, born December 10, 1823, married Richard Phillips, and they had seven children, viz.: Obadiah H. and Alexander C., preachers of the Gospel in the Church of Christ; three daughters married, viz.: Mary E. Phillips, Sarah A. Wood and Abigail Lightcap, and two children deceased, Ettie and ———. (8) Abigail, born May 28, 1827, married N. S. Gay, of New York, and they live on a plantation in eastern Virginia, near Spottsylvania, C. H.; they have three children living and married, viz.: Amy E. Pendleton, Sarah H. Wilson and Mary B. Smith; two sons are deceased—Obadiah and George. (9) Elizabeth, born August 12, 1830, married Hilery T. King, of Illinois, near Moro, where they lived for some time on a farm, thence removing to Davis county, Iowa, where she died October 30, 1886, leaving three sons: Obadiah H., Ulysses Grant and William, the two former being preachers of the Gospel. (10) Susannah was born December 20, 1833, and died in 1835.

(11) David Higbee was born October 1, 1821. His schooling commenced in a log school-house furnished with slab benches, and boards resting on pins driven into the wall served as writing desks; teachers were paid by subscription and boarded around among the patrons. He attended public school after that system was introduced, also Bethel Academy for a time. After teaching school a short time, he took charge of his father's farm. He lived with and took care of his parents up to the time of their death, his mother dying January 17, 1865, and his father June 6, 1866. He was married November 13, 1851, to Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel and Mary Boyer, and they had four children: Mary, Sarah, Anna Elizabeth and Obadiah Carson. Of these, Sarah (now Mrs. Scholes) and Obadiah Carson are living, the others being dead. The mother of these children died July 23, 1862, and on August 30, 1865, Mr. Higbee was married to Lucinda B. Boyer, and removed to Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., March 6, 1867, where he still lives. By his second wife he had six children, all still living, their names in the order of their birth being: Elizabeth B., John Newton, Della L., Ella Dora, Amy V. and David. A small part of the early portion of this history is traditional, but as Mary Higbee alias Mary Riggs, with whom the writer was intimately acquainted, lived for some years in the family of her grandfather, Peter Higbee, who was a son of one of the brothers who came to this country from England, it will be seen that the mediums of communication are few and direct. The Higbees, especially the earlier generations, were tall, active and long-lived. Their occupation generally was farming, and the majority of them were Baptists.

The business of the subject of this sketch has been farming and stockraising (principally sheep). In politics he was first a Whig and Anti-Mason. He was a deeply interested observer of the formation of the Republican party, attended as a spectator its first National Convention, approved its principles, has given the party his support, and is proud of its general record. At the age of seventeen he united with an infant Church of Christ (Disciples), now known as the Peters Creek Church of Christ, which church had been organized two years previous (1836). With six members it met in a private house until the fall of 1839, when the Church commenced worshiping in a brick meeting-house just completed by it. It became necessary to rebuild in 1858. With this Church he worshiped about fifty years, during about forty years of which time he was an elder. From 1882 to 1888 a most determined effort was made to introduce into this Church what were usually termed "progressive views and practices." The effort was only too successful. Many were leavened with the new doctrines. Those opposed to these innovations, as subversive of the faith and practice of the Church, became objects of abuse and slander. Strife ensued. The subject of this sketch being an elder, and unyielding in his opposition to a new order of things, was particularly the subject of these attacks, which resulted in an effort to remove him from the eldership and finally led to the withdrawal of himself and family and a number of others from the Church. He claims for himself to be open to conviction on every important subject coming before him, but nothing but convincing evidence will satisfy him. Fidelity to principle, and a conscientious discharge of duty—these have been, in an eminent degree, the characteristics of his ancestors, running through five generations up to our Puritan ancestry. May we not claim it as the potent effect of their transmitted blood?

If the Higbee family, among the pioneer families of this county, with their descendants, have contributed in any measure in bringing in the present advanced, enlightened, civilized and religious state of society of which this biographical history is to be a record, it is because of deep convictions of right, and a courage "to do their duty as they saw it." This is the legacy they would leave behind them and commend to those coming after.

[Mr. Higbee has furnished his portrait and biographical sketch for insertion in this work on the assurance of the biographer that he was selected as one among the representative men of Peters township.]

E H. DENNISON. Among the progressive wide awake, and prosperous agriculturists of Donegal township, the name of this gentleman is very prominent. He is a son of James S., whose father, Thomas Dennison, was a native of Ireland, and was united in marriage with a lady of Scotch birth. The young couple immigrated to America soon after their marriage, locating in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., and three children were born to them, viz.: Maria, wife of Washington Bennett, a prominent iron manufacturer, of Wheeling, W. Va.; Thomas, living in Ohio, and James S., father of our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Dennison passed the remainder of their lives in Virginia, and died there at an advanced age.

James S. Dennison was born in 1801, in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., and there received his early training in farm work, obtaining an education, which, though of the usual primitive log-cabin type, afforded a basis for the general information and practical knowledge of his riper years. When a young man he came to Washington county, Penn., locating in Claysville, where he became acquainted with, and was married to Mrs. Catherine (Stevenson) King, widow of William King. By her first marriage Mrs. King had one son, W. C. (now cashier of the National Bank of Claysville, Penn.). She was born in 1803, and was the daughter of Hon. James Stevenson, a member of one of the oldest and best families of Washington county. He was a prominent pioneer settler of Donegal township, and a soldier in the war of the Revolution. He died in Harrisburg, Penn., while a member of the Legislature. To Mr. and Mrs. James S. Dennison were born the following children: James (living in Claysville, Washington Co., Penn.), Jane E., John (a saddler and harness-maker, now farming in Warren county, Ill.), Eldridge (residing in Claysville) and E. H. Mr. Dennison resided a short time after his marriage on the farm now owned by his son E. H. He afterward began the hotel business in Claysville, thence moving to Uniontown, Fayette Co., Penn., where he was engaged in business until his tragic death in 1851. This sad event occurred when on a business trip to Brownsville. He was thrown from the stage upon which he was riding, receiving injuries which soon resulted fatally. Politically he was a Democrat, but not an active politician, and was respected by all who knew him. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Dennison returned to Donegal township, Washington county, and located on the "Old Stevenson" tract, lying one mile west of Claysville, which was part of a vast amount of land once owned by Hon. James Stevenson. Mrs. Dennison was a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church for many years, and was a very popular lady. She continued to reside on the farm until her death, which occurred October 7, 1889.

E. H. Dennison was born July 4, 1840, in Donegal township, in the same house which is his present home, and received a common-school education. His father died when he was a mere boy, but this event did not impede his progress in life, for the instructions of his mother almost compensated for the loss of the father. In 1868 he was united in marriage with Saleua Reed, who was born January 5, 1845, daughter of Rev. William Reed, D. D., an eminent Presbyterian divine of western Ohio. The following children were born to this union: Katherine, Edith, Joseph D., Harry C., William R. and Edwin H., all of whom are living with their parents, the eldest daughter being employed as a stenographer in Washington, Penn. Mr. Dennison has always lived on the place of his birth, which is situated one mile west of Claysville, along the National Pike, and is an exceptionally desirable location. He is a farmer and is extensively engaged in stock dealing, having made a success of the latter business by shrewd and skilful management, combined with fair and honest dealing. Much credit is due to this enterprising and public-spirited citizen for the success with which he has conducted both his own affairs, and the business which others have intrusted to his care. Mr. Dennison is ever interested in any movement tending to advance the interests of the community, and in politics is a Democrat. He and his wife, a deservedly popular lady, are members of the Presbyterian Church.

ST. CHESTER. Among the prominent agriculturists of Allen township, none are more deserving of special mention than the prosperous gentleman whose name has from an early time been associated with the best interests of Washington county.

Many years ago Joseph and Elizabeth Chester, natives of eastern Pennsylvania, came to Washington county, and there made a home on a tract of land which he patented. Among the children born to this pioneer couple, one son is named S. A., whose brothers were Morrison, now residing in Guernsey county, Ohio, and Benjamin, who died in California. S. A. Chester was born August 18, 1818, on the home place in Allen township, Washington county. He was there married to Margaret Jackman, who was born on the home farm Deember 24, 1814. Mr. Chester affiliated with the Whig and Republican parties, and served in many local offices. Mrs. Chester died November 8, 1872, leaving the following children: Joseph W. (who died in 1873 in Vernon county, Mo.), John A. (living in Moundville, Vernon Co., Mo.), Elizabeth Ann (deceased at the age of eight years), J. J. (born July 3, 1847), James Harvey (deceased in 1875, in Allen township), Margaret Ann (deceased wife of Irvin McKenna, of Fayette City), Jane A. (deceased wife of Allen Ailes, of Columbus, Kans.) S. T. (whose name opens this sketch) and Fremont, (born July 4, 1857, died February 20, 1865). After the mother of these children died, S. A. Chester married Mary Stevenson, who is now living in Fayette county, Penn. He died March 15, 1888.

S. T. Chester was born March 8, 1853, in Allen township, Washington county, and has continued to reside on the old place. In June, 1879, he made choice of a life companion in the person of Ollie J. daughter of O. D. and Mary (Allen) Latta, all of whom were natives of Allen township, this county, where the father died, Mrs. Latta making her home with Mrs. Chester. Mr. and Mrs. Chester have always resided on the homestead, which contains 177 acres of well-cultivated land, equipped with two substantial brick edifices. He has made a specialty of raising blooded stock, having a number of fine driving and draft horses of Clyde, Norman and Ethan Allen breed, also a fine grade of Alderney and Shorthorn cattle. In political opinions he advocates the principles embodied in the Republican platform. Mrs. Chester is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Mount Tabor, and the sympathies of Mr. Chester are the same. They have four children, namely: Charley L., Montie Ray, Harry and Ralph.

HUGH M. GLASS is one of the most enterprising and prosperous young agriculturists of Robinson township, and is, as are so many of our thrifty and successful citizens, a descendant of Irish ancestors. His grandfather Samuel Glass, came from Ireland and settled in Allegheny county, Penn., where he was soon afterward united in marriage with a Miss Stewart, of the same place, who bore him eight children, four of whom are now living, namely: William, Hannah (Mrs. Stewart), Elizabeth (Mrs. Cabbage) and Sarah Ann (Mrs. Logan).

William Glass was born November 9, 1811, in Allegheny county, Penn., growing to manhood on the home place. He was then married to Miss Sarah McCurdy, who was born in the year 1817, also a native of Allegheny county, and daughter of Andrew McCurdy, a prominent farmer of that vicinity. To William and Sarah (McCurdy) Glass, nine children were born, of whom are now living:

Elizabeth (Mrs. Spears), Samuel S., Hugh M., Letitia J. (Mrs. McCormick), Roesa Lenia and Emma Leah. Mr. Glass has owned 340 acres of land, but since becoming advanced in years has disposed of the greater part of his real estate, having retained a farm of ninety-six acres upon which he is now residing. He has been a member of Session of the U. P. Church for forty years. In politics he was formerly a Democrat, then joined the Know-nothing party, finally becoming a Republican, being now identified with the latter party. He has served in various capacities, having been tax-collector over twenty years, and school director forty years.

Hugh M. Glass was born April 8, 1843, and passed his youth in attending the common schools of the home neighborhood. On December 30, 1863, he entered the army, enlisting in Young's Independent Battery, where he remained until the summer of 1865, then receiving his discharge from the hospital by the War Department. After the war he returned to Allegheny county, and on December 9, 1869, was united in marriage with Miss Evaline Scott. Mr. and Mrs. Glass lived on a part of the old place for twenty years after their marriage. They then purchased 170 acres of good land in Washington county, Penn., where they are now living. Their children are Albert P., born September 26, 1870; Samuel J., born March 1, 1873; William H., born June 10, 1877; Robert J., born September 20, 1881, and Sarah E., born March 31, 1884. Mr. Glass votes the Republican ticket, and in church connection is a member of the Robinson United Presbyterian Church, of which he is treasurer.

MRS. BYRON PAINTER. Thomas Stockton died at Mercersburg, Penn., May 31, 1795, aged about eighty-six years. He had lived near Chambersburg with his son Robert, and was an elder in the Presbyterian Church. In his will he mentions his children: Thomas, John, David and Robert, Elizabeth Waddell, Isabella Neilson, Mary Bard and Margaret Johnson.

Robert Stockton, his son, was born in 1737, and was married in 1761 to Mary Makemie. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Rocky Spring, near Chambersburg, Penn., and served in the Revolutionary war with a company formed from that church, with their pastor, the Rev. John Craighead. After the war, in 1784, he emigrated to Washington, Penn., and in July purchased 340 acres of land of Peter Jolly, named in the survey "Beaver Dam." It is situated in Franklin township, three and one-half miles west of Washington, and still occupied by his descendants. He was one of the four elders of the Presbyterian Church when organized, and the first delegate to the Presbyterian at old Redstone. His children were Thomas, married to Sarah Graham; Margaret, married to Col. John Cotton; Francis, married to Charles Stewart; Jane, married to Rev. John Brice; Col. Robert, married to Miss Gallion; John, married to Margaret McCombs; Rev. Joseph, married to Esther Clark, and Elizabeth, married to Rev. James Cunningham.

In colonial times, about the middle of the eighteenth century, when the country about the base of the Kittatinny Mountains was yet a primeval forest, James Clark, from the North of Ireland, took up a tract of 220 acres of Government land, to which he gave the appropriate name of "Clark's Fancy," in accordance with a custom of the times. This tract embraced the land upon which the town of Upper Strasburg was subsequently built. In 1787 he received a patent for his lands from the Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania, in which it is described under the title already specified. In 1787 the State made a public road over the mountain through "Clark's Gap," and some of the broad stones with which it was built are yet visible below the mountain near Strasburg. Clark sold part of his tract to Dewalt Keefer, by whom the town of Strasburg was laid out in 1789. James Clark came to America with his brother Thomas, who settled in one of the Southern States (probably Georgia), and Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines was a descendant of Thomas. James Clark purchased a large tract of land near where the city of Harrisburg now stands, after he arrived in this country. Here he settled and married a Miss Nancy Reed, of Lancaster, Penn. Afterward he settled at "Clark's Fancy," then purchased a large tract of valuable land lying south of the town of Mercersburg, where he died. He was buried in the Slate Hill cemetery, located about a mile east of Mercersburg, a short distance from the turnpike. In 1789 this pioneer visited Washington, Penn., and purchased a 400-acre tract styled the "Big Level," a 300-acre tract at Candor, and in Canton township and Clark's Mills, for his children. David married Hannah Baird; Thomas married Jane Caldwell; John married Miss McDowell, and all settled in Washington county. James married Mary Murry, and remained on the home farm at Mercersburg.

ROBERT WYLIE (or better known as "Bob Wylie, the wool buyer"), the subject of this sketch, is of Scotch-Irish descent. His ancestors were known as leaders in the reformation of the Church of Scotland, and several of them were banished from Scotland and Ireland for their adherence to the principles of the new Church. His grandfather, Robert Wylie, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, in 1743, and came to America with several of his half-brothers about 1761. They first stopped in the east, and further west, at Thompsontown, on the Juniata river, he married, about the close of war of the Revolution, Jane Thompson, daughter of John Thompson, and sister to Col. William Thompson and Capt. Isaac Thompson, of the Revolutionary army.

About 1780, with his wife, he came west to Washington county, and took up a tract of 600 acres of land (the main body of which is now owned and occupied by the four sons of the late David McClay, of Canton township), and on this land he built a log house in which he lived for some years, or until about 1800, when he put up the stone house which still stands, and is the present dwelling of Samuel McClay. Through this farm was the main Indian trail from the west to the dwelling of the great Chief Catfish, whose cabin stood on the bank of Catfish creek, at the foot of what is now Main street in Washington. (A chief watering place was a spring on this farm, where the wandering Indian always stopped to quench his thirst). He built a trade mill and distillery, thus opening a market for the grain raised in the neighborhood; he was also largely interested in salting pork for many years; later he started a wagon train, hauling products east, principally to Baltimore. He was a member of the Associate Reformed Church, and for many years an elder in the church at North Buffalo. In the burying ground around this old church his and his wife's remains lie at rest. Their family consisted of three sons—Robert, William and John—and five daughters—Ann (Brownlee), Jane (Humphreys), Sarah (Hodgens), Elizabeth (Moore) and Mary (Crothers). Many of the descendants of his daughters reside in Washington county and eastern Ohio. John Wylie married and settled in Ohio, where he became a successful stock dealer and farmer; William and Robert remained at home until 1834, when William sold his interest in the home farm to Robert; later, Robert sold the farm to David McClay and Bros., and soon followed his old partner in business, John Garrett (they having been associated together for several years in a store at West Middletown), to Baltimore, Md., where he acquired a considerable fortune. He died in 1872, unmarried.

William Wylie, father of Robert Wylie, Jr., was born on the old Wylie farm, September 25, 1800, and received a good education, having attended Washington College several terms. In 1829 he was married to Mary, daughter of James Clark, of Hopewell township, and after marriage he remained on the home farm four years, having in the meantime built a frame residence a short distance from the old stone house. In 1834, three years after the death of his father, he moved to the Razor Town farm of 210 acres, which he had purchased a year or two before. Razor Town, from which the farm took its name, was a village of twenty-six houses and cabins, with one good-sized tavern having a dozen rooms, and a blacksmith shop, race-course, etc. This point was known as a horse-trading post, and from the fact that many sharp deals were made there the place took the name of "Razor Town." William, thinking that creditable neighbors could not dwell in such houses, immediately set about to remove them, and in a few years the little town passed out of existence. On the spot where the old tavern stood he put up a set of weigh scales, which continued in use until 1878; he built the present farm house, and occupied it until his death in 1877. His occupation was that of a farmer, and for many years he killed and salted about 1,000 hogs annually at his home. He was also a stock dealer (buying stock in West Virginia and Ohio), driving it east to Philadelphia and New York, and strange to say he never made but one trip over the mountains with his stock, as he trusted them to employes until his son Robert was old enough to take charge of them, which he did at a very early age. In partnership with his brother-in-law, David Clark, he owned and kept a general store for fifteen years in what is now known as the "Howe building" on Main street, Washington, between Chestnut and Bean streets. He hoped to make a store keeper of his son Robert, but the latter strongly objected to being tied down so closely to business. He sold the store in about 1849. He also dealt in wool, and in 1845 he built the frame warehouse on West Chestnut street, which is now occupied by R. Wylie & Sons, in the same business. William Wylie was a member of church for fifty years, first at North Buffalo and then at Washington, and was one of the organizers of the U. P. Church at Washington, of which he was a member. In politics he was originally a Whig, afterward a Republican. He was never an aspirant for office, but nevertheless was recognized as one of the best posted men of his time in matters political, and always took an active part in the issues of the day. His hospitality was widely known, and his table never wanted for guests. His rifle shooting was the one thing upon which he prided himself, and stories of putting three out of five bullets in a cap box (about two inches in diameter) with his old squirrel rifle, at one hundred yards distance, off-hand, are familiar ones to his grandsons and nephews. The children of William and Mary (Clark) Wylie were Robert; Jane (Beall), wife of John Stricker Beall, banker of Wellsburg, W. Va.; Mrs. Annie E. Thompson, living in Washington, widow of Rev. Joseph R. Thompson, late of the Associate Reformed Church; and James Clark, who died at the age of twenty years.

ROBERT WYLIE, the subject proper of this narrative, was born August 25, 1830, on the old Wylie farm in Canton township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended the district schools, and later took an irregular course at Washington College. He was not a rugged boy, and could not stand close confinement at school, so he early took to the roads where he might breathe a more free air. At the age of thirteen years his father intrusted to his care a drove of cattle and sheep to be driven across the mountains and sold in Philadelphia, the money to be brought back by him in saddle-bags on horseback. He liked this business better than going to school or staying in the store, so he continued at same for some years, at first driving to Philadelphia and New York, later to Harrisburg. When the Pennsylvania Railroad was being finished to Pittsburgh, he early took advantage of this means of transport, being one of the first shippers on the road passing over the nine inclines through the Alleghany mountains. In 1861 he moved with his wife and family to a farm in Cumberland township, Greene Co., Penn., where they resided until 1865, when he purchased the Dr. Stevens farm in Canton township (340 acres), situated two miles west of Washington on the Taylorstown road, upon which he erected all the buildings which now stand upon it. He now resides there, surrounded by his children and grandchildren. With farming he combined the wool commission business, in which connection he is probably best known, his figure being a familiar one in his own and adjoining counties—in fact, to the people within a radius of fifty miles of his home his is a well-known, welcome face. His two sons, William and James B., became associated with him in business some four years since, the firm name being Robert Wylie & Sons, and the amount of wool bought and handled by them runs well toward a million pounds annually, the bulk of it being bought by the senior member of the firm, who gives to this branch of the business the greater part of his time. He is now sixty two years of age, but looks younger, and is yet in the prime of life. In his rides through the country he fears no kind of weather or roads, nor does the worst seem to affect his iron constitution.

On February 3, 1857, he married Elizabeth, daughter of James and Mary McCormick Beall, of Independence township. James Beall was a farmer and storekeeper in Wellsburg, W. Va., for some years, and before the time of railroads he rode to Philadelphia on horseback to purchase dry goods. His wife's father, who was also a merchant, lost his life in one of his trips to New Orleans, whither he was traveling to buy sugar, having, while en route overland on horseback, been murdered in Kentucky, supposedly for the money on his person, having a considerable amount at the time. The Bealls were among the early settlers of Baltimore county, Md., and Mrs. Wylie's grandfather and grandmother Beall both came from Baltimore; her grandfather was a soldier in the early war, and his wife was a sister of Gen. Stricker, who so ably defended Baltimore against the British in 1814. They came West about 178—, and purchased a farm on the edge of West Virginia, near Independence, Washington county, where they raised a large family, whose descendants are now widely scattered both east and west, though many of them are in Washington county, W. Va., and eastern Ohio. A brief record of the children of Robert and Elizabeth (Beall) Wylie is as follows:

WILLIAM WYLIE, born November 10, 1859, in Canton township, Washington Co., Penn., up to the age of fourteen years attended the common schools of his district, and then went to Washington and Jefferson College, where he remained four years. Returning home he engaged in the wool business with his father, and at the age of nineteen entered the Iron City Business College at Pittsburgh, Penn., where he graduated. He then embarked in the wool and farm implement business with his father, which they carried on for three years, when his younger brother James B. entered the business with them. They then abandoned the farm implement branch of their business, and have since been engaged exclusively in the wool business, which they have greatly enlarged, having extended their operations over a half dozen of the adjoining counties. They do business under the firm name of R. Wylie & Sons, and they are among the heaviest wool dealers in western Pennsylvania, enjoying the confidence of the people far and wide, to which their proverbial fair dealing justly entitles them. On June 16, 1885, William Wylie was married to Mary W., daughter of Joseph C. Gist, of Brooke county, W. Va., and they have been blessed with two children: Lizzie B. born October 6, 1887, and Clara V. born November 21, 1891. After marriage Mr. Wylie settled on his farm in Canton township, two miles west of Washington, Penn., where he still lives. He is a member of the U. P. Church at Washington; and in politics is a Republican.

Mrs. William Wylie was born August 27, 1861, in Brooke county, W. Va. Her father, J. C. Gist, was born March 16, 1820, in the same county. He was a large farmer and was engaged in the breeding and sale of fine sheep all his life. He was a Republican, and served one term in the West Virginia Legislature; was in the Senate in 1861, at the time of the war, one term. He was also talked of for governor of his State at one time, but for some reason best known to himself he did not run, although his friends assured him he would win. He died November 22, 1892. On August 10, 1848,

J. C. Gist married Elizabeth Culver, of Jefferson, Penn., born February 12, 1826, at Jefferson, Greene Co., Penn., daughter of Thomas Culver, a farmer. Mrs. William Wylie has three brothers and one sister living: Samuel C. Gist, J. W. Gist, and J. C. Gist, Jr., all living in Brooke county, W. Va., and Mrs. John C. Roseborough, of Brownwood, Tex. Mrs. Wylie's great uncle, Christopher Gist, was a member of Gen. George Washington's staff in the Revolutionary war.

James Beall Wylie, second son of Robert and Elizabeth (Beall) Wylie, born September 21, 1862, married June 24, 1890, Helen Cornelia, daughter of William D. and Elizabeth (Williamson) Roseborough, of Sardis, Miss. William Roseborough was a cotton planter, as were his father and grandfather before him; they were formerly of South Carolina. Her grandfather lived in Chester, S. C., and was clerk of the courts for fifty-two years; his wife, Eleanor (Key), was a daughter of Martin and Nancy (Bibb) Key, of Albemarle county, Va.; her great-grandparents came from Ireland to South Carolina about the time of the Revolution, and their families were both of French Huguenot ancestry, who left France about the middle of the seventeenth century; her great-grandmother Roseborough's maiden name was Gaston, and she was a daughter of William Gaston, of Cloughwate, Ireland, who was a grandson of the Duke of Orleans (the leader of the Huguenots, banished from France in 1612; some history says 1652), brother of Louis XIII and son of Henry IV, King of France and Navarre. J. B. and Helen R. Wylie have one child, a daughter, named Marion Marguerite Wylie, born May 14, 1891. Their home is in Canton township.

Laura Virginia, the only daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Beall) Wylie, was born October 7, 1867, and was married October 1, 1890, to Joseph C. Gist, Jr., son of Hon. J. C. Gist, of Brooke county, W. Va., where they now reside. They have one child, a son, born June 11, 1892, named for his grandfather, Robert Wylie.

WILLIAM KNOX, a progressive and successful farmer and business man of Buffalo township, is a son of John Knox, an early settler in the county, whose father, Thomas Knox, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, and came in 1811 to Washington county, with his wife, and died there at the age of eighty five years.

John Knox was born in 1777, in County Antrim, Ireland, whence, in 1811 he emigrated to the shores of Columbia, landing at New York. After about two years, moving from place to place and prospecting, he settled in Washington county, Penn., in 1813, where he purchased 110 acres of land at $10 per acre, having ten years in which to pay the amount.

This tract was then nearly all wildwood, but, night and day the ringing blows of the woodsman's merciless axe might be heard felling the giant monarchs of the forest, clearing the way for the van of civilization's mighty army. Thus by toil, energy, judicious economy and good management, in course of time the stern and uninviting haunts of the Redman, and the savage wolves, were made to "blossom as the rose," and smile with radiant meadows ripe with corn. To day for beauty and fertility, this farm is second to none in Washington county. Mr. Knox, before leaving the "Green Isle of Erin," had married Margaret McKay, a lady of Scottish birth, and in the round-log cabin on their American homestead were born to them the following children: Jennie (wife of Dr. Milliken), residing in Texas; Nancy (deceased wife of Alexander Gabby); Thomas, now a resident of Kansas; Robert (deceased); Jane (deceased wife of Jacob Alter); Elizabeth (deceased wife of John Danley); William (subject); John, residing in Claysville, Washington county, and Margaret (Mrs. George Smith), in Buffalo township. The mother was gathered in by the "Grim Reaper" in 1837, when she was forty seven years old, and the father in the spring of 1866. They were faithful, God fearing members of the United Presbyterian Church, and in politics Mr. Knox was an uncompromising Democrat, his first vote in the land of his adoption being cast for Andrew Jackson.

William Knox was born April 29, 1827, in Buffalo township, this county, and here he was reared to practical farm life, which was relieved by occasional attendance at the schools of the locality, which education he supplemented with a considerable amount of reading and home study. In October, 1856, he was married to Wilhelmina Maloy, a native of Lewistown, Penn., and their union has been blessed with the following named children: Margaret Jane (now the wife of Thomas Caldwell, of Washington county), John (living at home), William (dead), Minnie (now the wife of William Ellwood), in Franklin township, Robert Welch (a student at Washington and Jefferson College), Mary Jeanette, Annie Elizabeth and Thomas Edward, all at home. On October 13, 1876, the mother departed this life in her thirty-sixth year. After his marriage Mr. Knox took charge of his father's estate, which he successfully conducted for several years, his home being a log house which is still standing. There he lived until 1875, in which year he erected his present handsome and commodious residence, and moved into it. In fact, he has put up all the new buildings on the property, and made many other substantial improvements. As a result of thrift, enterprise and good management, Mr. Knox is now the owner of six farms, aggregating 800 acres of prime land, in which have been sunk as many as forty oil wells. In addition to general farming he is an extensive stockman and grower of fine wool. He and the family are members of the United Presbyterian Church, and in his political views Mr. Knox is a supporter of Protection at Presidential elections, but at other times he casts his vote for the candidate he deems best fitted for the office, regardless of party interests.

DAVID CRAFT, prominent in Morris township, was born in Washington county, September 9, 1824. His father, William Craft, was a grandson of John Craft, of whom mention is made in connection with the history of the Craft family in the sketch of William E. Craft.

William Craft, born 1789, was the eldest of four sons born to Lawrence Craft. He married, in 1811, Mary Elliot, born in 1794, a daughter of William Elliot, of Morris township. They became the parents of eleven children as follows: Betsey, Lawrence, Annie, William E., Martha, Malinda, Jane, David, George W., Mary and Isaac. William died in 1856, and his wife in 1871. David Craft, the subject of this sketch, was reared on the farm and spent his boyhood in attending the district school and assisting with the farm work. His education was thus necessarily limited, though it has been greatly improved by reading and observation. He married, in 1861, Sarah Lindley, a daughter of Zebulon Lindley, of Morris township, born September 26, 1837. Their union has been blessed with eight children, as follows: Flora J., wife of J. N. Winget, of Pittsburgh; William L., at home; Mary H., wife of S. J. Bell, of Claysville; Homer L., Lillie M., Maurice D., Lizzie S., and Forest Z., all at home. Mr. Craft is one of the influential and prosperous farmers of his township. In politics he has always been a staunch Democrat. Both he and his wife are members of Mt. Zion M. E. Church.

HARMON H. RAINEY was born March 14, 1841, in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn. His paternal grandparents were natives of Ireland, coming to this country at an early day, where James Rainey followed farming, and served several years as justice of the peace.

James Rainey, son of James, was born September 3, 1803, on the farm now owned by heirs of James Rainey. At the age of nineteen years the former learned the tanner's trade, but followed it only a short time. In 1836 he was united in marriage with Jane Thomas, who was born November 14, 1811, in Nottingham township. Their children were Lydia A. (Mrs. Dabout), Sarah E. (Mrs. Hyde), Mary J. (wife of William McGregor), Harmon H. and one deceased. The father owned and managed a large stock-farm containing 222 acres of land. He died in September, 1875. Mrs. Rainey passed away August 11, 1890.

Harmon H. Rainey passed his youth on his father's farm, attending the schools of Somerset township, this county. On October 10, 1872, he was married to Lucy B. Hixon, daughter of Capt. James Hixon, of North Strabane township. They have a son and daughter: James H. and Retta A. The father lives on and owns the home place, and devotes his principal attention to raising sheep. He is an advocate of the principles embodied in the Democratic party. For fifteen years he has been school director, and recently was given a new lease of this office. In religion Mr. and Mrs. Rainey are members of the United Presbyterian Church. H. H. Rainey also served as one of the managers of the Morganza Reform School for four years, under appointment by Gov. Pattison.

EDWARD G. CUNDALL, of the firm of E. G. Cundall & Sons, dealers in clothing and gents' furnishings, Washington, was born November 7, 1832, in what is now Canton township (then part of Chartiers), Washington Co., Penn. His father, also named Edward G., was born in 1791, in Rhode Island, where he was married to Patience R. Bailey, of Newport, that State, who bore him eight children, of whom three are yet living, viz.: Mrs. Mary E. McIlroy, of Washington, who has been a widow since 1854; Emily M., wife of S. P. Morgan, residence, Jefferson avenue, Washington; and Edward G. One daughter (now deceased) was married to R. W. Miller, who recently died. Mr. Cundall, Sr., came to Washington county, bringing his wife and two children, and purchased property in Cross Creek township, whence after a time they moved to Chartiers township. In April, 1865, they came to Washington, where the father died December 4, 1866, aged seventy-four years; the mother passed away in 1881 at the age of eighty-two.

The early life of our subject was passed on the old homestead in Canton township, his education being received at the common schools of the district. In 1866 he removed to South Strabane township, and in 1870 to Buffalo township, where he owns a farm. In November, 1891, he purchased the clothing and gents' furnishing business of W. C. Baldwin, and now has an extensive trade, his place being one of the best known in that line in the city. On October 5, 1854, Mr. Cundall was united in marriage with Miss Martha W., daughter of W. H. Cook, of Canton township, and to this union five children were born, viz.: Maggie R., wife of Deforest Wilson, of Taylorstown; Emma J., wife of William McManus, of Taylorstown;

E. G. Candell

W. G., on a farm in Buffalo township, married to a daughter of Thomas Clark, of Chartiers township; Edward M., a dentist in Washington, and W. Harry, with his father in the store. On December 10, 1889, the mother died at the age of fifty-six years. Politically Mr. Cundall is a Republican, and he has served as school director in Canton township. On April 2, 1877, he was appointed superintendent, secretary and treasurer of the County Home, in which position he served fourteen consecutive years, when he resigned.

WILLIAM BRIMNER, proprietor of one of the oldest business houses in Burgettstown, is of Scotch descent. William Brimmer (the grandfather) was born and reared in the Highlands of Scotland. When a lad of but twelve years he resolved to see for himself the wonderful country of which so many exciting tales were told, and escaping from his friends embarked on an American bound sailing vessel. He landed in New York, and came immediately to Berks county, Penn., there passing his youth in agricultural pursuits. In early manhood he was married to Elizabeth Burnett, a Quaker lady of the same county. They soon afterward moved to western Pennsylvania, carrying all their worldly possessions on pack-horses. He first settled in Hanover township, this county, and purchased the land patented by Mr. Bavington. At that time the tract was covered by forests, and the young pioneer was compelled to clear a space for the log cabin, which was then erected. The cooking was all done in one frying pan, and the other household utensils were similarly utilized as necessity required. But time brought conveniences within their reach, and ere many years the rude homes of the frontiersmen were adorned with many of the comforts though but few of the luxuries, of our modern life. Children came to bless the home of William and Elizabeth Brimmer, and were named as follows: John, Mary A. (Mrs. Hugh Barton), Robert and James. In politics the father was an active worker of the Democratic party, holding various township offices. In religion he was one of the first members of the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church, now called the Florence Presbyterian Church. He died in his ninety-second year, in 1850, on the place where he first located, and his wife passed to her rest in her eighty-ninth year.

James Brimmer, father of the subject of this sketch, was born in 1800, on the home farm in Hanover township, this county, receiving a meager education in the rude log-cabin school-house erected in the heart of the mighty forest, and furnished with slab seats, paper windows and puncheon floor. Much of his boyhood was passed in farm duties, and on March 10, 1832, he was united in marriage with Martha, daughter of William Dunbar. After their marriage the young people settled on the home farm, where children were born and reared as follows: Mary (wife of Samuel Scroggs, Lenox, Iowa), William, Thomas (residing in Hanover township, this county), Eliza J. (Mrs. James Russell), James (living in Robinson township, this county) and Rebecca S. (Mrs. J. J. Campbell, of Wilkinsburgh, Penn.). Politically Mr. Brimmer was a Jacksonian Democrat, and he was a prominent, enterprising citizen. He served for years as a trustee of schools. He was a member of the Florence Presbyterian Church, giving that body a liberal support. He died in 1848, and in 1883 Mrs. Brimmer was laid to rest by the side of her husband in the Florence cemetery.

William Brimmer, son of James and Martha (Dunbar) Brimmer, was born November 12, 1836, in Hanover township, on the old homestead of his grandfather, and passed his boyhood on the farm, receiving a common-school education. After the death of his father he assumed the management of the home place, having since that time won success by his own efforts. On November 15, 1860, he married Susan, daughter of James Aiken, of Lawrence county, Penn. They have three children, namely: Ethie (Mrs. J. A. McKeown), Thomas R. (electrical engineer in Philadelphia) and W. F. (a book-keeper at Pittsburgh, Penn.). In 1875 Mr. Brimmer became engaged in the mercantile business in Burgettstown, where he is still one of the leading business men. In church connection he is a Presbyterian.

James Espey, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born, in 1780, in Allegheny county, Penn., and was married to Jane Fife, who was born September 18, 1782, in the same county. The young people settled in Upper St. Clair township, and always remained in their native county. James Espey was an active politician, and served as postmaster at Upper St. Clair, also as a justice of the peace. At the time of his death, which occurred in 1853, he was a member of the U. P. James and Susan Espey first located on a farm in Upper St. Clair township, Allegheny county, and in 1867 moved to a

James Espey was actively interested in politics, and voted with the Whig party, serving some years as justice of the peace. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he was ruling elder at Upper St. Clair, Cecil and Canonsburg. He died at the last mentioned place July 11, 1883; his widow is yet living in Canonsburg. At the battle of Spotsylvania Court House Mr. Espey was wounded on the left shoulder, on account of which he was confined in Lincoln Hospital, Washington, D. C. He went home on a furlough, but returned to Washington, and on July 13, 1864, received an honorable discharge at Pittsburgh, Penn. He then returned to Allegheny county, and on December 27, 1866, was united in marriage with Sarah A. Woods, a daughter of Samuel Woods, who was born in 1798, in Allegheny county, and was married to Elizabeth Fife, born, in 1800, in the same county. Samuel and Elizabeth Woods made a permanent home in Snowden township, Allegheny county, where he died in 1867, having been preceded by his wife in 1865.

In 1874 he bought an improved farm of fifty acres in Mount Pleasant township, moved upon it same year, and has since been engaged in farming and stockraising. The following children have been born to this couple: Minnie L., born September 3, 1867 (married December 31, 1890, to Howard Herriott. She died February 14, 1892, leaving one child, Joseph Roy Herriott, born February 8, 1892); Ada S., born August 25, 1870, a teacher in Washington county; James J., born February 9, 1876; Carrie May, born May 1, 1879, and Joseph W., born November 15, 1880, died May 25, 1881. Mr. and Mrs. Espey were formerly members of the U. P. Church, in which Mr. Espey was a member of the Session, but they are now adherents of the Presbyterian Church at McDonald. In politics he votes the Republican ticket, and is one of the commissioners of Mount Pleasant township.

THOMAS W. ELLWOOD is a son of William Ellwood, who was born in Ohio, and coming to Washington county, Penn., when a boy, was here reared to manhood. William Ellwood was twice married: first time to a Miss Greer, who bore him six children, viz.: William, Clarissa (wife of Harrison Bishop), Martha (married to Harrison Thompson), Margaret, and two who died in childhood. For his second wife Mr. Ellwood married Ruth, daughter of Thomas Lilley, a native of East Pike Run township, this county, and their children were Thomas W., Robert and Jefferson. Ellwood). His second wife was a Miss George. Thomas W. and Rachel Ellwood began wedded life on a farm in East Bethlehem township, Washington county, where they resided thirteen years. He then sold the place and came to a farm in Fallowfield township, upon which he lived twelve years, finally moving to his present home in Charleroi, where in 1892 he opened, in partnership with Gus Mountser, a feed, grain and produce business. He affiliates with the Democratic party, and has served in many local offices; in religion he is a member of and ruling elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Charleroi. Ellwood engaged with the Charleroi Plate Glass Co., to learn the machine trade, on June 2, 1891.

JR. WINNETT, a representative farmer of Fallowfield township, is the eldest child of Lot Winnett, who was a son of William Winnett, and was born and reared in Fallowfield township, where he married Hester, a daughter of Joseph Budd. They settled on the home farm, and children were born to their union as follows: J. He died in 1890, at the age of seventy-six years; his widow is yet residing on the home place.

J. R. Winnett was born in 1839, on the place in Fallowfield township where he is yet living. In 1868 he was united in marriage with Jennie, daughter of Joseph Sphar. Her parents were born in Washington county, where the father died, the mother having passed away near West Newton, Penn. Mr. Winnett has passed his life in tilling the soil on the place of his birth, which now contains eighty-five acres of well-cultivated land. He is an active member of the Republican party, and is now serving as a member of the school board. He and his wife are identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Ebenezer. Their children are Lot, Olive May (wife of Paul Hughes, of Clarion, Penn.), Charles and J. Kingsley.

MRS. MARGARET MINTON, widow of Matthias Minton, a native of Morris township, was born December 26, 1824, and is a daughter of John V. Hanna. She was married to Mr. Minton March 8, 1849. Matthias Minton was born April 3, 1826, in Morris township. His father Matthias Minton, moved to Washington county from New Jersey, in the early history of the county. He was by trade a blacksmith, to which, in conjunction with farming, he gave his attention. He married, early in life, Miss Sally Lindley, and of their children is named one son, Matthias Minton. The latter received educational advantages as a youth, and by private application in reading and otherwise, prepared himself for the successful pursuance of his vocation, farming, and later merchandising and hotel-keeping, having succeeded not only in leaving his family a competence, but an honored name. Public spiritedness was a prominent attribute of his nature, and the community in which he lived attest with pride to what an extent he exercised it. In the fall of 1861 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment, P. V. I., but on account of poor health was compelled to return home in July, 1862. He was a life-long Democrat, and for twenty-four consecutive years served as justice of the peace. He was a zealous Christian, being united with the Presbyterian Church, in which he was deacon. Generous and charitable, he was revered by his neighbors, who often went to him for advice. He was justly called the poor man's friend. In 1890 he sustained injuries from a horse kick, which resulted in his death seven weeks later.

To the marriage of Matthias Minton and Margaret Hanna four children were born: the eldest, John Vance, is a tanner by trade; he served as gauger under President Cleveland's administration. He married Miss Mary J. Merriman, of Canonsburg, Washington county. Henry Collins, the second son of Matthias, was educated at Washington and Jefferson College, from which institution he graduated with honors in 1879; he then entered the Western Theological Seminary, of Allegheny, Penn., and having completed the course, accepted the call to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church of Duluth, Minn. His health failing him, he resigned the charge after a short term of service, and passed some time in Florida. Receiving a call from the Second Presbyterian Church of Baltimore, Md., he entered upon the labors of this charge, but after a brief time, on the advice of his physician, resigned, the climate proving unfavorable to his health, and accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church, of San Jose, Cal. This congregation he served six years, when he resigned to accept a call to the charge of St. John's Church, of San Francisco, which he still holds. He was united in marriage with Claire Louise Smith, an accomplished Philadelphia lady, and the daughter of a prominent Presbyterian divine. Miss Sarah Lydia, the third child of Matthias and Margaret Minton, resides with her mother. Isa D., the fourth child, was united in marriage to W. S. Guttery, and resides in Prosperity.

JOHAN RUSSELL. This highly prosperous farmer represents one of the oldest pioneer families of Washington county. His grandfather, Andrew Russell, was born in 1732, in Scotland, and came to America in 1758. He was married in this country to Isabelle Mays, a native of Ireland, and the young couple settled near Oxford, Chester Co., Penn., afterward moving to Canonsburg, this county, where they resided till 1782. Andrew then bought the farm in Chartiers township, which is yet owned by his grandson. He was a blacksmith by trade, having brought his tools from eastern Pennsylvania, and, being the only one for miles around, his services were in constant demand.

Andrew Russell, a son of the pioneer just mentioned, was born January 3, 1777, in Cecil township, this county, and in 1782 was brought by his parents to their new home in Chartiers township, where his youth was passed. In 1800 he was married to Ann McClellan, who was born in 1784, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and after marriage began to manage the home farm. He was a Whig, taking an active part in the early political history of the county; he had a brother who served in the war of 1812. In religious faith Andrew Russell was first a Seceder, then joined the United Presbyterian Church of Canonsburg. He died March 2, 1861, in his eighty-fourth year, being followed February 17, 1868, by his wife, who had borne him children as follows: Jane, married to Samuel Lee, and died January 24, 1880; Isabelle, married to William McCall, and died in 1845; James, married in 1844 to Elizabeth McElroy, and died in January, 1890; Ann, living in New Concord, Ohio; Elizabeth, married to Robert Jeffrey, of Mt. Pleasant township, and died January 10, 1878, in her sixty-fifth year;

Andrew, married in April, 1839, to Jane Miller, and died in April, 1891; Alexander, married first to Margaret Ann Acheson (deceased), then to Lavina Cockins, and died September 29, 1886, in his sixty-eighth year; Robert, married first to Elizabeth McConaughy (deceased), then to Martha Jane McNary, and died in May, 1887; John, a sketch of whom follows; William (married to Margaret Thompson, who died in 1892), living in Chartiers township, and Nancy, who died in 1849.

John Russell, the subject proper of this sketch, was born in 1821, on the farm in Chartiers township which is his present home. His early education was obtained in the subscription schools which were then sustained by a few families interested in the literary culture of their children. In May, 1866, John Russell was united in marriage with Elizabeth G. Morrison, a native of Chartiers township. She is a daughter of William and Sarah (Munce) Morrison, both of whom were born and reared in Chartiers township, where the father followed farming. He was an ardent member of the Whig party, and both parents were members of the Presbyterian Church. The father died about 1860, in this county, and the mother was laid beside him in March, 1885. To the union of John and Elizabeth G. (Morrison) Russell four children have been born, namely: Lizzie Luella (wife of J. R. Hosick, a theological student at the Allegheny Seminary; Anna; J. Mack, a student of the Western Reserve Medical College, Cleveland, Ohio, and Frank (deceased in infancy). Mr. Russell owns the home farm, which has been in the family over one hundred and ten years, and consists of 160 acres, upon which comfortable and commodious buildings are erected. He makes a specialty of raising a high grade of English Shire horses. Mr. Russell has in his possession many antique relics of the past generations, among which may be mentioned an anvil which was brought from Scotland by his grandfather, also a day-book over one hundred and twenty years old. He has a small trunk, or case in trunk shape, that was owned by his father, and is very old; it is 4x7 inches, leather covered, and is quite a curiosity. He and his wife are both members of the United Presbyterian Church, at Canonsburg, this county. He was formerly a ruling elder in Chartiers Cross Roads U. P. Church. Mr. Russell died on Monday, January 16, 1893, after only twenty four hours illness.

JA. LITTLE. There is a pleasurable interest aroused in the minds of both reader and writer of biography, as from the life of some earnest, intelligent citizen of to-day, we wander back through the years until centuries have vanished, and in spirit we are standing in the presence of our ancestors. Our eyes brighten, and pulses thrill with unwonted inspiration as we eagerly study the words and acts of these heroes of the past. There is a wonderful fascination in this form of psychological study, for, as through a mirror, we see the hidden motives and desires of our own lives displayed in the record of our fathers from which (if we so will it) priceless lessons may be obtained.

Nicholas Little was born in Ireland many years ago, and about 1770, with his wife and little son, sailed across the ocean, to find a home in fair America. He located in the eastern part of Washington county, Penn., where his son James grew to manhood, and when twenty-one years of age came to Cecil township, this county. In 1790 James took a patent for 200 acres of land in Cecil township, and immediately began the task of clearing it for cultivation. With his gun by his side the young pioneer felled the trees of the forest, sleeping at night in a blockhouse near location of the village, now known as McDonald, for protection from Indians. He married Isabelle Robb, who bore him children as follows: John (deceased in 1823, in Cecil township), Nicholas (lived on the old homestead, and died in 1859), James (deceased in 1876, in Guernsey county, Ohio; his daughter, Mrs. Emerick, is now living on the homestead), David (first settled in Ohio, then moved to Lee county, Iowa. He died in 1870, at Paxton, Ford Co., Ill.), Elizabeth (deceased in 1819), Nancy (was the wife of John McConaughy, Mount Pleasant township), Jane (deceased in 1868, married to Joseph Craig, Belmont county, Ohio), and Isabelle (died July 17, 1877). The father died in 1834.

Joseph Little was born October 25, 1806, on the old homestead in Cecil township, and in 1838 was united in marriage with Mary Robb, a native of Logan county, Ohio. The young people settled on a farm adjoining the old homestead where he followed farming. He was a man of decided views, in politics a Whig and Republican, and voted for John C. Fremont. He and his wife were first members of the Associate Presbyterian Church, at Nobles-town, Penn. He afterward united with the Associate Congregation of Millers Run, at Venice, serving as a ruling elder from the time of its organization. Mrs. Little died September 15, 1860, and on February 23, 1885, he was laid by her side. They were the parents of two children: J. A., and Samuel Reed (deceased in 1874, in his twenty-ninth year).

J. A. Little was born December 12, 1840, on the home farm in Cecil township, which is yet his home, receiving his education in the country schools. After leaving school he began to follow farming and stock raising on the home place. On March 22, 1866, Mr. Little was united in marriage with Mary E., daughter of Cornelius and Rebecca (Kelso) Borland, natives of Allegheny county, Penn., who came to Cecil township many years ago, where the father died in 1872, and where the mother is yet living. Of this union five children have been born, viz.: Joseph (married to Mary, daughter of Mark Cowden, living on home farm in Cecil township), Edwin C. (attending the Theological Seminary, at Allegheny, Penn.), Annetta, Ida B. and Clara R. The farm of Mr. Little at present contains 347 acres of good land, upon which are five dwelling houses, in one of which the present tenant has been living forty years. He does an extensive business in stock raising. In politics he votes with the Republican party, and has filled various township offices. He and his wife are active members of the U. P. Church, at Venice.

MRS. ELMIRA TILTON (widow of Daniel Tilton) was born in Fayette county, Penn., June 12, 1825. She is the daughter of George and Eleanor (Layton) Whiting, and was first married to Jesse Jackman, but some time after his death became the wife of Daniel Tilton, who was of English ancestry.

James Tilton, grandfather of Daniel, was a native of New Jersey, where he was married, three children—John, James and Nancy—being born to this union. He afterward moved to Pennsylvania, remaining in Greene county a short time, and while there almost decided to purchase the wood-covered tract on which the town of Waynesburgh, Greene county, has since been built.

John Tilton, the only son of James, was born in New Jersey in 1785. He moved to Washington county, Penn., with his parents, where, in 1806, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Paden, of East Finley township, Washington county. To their union were born eleven children, but one of whom is still living, Elvira (unmarried, a resident of Franklin township). Mr. Tilton was a devoted member of the Baptist Church at Pleasant Grove, and confirmed the donation of the land, made by James, upon which it was built, becoming one of the first deacons of that church.

Daniel Tilton, son of John and Elizabeth (Paden) Tilton, born February 6, 1815, on his father's farm near Pleasant Grove, died March 4, 1890. His education was received in the schools of the period, and his boyhood was passed in attending them and assisting with the farm duties. He also partially learned the carpenter and cooper trades. In 1835 he was married to Abigail Pratt, who died in 1859, leaving him one child, Mary, now the wife of Henry Enlow, of East Finley township. Five other children were born to them, but none lived to an adult age. On August 23, 1860, Mr. Tilton was united in marriage with Mrs. Elmira Jackman, and to their union the following children were born:

George W., born September 14, 1861, now managing the home farm (married to Maggie F. Ferrell, of West Finley township, and has one child, Harry W.); Louisa Catherine, born January 14, 1863, died December 23, 1865; Eleanor W., born April 5, 1864, married to David K. Bell, and died October 1, 1889, and Laura E., born December 20, 1866, an accomplished young lady, residing with her mother. In 1838 Mr. Tilton purchased a part of the "Old Byers" tract of land, situated about three miles south of Claysville, in East Finley township, where he successfully followed the vocation of a farmer the rest of his life. He was a zealous Christian, liberal contributor and hearty supporter of the Pleasant Grove Baptist Church, of which he was a member and deacon. Politically he was a Republican. His widow, who is also a member of the Baptist Church, resides on the home farm, her son, G. W. Tilton, managing the farm, and taking the place in church affairs held for so many years by his father.

JOHAN A. FLACK. Among the early pioneers of Washington county was John Flack, who came from Lancaster, Penn., to Washington village, where he purchased a town lot in the year 1784, becoming one of the first lot owners in the borough. In 1788 he removed to Buffalo township, where he purchased a farm upon which he erected the first frame house in that section of the country. This home is still in a good state of preservation, and there may be seen, to-day, members of the fourth generation of the family, born therein, the homestead having remained constantly in the possession of the family.

John Flack married Jane Gault, a native of Canonsburg, Washington county, and to them were born the following children: James, John, Samuel, David and Mary. The mother of these children died on the homestead in Buffalo township, December 14, 1823, in her sixty-third year. John Flack was known among the earliest settlers of Buffalo township, and resided there until the time of his death, which occurred in 1832.

John Flack, second child of John and Jane (Gault) Flack, was born October 23, 1788. He married Miss Ann Anderson, daughter of Rev. Mr. Anderson, of Upper Buffalo, Washington county, and a pioneer minister there. The young couple took up their residence in Buffalo township, where they reared a large family, and passed the remainder of their useful and honorable lives, the father dying September 13, 1842, the mother several years later.

John A. Flack, son of John and Ann (Anderson) Flack, and at present one of the oldest and best known residents of Buffalo township, was born February 6, 1824, on the old homestead where he now resides. He spent his boyhood days upon the farm, amidst the trials and limited advantages of that pioneer period. The little subscription school, held in an humble log cabin, whose primitive furnishings of puncheon floor, slab desks and benches were eloquent witnesses of the privations of the day, was the only "college" afforded him. There, for a few weeks during the winter, the children from the surrounding country would assemble, and while one-half of their attention was employed in extracting wisdom from the old-fashioned spelling book and reader, the other half would be utilized in directing the struggle with the cold which came in through many a crack and crevice in the building. Amidst such scenes as this Mr. Flack spent his boyhood, and in his later years, when the advancement of our day has provided the youth with greater comforts, he looked back with pleasure upon the past, and related many amusing incidents of his early struggles. He died January 17, 1893, in his sixty-ninth year.

On February 24, 1846, Mr. Flack was united in marriage with Elizabeth McWilliams, daughter of Gen. Wallace McWilliams, of Buffalo township, who had represented his district in the State Legislature, and was a major-general of the State militia. Four children were born to this union: Wallace McW. (who now conducts the home farm), Annie (deceased at the age of twelve years), Lizzie and Nannie died in infancy. Mrs. Flack died December 22, 1886, in her sixty-fifth year, having been a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church. Politically Mr. Flack was an ardent Democrat, and in early life he took an active part in the political questions of the day.

WILLIAM McCASLAND, a well-known, wide-awake farmer of West Bethlehem township, was born February 20, 1810, upon the old homestead in that township, a son to Matthew McCasland, who was born in 1802 in County Derry, Ireland, and died June 18, 1883. When twenty years of age the father left the "Emerald Isle," coming first to Quebec, Canada, then to Washington county, Penn. He began to work at the tailor's trade in Monongahela, and continued in that business there and in other cities for many years. He then purchased the farm which is now the home of his son, and spent the remainder of his life in agriculture. He wedded Sibbie Wilson Moore, September 10, 1825, daughter of James Moore, of West Bethlehem township, and the children born to them were: Martha (deceased), Catherine (deceased), Sarah, Hugh (deceased), Henderson and William. Matthew McCasland was a Democrat, and, although not an active politician, he was ever on the alert to the interests of his party. His wife, who died August 20, 1879, was a member of the Lutheran Church.

William McCasland received a limited education in the common schools of the neighborhood of his place of birth, but is a well-informed man, fond of reading. He managed the home farm some years previous to the death of his father, and has always been a successful business man, practicing in every-day life the principles of honor which he believes to be the only foundation of true success. He was married November 23, 1876, to Miss Martha Shrontz, and they have two children: Robert Wilson and Viola Rebecca. Mr. McCasland is a Democrat, and has served as school director for his township. He and his family are members of the Disciple Church at Lone Pine. Mrs. Martha McCasland was born September 20, 1816. Her grandfather, Frederick Shrontz, came to Pennsylvania from Germany, when a youth, and married Elizabeth Shidden. Her parents were George and Rebecca (Carter) Shrontz. Rebecca is the daughter of John and A. (McFarland) Carter. Her husband died in April, 1885.

JAMES E. RIAL is a worthy representative of a patriotic and soldierly family. The family history is one of loyalty. They have ever freely given of their best and dearest to aid their native land in her agonized struggles for liberty. "Life for a life" in their bible was interpreted as the life of the hero for the existence of his country; and nobly did this pioneer family answer to the call for volunteers.

Isaac Rial was born in New Jersey, and the blood of Scottish patriots coursed through his veins. He was a prosperous planter before the Revolution, having been among the first to shoulder arms in that mighty struggle, and the last to lay them down after twelve years upon the battle field. He was the father of five children.

Daniel Rial, the oldest son of Isaac, was born in 1796, in the State of New Jersey, and when the war of 1812 opened was too young to enlist. But "we are the same that our fathers have been," and the soldier spirit of his ancestors was burning with unquenchable fire in the bosom of the child. He volunteered to help build the fortifications at New York, and was permitted to assist in that task. He well remembered seeing the entrance of the British fleet into New York harbor. His mother, worthy of her warrior son and husband, bound up the wounds of the American soldiers. After the war the lad returned to the farm, and devoted his time to agricultural pursuits. In 1820 he chose a wife in the person of Susan Allfree, who was born in 1801, in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn. He settled on a farm in the district known as the Dutch settlement, in the same township, and lived there till his death, in 1880, when, in the fullness of a ripe and honored age, he went down to the grave, esteemed by all who knew him. Eleven children were born to them, of whom the following are yet living: Allfree H., Isaac T., Susan, Katherine (living in Ohio), Joseph Y. (in Missouri), Daniel E. (in Westmoreland county, Penn.), and James E. (in Nottingham township). The father was a devout Christian gentleman. He was a member of the Baptist Church for over sixty years, and helped to organize one of the first congregations of that denomination and build one of the first churches in the Monongahela Valley. Susan, his wife, was a daughter of John and Hettie Foster Allfree. They were among the first settlers along the Monongahela river. They raised a family of nine children—eight daughters and one son. Abraham, the son, moved to Iowa, where he died at the age of eighty-six years, leaving an influence for good. He was an active worker in the Methodist Church for sixty years, and held an exhorter's license for most of that time. He was always able to help the needy, and did much in the way of benevolence. Susan, the widow of Daniel Rial, who is in her ninety-second year, is living with her son, James E. Rial. She has been a member of the Baptist Church for more than seventy years.

James E. Rial was born December 31, 1840, in Carroll township, Washington county, receiving a good education in the schools of the vicinity. The war of the Rebellion broke out in the midst of his school years. He enlisted September 26, 1862, under Capt. J. Y. Chesrown, in Company D, Ringgold Cavalry, which was soon after consolidated with the Twenty-second P. V. Cavalry, his company being then Company E, of said regiment. The regiment was commanded by Col. Greenfield, of Washington county. Mr. Rial was with the regiment in many prominent engagements: in the noted battle of Gettysburg, in command of a detachment of cavalry; under Gen. Lew Wallace, at Monocacy river; he was with Sheridan in his famous campaign in the Shenandoah Valley, which meant fighting from Harper's Ferry to Richmond, and in the memorable battle of Winchester, where thousands were killed. His regiment, led by Col. Greenfield, charged the fortifications, capturing a piece of artillery and many prisoners. Two days later Sheridan attacked Early at Fisher's Hill. His squadron, Companies E and F, charged the rifle-pits, with loss; in this charge a ball passed through his coat; the squadron dismounted to hold their position. In the grand and final charge, along the whole line, his squadron charged on foot. He, with Col. Greenfield and Jacob Wise, of Company F, and William Starr, of Company E, were among the first inside the fortifications. One month later came the battle of Cedar Creek, during which Sheridan made his famous ride. It was one of the hardest-fought battles of the war. His regiment was in that great charge, which gave victory to the Union boys. His horse fell in that engagement, injuring his right leg. Numerous were the hardships which he encountered, best known to the soldier. He was promoted from the ranks to orderly sergeant, and received his discharge July 5, 1865.

Leaving the scenes of carnage for the peaceful pursuits of rural life, Mr. Rial settled on a farm in Washington county. He was married November 1, 1871, to Anna A. Bryant, a native of this county, daughter of James M. Bryant and Sarah Curry Bryant. They had three children: William C., Moore M. and Anna A. Mr. Bryant was a prosperous farmer. He was a ruling elder in the U. P. Church for forty years, and a man of honor and integrity. He died in 1880, aged seventy-nine. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Rial has been blessed by four children, two of whom are living: Susie S. and Lizzie A. Both are in school, Susie attending school at Pittsburgh, Penn. Mr. Rial has a very desirable home, and takes great pleasure in his fine fruit and thoroughbred Jersey cattle. He has belonged to the Prohibition party for eleven years. He is an honorable gentleman, a reader well posted on the events of the day, and takes an active part in all moral movements. He and his family are members of the first Presbyterian Church of Finleyville.

JAMES L. PATTERSON, banker, Burgettstown, is one of the most prominent citizens and successful financiers in the northern part of Washington county.

The family have been residents of Pennsylvania for many years, and Josiah Patterson (grandfather of subject) was born, about the year 1750, on a farm in the Cumberland Valley, eastern Pennsylvania. He was there united in marriage with Mary —, and in 1806 came with his wife and four children to Washington county, the journey being made in an emigrant wagon, which carried the family and all their worldly goods. He purchased and located upon a farm of 197 acres in Smith township, near Burgettstown, the land having been a part of the Samuel Whittaker tract. Of the children born to Josiah and Mary Patterson, Elizabeth was married to Ebenezer Smith, and died in Guernsey county, Ohio; Mary was never married, and took care of her mother until the death of the latter (this daughter died in her eighty-third year); Robert is spoken of farther on. Josiah Patterson always followed farming, and in religion was a member of the Presbyterian Church. He died in 1823, and was buried in Cross Creek cemetery. The farm was left to his son Robert, and the widowed mother then resided with her daughter, passing away in 1856, at the patriarchal age of ninety-seven years. Before the death of Mrs. Mary Patterson, there were four of the same name living together at one time: grandmother, daughter, granddaughter and daughter of James L. Patterson, the subject proper of this sketch.

Robert Patterson, son of Josiah and Mary Patterson, was born in 1786, in the Cumberland Valley, Penn., and when twenty years of age came with his parents to Washington county. He enlisted in the war of 1812, serving a short time, and in 1814 was married to Mary, daughter of James Linn, both of whom were born in the Cumberland Valley. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Patterson located on his father's farm near Burgettstown, Penn., and he followed the profession of surveyor. He became a very successful business man, settling up various estates and dealing extensively in wool. In political opinion he was originally a Whig, then a Republican, and served as justice of the peace for many years. In religious faith he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church at Florence, at which place he was elected an elder in 1832, and served in that capacity until the organization of a Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown, in 1849, to which place he transferred his membership; he was made an elder there also, and served in that office until his death, which occurred in February, 1861. He was regarded as the founder of the church in Burgettstown. Mrs. Patterson died of consumption in 1854, and was first buried at Florence, but her remains were afterward interred in the cemetery at Burgettstown, where they now rest. Three of their daughters died of consumption, viz.: Eliza, at the age of twenty-two; Sarah, who had been married but six months, and died aged twenty, and Jane, who had been twice married, and died at the age of thirty.

James L. Patterson was born November 12, 1824, on the farm in Smith township where he is yet living. After attending the common schools, he entered the academy at Florence, then took a course at Washington College, graduating therefrom in 1842. He always excelled as a pupil, having read Latin at the age of nine years, and graduated when but seventeen. After leaving college he read medicine at home a short time, and about the age of nineteen years he taught school in Burgettstown one winter. In 1849 he began business in a general store, remaining there three years, thence returning to rural life. On April 20, 1854, he was united in marriage with Sarah A., daughter of William Linn, of Cumberland Valley, Penn., and she has borne him the following children: Robert and William (both deceased in infancy), Mary (at home), Addie J. (instructor of instrumental music in Richmond College, Jefferson county, Ohio) and Elizabeth K. (of whom special mention is made further on), J. Fred. (clerking in the Burgettstown National Bank) and Anna (living at home). Miss Elizabeth K. Patterson was in August, 1890, taken by her father to Paris, France, in order to be placed under the far-famed instructor of vocal music, Madame Marchesi, and here she has since remained. Miss Patterson possesses a fine soprano voice, and bids fair to become prominent in her profession. She was three years at Forest Park University, St. Louis, building up the music department, of which she was instructor; and so efficient was she in her duties that the managers of the university, after she had gone to Paris, wanted her back even to the extent of cableing her to return. Mr. Patterson was elected an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown in 1862, and still holds that office. The membership of that church is 430 at the present time.

In 1855 Mr. Patterson was appointed the first agent of the P. C. & St. L. R. R. Co. in Burgettstown, also of the Express company, and opened a store at "the station" as it was then called. In 1867 he left the railroad company, and again began farming. In 1872 he organized the Burgettstown Savings Bank, of which he was secretary and treasurer, and in 1879 (the bank having become the Burgettstown National Bank), was made cashier, which position he has since held. He has been the sole manager of the bank business in Burgettstown, and has been the prime mover in the success of the institution. The bank is in a remarkable state of prosperity, having materially thriven under Mr. Patterson's management. It has a deposit of $300,000, and surplus and undivided profits of $65,000, the capital stock being $80,000.

Our subject inherited a tendency to consumption, and at the age of twenty years was examined by Dr. Lane, of Washington, who decided that he had symptoms of tuberculosis, and that, to preserve his life, he would have to go South. Agreeable to the advice of his physician, he set out in search of health, journeying to Louisiana in 1844. He arrived there in November, and engaged in teaching school in the vicinity of Baton Rouge, returning to his home the following spring. In June, 1845, he fell from a cherry tree, on his father's farm, spraining his left hip joint, from which he has never recovered. Soon thereafter he started with crutch and cane on a Southern trip. He proceeded to the eastern sea-board, and at Wilmington, N. C., embarked on a vessel for Charleston; thence sailed to Savannah, and after spending some time on the trip returned to his home, supposing he had not long to live. On June 18, 1892, he fell from a street car in Washington, and again injured his hip, besides having his shoulder injured, from which he suffered for a considerable time. Mr. Patterson has been a victim of dyspepsia all his life, and has not been a day quite free from pain. He is a man five feet nine inches in height, weighing 144 pounds. Has sandy hair, now tinged with gray, and is possessed of a pleasant Roman cast of countenance. He still lives on the farm where he was born, and which he now owns.

ALEXANDER A. GUNN. A biographical record of Washington county would be incomplete were not prominent mention made of the distinguished Gunn family, who have been connected with the history of the county from its earliest settlement.

The Gunns, of whom we now write, trace their ancestry to Holland, whence, at the close of the fourteenth century, a branch of the family migrated to Scotland, where they found occupations, some as weavers, others as herdsmen. There, amid the beautiful and romantic scenery of the Highlands, were, for the first time, opened to the light of day the eyes of Alexander Gunn, who became the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, and who was the first of the family of whom there is any definite record. He never left the mother country, but died among his heather-clad hills at an advanced age. His son, William, was the first of the family to emigrate to America. He was a native of Aberdeenshire, where he married, about the year 1770, Anna Gunn (no relative). One child, Neil, was born to them prior to their leaving their native land. Sailing from Glasgow, this little family, after a voyage of nine weeks and three days, landed at Philadelphia, Penn., where they remained some little time, and here was born, in 1778, John Gunn, father of the subject of these lines. In 1780 the family, now consisting of father and mother and two children, set out for the then "Far West," over the mountains, the mother seated on a horse, on either side of which was hung a hickory basket, like a pannier, in which each of the children was placed. In this manner they reached Washington county, where they settled near where Brownsville now stands, in the wild forest, from which they hewed out for themselves a primitive home, and developed the fertile farm that is now the property of A. G. Patterson. When Gen. Wayne started out on his expedition against the Indians, William Gunn joined him at Cincinnati, and remained with him until the expedition came to an end in 1792. During his absence the Indians raided his home, but his wife fortunately escaped in time with her two children, Neil and John, to Roney's blockhouse, less than a mile distant. The raiders did little damage, however, merely killing a couple of cows, and carrying off part of their carcasses to their camp. After his return Mr. Gunn lived upon his farm until his death, without being further molested by the Indians. He died in 1826. He had a family of eleven children, all now deceased, their names being as follows: Neil, John, William, Levi, Eliza and Christian (twins), Mary, Alexander, Marquis, Addison and David.

John Gunn assisted his parents in the arduous work incident to the clearing up of a new farm in those early days, until 1814, when he became united in marriage with Martha McClure, a native of Washington county, and a graduate of Washington Seminary. Eight children were born to them, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Margaret Ann, 1816; William, 1818; Denny M., 1821; Mary Jane (Mrs. Carroll), 1823; Neil, 1825; Alexander A.; Catherine (Mrs. J. H. Carroll), 1830; Martha E., 1832; of these, three are deceased: Margaret, in 1869; William, in 1862, and Martha E. in 1852. John Gunn, the father of these children, died in West Finley township, October 8, 1848, the mother on March 26, 1833.

Alexander A. Gunn was born October 14, 1828, in West Finley township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended school in the old-fashioned log school-house of those days, a few weeks in winter time, the remainder of the year being occupied in assisting his father in the general duties of the farm. On March 18, 1851, he was married to Mary Burns, who was born October 18, 1830, on the farm where she and her husband now reside in West Finley township, a daughter of John and Martha Burns. Ten children came to bless this union, of whom the following is a brief record: John B., born January 12, 1852, died in 1855; Martha, born in 1854, married Rev. W. J. Fisher; Will R., born December 8, 1856, married Miss Belle Pattison; R. D. A., born March 10, 1859, is a practicing physician in Cleveland, Ohio; Mary L., born April 29, 1862; Ala B., born August 8, 1865; Sadie E., born June 25, 1868; Lottie B., born October 9, 1870; Lynn C., born February 9, 1872, and Robert, born July 9, 1874, died July 5, 1879. After his marriage Mr. Gunn rented an unimproved part of his father-in-law's farm in West Finley township, on which he erected a cabin, and then proceeded to clear the land of the timber and underbrush, and make for himself and bride a comfortable though primitive home. When the Civil war broke out Mr. Gunn enlisted in Company K, Sixteenth P. V. C., serving until March, 1863, his term of enlistment having expired, and he was discharged from the service with the rank of second lieutenant. During his absence with his regiment his house and barn were destroyed by fire, and on his return he moved to Buffalo township, where he resided six years, engaged in agriculture; he then came to the farm on which he now lives, in West Finley township, and which comprises 250 acres of fine land, all in a good state of cultivation; Mr. Gunn is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Burnsville.

Mrs. Gunn is a granddaughter of Alexander Burnus, who was born in Ireland, and who at the age of fourteen years was "pressed" on board a British man-of-war on which he served as "powder boy" for seven years. At the end of that time, his ship being in the New York harbor, he made his escape, and in that city he lived seven years before he could find a favorable opportunity to return to his native land. When he did at last get there, he found his mother had died, his father married again, and his brothers and sisters all gone from the old home—some dead, others married. Finding his old home so different to his expectations, he decided to return to America, which he accordingly did, settling about the year 1783 in Washington county, Penn., on the farm now owned by Alexander A. Gunn, the subject proper of this memoir. Here he built himself a rude cabin out of hewn logs, which still stands—a mute yet eloquent relic of the past—and commenced to clear sufficient land whereon to grow enough grain to maintain himself and horse (his only companion) until the following summer. But all his pains were dissipated "like castles in the air;" for not long after he had begun to hew out his little farm from the dense forest, he was captured by Indians who carried him off to their camp, where he was tried before a "council," and condemned to be burned at the stake. He was then taken to the place of execution, and tied to a tree, wood being piled around him, and set on fire; but before the consuming element had made much headway, an old squaw, who had lost a son in battle a short time before, interceded for his life in such strong terms that the victim was released and given to the old woman. He was then put through some "purifying" process (Redskin fashion) "to drive the white blood out of him," and attired in Indian raiment, feathers being about the most prominent article in the wardrobe. With this tribe Mr. Burns remained four years, at the end of which time he managed to effect his escape after a good deal of strategy. In order to reach his pioneer hut which he had built in Washington county, he had to journey on foot from near where the city of Toledo, Ohio, now stands, but he got home, at last, in safety, footsore and weary, and then found his faithful old gray horse browsing near the cabin just as he had left him four years before. He then set to work and completed the clearing up of his land, soon afterward marrying Miss Jane Carroll, of East Finley township, who had lately come from Ireland in company with her brother Hamilton. They had been married about one year, during which time they had seen no hostile Indians, till one morning Mr. Burns came running in from the field, shouting: "Jennie, the Indians are upon us. We must go to Lindley's blockhouse, or we'll be murdered inside of an hour!" At once they set out, and had not proceeded far in their flight, when they heard the savages shoot the dog which had been left behind. This added fresh impetus to their speed, and the fort was soon reached in safety, when the inmates and surrounding settlers were warned of their danger. During the night succeeding this eventful day, Mrs. Burns gave birth to her first-born, an infant boy, whom they named James, and who in after life became the uncle of Mrs. Alexander A. Gunn.

JOSEPH RITNER CUNNINGHAM. Foremost in the ranks of those who have hewed their way to success, and are now standing in positions of honor and trust, stands the subject of this sketch. He is a worthy representative of a cultured and intellectual family, who were of Irish ancestry. Dr. Cunningham was born in the Emerald Isle, and received a thorough medical education at Dublin University. He came to America at an early day, and settling in Washington borough, Penn., soon obtained a lucrative practice, leaving a considerable property to his children.

Gustavus Cunningham was a son of Dr. Cunningham, and learned the tailor's trade. In early life he was married to Elizabeth, a sister of Gov. Joseph Ritner, and she bore him four children, viz.: Sarah (wife of James Denny, Iowa), Matilda (married to David Le Fevre, Cumberland county, Penn.), Catherine (widow of Henry Camarr, of Iowa) and Joseph Ritner. The father died when his youngest son was yet an infant, and the mother married again, giving her babe to the care of his uncle, Joseph Ritner, of whom a sketch is given.

Joseph Ritner was a son of Michael Ritner (maternal grandfather of Mr. Cunningham). Michael was born in Germany, and after coming to this country, adopted the cause of the persecuted colonists. He enlisted in the Revolutionary war, fighting gallantly under Gen. Washington, and at the battle of Long Island, swam across the sound, carrying his musket by its strap in his mouth. He then returned to Schuylkill, Penn., and followed the weaver's trade for some time; but his martial spirit rebelled against the monotony of private life, and once again the German patriot shouldered arms in defense of his adopted country. He participated in the siege of Yorktown, and was present at Cornwallis' surrender in 1781, the crowning triumph of the war. Joseph Ritner was born March 25, 1780, on the Schnylkill, in a village now included in the city of Philadelphia. He soon proved himself a worthy son of his brave and patriotic father, and when the war of 1812 began he was numbered with the earliest volunteers, serving six months with Harrison and Scott. Soon after his marriage, Joseph Ritner came to Washington county, and purchasing 140 acres began, with characteristic energy, the task of clearing it. His early neighbors afterward loved to tell how the sound of his axe was heard far into the night, as his stout arms cleared the forest, while the faithful wife, no less persevering than her husband, stood by his side, burning brush, that he might see to work. Such an indomitable nature as he possessed knows no such word as fail, but ever climbing higher and higher, pauses not till the pinnacle of success is attained. Prosperity came to Joseph Ritner. Fortune smiled upon him, and his axe was heard no more in the forest, for men had need of the mighty intellect which had been fitted and strengthened for herculean tasks by early development of the muscular powers, no less than by intellectual training. Great questions were before the people, a crisis in the history of the United States and of the New World was rising before the people, and confusion reigned supreme. Leaders must be found, men of power who could guide the swaying mass of struggling humanity into at least a semblance of order, and such men are ever rare. Among the few who instantly responded to the agonized call of their suffering country, and boding all their powers of soul and body to the mighty task, brought some order out of the chaos and a faint light from the midnight darkness of the impending rebellion—among these heroes is enrolled the name of Joseph Ritner. From the beginning of the struggle, his influence was exerted on the side of freedom, being bitterly opposed to the extension of slave trade, and eventually opposing secret societies. He was elected to the Legislature six times in succession, serving three times as speaker, and having once been elected by the unanimous vote of the House. It is said that while serving as speaker, not one of his rulings was ever reversed, an enviable and unusual distinction for a man in that position, and especially among the exciting scenes then transpiring. He was afterward elected as governor, evincing in that responsible position the same traits which had characterized his services in minor offices. He was a member of the College of Electors on the Whig ticket of 1840, taking an active part in the campaign of that year. He possessed the warm personal friendship of Gen. Harrison, who, after his inauguration as President appointed him treasurer of the Mint. The Senate declined to confirm the appointment an act said to be due to Gov. Ritner's opposition to the Masonic Fraternity. At last the storm, which had been gathering for years above the Nation's sky, burst with tremendous violence, all the pent-up rage, jealousy and pride of a divided people swept furiously over the puny barriers erected, wrath and passion ruled the hour, Ft. Sumter fell, and the great Rebellion had begun at last. Gov. Ritner had then grown old in the service of his country, his hair was whitened with the snow of more than eighty years, but the fire of youth flashed from the eyes of the aged veteran as he sprang to arms when the cannon of Fort Sumter sounded on his ears. Eagerly the gallant soldiers rallied around the standard of their white-haired colonel, who led them to Harrisburg, Penn., and there tendered his services to the Government. But his age proved an insurmountable objection, and the noble warrior-statesman was forced to accept the less dangerous, and yet scarcely less important, position of an honored counselor to the active workers in the great struggle. Although prohibited from active participation, the veteran continued to watch the terrible conflict with unabated zeal. His attitude toward the belligerent States is best illustrated by an extract from a letter which he wrote March 22, 1863, to Mrs. Cunningham. He wrote as follows: "If I live until the day after to-morrow I will be eighty-three years old. My health is good, I am free from aches and pains of all kinds. God has been very kind and good to me thus far, and I hope and trust that He will permit me to live to see this wicked, unholy, Godless and causeless rebellion crushed, so that I may leave the world and my country in peace, united and prosperous under the best government vouchsafed to man in any part of the world." His prayer was answered, and he passed away in his ninety-fifth year, having seen the end of the great struggle which had filled so much of his life. Gov. Ritner possessed deep and sincere piety, more than ordinary intelligence, remarkable perceptive power, and was firm in every conviction of duty. He had an iron constitution, robust frame, and wonderful vitality. Words can not do justice to the life of this heroic patriot, brilliant statesman, valued citizen and consecrated Christian man.

Joseph Ritner Cunningham was born September 18, 1824, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., and remained with his illustrious uncle during his minority, receiving a good English education. In 1839 he went with his uncle to Cumberland county, Penn., returning to Washington county in 1846. He then worked six months for William Jamison for $60, receiving $9.50 per month the latter part of the year. From these scanty wages he managed to save some money, and the next year rented the farm and fixtures, which he worked for one third of the crops, receiving $10 per month when not busied with the crops. The following year he rented the farm for three seasons, paying an annual cash rent of $250. At the expiration of that time he rented a farm near West Middletown, this county, and marrying Miss Nancy Meloy, November 19, 1857, began housekeeping. The young people resided there three years, when he purchased a farm in Buffalo township, this county, where he lived three years, then selling out, bought his present well-cultivated farm of 179 acres, situated near Buffalo village. Mr. Cunningham has been a very successful business man, having amassed a comfortable competence, but unlike many who have achieved success in this life, he has not neglected to prepare for a future home, and lay foundations for a "house not made with hands." He and his wife are devoted members of the United Presbyterian Church at West Middletown, Penn., taking an active interest in both church and Sabbath-school work. He has served as a member of the board of trustees, also attended to much of the financial business of the church, and has ever given liberally to the support and upbuilding of the cause of Christianity. Political life has no charm for Mr. Cunningham, although he evinces an intelligent interest in the leading questions of the day. He was formerly a Whig, and upon the organization of the Republican party espoused its principles, being a strong opponent of slavery. Mrs. Cunningham is a cultured and refined lady, highly esteemed by all who have the pleasure of her acquaintance.

WORKMAN HUGHES, a retired agriculturist, than whom none is better known in his township, or more highly respected, is a native of the county, born February 5, 1822, in South Strabane township.

John Hughes, grandfather of Workman Hughes, was a native of New Jersey, born of Irish ancestry, and when a young man moved to Carlisle, Penn., where he enlisted in the Continental army; in July, 1775, his company was formed, with eight others, into a battalion of riflemen. Mr. Hughes participated in the disastrous expedition to Canada under the command of Col. Arnold, and was present at the attack on Quebec. He remained in the army to the close of the struggle, rising from the ranks to captain. After the war he came to Washington county, where he subsequently (in 1784) bought a tract of land on what is known as Hughes' branch of Ten-Mile creek. In 1802 Mr. Hughes purchased a lot on Main street, Washington, and in 1809 two lots on Maiden street. He was a carpenter by trade, which he followed at Washington for a considerable period from 1784, and also at Ten-Mile creek. For some fourteen years he was captain of a company that guarded the Surveying Corps. On retiring from active life, he settled in Anwell township, where he died September 15, 1818, aged sixty-eight years.

Samuel Hughes, father of Workman Hughes, was born January 23, 1786, in Anwell township, this county, where he was married to Mary Workman, who was born January 13, 1786, in the building that afterward became the first depot for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad in Washington; she was a daughter of Hugh Workman, who settled in the borough many years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Hughes after marriage made their home in Washington borough until 1820, in which year they came to South Strabane township, where they remained until 1850, and then went to Iowa. The names of their children are Margaret, Elizabeth, Hugh W., Samuel, Sarah, Mary, John, James, Workman, Martha and Jackson. Mr. Hughes, in addition to his farming interests, followed carpentering for some years. He was a member and liberal supporter of the Disciple Church of Washington, and in politics he was an active Democrat. He died October 2, 1862, aged seventy-six years, his wife, Mary, on March 10, 1802, aged seventy years.

The early life of the subject of this memoir was passed at the paternal home, his education being secured at the subscription schools of the neighborhood, which was held in an old, abandoned log dwelling. On June 3, 1817, he was married to Rachel, daughter of Matthew Taylor, and their union has been blessed with the following named children: Samuel T., James W., John H., William, Mary (Mrs. B. F. Closser), Nannie J. and Rachel (Mrs. William Myers). The mother of these children dying May 12, 1862. Mr. Hughes married, March 15, 1861, Miss Margaret, daughter of Samuel Vance, but she departed this life August 22, 1879, and in December, 1880, the bereaved husband took unto himself a third life partner in the person of Miss Martha, daughter of John Scott.

After his first marriage Mr. Hughes remained on the old home place till 1850, when he moved to the other farm and resided there until 1863, in which year, having bought the old McGiffin property, he removed to Ten-Mile, where he made his home until 1879, when he came into the borough of Washington, and has since resided, having built his present commodious residence. The family are members of the First Presbyterian Church at Washington. In politics Mr. Hughes has been a life-long Democrat, and in 1870 he was elected director of the poor for a three years' term; he has also held various township offices with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents.

CHARLES O'CONNOR, one of the best-known representative citizens of Donegal township, claims his descent from one of the kings who, at an early period of the history of Ireland, governed the provinces, and who were subject to the "Ard-Righ," or monarch of the whole, who usually resided at Tara, in the County Meath, Province of Leinster.

The grandfather of our subject (also named

Charles O'Connor) was a native of County Kildare, Ireland, born about the year 1740, and was there married to a Miss Simpson, also a native of the Emerald Isle, who bore him three children: Patrick, John and Mary Ann. This wife dying in 1788, Charles O'Connor married, for his second wife, a Miss Hughes (an aunt of the late Archbishop Hughes), of New York, and by this union three children were born: Martin, Bridget and Winifred.

The parents both died in Ireland, the father in 1832, and all the children emigrated to America, except Martin, who died in his native land.

John O'Connor, who was the second son of Charles O'Connor by his first marriage, was born in 1786 in County Kildare, Ireland, where in early life he learned the trade of a weaver, serving a seven years' apprenticeship, afterward following same there until 1816 when he came to America. Landing at Philadelphia, he there carried on his trade one year, and in 1817 moved to Pittsburgh, thence to Washington borough, this county, where he secured work as a laborer on the National pike, then in course of construction. Here his steady habits and honest dealings were soon recognized, and it was not long before he was promoted to overseer of the work between Washington and West Alexander, a position he held with great credit until the completion of the road, frequently being entrusted with large sums of money for the "pay sheet." In 1820 he was married to Eliza Aston, who was born in Lancaster county, Penn., in 1800, and the children by this union were fifteen in number, as follows: Samuel (died in 1889 in South Dakota), and Charles, John, George and Martin, all of whom died young; Charles (our subject); Mary Ann, who died in 1858; one that died in infancy unnamed; John, in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and living near Claysville; Margaret, living near Dunklap, Iowa; Elizabeth, a spinster; a son deceased in infancy unnamed; Teresa, deceased wife of William Coyne, died December 28, 1887; Martha, who died in 1865 while attending Mount de Chantal College, near Wheeling, W. Va., and a twin sister to Martha who died young. After leaving the National pike Mr. O'Connor purchased a farm about two miles northeast of West Alexander, known as the "Old Higgins farm," where he followed agricultural pursuits up to the time of his death, which occurred March 22, 1872, his wife following him to the grave May 1, 1875. They were both members of the Catholic Church, and in politics he was a Whig originally, but in later years voted the Democratic ticket. John O'Connor was a cousin of the eminent lawyer, Charles O'Connor, late of the New York bar.

Charles O'Connor, of whom these lines chiefly treat, was born September 8, 1830, in Donegal township, this county, where he was reared to farm life, receiving his rudimentary education at the common schools. He then attended, for two years, the academy at West Alexander, under the head preceptorship of Rev. Father McClusky, after which he was for some time a student at St. Vincent College, near Latrobe, Westmoreland Co., Penn., which is in charge of the Benedictine Order. On April 15, 1857, Mr. O'Connor was married to Margaret Hickey, a native of County Kilkenny, Ireland, born in 1836, to which union there are no children. She died October 25, 1888. After marriage our subject settled on a farm in Donegal township, one mile east of West Alexander, immediately adjoining the National pike, where he is yet living, carrying on general farming with marked success. His home is a model of neatness and good order, entirely attributable to his good taste and untiring energy. Mr. O'Connor is a typical representative of the race from which he sprung, and, although over sixty years of age, can do as good a day's work as many a younger man. In politics he is a Democrat, and in religion a Catholic, being one of the substantial supporters of the Claysville Church.

A W. CUMMINS is a well-known citizen of Chartiers township, Washington county, having achieved an eminent and unusual success in his chosen vocation as an auctioneer. He has followed this business over eighteen years, his first trial having been made in March, 1874. Mr. Cummins is of Scotch descent (a country noted for the thrift and energy of her people, is "Bonny Scotland"), his grandfather having immigrated to America many years ago. He settled in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., rented a farm of Mr. McElroy, who was blind, but had perfect confidence in his tenants who lived there for thirty-three years. Mr. Cummins was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Miller's Run.

Robert Cummins was born August 19, 1836, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and in early life was married to Maria Dougherty, who was born on a farm that stood exactly on the line between Pennsylvania and Virginia. The Doughertys were early settlers of Virginia, where John Dougherty (father of Maria) grew to manhood and was married to Margaret Wilson. They lived and died near the Pennsylvania line in Virginia. To the union of Robert and Maria (Dougherty) Cummins three children were born: A. W. (subject of this sketch), Elizabeth (wife of John Patterson, of Cross Creek township, this county), and Thomas (living on the farm with his brother, A. W.). The mother died in 1859, and for his second wife Robert Cummins was married to Esther Jane, reared in Chartiers township, daughter of John Howell, an early pioneer of Finley township, who passed his life in this county, dying about the year 1882. He was a strong and powerfully built man, in robust health, and died very suddenly. His widow is yet living in McConnell's Mills. Robert Cummins followed farming in both Chartiers and Mount Pleasant townships. In politics he was an ardent Republican, and in church connection a Presbyterian.

A. W. Cummins (the subject proper of this sketch) was born June 15, 1853, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, being reared on the farm and educated in the country schools. On February 22, 1876, he was united in marriage with Jane Ann, daughter of Hugh and Jane (Shaw) Sprowl, the wedding taking place at the home of the bride in Harrison county, Ohio. Hugh Sprowl was born in 1823, and at the age of twelve years came with his parents to Harrison county, Ohio. In early manhood he was married to Jane Shaw, and settling on a farm in Harrison county, remained there all his life. He died in 1874, followed by his wife in November, 1881.

After his marriage to Miss Sprowl, A. W. Cummins attended Duff's Commercial College for some time, and in 1877 settled at McConnell's Mills, engaging in the mercantile business, which he continued until 1885, soon becoming an expert salesman. He then began his prosperous life as an auctioneer and agriculturist, the latter vocation serving to aid the former profession, as a farmer would naturally know whereof he spoke, in estimating the qualities and value of an animal. In April of 1889 Mr. Cummins moved to the old McElroy homestead of 103 acres, which was settled over a century ago, the house having been erected many years. His property has been acquired by tireless industry, vim and perseverance, coupled with an eloquent flow of language when describing goods, which gift has proved a valuable acquisition both to himself and those who have needed his services. He began the world at an early age, and undaunted by the harsh experiences of life, has been a "hustler" from the first. He owns nearly all the good buildings in McConnell's Mills. He is dealing extensively in stock, making a specialty of raising the National Delaine Merino sheep, selling nearly $2,000 worth of that breed last year. He is also raising Jersey cattle, and ships large quantities of both kinds of stock to all points north, east and west. He is an active member of the Republican party, being chairman of the Republican committee in Chartiers township. Mr. and Mrs. Cummins are members of the Cross Roads United Presbyterian Church at Chartiers. The children born to their union are as follows: Nora Belle, Andrew Irvin, George Dilworth, Howard Leslie, Hugh Sterling and Laura Jane.

RB. BELL is descended from an old Scotch-Irish family who fled from Londonderry, Ireland, to Scotland, during the religious persecution. From Scotland they emigrated to New Jersey, where William, the first pioneer of the name, located. His wife's maiden name was Lea.

John Bell, son of the William Bell above mentioned, was born in the year 1732. He was married to Elizabeth, a daughter of Robert Boyd, and on April 7, 1793, purchased from William Luckie a farm in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., where he spent the remainder of his days, and died in 1809.

Robert, son of John Bell, was born in Lancaster county, Penn. He served in the Revolutionary war, entering the service when about sixteen years of age. On May 29, 1788, he was united in marriage with Rachel Espy, by whom he had seven children. In the year 1793 he purchased from Anthony Boly the farm in Peters township, which is to this day in the possession of his descendants. He died October 17, 1849, aged about eighty-five. Of the seven children born to Robert and Rachel Bell, John married Nancy Porter, of Clarion county, Penn., to which county he removed soon after his marriage. Here he died, leaving behind him a large family. Thomas married Nancy Scott, and died in Clarion county. Elizabeth married Benjamin Coe, who moved to Jefferson county, Ohio, where she died. William married Jane Caldwell, and died in Richland county, Ill. Robert married Susannah Tidball. James married Sarah Reasoner, and moved to Richland county, Ill., where he died. Ann married William Barr, and spent the last years of her earthly pilgrimage in Nottingham township, this county.

Robert, son of Robert and Rachel Bell, was born and died on the home farm in Peters township. He first saw the light of day in 1801. He grew to manhood under the parental roof, and on August 28, 1828, married Susannah, daughter of Abraham Tidball, of Allegheny county, Penn. He died December 11, 1890. His children were: Rachel (died in infancy); John B. (married June 24, 1869, Sarah Ann Dunlap, of Cecil township, and have one son, Robert Francis Bell); Robert Boyd, unmarried, living at present on the home farm; Sarah, married June 19, 1864, to Robert Gillespie, M. D., and died August 29, 1868, leaving one son, Lorenzo James Gillespie; Abraham T., a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, class of 1870, also of Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, Penn., class of 1872 (at the present time (1893), he is preaching in Indiana county, Penn.; was married May 8, 1872, to Mary Watson, by whom he has had two children, one daughter, Sarah Emma, is living); Susannah, married James Johnston, of Cecil township, Washington county, November 24, 1874, and died March 7, 1892, leaving a husband and five children—three sons and two daughters. The farm is still in the possession of the family. It contains 105 acres of excellent land situated in a bend of and nearly surrounded by Chartier's creek. The Chartier's railway passes through and under a portion of the farm.

AHARPER SIMANTON. In tracing the genealogy of this prosperous agriculturist, we find that the family have been prominent residents of Pennsylvania for many years.

Peter Simanton (the grandfather) was born in Northampton county, Penn., and about the year 1795 was united in marriage with Margaret McFarren, also a native of Northampton county, born December 26, 1764, the wedding ceremony being performed by the Rev. Asa Dunham. In 1810 Mr. and Mrs. Simanton moved to Cherry Valley, Washington county, and September 9, 1811, bought 344 acres of the original Cherry tract, which became their home. He was a Whig in politics, and in church connection both he and his wife were members of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church. They were the parents of three children, of whom the following is a brief record: Jennie, born in 1800, was married to Samuel Farrar, and died in September, 1882 (her children were John, deceased in Smith township; Robert S., living in Mt. Pleasant township; William McFarren, deceased in January, 1892, at Cambridge, Guernsey Co., Ohio; Aaron, deceased in 1873, Mt. Pleasant township; Samuel L., deceased in 1891 Washington, D. C.; Julia A., deceased in 1885, wife of John McElroy; and Simanton, living in Mt. Pleasant township); John (of whom a sketch follows) and Isabella (wife of Robert Johnston, of Smith township), died some years ago, having reared three children, viz.: Margaret A. (Mrs. Finley), William and John, all three now residing in Missouri. Peter Simanton was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He died in 1826, at the home of his grandson, and his wife passed away June 5, 1835.

John Simanton was born in 1802, in Northampton county, Penn. In 1810 he came with his parents to Cherry Valley, Mt. Pleasant township, Washington county, where he was reared and educated. In early manhood he was married to a Miss Ramsey, and settled on the old home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, where three daughters were born to him: Margaret, wife of William Campbell, of Midway, Penn.; Isabelle, Mrs. Robert Patterson, of Bolivar, Westmoreland Co., Penn., and Martha Jane, who died when young. The mother died soon after the birth of her youngest child, and Mr. Simanton married, for his second wife, Eliza Allen, who was born in 1806, in Greene county, Penn., and came to Washington county with her parents in childhood. To this marriage one son, A. H., was born. Mr. Simanton was an active worker in the Whig party, afterward uniting with the Republicans, and serving the party by filling several township offices. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church at Candor, this county, in which he was a ruling elder for many years. He died in 1871, his wife in 1884.

A. Harper Simanton was born March 16, 1843, on his present farm in Mt. Pleasant township, passing his boyhood in attending the country school, and assisting with home duties. On November 19, 1868, he was married to Ellen, daughter of Guyan Mellyvaine who was born in 1792, in Somerset township, on the home farm, where his early years were passed. He was united in marriage with Jane Ferguson, a native of Somerset township, who bore him four children: Lydia (widow of John Phillips, living in Greene county, Penn.); William Greer (deceased in 1882, at Memphis, Tenn.), was married in Vicksburg; Robert F. (residing in Rochester, Beaver Co., Penn.); and John M. (living in Mt. Pleasant township). Mrs. Mellyvaine died in 1823, and in 1830 Guyan Mellyvaine married Jane Bratton, a native of Lancaster county, Penn. In 1835 he settled in Mt. Pleasant township, on the home farm. To this union the following children were born: Harvey (residing in Kansas), Anna Eliza (married to William M. Campbell, of Cross Creek township), Joseph Lawrence (editor of the Advocate, New Philadelphia, Ohio), Boyd (a resident of South Dakota), Belle Jane (of Mt. Pleasant township), James A. and Martha Ellen (Mrs. A. Harper Simanton), both of Mt. Pleasant township, and Mary Esther. Mr. Mellyvaine was first a Whig, then a Know nothing, and afterward a Republican. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church at Mt. Prospect. He died in 1868, having been preceded by his wife in 1859.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Simanton settled on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, containing 200 acres of valuable land, to which his time is devoted. Four children have blessed their union, namely: Maud, Maggie Belle, Walter and Jennie. Mr. and Mrs. Simanton are members of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church, of which he is a trustee. He is a Republican.

JAMES E. SMITH, a prominent farmer of West Pike Run township, is a son of Henry Smith, who was born in 1806, in Washington county, Penn., and was a farmer.

In early life Henry Smith was married to Nancy Norris, a native of this county, who was born in 1816, and they were the parents of thirteen children, namely: Mary A., wife of John Hilton, of Monongahela; Henderson; James E.; Nancy, married to John Reed, of Lucyville, Penn.; Hannah B., wife of Joseph Bell, a Methodist minister located at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada; Joseph H.; Lydia, wife of George Flood; Roxanna, married to Edwin Sutton, of Chillicothe, Ohio; Tilly, wife of Nathan Thomas; Howard, living in Uniontown, Fayette county; Lizzie; Harrison and an infant, of whom the latter three are deceased. The father was a member of the M. E. Church, with which his widow is yet associated. He died May 10, 1880, and Mrs. Smith, aged seventy-six years, is now residing on the home place.

James E. Smith was born November 27, 1838, on the home farm in West Pike Run township, and grew to manhood with but few opportunities for securing an education. He was married on October 21, 1877, to Aquilla Palmer, a native of this county, daughter of Ephraim and Hannah (Brenton) Palmer, natives of Fayette county, Penn., the father being born in 1817, and the mother in 1818. Their children were Aquilla, wife of James E. Smith; Sarah W., married to William Johnston, of Fayette county, Penn.; Addison R., a Methodist minister of Champaign county, Ohio; Ephraim; Hannah P., wife of Daniel Moore, a Baptist minister of Washington county, Penn.; James; Sabria (deceased) and Cornelius (deceased). Mr. Palmer learned the trade of barber at Brownsville, Penn., and continued to follow same during most of his life; he died in 1890, followed by his wife in April, 1892. Mr. and Mrs. James E. Smith are residing on a pleasant, well-cultivated farm of thirty-seven acres. He is a member of the F. & A. M. at West Brownsville.

GEORGE SWART. Among the many prominent agriculturists who have contributed substantially to the material prosperity of Amwell township, and indeed it may be said of the entire county, stands the worthy gentleman whose well-known name opens this biographical sketch.

He is a grandson of the noble old pioneer, Philip Swart, who emigrated from Germany to America, locating finally, during the early part of the present century, in Amwell township, this county, where he took up what is recognized by the family as the "old home farm" of 315 acres. He had two children, Jacob and Susie (Mrs. Phillips), and died about the year 1811; his wife survived him many years, passing away at a ripe old age.

Jacob Swart, son of Philip Swart, was born near the old home in Amwell township, and was educated at the local schools of his early day. He was married to Sarah Evans, of the same township, and the children born to this union were: Dorothy (Mrs. Mustard), Philip, David, John, Polly (Mrs. Huston), Henry, Abraham, George, Hiram and

Charlotte. Jacob Swart died in 1815 on the old home farm, his wife, Sarah, on June 11, 1846. He was an excellent business man, and during his comparatively short life accumulated much property, leaving a fortune as an unimpeachable witness to his characteristic energy and sound judgment. At the time of his death he owned six farms aggregating 1,000 acres of land. Politically he was a Whig, and he was respected and esteemed by all who knew him.

George Swart, the subject proper of these lines, was born beside Ruff's creek, Greene Co., Penn., April 23, 1810, and when four years of age was brought by his father to the farm which is now the property of Andrew Horn, in Amwell township, this county. He received a necessarily meager education in the primitive schools of his early day, but he has been a diligent reader, and a devoted student of Biblical literature. Mr. Swart has been twice married, first on January 14, 1830, to Elizabeth Smith, of Greene county, Penn., born October 9, 1814, and died March 4, 1876. Their union was blessed with twelve children: Jacob, born July 13, 1831 (deceased March 3, 1833); Harvey, born March 30, 1833 (was married February 22, 1877, to Jane Arnold); Dennis born January 31, 1836 (was united in marriage April 30, 1857, with Lydia Huffman, and is now residing in Missouri); Simon, born January 29, 1838 (died May 3, 1838); Sarah, born June 19, 1840 (was married September 15, 1859, to Harrison Sowers); Lucinda, born October 29, 1842 (March 11, 1864, became the wife of John Hopkins; deceased June 8, 1881); Hiram, born October 10, 1844 (died September 29, 1851); Elizabeth, born August 27, 1847 (died January 1, 1853); Emeline, born November 5, 1849 (was united in marriage October 30, 1873, with David Baker, and died March 26, 1884); George, born January 20, 1853 (died August 15, 1865); Deborah, born February 7, 1855, died March 13, 1883 (she was married February 10, 1875 to James Hughes); and Alice L., born April 20, 1857 (on November 16, 1876, she became the wife of John J. Hoffman). On December 4, 1877, Mr. Swart was united in marriage with Mrs. Ellen Hopkins, of Greene county, a very estimable lady, and who makes him a most congenial and lovable companion in his declining years.

In February, 1831, Mr. Swart moved to his present home, where he is now enjoying a well-earned peaceful repose from the labors of an honored and useful life. The comfortable competence he possesses has been accumulated by years of assiduous industry and indefatigable effort. Politically, Mr. Swart was formerly a Whig, afterward a Republican, and he has always taken an active interest in public affairs. He and his family have for many years been members of the Methodist Protestant Church.

SMITH McCREIGHT. Among the influential and intelligent citizens of Hanover township, none occupies or deserves a more prominent place than this gentleman, a native of Jefferson county, Penn., where he was born July 18, 1832. He is a son of Andrew McCreight. The father was born in 1787, in Ireland, and when but seven years of age was brought to America, and grew to manhood in Pennsylvania. In 1812 he was married in Armstrong county, Penn., to Ann Sharp, who was born in 1795. Her family were pioneers of Armstrong county.

The children of Andrew and Ann McCreight were: James, a wheelwright and carpenter, deceased in 1888, at the age of seventy-five years, in Armstrong county, Penn.; Sharp, a retired farmer of Indiana county, Penn.; Sarah (Mrs. Abraham Neit), of Jefferson county, Penn.; Joseph, a farmer of Jefferson county, Neb., where he died; John, a farmer of Jefferson county, Penn.; Ann (wife of William Caldwell), of Clearfield county, Penn.; Jane (Mrs. Joseph McNeil), of Clearfield county, Penn.; Thomas S., a farmer and miller of Jefferson county, Penn.; Smith, of whom further mention is made; Nancy, deceased in 1891 (married to Benjamin Hawk); Jamison, a farmer in Kansas; and Haunah, an unmarried lady, living in Kansas. The parents began life as tenants in a humble home located on Plum creek, Armstrong Co., Penn., where he worked as a tenant and cropper. By industry he prospered, and soon accumulating some money, went to Jefferson county, Penn., and purchased a tract of uncleared land, which was cheaper in that county. The young couple removed to their new home, and, after much hard work, succeeded in clearing enough of the land to carry on farming. With that undying spirit of pluck, which is the national characteristic of the true Irishman, he finally obtained enough property to provide all necessary comforts of life, which he enjoyed. In politics he was an Old-line Whig, and then a Republican, taking an active interest in the success of his party. Both he and his wife were consistent members of the U. P. Church. He died in 1861, his wife having entered the "valley of the shadow" in 1858. They were buried on the farm in Jefferson county, Pennsylvania.

Smith McCreight was reared to manhood on his father's farm, and there inducted into the mysteries of agriculture. He attended the common schools, and in early life took charge of the home place in company with his brother, Thomas S., caring for the father and mother until they died. On March 14, 1863, Smith McCreight was married to Sarah E. Murphy, who was born in 1842, in Westmoreland county, Penn., a daughter of James and Susan (McMurray) Murphy. James Murphy was a tailor by trade, also working on a farm. Mr. and Mrs. McCreight have passed all their married life on the old homestead farm in Winslow township, Jefferson Co., Penn., and his brother Thomas S. followed lumbering in the winter season and farming in the summer for some years. They afterward purchased one half interest in a grist and saw mill, and the following year bought the other half. As the business increased they made extensive improvements on the property, placing $1,500 worth of new machinery in the gristmill. Just when the business had become profitable the destructive fire of August 25, 1877, swept away all their property—1,500 bushels of grain and 100,000 feet of dry pine lumber. No insurance was carried. This was a terrible trial, but their energy and enterprise were indestructible, and before the smoke of the debris had ceased to curl upward they had begun the erection of a modern mill. It was rapidly pushed to completion, and within four months of the date of the fire these "hustling brothers" were again ready for customers on a more extensive basis than before the fire. In 1881 the mill property was disposed of, and Smith McCreight began farming. In the autumn of 1884 he purchased and moved upon 200 acres of land in Hanover township, Washington county, known as the "Martin Tucker" farm. His enterprising and progressive spirit is evinced in the many improvements which have been made since his residence on the place. A handsome new dwelling was erected in 1890. It is located on an elevated spot, one of the highest in Washington county, affording a most delightful view of the surrounding country for many miles. Mr. McCreight was a Whig, afterward uniting with the Republican party. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Paris, and their children are Thomas A., a farmer of Hanover township, living on the home place; Clara A., studying telegraphy; Anna, and Beulah S., living at home.

L W. MORGAN is a son of William M. Morgan, whose father, William Morgan, was born in Maryland, and attended the schools of his native State, then learned the cooper's trade, becoming an expert in the finer parts of the business. When a young man he was married to Hannah Matthews, a native of Baltimore, Md., who bore him the following children: Oliver, Rachel, Miriam, William M., George, Ruth (wife of W. W. Jackman) and Estler (married to Areslead Carroll). In an early day they came to Greene county, Penn., and in 1830 moved to Washington county, locating in East Bethlehem township near Westland Church. Mr. Morgan kept a hotel on the National pike, near Centreville, for several years, and finally moved to Coal Centre, Washington county, where he died at the age of seventy-four years. He was a strong Abolitionist, and in religion was a member of the Society of Friends.

William M. Morgan was born near Baltimore, Md., where his boyhood was passed. In early life he was married to Mary, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Lewis) Whittaker, the former of whom was a native of County Fermanagh, Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Whittaker had four children, viz.: Elizabeth, Thomas L., John D. and Mary. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Morgan settled in Waynesburgh, Greene Co., Penn., where he followed the trade of cooper. In 1844 he moved to Coal Centre, this county, and here continued in the same business until his death. He was a Democrat, favoring the Abolitionists, and in religion was a member of the M. E. Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Morgan were born the following children: L. W., Eliza J. (deceased), George (living in Oklahoma), Hannah (deceased), and Thomas P. (in Pittsburgh).

L. W. Morgan was born November 5, 1830, in Waynesburgh, Greene Co., Penn., and remained on the home place during early life. At the age of twenty years, in company with Solomon Sibbitt, he opened the first general store in California, Penn., conducting it for five years. On October 27, 1857, he was married to Ann J., daughter of John R. Gregg, and their children were Mary W., P. W., William W., John, Charles, L. L., Elizabeth and Albert T. Of these children P. W., Elizabeth and Albert T. are yet living. After selling the store in California, Mr. Morgan followed river traffic a few years, then opened a grocery in Coal Centre, which he conducted but a few months, and returning to California invested in his present store, and opened a coal office. He has been a Republican, but has voted the Prohibition ticket since the organization of that party. In religious faith he is a member of the M. E. Church, of which he is steward and treasurer, and of the Sunday-school he has been superintendent twenty six years.

G EORGE TAYLOR was a son of Robert Taylor, who was born in 1764, and emigrated from County Cavan, Ireland, in 1810. Three weeks before leaving the old country he was married to Mary Pattison, a daughter of William Pattison, a merchant of Belfast.

The young couple came to America to seek their fortunes, and locating upon a farm near Hillsborough, this county, Mr. Taylor began working it on shares, finally purchasing it in 1816. The children born to this pioneer couple were: Mrs. Jacob Shepler (deceased), William (deceased), George, Mrs. William Robinson, Mrs. Jacob Qualk, and Robert (deceased). Though receiving a somewhat limited education in Ireland, Mr. Taylor was a very successful business man, and was especially admired for his benevolence. He was an Old-line Whig, but never accepted office, and was a devout member of the Church of England. After passing a useful life of nearly a century, he died in 1859. His widow, a member of the Methodist Church, followed her husband to the grave in 1862.

George Taylor, the subject of this memoir, was born January 27, 1816, upon the home farm where he now resides. He received a limited education, but was an eager reader until his eyesight failed. He remained on the farm until twenty-two years of age, when he took charge of a store at Hillsborough which he managed for three or four years, then sold to William Bell, and engaged in farming and buying stock. He has been very successful in this business, which he has continued to follow. In 1844 he married Charlotte Miller, daughter of Charles Miller, and their children are: Mary Elizabeth, born December 6, 1845 (deceased); Robert, born September 1, 1848; Mrs. Samuel Barber, born January 14, 1851; George William, born May 7, 1853 (deceased); Charles Taylor, born December 6, 1854; Clarence Raymond, born July 26, 1857 (deceased); George William, born May 13, 1861; Frankie Addison, born January 19, 1861, and Emma Jane, born August 4, 1866. Mr. Taylor was a decided Republican, and, in his younger days, one of the most active men in the county. When but twenty years of age, he was elected constable, and held that office several years. When about thirty-five years of age he was elected justice of the peace, which position he filled twenty years, and in 1859 was elected one of the county commissioners for a term of four years. He was a member of the Methodist Church, with which his wife was also united until her death, September 8, 1887. He died September 2, 1892.

CADWALLADER BLAYNEY. A biographical record of Washington county would be incomplete were not special mention made in its pages of the Blayneys, who have their descent from an illustrious family of that name, for many years residents of Ireland. Cadwallader Blayney, a Welshman by birth, and a gallant officer in the British army of long ago, for meritorious services to his country was made a general, and soon thereafter was given an estate in Ireland, the mansion on which came to be known as "Blayney Castle," while the new occupant was raised to the peerage with the title of "Lord Blayney." This lord had a brother, a rector in the Established Church of England. For twelve generations Castle Blayney has been represented by a Cadwallader Blayney, that being the name of each succeeding son-in-heir, and the tenth Lord Blayney, the great-grandfather of the subject of this memoir, had several sons, one of whom, Cadwallader, became the grandfather. He was a wealthy landowner, and in early pioneer times came to America, making a settlement in Ohio county, W. Va., but on the death of his wife he made his home with his son, Henry, during the remainder of his life.

Henry Blayney was born in Ireland in 1792, and was there married to Jane Rogers, by whom one child, Mary, was born in their native land. In 1832 Henry and his family came with his father to this country, and here were born to him six more children, viz.: Hannah, Jane Cadwallader, Margaret, Henry, John R. and Elizabeth Ann. Henry Blayney finally settled in West Finley township, where he died on his farm in February, 1873, honored and respected by all who knew him. His wife died December 22, 1847. He was a leading member of the Presbyterian Church of West Alexander, and in politics was a staunch Democrat.

Cadwallader Blayney, the subject of these lines, was born July 12, 1829, in Ohio county, W. Va., where he received his education. When a young man he came to the farm in West Finley township, this county, where he has since resided, engaged in agricultural pursuits. When he first started out for himself, his uncle gave him a colt, and this was the beginning from which, by industry, perseverance and thrift he has achieved the success that brought him a competence for his declining years. His first purchase was an old water-power gristmill that is still standing, adjoining his residence in Good Intent. This mill he operated eleven years, and then bought a farm near Good Intent, on which he lived six years, at the end of which time he moved into the village, and here embarked in mercantile business which he conducted nineteen years. He then sold out his store and retired to his farm above referred to. Mr. Blayney was twice married: first time to Miss Elizabeth Rogers (January 13, 1853), who bore him eight children, viz.: John R., Henry B., William L., Ida Jane, Belleville C., Elmer E., Orange Griffith and Cadwallader, of whom the last two died in infancy. The mother of this family died February 2, 1872, and Mr. Blayney afterward married Miss Jennie Blayney, a cousin, a daughter of John Blayney, a native of Ireland, whom the last Lord Blayney (who died childless) named as his heir, in his will. This John Blayney came to the United States in 1848, and there made his home until the death, in 1875, of his wife, whose maiden name was Fanny Aleorn, when he came to live with our subject. On the death of the last Lord Blayney, inquiry was made for "Uncle John," as the heir by will was familiarly known; they discovered, however, that a John Blayney, a minister, had died a few months before, and concluding that he was the last heir, returned to England, and made their report accordingly. The Blayney estate in Ireland, having thus no immediate heir to it, reverted to the Crown. "Uncle John" Blayney is still living at the patriarchal age of ninety-four years, making his home with his daughter, Mrs. C. W. Blayney. By his second marriage Mr. Cadwallader Blayney had five children, as follows: Edward C., born July 13, 1873; Freddie L. and a twin, born December 4, 1875, both deceased, the former November 7, 1879, the latter in infancy; Harold L., born October 17, 1879, and Fannie, born May 25, 1883, died June 7, same year. Mr. Blayney has been very successful in all his business relations, and has accumulated a considerable amount of property, being now the owner of over 300 acres of prime land, also owning a storeroom and several dwelling houses in Good Intent. He is a member of the Windy Gap Cumberland Presbyterian Church, which he has served as trustee, and, socially, is popular and highly respected. Politically he has been a Democrat, but not active in his party, and during Hayes' administration, at the request of his Republican friends, he was appointed postmaster of Good Intent, which office he held until selling out his store. He also held various township offices conferred upon him by the people irrespective of party.

WILLIAM C. ROBISON, postmaster at Monongahela, is a native of Pittsburgh, Penn., and born of Scotch-Irish ancestry. Robert Robison, his grandfather, was born in Strasburgh, Penn., in 1789, and in 1825 moved to Pittsburgh, where he embarked in the wholesale grocery trade, conducting same until 1868. He also carried on an extensive pork-packing business, purchasing green meats in St. Louis and Chicago. He was twice married, and by his first wife had two children: Samuel B. and Margarett (Mrs. F. F. Kernan); by his second wife (who was a Miss Eliza Cummings), he had three children: Robert, Lydia and Quincy. Mr. Robison was a Whig until the organization of the Republican party, when he enrolled himself under their banner; in religion he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Samuel B. Robison, father of William C., was also a native of Strasburgh, Penn., born in 1816. He became a partner with his father in the wholesale grocery business in Pittsburgh, and after the latter's death continued the same under the firm name of S. B. Robison & Co. until his decease in December, 1870. In 1850 Samuel B. Robison was united in marriage with Rebecca Gallagher, of Pittsburgh, and the children born to them were Robert B. (in Pittsburgh), Emma, Samuel D., William C., Ida B., Charles W., B. Frank, Henry C. and Garnet G. Mr. Robison was a Republican. During the Civil war he was master of transportation of military supplies from Pittsburgh, an office he filled gratuitously, although there was a salary attached.

William C. Robison received a liberal education at the schools of Pittsburgh, and was afterward engaged in business in that city until 1880, in which year he came to Monongahela City, where he has since resided. He is an active Republican, and in January, 1890, was commissioned postmaster of that city. In 1870 Mr. Robison was married to Rebecca, daughter of Silas Haley, and the children born to this union are Silas Robert and Frederick.

SAMUEL YOUNG, a prosperous farmer of Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., is a grandson of Thomas Young, who was born in Maryland in 1745. He was a Revolutionary soldier. In 1809 he removed to a farm near Jefferson, Morris township, Greene Co., Penn., and there died in 1824. His son Thomas, father of subject, was born on the farm, and from there removed to Morris township, Washington county, where he died in 1866.

Samuel Young was born July 9, 1830, on what was called Crane's run in Greene county, Penn., and when about eight years old moved to Washington county with his father. He lived at home until his marriage in 1854 to Rachel Carroll, who was born September 18, 1834, daughter of Thomas Carroll, of Morris township, Washington county. He then moved to Morris township, Greene county, where he remained about fifteen years; then returned to Washington county, and lived on the home farm until the death of his father, when he again moved to Morris township, Greene county. Thence he came to West Finley township, Washington county (near Wheeling creek), afterward returning to Greene county, remained some time at Nineveh. He then removed to Washington, this county, and was for a short time engaged in the hotel business, when he moved to West Finley township, and embarked in farming. In 1888 he purchased the well-improved farm near Mt. Zion M. E. church, in Morris township, this county, where he now resides. His children are: Samantha, wife of S. R. Rush, a prominent stock dealer of East Liberty, Penn.; Elizabeth, wife of Warren Clutter, also a prominent stock dealer in East Liberty, Penn., and Florence, yet living with her parents. Mr. Young raises a considerable amount of stock, and makes a specialty of breeding fine sheep. The farm on which Mr. Young now resides was taken up by Richard Carroll over one hundred years ago; he was a native of Ireland, also the grandfather of Mr. Young's wife, who is of the third generation that has owned this farm. Politically Mr. Young is a Democrat of life-long standing. Mrs. Young is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

HENRY M. SNYDER is descended from a pioneer family of Washington county. He is a grandson of John and Margaret Snyder, whose early lives were passed in eastern Pennsylvania, where the grandfather followed the tanner's trade. He afterward moved to Washington county, and became identified with the earliest history of Fallowfield township. He was a Democrat in politics, and in church connection a member of the Lutheran Society. John Snyder died December 24, 1867, in his seventy-seventh year, and July 23, 1876, his wife was laid beside him, having passed her seventy-sixth birthday. They were the parents of six children.

Peter Snyder was born February 23, 1833, in Fallowfield township, Washington county, Penn. He assisted his father in the tannery from early boyhood, and after receiving a limited education, followed shoemaking for thirty-five years. Upon attaining his majority he was married to Julia Ann Crabb, who bore him the following children: Josephine (Mrs. Stacker), Alexander, Daniel, Lucretia (Bezell), John (deceased in 1891, at the age of thirty-five years), Henry M., George B., Franklin P. and James S.

Henry M. Snyder, son of Peter Snyder, was born February 22, 1860, on the home place in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. He received a common-school education, and following the example of his forefathers, learned the tanning trade. In 1882 he was united in marriage with Cynthia V. (Bentley) Van Voorhes, and settled on the fifty acres of land on the Washington pike, in Carroll township, where he is yet living. He was formerly engaged in general farming, but of recent years has given his principal attention to the dairy business. The place is equipped with excellent buildings, and is a pleasant, elegant home.

HENRY H. McDONOUGH, M. D. a leading physician of Washington county, was born October 30, 1836, in Somerset township, a grandson of Henry McDonough, a native of Baltimore, where the family had resided many years.

Henry McDonough had two brothers, also natives of Baltimore, who separated at an early age, the elder brother, John, going South, and, engaging in real estate speculation, became one of the wealthiest citizens of New Orleans; as he never married, he bequeathed his property to New Orleans and Baltimore, each city receiving the same amount. The other brother, Thomas, left his native city in a merchant ship, and passed through varied scenes; he was with Perry at the battle of Lake Erie, and bore the title of "Commodore McDonough." Henry, the youngest in the family, drifted westward, finally arriving in Washington county, Penn., and, first settling near West Alexander, was among the earliest pioneers of that locality. He married, and two children were born to him, but one day while he was absent from the house, clearing the land, the Indians rushed down on the little home, and massacred his helpless wife and children. Heartsick and lonely, the bereaved husband and father traded his property for a mere trifle, and abandoning the desolated home returned to Baltimore, where he remained a few years. However, he again came to Washington county, and in 1783 purchased a farm in Somerset township, on which he resided until his death. Soon after returning to the county he was married to Jane Hamilton, a resident of the same, and to their union were born four children: John, Henry, Mary (Mrs. John Pangborn) and David. Mr. McDonough was an energetic and enterprising man, and his life left a lasting impression on the character of the community. In political affiliations he was a Whig, and served several years as justice of the peace in Somerset township. In religious faith he was formerly a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in later life united with the Baptists, in whose faith he died.

David McDonough, youngest son of this honored pioneer, always resided on the home farm in Somerset township, at the subscription schools of which he received his early education, afterward reading current literature. In early life he was married to Lavina, daughter of Adam Weir, of West Bethlehem township, this county, and the young people then settled on the home place, where the following children were born to them: Joseph, Thomas, Adam (who died at the age of eight years), and Henry H. Mr. McDonough was a Whig, and after the organization of the party became a faithful Republican, and active in the work, although rarely accepting office. He was administrator of various estates in the locality, and was frequently selected as guardian of children, every one having great confidence in his integrity and ability. In religion he was a member of the Disciple Church, in which he served many years as an elder, being one of the most hearty supporters of that Society.

Dr. Henry H. McDonough, youngest son of David McDonough, first received a common-school education, and then attended a select school conducted by Rev. Streator, near Washington. Having when quite young evinced an inclination to study medicine, he commenced reading with Dr. James McDonough, and with him remained some time, until called to take charge of the home by the death of his father. He managed the home place for several years, then returned to the study of medicine with Dr. Winnett, attending at the same time medical lectures at Long Island College. He completed his course at Cleveland, in March, 1876, and then commenced practicing in Waynesburg, Greene Co., Penn., remaining there, however, but four months, when he settled on the home place in Somerset township, this county. On October 22, 1861, the Doctor was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Jonathan Winnett. This wife dying March 6, 1879, he married, October 21, 1882, Margaret L., daughter of S. B. Landley, and they have had two children: Ann Estelle and Charles L. Dr. McDonough remained on the home farm fifteen years, enjoying a large and lucrative practice, and in 1891 he came to Claysville. In politics he is a pronounced and energetic Republican; in religion he is a member of the Disciple Church.

DAVID McDONNELL. Among the influential farmers of Hanover township, this gentleman deserves prominent mention. He is a son of Barnett McDonnell, whose father was Patrick Morgan McDonnell.

The last mentioned ancestor was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, where he married, and reared two daughters, Martha Jane (Mrs. John Jackson, of Hanover township) and Eleanor (wife of John Davis of Morgan county, Ohio). About 1791 this family came to America, and with his limited savings, Patrick McDonnell purchased a small tract of land near King's creek in Hanover township. When the essential log cabin was erected, he began the work of felling the giant oaks. He served in the war of 1812, and participated in the historical Moravian massacre at Gadenhutton, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio. The rude cabin was in due time supplanted by one more commodious, which is yet standing. He was a Catholic, but as there were no churches of that denomination in that wild country, his family were not reared in the Catholic faith. He and his wife lived to advanced ages, and are buried in the Florence cemetery. They were the parents of four children, the two youngest having been born in America, viz.: Barnett, of whom further mention is made, and one son who died in early childhood.

Barnett McDonnell was born in 1796, in Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn., where he attended the subscription schools and worked on his father's farm. In early life he married Nancy Kimble, who was born near Hickory, in this county. She bore him five children, namely: Elizabeth, widow of David Logan; John, a blacksmith, died at Steubenville, Ohio, when about thirty years of age; William, was never married, and died on the old place; George, went to Iowa in 1850, and was a soldier in the Rebellion (he died of typhoid fever in Tennessee); and Martin L., a cabinet maker, drowned in the Ohio river, at Steubenville, Ohio. The mother of these children died and was buried at Florence. For his second wife Barnett McDonnell was married to Ruth Jackson, a daughter of Joseph and Hannah (Russell) Jackson, of Hanover township. Their children were: Rezin (a farmer of Hanover township), Jackson (deceased), Samuel (a shoemaker, went to California during the gold fever and died there), Alexander (a farmer of Hanover township), David (our subject), Nancy (widow of Caleb Gretzinger, of Hancock county, W. Va.), Hannah (wife of Asa Owings, of Missouri) and James (living in Texas). The father passed his whole life on the home farm where his parents had settled. He died July 3, 1877, and was followed by his widow in 1879. Both are buried in the Florence cemetery. He was a member of the United Presbyterian Church, his second wife being identified with the Methodist Episcopal Society. In politics he was a Democrat, having held various offices in Hanover township.

David McDonnell was born March 25, 1838, on the old place which he owns. The old house in which he was born (built in 1812) is yet standing. He attended the schools of the day, also assisting with such work as could be done by a boy of his age. In early manhood he went to Steubenville, Ohio, to learn the trade of a shoemaker. After a short time he was transferred to Cadiz, Ohio, to complete his trade. Later he took a trip through the West, visiting the States of Iowa, Indiana and Illinois, but returning, resumed his trade at Cadiz, Ohio, and finally located in Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn. He married Elizabeth A. Criss, June 25, 1862. She was born December 25, 1810, in Hanover township, a daughter of Henry and Mary (Ryland) Criss. The great grandfather of Mrs. McDonnell (one John Criss) was born in Germany. Among his children was a son, Jacob, who grew to manhood and reared a family of children, among whom was Henry Criss. The latter was born in 1815, and when a young man was married to Mary Ryland, a native of Maryland, who came to Washington county with her parents, Fredus and Elizabeth Ryland, when an infant. Mrs. McDonnell was the third in a family of eleven children born to Henry and Mary Criss.

Mr. and Mrs. McDonnell began wedded life in Hanover township, where he followed his trade. On March 22, 1865, he enlisted at New Brighton, Penn., in Company E, One Hundred and Third P. V. I. His services were needed but a brief time, for as the command was en route to North Carolina, Johnston surrendered, and June 25, 1865, he was honorably discharged, and returned to his native county. He then located on a small tract of land lying one mile northwest of Florence, and there followed his trade, giving some attention to farming. By economy he prospered, and in 1879 moved to the old McDonnell homestead, where he was born and has since resided, devoting his entire attention to agriculture. Since he has taken possession of the old place it has undergone a wonderful change; a handsome new residence, furnished with natural gas for heating and lighting in every room of the house, makes a very convenient and pleasant home. Mr. McDonald is a leading citizen, respected by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance. In politics he is a Democrat, but not a strict partisan, as he has frequently voted for men of different political opinions when he deemed them most worthy of the position. He has held various offices in the town, with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents. Both he and his wife are members of the M. E. Church. The children of this family are Henry B., professor of chemistry in the State Agricultural College of Maryland, also a graduate of Pennsylvania State College, and College of Physicians and Surgeons in Baltimore, Md. He married Miss Julia B. Magruder, of Baltimore. Wesley C. is an expert penman, and a teacher in the public schools, holding a State certificate. He is now studying music at Son College, Ohio. Morton E. is a graduate of the Pennsylvania State College. Curtis C. is now attending college at George Peck, near Washington, D. C. Fred V. is a girl at home

ISAAC SHELBY CRALL, the well known extensive gardener and florist, was born November 19, 1826, at Belle Vernon, Fayette County, Penn., a son of Catherine and Hannah Graham Crall, both natives of that county.

Isaac Crall, father of Charles Crall, was born, reared and married in Fayette County, his wife being Elizabeth Bush, who bore six children, as follows: Barbara, John, Catherine, Elizabeth, Charles, Jesse and Mary. He was a farmer in York county, whence he moved to Fayette county, at an early day with his family. Mr. Crall was first engaged as a cooper at the Round Hill Forge, from Fayette he went to Cumberland county, where he was a cooper until the present was constructed simply of posts and rails, a guard was necessary in the time. Finally he engaged in the outfitting business in Fayette county, where he died. He was a Democrat and a member of the Methodist Church.

Charles Crall, father of Isaac Shelby Crall, was born in November, 1804, in Cumberland county, Penn. He was reared in Fayette county, at the extensive saw-mill of which he received a fair educational training. He learned the trade of watchmaking at which for a time he worked in Washington county, near Middletown City, he also ran boats on the river between Pittsburgh and Morgantown, besides ferrying at Middletown City. In 1822 he married Hannah, daughter of Budd Gasker, daughter of Thomas N. J., a son of Samuel Gasker, one of New Jersey's patriots, who served in the Revolutionary war under Washington, and was an intimate friend of Gen. Bedford. His wife was Miss Lucretia Hayes, who bore him four children: Budd, Margaret, Lucretia, and Ruth. Samuel Gasker was a farmer by occupation, and his death occurred at Belle Vernon, Penn. He had five sons, of whom only one, the deceased, had a wife re-married to Pennsylvania. In his early childhood he was a freemason, by the name Budd Gasker, was reared in New Jersey, and when a young man removed to Fayette county. He was married to Hannah Davis, of that county, and the children born to them were the following: Samuel, Elizabeth, Mrs. Jacob V. Reed, Jesse and Augustus.

JOHN S. NICHOLL, a successful farmer of Nottingham township, is a son of Samuel and grandson of Sampson Nicholl. Sampson Nicholl was born in 1759 in Ireland, and came to America in 1775. He entered with a full heart into the Revolutionary struggle, and fought seven years for his adopted country. After the war he managed a pack train, and finally settled on a farm in Somerset township, Washington County, Penn., where he died.

Samuel Nicholl was born May 23, 1816, on a farm in West Bethlehem township, Penn., where his boyhood was passed. On July 2, 1847, he married Miss Rachel Danzey, who was born September 29, 1817, in Fayette county, Penn. The following children were born to this marriage: John S., Frank D., Jane, Mary, James S., Rebecca, and Josephine (deceased). The father was a farmer all his life, and took an active part in the affairs of the township. He died April 3, 1876, and the mother is getting on with her children.

John S. Nicholl was born July 29, 1849, on the old homestead in West Bethlehem. In 1867 he began life for himself, and was married September 8, 1867, to Sarah J., daughter of John Dague, a well-known agriculturist of this county. They have had five children, two of whom are now living: John S. R. and Frank H., at home with their parents. Oscar H., Rachel J. and Sarah Jane are dead. Some years ago Mr. Nicholl dealt extensively in sheep, buying them in the East, and After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Crall made their new home in Belle Vernon, where he was employed in a boatyard for some time; then moved to Crawford county, same State, from which, after a residence of two and one-half years, he came to near Monongahela City where he conducted a blacksmith shop, etc., as already related. He died here June 22, 1881, a prominent member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which he was an elder, but later in life he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. The children born to him were Budd (deceased), Isaac Shelby, Lonisa, Lucinda, Cassie, Elizabeth, Mezula, Samuel, Etta and Belle.

Isaac Shelby Crall was for the most part reared and educated in Monongahela City. When twenty-six years old he went to New York, and there took steamer for California, but on February 27, 1852, the vessel was wrecked off the Mexican coast. In that country he remained six weeks, and then proceeded, again by water, to his destination. He was engaged there as superintendent of The American Hydraulic Mines, and was one of the first to blast rock under water. He conducted a large mine there for twenty-four years, in the course of which time he made six ocean trips and two by overland route. On his final return home, in 1873, he embarked in his present industry, having, in 1868, bought the farm where he now carries on a lucrative business. On January 10, 1861, Mr. Crall married Sarah E., daughter of James Somerville, of Jefferson county, Penn., and three children have been born to them: Charles S., Maud A. (Mrs. Harry Griffith) and James S. Politically Mr. Crall is a Democrat, and in his church connections he is a Presbyterian.

HIRAM SWART, the wealthiest land-owner in Amwell township, and one of the most prominent retired agriculturists of Washington county, is a native of Greene county, Pennsylvania, born February 12, 1812. He is a grandson of the noble old pioneer, Philip Swart, who emigrated from Germany to America, locating finally, during the early part of the present century, in Amwell township, this county, where he took up what is known by the family as the "old home farm" of 315 acres. He had two children, Jacob and Susie (Mrs. Phillips), and died about the year 1811. His wife survived him many years, passing away at a ripe old age.

Jacob Swart, son of Philip, was born near the old home in Amwell township, and was educated at the local schools of his early day. He was married to Sarah Evans, of Amwell township, and the children born to this union were Dorothy (Mrs. Mustard), Philip, David, John, Polly (Mrs. Huston), Henry, Abraham, George, Hiram and Charlotte. Jacob Swart died in 1815, on the old home farm; his wife on June 11, 1816. He was an excellent business man, during his comparatively short life accumulating much property and left a fortune; an unimpeachable witness to his characteristic energy and sound judgment, owning at the time of his death six farms aggregating one thousand acres of land. Politically, he was a Whig, and he was respected and esteemed by all who knew him.

Hiram Swart, of whom this sketch more particularly relates, was brought by his parents to Ten-mile creek, Washington county, Penn., and was here reared after the manner of most farmer boys of his early day; his educational training being received in the primitive schools of his locality. The first property owned by him consisted of 160 acres of land in Amwell township, representing his share of 315 acres deeded by his mother to him and his brother Philip; and he afterward purchased the latter's portion. To this nucleus of 315 acres he, from time to time, by industry, hard work, indefatigable energy and careful thrift, added, until now he is the possessor of over one thousand acres of prime farm land.

Mr. Swart has been thrice married. His first wife was Miss Charlotte McGinnis, to whom he was married December 6, 1845, and of this union one child, Henry Clay, was born September 2, 1846. At the close of the war of the Rebellion he left his home, since which time he has not been heard from. Mr. Swart's wife dying October 25, 1846, his second marriage was in 1851, to Margaret Keys, and two children were born to them: Sarah Ann, born October 12, 1853, died June 8, 1891, and Jacob, born February 3, 1856, died at the age of six weeks. The mother of these children died March 16, 1856, and December 1, 1859, Mr. Swart was married to his present life companion—Mary, daughter of Enoch and Mary (Goulden) Hastings, who were natives of Virginia, coming to Pennsylvania and locating at Washington about 1815; they were the parents of nine children, Mary being born June 13, 1832. Five children have come to gladden the home of Mr. and Mrs. Swart, as follows: Mary Emma, born September 11, 1860; Allison Dupont, born October 11, 1862; David Henderson, born October 7, 1864; William Hiram, born January 21, 1869, and Margaret Vance, born November 28, 1871.

Mr. Swart has ever been in sympathy with the principles of the Whig and Republican parties. He and his amiable wife have long been members of the Presbyterian Church. During a continuous residence of three-quarters of a century in the beautiful region where he has had his home, Mr. Swart has necessarily seen many important changes, improvements and developments around him, and now, near the close of a useful, industrious and honored life, he has left the farm and removed to Washington, Penn., where he expects to peacefully end his days. It may be truthfully said of him that he stands as one of the few remaining links between the pioneer days of hardships and trials and the mighty present, teeming with wonderful achievements, and foreshadowed by the possibilities of still greater triumphs in the future.

AARON THOMAS GREGG. In the year 1836 there arrived in Monongahela (then called Williamsport) two brothers, Nimrod Alfred Gregg and Aaron Thomas Gregg, both natives of near Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn., the former born April 15, 1813, the latter July 26, 1815.

They were house plasterers by trade, which they carried on for some time after coming to Monongahela, but Nimrod abandoned it and entered into mercantile business with Hampton Kerr, with whom he remained for a time, after which he moved to West Newton, Westmoreland Co., Penn., where he carried on a grocery and drug business up to the time of his death, which was brought on by consumption. He married Mary Jane Hamilton, of Monongahela, who died in Adair county, Iowa, leaving three children: Margaret, Harriet and Aaron Thomas; Mrs. Gregg was a daughter of Joseph Hamilton, an innkeeper, in Monongahela.

Thomas Gregg, grandfather of Nimrod Alfred and Aaron Thomas Gregg, was a son of Samuel Gregg, a native of Ireland, who married Elizabeth Alford, both dying in Loudoun county, Va. The names, dates of birth, etc., of their children are as follows: Thomas, October 25, 1743, died in Fayette county, Penn., in 1821; Priscilla, September 8, 1745; John, October 14, 1747; Rebecca, February 24, 1749; Ruth, April 23, 1752; Israel, March 2, 1754; Ann, May 5, 1756, died in Greene county Penn., July 20, 1817; Samuel, April 18, 1758; Aaron, June 17, 1761 (he served as an officer in the American army twelve years; was present at St. Clair's defeat, and participated in Gen. Wayne's great victory at the battle of Fallen Timbers on the Maumee river, August 24, 1794; he died in 1803 at Fort Adamson on the Mississippi); Elizabeth, born April 15, 1863. Of this family, Thomas married Amy Gregg, and they settled in Fayette county, Penn., on Dunlap's creek, one mile from Brownsville. Amy Gregg's people settled in Greene county, same State, near the town of Carmichael's, and being Quakers intermarried, as was their custom. One record says that John Gregg and some of his children settled in Greene county, Penn. His children were Mary, Hannah, Amos, Amy, George, John Richard (died in Greene county November 15, 1812), Lydia, and Rebecca (who was married to Frank Geaton, and moved to Vincennes, Ind., where they died). Of these, Mary married a Mr. Nixon; Amos married Priscilla Gregg; Amy married Thomas Gregg; George married Ruth Gregg; Richard married Ann Gregg. The Greene county Greggs were of Scotch descent.

When Thomas and Amy (Gregg) Gregg settled in Fayette county, Indians were still hostile to the whites, making raids on the settlers, and the latter, including the Greggs, had often to flee to Ricket's fort, near where Merrittstown now stands. Thomas Gregg and wife were in the fort when a man named Morgan was attacked by two Indians a short distance from the blockhouse, Morgan killed both the Redskins, and the soldiers of the fort skinned the dead bodies, and tanned the hides to make sword belts. The children born to Thomas and Amy Gregg were: (1) Samuel, (2) John, (3) Nimrod, (4) Thomas, Jr., (5) Ruth, (6) Mary and (7) Dinah. (1) Samuel married Margaret Ball, and their children were Noah, Israel, John, Thomas, Minerva, and Priscilla; Samuel was a trader on the river to New Orleans; his children moved to Circleville, Ohio. (2) John married Margaret Allen, and had three sons—Carlton, Ashton and Thomas; John died in Fayette county; they then located at New London, Ohio; Margaret died at the patriarchal age of one hundred and four years. (3) Nimrod married Katie Johnson, and had children—Bani, Elihu, Zilla and Lizzie, of whom the sons are deceased, the daughters married and settled in Ohio. (4) Thomas, Jr., married Mary Miller, and had two sons: Nimrod Alfred and Aaron Thomas; Thomas, Jr., started to cross the mountains with a team, in 1815, but at Emmitsburg, Md., he was taken sick and died; his widow afterward married Capt. George Gregg, of Greene county, Penn., and by him had one daughter that died young; the mother was carried off by a fever in 1819, while a resident of Bridgeport; her father and mother were in Ricket's fort at the time Morgan killed the two Indians, as already related. (5) Ruth married David Wood, of Winchester, Va., and had seven sons who grew to maturity—Addison, Thomas, Joseph, John, Samuel, David and Jesse—of whom Samuel lives in Bridgeport, Fayette Co., Penn., and is the father of Charles B. Wood, M. D., of Monongahela. (6) Mary married Judge Ignatius Brown, and moved to Lebanon, Ohio. (7) Dinah married John Gregg, and had the following named children: George, Amy, Caroline, Mary, Harriet, Harmon. George died in Fayette county, the rest moved to Ohio. There are two accounts about Thomas and Amy (Gregg) Gregg's movements: one states that they went to Fayette county from Chester county, Penn., while the other avers that they moved from the Shenandoah Valley, Va. Samuel and Elizabeth (Davidson) Miller came from Chester county, Penn., near where the battle of Brandywine was fought.

Aaron Thomas Gregg, the subject proper of this sketch, learned the trade of plasterer with George D. Stevenson, in Uniontown, Penn. In 1811 he married Catherine, daughter of Joseph Caldwell, for many years an innkeeper in Monongahela, and they had eleven children—seven sons and four daughters—of whom one son, Joseph Caldwell, died in his tenth year: those now living are (1) Idesta Fidelia, (2) George Alfred, (3) Eliza Jane, (4) William Thomas, (5) David Swartz, (6) Charles Carroll, (7) Catherine Leilla, (8) Mary Cooper, (9) Albert Miller, and (10) John Caldwell. Of these (1) Idesta Fidelia married Lewis Bollman, and they moved to Bloomington, Ind. (they had one son, Charles Harvy, who died at Way Cross, Ga., and his father died in Bloomington: the widowed mother is now at her father's); (2) George Alfred and (6) Charles Carroll are married and live at Chehalis, Wash.; (3) Eliza Jane is at home, unmarried; (4) William Thomas married Lenora Fell (they have no children; he collects toll at the Monongahela river bridge); (5) David Swartz is single, and now lives in Monongahela; (7) Catherine married John L. Kirk, powder agent at Sharpsburg, Penn. (they have three children, one son and two daughters); (8) Mary Cooper married William E. Beaver, and they live in San Bernardino, Cal. (they have two sons and one daughter); (9) Albert Miller married Lilly Le Masters, and they have five little daughters; (10) John Caldwell is a lieutenant in the Sixteenth Regiment United States Army, now stationed at Fort Douglas, Utah (he went to West Point in 1853, and graduated in 1857).

Aaron Thomas Gregg served as adjutant and major of the Thirty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Militia; in 1855 he was elected a justice of the peace, serving five years; in 1859 he was elected colonel of the Second Regiment Uniformed Militia, Third Brigade, Seventeenth Division; in 1862 he aided in recruiting Company E, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., served at its captain till after the battle of Chancellorsville, and was honorably discharged at Falmouth, Va., June 3, 1863, on account of age and consequent disability. Mr. Gregg is a Republican, and in 1873 he was elected an alderman of Monongahela, and served five years. He belongs to the M. E. Church; has been a member of the I. O. O. F. since 1853, and is a member of the G. A. R. Post, No. 60, and of the Loyal Legion. Mr. Gregg taught school two winters (1839 and 1840) near Monongahela. In 1849 he crossed the Plains to the California gold mines, in Capt. Ankrim's company, which left Pittsburgh March 15, 300 strong, on the steambot "Consiguee," Captain Lockwood. He started with mule teams from St. Joseph, Mo., and was gone two years.

JOHAN S. WILGUS was born at Perryopolis, Fayette Co., Penn., October 28, 1823, a son of John and Diadamia (Dannelly) Wilgus, the former of whom was born in New Jersey, September 12, 1786.

Samuel Wilgus, grandfather of John S., was also a native of New Jersey, where he was reared and educated. He married Miss Rhoda ———, who bore him four children: William, James, Edmund and John. He died in his native State.

John Wilgus, father of John S., was educated at home by his mother, and by close application to books, became, considering his inferior advantages, a remarkably good scholar. He afterward moved to Perryopolis, Penn., of which place he was one of the first justices of the peace, an office at that time of no inconsiderable importance. In the political movements in his section he took a deep interest, and he was prominent in his party, first as a Democrat and later as a Whig; in church connection he was also active as a life member of and local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Society. In New Jersey he had married Diadamia, daughter of Joseph Dannelly, who came to Pennsylvania with Mr. Wilgus in 1806. The children born to this union were Joseph, Lorenzo D., Melissa, Louisa, Charlotte, Emily, John S., Diadamia, Rhoda and Hulda. Mr. Wilgus died in Pennsylvania in October, 1871. While a resident of Perryopolis he read medicine and law, and for several years practiced as a physician. He was the first one to suggest the building of the Union Pacific Railroad in a letter to James K. Polk, then President of the United States.

John S. Wilgus passed his youth at the old home in Perryopolis, and there received a liberal education. In after life he followed clerking and merchandising. On September 21, 1845, he married Barbara, daughter of Samuel Hunter, of Westmoreland county, Penn., and seven children blessed their union, viz.: T. B., of whom a brief sketch follows; Melissa A. (Mrs. D. M. Hart); Jane (deceased); Eva (Mrs. William Beatty); Dora (Mrs. Krepps); Blanche (Mrs. Fred Mason, now Mrs. Crawford), and Etta. Mr. Wilgus was originally a Whig, and cast his first vote for Henry Clay; on the formation of the Republican party, he enrolled himself under its banner, and he was also a member of the Know nothing party. He held various offices in different localities: in 1873 he was appointed postmaster at Brownsville, Penn. On coming to Monongahela City in 1880, he embarked in the grocery trade, which he conducted until 1890, when he discontinued the business, and was elected an alderman of the city. Mr. Wilgus is an earnest member of the Disciple Church, and takes an interest in all matters tending to the advancement and prosperity of his town, county and State.

T. B. Wilgus was born in Fayette City, Penn., April 12, 1846. Schooling in Brownsville, Penn. He clerked on the steamers "Franklin" and "Telegraph," on the Monongahela river in 1861, 1862 and 1863; clerk of steamer "Mercury" (1864) which was in the Government service, carrying troops and commissary stores up the Cumberland river to Gen. Thomas' army, at Nashville, Tenn. Then steamboated until 1869, on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. In 1870 he married Bessie M., daughter of Jerman Jordan, Esq., and their children were: Maud (deceased), Blanche and Frances. Mr. Wilgus was in mercantile business in Pittsburgh, Indiana and Brownsville (all in Pennsylvania), until 1878. In 1879 he went to Leadville, Colo., and Denver, and made a success of mining. In 1881 he returned, and was an active broker of the Pittsburgh Oil Exchange until 1885. He was proprietor of "Hotel Wilgus," Monongahela, for six years, to 1892. He has been a member of the Masonic Fraternity since 1879, belonging to Ionic Lodge, No. 35, A. F. & A. M., of Leadville, Colo., Chapter No. 2, Denver; and Commandery No. 1, Knights Templar, of Denver, Colo.

SPROWLS FAMILY. Over one hundred years ago there emigrated from Ireland to Pennsylvania two brothers, John and James Sprowls, who, after a short sojourn at Carlisle, came to Washington county, where James settled on a farm in East Finley township. He married a Miss Enlow, who had come to America at the same time as her husband, and they had children as follows: Melinda (married to Joseph Martin), Cyrus, Jesse, John, Simeon and James. The father of this family died in East Finley township in 1837, the mother in 1865, at a very advanced age.

Simeon Sprowls, son of the old pioneer James, was born in East Finley township in 1822, and, as he was but a boy when his father died, was taken care of and reared by Albert Squires, in Morris township, where he learned the trade of carpenter. He worked at this throughout the county till 1848, when he bought a farm adjoining the one on which he was born, and during the rest of his life followed agricultural pursuits. He died in June, 1878, at the age of fifty-six years, of typhoid fever; his widow is yet living on the old home place. Simeon Sprowls was a man above the average; he was well educated, and had, moreover, strong native talents. He was a Democrat in politics, and held many positions of trust in the community in which he lived. He was married in East Finley township to Mary, daughter of Hugh Montgomery, and the following named children have been born to them: Oliver M., in West Finley township; Albert S., of whom special mention will presently be made; Harvey B., on the old homestead in East Finley; George B., a merchant in Claysville; Ruth E., at home with her mother; Jennie M., married to Christian Plant, of Claysville; and William M., at the old home, caring for his widowed mother.

ALBERT S. SPROWLS was born July 3, 1851, in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., and was reared on the home farm, attending, during the winter months, the common schools of his district. At the age of eighteen he commenced study at Waynesburg College, where he spent a few summer seasons, his winters in the meantime being occupied in teaching country schools. In February, 1875, he went to Mt. Union College, in Ohio, where he graduated in the classical course in 1877. He had registered as a law student with Alexander Wilson, Esq., Washington, in 1876, and after graduation read law with him. In September, 1879, he was admitted to the bar of the county, and in 1881 commenced the practice of his profession in Washington, in partnership with T. F. Birch, which continued till 1888, when it was dissolved by mutual consent. Since then our subject has carried on the business alone. He is a Democrat in politics, and in 1882, when Robert E. Pattison was running for governor, he was chosen chairman of the Democratic County Committee. He worked with unflinching zeal for the cause, and was in every election precinct during that fall. In 1883 he received the nomination for district attorney. While at college he was a member of the Delta Tau Delta Fraternity, and is also a P. & A. M.

ALBERT OSBORNE WILSON, prominent among Washington county's most successful young agriculturists, is a descendant of one of the oldest families in this section.

Benjamin Wilson, the youngest of five brothers, was a native of New Jersey, born June 25, 1751, of Scotch-Irish parentage; he married in 1770, Esther Correll, also a native of New Jersey, born June 29, 1750. The three children by this union were Joseph M., born March 9, 1771; Sarah, born March 10, 1774 (married to one Giles, died March 1, 1816), and Margaret, born September 14, 1778. The mother of these passed away December 16, 1782, and the father married a second time (the full name, date of birth and marriage of this wife are not recorded, but it is known she died February 16, 1811). Nine children were born to this marriage, two in New Jersey, viz.: Benjamin, born January 11, 1788, and Samuel, born July 9, 1790, died June 14, 1818. In 1793 Mr. and Mrs. Wilson came with their children to Washington county, Penn., then a vast wilderness, and entered land about one and a half miles east of Prosperity, in Morris township, where they set about to prepare themselves a comfortable home. Benjamin Wilson was a weaver by trade, which he followed in conjunction with attending to his farm, though the number of inhabitants in the section at that time was not sufficient to give him steady employment in that line. After coming to this county the following children were born to him: Elizabeth, born September 18, 1794, died December 27, 1859; Jeremiah, born December 11, 1797, died November 8, 1804; Jacob, born August 4, 1800 (no record of death); William B., born April 24, 1803, died November 11, 1804; Esther, born May 19, 1805, died January 19, 1889; Nathan, born July 7, 1807, died March 8, 1853, and John, born February 23, 1810, died April 10, 1811. Esther Wilson (who died in 1889 in her eighty-fourth year) resided with her nephew, John C. Wilson, the father of A. O. Wilson, for thirty-three years, and with A. O. Wilson for the last seventeen years of her life. Benjamin Wilson, Sr., died May 24, 1839, having been bed ridden for five years. He was married a third time, this wife being Barbara Orr, who died November 29, 1855. She was blind for several years prior to her death. The pioneer Benjamin, made three trips to New Jersey, after locating in Pennsylvania, each trip requiring about twenty-one days, the last being made about 1810. On one occasion he brought back from New Jersey, in the old-fashioned saddle bags, the nails to roof a dwelling which he constructed shortly afterward; they were of the old flat-jointed variety of wrought nails, and may still be found on the premises, now in possession of William Elliott.

Benjamin Wilson, Jr., the eldest child born to Benjamin Wilson and Mary Wilson, was five years of age when his parents removed to Washington county. He learned the trade of a weaver, and was also practically tutored in the knowledge of farm work. On March 8, 1810, he married Mary Pruden, who was born May 17, 1782, and to their union six children were born: Pruden, John C., Hannah, Gabriel, Mary and Eliza. The mother of these died July 22, 1828, and Mr. Wilson shortly afterward removed to Greene county, Penn., where he married, March 4, 1832, Mary Dewberry, to which union six children were born: Ephraim, Rhoda, Jacob, Luella, Samuel and Sarah Jane, all of whom lived to maturity. The surviving members of the two families are as follows: Hannah, wife of James Fry, of St. Louis, Gratiot Co., Mich.; Ephraim, of Morris township, Greene Co., Penn.; Rhoda (widow of William Dewberry), residing in Virginia; Jacob, a resident of Illinois;

Sammel, living in Nebraska; Sarah Jane living near Jollytown, Greene Co., Penn.

John C. Wilson, the second son of Benjamin Wilson and his first wife, was born May 11, 1816. He received a fair education, and assisted his father on the farm in Greene county. At the age of sixteen years he went to live with and care for his grandfather Wilson, who was growing an almost helpless invalid. After the latter's death (as before mentioned) in 1839, John C. gave his attention to farming, and on January 28, 1846, married Mary O. Wilson, born December 21, 1817, a daughter of John Wilson, of Washington, Penn. They reared a family of five children, viz.: Albert Osborne; Mary R., born October 5, 1848, married Moses Winget, and resides in Morris township; George M., born July 31, 1851, married Clara Breese, and resides at Lindley's Mill; Oliver, born August 15, 1854, married Viola Hanna, and also resides at Lindley's Mills; Sarah, born July 2, 1858, married Lindley Headley, and resides in Tyler county, W. Va. The mother died February 25, 1863, and the father July 29, 1872. For five years previous to his death Mr. Wilson was totally blind. For twenty years he was an elder in the Presbyterian Church of Upper Ten Mile at Prosperity.

Albert Osborne Wilson was born December 7, 1846. He received a common-school education, and at the age of eighteen began learning the shoemaker's trade, at which he worked three winters, assisting his father on the farm in the summer. On June 14, 1868, he married Lavina Saunders, a daughter of Thomas Sanders, of Morris township, and to them three children were born: Isadore, June 21, 1870; Elsie Ann, June 24, 1873, and Edna Viola, January 3, 1880. In 1876 Mr. Wilson purchased the farm where he now resides, about two and a half miles north of Lindley's Mills, but did not remove there until 1882. He is a successful business man, and a public-spirited citizen. In politics he is a Democrat, and he and his wife and three children are members of the Upper Ten-Mile Presbyterian Church at Prosperity, of which he has been an elder for ten years. He has now in his possession a hymnbook, bearing publisher's date of 1792, the family Bible and record, which belonged to his great-grandfather, Benjamin Wilson. It bears the name of the bookseller from which it was purchased one hundred years ago, also the cost mark, which was £1 17s. 6d. From this volume the family have obtained an accurate record of the early ancestry of this family.

JEFFERSON P. DUVALL. The Duvall family, of which the subject of these lines is a well-known member, has for many years been closely associated with the progress and improvement of Washington county.

J. P. Duvall

Alexander and Elizabeth Duvall were natives of Maryland, descended from French ancestors. They came to America many years ago and located on a farm in Washington county, Penn., where Alexander died at the age of eighty-five years. Of his children are named John, David, Jacob, Lewis, Eli, Jehu, Hiram and Elizabeth, all now deceased.

Jacob Duvall was born February 17, 1789, on the old home farm in Washington county, Penn., where he grew to manhood. In 1810 he was married to Jane Patterson, who was born January 29, 1797, and their children were Mary (wife of Moses Billingsley), Harriet (married to Robert Duvall, a resident of Appanoose county, Iowa), Samantha (wife of Lewis J. Weaver, a farmer of East Pike Run township), Jefferson P. (the subject of this sketch), Alexander, Harrison, Emily, Jane, Thomas, Ruth and two unnamed. Of this family are yet living Mary, Harriet, Samantha and Jefferson P. The father was a prominent agriculturist, and died in 1861, the mother having passed away ten years prior to his demise.

Jefferson P. Duvall was born April 10, 1830, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and remained on the old place during his youth, securing a common-school education. In early life he learned and followed the trade of millwright, and then ran a gristmill near Coal Centre for several years. On July 27, 1851, he was united in marriage with Sarah Robison, who was born November 9, 1830, in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., a daughter of Hiram Robison, who was born August 19, 1804, and when a young man was married to Sarah Zook, who was born June 22, 1803. They were the parents of twelve children, viz.: Thomas, Tyre, Sarah (Mrs. Duvall), Salem, Isaiah, Hannah (wife of Mark Eagye), John, John (deceased), Eliza (deceased), and three who died in infancy. The father, who was a farmer, died September 23, 1890; the mother was laid to rest November 24, 1882; both were members of the M. E. Church, and in politics he was a Democrat. To the union of Jefferson P. and Sarah (Robison) Duvall the following children have been born: Thomas; Jane, wife of Allen J. White; Melissa, wife of John B. Carson; Jacob; Hiram; Ellsworth, and Harrison and Jefferson (twins). Mr. Duvall owns a good farm of one hundred acres, with good improvements thereon, and the place among the old settlers is known as the old Bedall homestead. Mr. Duvall owns 186 acres in another tract in East Pike Run township. In politics he is a Republican, and has served as school director. He is a charter member of the F. & A. M. Lodge, No. 461, Coal Centre, and holds the office of junior warden; his first membership in the Fraternity was in 1862 at Brownsville, Penn. He and his wife are members of the M. E. Church.

J. V. REA is a representative of one of the pioneer families of Cross Creek township. Alexander Rea was born in the North of Ireland about the year 1700, emigrated to America and settled on the eastern shore of the Delaware, within the confines of New Jersey, in 1731; but it is not known when or where he died or was buried, nor can an account be given of any of his family except his son.

Samuel Rea, son of Alexander Rea, was born in 1734 in New Jersey, soon after the arrival of his parents from Ireland. It was his boast that he was begotten in Ireland, bred on the ocean and born in America. At an early age he settled on Martin's creek, in Lower Mount Bethel township, Northampton Co., Penn., and owned a tract of land lying between Martin's creek and the Great Bethel Church (Presbyterian). He was a colonel in the Revolutionary war, which commenced in 1775. He was married to Ann McCracken, September 22, 1761, and to Rebecca Nelson December 10, 1782. He died September 19, 1813, in his eightieth year, and was buried in Great Bethel graveyard. The marriage with Rebecca Nelson was without issue, but the following children were born to him by his wife Ann McCracken: William, intermarried with Jane Mason; Sarah, with Robert Lyle; Janet, with Mr. Sillimen; John, with Rebecca Cox; Alexander, with Miss Jones; Isabel, with Jephtha Orison; Mary, with William McKibben; Ann, with Rev. George M. Scott, grandfather of ex-President Harrison's wife (deceased). Ann McCracken died March 27, 1781, aged forty-five years.

William Rea, the grandfather of J. V. Rea, was a farmer. He was born in Lower Mount Bethel township, Northampton Co., Penn., September 13, 1762, and was married to Jane Mason January 24, 1788; crossed the Alleghany mountains to Washington county, Penn., in 1789; lived and taught school one winter one and one half miles west of the town of Hickory, in Mount Pleasant township; in March, 1790, he purchased a tract of land in the adjoining township of Cross Creek, from George Marquis, situated about half way between Cross Creek village and West Middletown, being part of a patent entered by Col. James Marshall. He was appointed and sent as one of a committee of three by the Whisky Insurrectionists in 1794, to meet the United States army at Braddock's Fields, sent for the subjection of the Insurrectionists. He was appointed by the governor of Pennsylvania in 1823, a justice of the peace for the townships of Cross Creek, Hopewell and Mount Pleasant. He died September 28, 1835, aged seventy four years, and was buried in the Presbyterian graveyard at Cross Creek. The following named children were born to his marriage with Jane Mason: Annie,

Joseph Vincent; Rhoda, with Robert Allison; Isabella, with William Beatty; Jane, with Joseph McNary; Samuel, died in 1821, aged twenty-one years; John, died in 1822, aged twenty years; Mary, died in 1806, when sixteen months old; Jane Mason, the mother, died September 18, 1854, aged ninety years.

William Mason Rea, Sr., was born March 16, 1790, in Cross Creek township, on the farm on which he lived and died. His death took place June 27, 1865. Kerr June 27, 1849; C. C. Rea, born April 28, 1834, married Catherine Cook, November 27, 1856; Mary, born February 21, 1821, died October 21, 1821, and Samuel, born April 1, 1830, died February 1, 1839. William Rea died December 7, 1881; Elizabeth died December 5, 1883; Jane died September 26, 1853; John C. died September 24, 1882. William Mason Rea, Sr., died June 27, 1865, his wife, Elizabeth on August 21, 1868.

John C. Rea's family is as follows: James L. married Lizzie Anderson, to whom one daughter was born (all deceased); William M. married Martha Keys, to whom four daughters were born (after her death he married Nannie A. McElroy, to whom four sons were born); Samuel Jefferson married Sarah Jane Graham, to whom four sons and two daughters were born (one son now deceased); Lizzie married D. M. WH. JONES was born in Monongahela, Penn., January 23, 1848, a son of T. M. and Elizabeth Jones. He is a worthy and intelligent representative of one of the oldest and most prominent of the colored families of the city.

Educated in the schools of his native town, there was developed in him a love for literary pursuits, a result of which is a library of excellence and value, and a well-informed man. In his early days Mr. Jones held various positions in the service of the Pittsburgh & Brownsville Packet Company, but desiring to go into business for himself he resigned and returned to his home, where he has, in various ways, rendered much service to his people and city. He has been to some extent identified with the politics of his city and county, for several years serving on the county committee, his services being recognized by his election as city clerk in 1887, in 1889, in 1890 and in 1892, a position he has uniformly filled with dignity and credit. In June, 1891, Mr. Jones was nominated by the Republicans for a county office (jury commissioner), and at the succeeding election, was accorded a handsome majority, leading the entire county ticket.

In 1871 our subject married, but was unfortunate in the loss of his amiable wife in 1889. Two sons, the fruit of this marriage, are living, the eldest, Harry, holding a lucrative position in the Government service; the younger, Fred, a student in the schools of Brownsville, Penn. A barber by profession, Mr. Jones owns the finest equipped parlors in the Valley, doing a prosperous business; in addition to the offices heretofore mentioned, held by Mr. Jones, he is corresponding secretary and member of the board of management of the Western Pennsylvania Charitable Association, corresponding secretary First District S. S. Association, and for several years served as an officer in Company F, Tenth Regiment National Guards of Pennsylvania. He also is identified with Church and Sunday-school work. Mr. Jones enjoys the respect and esteem of the community in which he lives, and is recognized as a man of ability, and a good citizen.

JOEL PATTERSON BLAYNEY. This gentleman, one of the wealthy and influential citizens of West Finley township, is a lineal descendant of Cadwallader Blayney, a Welshman by birth, and a gallant officer in the British army, who for meritorious services to his country was made a general, and soon thereafter was given an estate in Ireland, the mansion on which came to be known as "Blayney Castle," while the new occupant was raised to the peerage with the title of "Lord Blayney." Cadwallader had a brother, whose baptismal name is forgotten, a rector in the Church of England.

John Blayney, grandfather of Joel P., came with his family, in 1795, from his native Ireland to this country, making his first settlement in Ohio county, W. Va. Among his children was one Edward, who was born in the Emerald Isle, in 1785, and, as will be seen, was ten years old when he came to the United States with his father. Edward assisted in the duties of the farm his father had settled on in Ohio county, W. Va., until his marriage with Miss Betsey Potter, of the same county. To this union were born four children, viz.: Joseph, died in West Alexander, Penn.; David, died in Morrow county, Ohio; Matilda, died in Ohio county, W. Va.; and Eliza, died in Morrow county, Ohio. The mother of these children dying, Mr. Blayney married, for his second wife, Miss Nancy Patterson, of Ohio county, W. Va., daughter of Robert Patterson, a native of Ireland, who came to America in pioneer days, settling in Ohio county, where he passed from earth at the advanced age of ninety-six years. By this union there were eight children, as follows: Robert, married to Jane Campbell, and living in Tuscola, Douglas Co., Ill.; Edward, married to S. J. Patterson, and residing in Osage county, Kans.; Joel, deceased in infancy; Joel Patterson, our subject; Mary Jane, died in Ohio; Isaiah, married to Nancy Floyd, in Nebraska; John McKinley, married to Sarah Jane Wheatley, and living in Washington, Penn.; William S., married to Auna Robinson, of Ohio county, W. Va., and died April 1, 1875, in West Alexander, this county, where his widow is yet living. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Blayney resided in Belmont county, Ohio, four years, then returned to Washington county, and died at the home of the subject of this sketch, he dying May 3, 1851, the mother some years later.

Joel Patterson Blayney was born April 13, 1829, in Belmont county, Ohio, where he lived with his father until he was five years of age, when the family moved to Washington county, Penn., settling near Independence. After a four years' residence there they came to Good Intent, West Finley township, afterward moved to Marshall county, W. Va., and thence to the farm where he now lives in West Finley township. Here he was united in marriage April 27, 1854, with Joanna Frazier, daughter of Alexander Frazier, of whom the following interesting sketch appeared in the Pittsburgh Leader at the time of his death:

Alexander Frazier, the oldest man in Washington county, who died last week, was born in Donegal township in 1792. When he was twelve years old he spent some time with his grandmother, Mrs. Nancy Ross. One morning he, for some childish reason, pleaded to go home, and was allowed to have his wish. That day Mrs. Ross was cruelly murdered by the Indians, and in all probability her grandson would have met the same fate had he been with her. In his old age Squire Frazier still looked back at this as a providential escape. In 1799 he attended the first school taught in the township by Mr. McDonald, whose work consisted in teaching the pupils from "Diller's Spelling Book," the Bible and the shorter catechism. In 1811 he cast his first vote, and since that time has not missed an election, being all his life a strong Democrat, having voted for every Democratic nominee for President from Madison to Hancock. The greater part of Mr. Frazier's life was spent on a farm between West Alexander and Good Intent. For a number of years he was justice of the peace, and was a pioneer Squire Mayes. Once he was offered as a marriage fee a $1 bill, with the remark, "take your change out of this;" in another case, a backwoods bridegroom offered to split rails. In both cases the generous-hearted Squire refused the proffered payment. Mr. Frazier was married three times, and has ten living children, thirty-nine grandchildren, and seventeen great grandchildren, making a total of sixty-six descendants, many of whom are in the West. Squire Frazier was very generous with his means, and assisted generously in the building of three churches. No needy person asked aid of him in vain. He was a true Christian in profession and practice. We will not soon forget the familiar form and cheerful words of Squire Frazier, linked, as he was, with the infancy of our country.

It may here be added that the Fraziers are descended from Lord Alexander Frazier, a Scotch peer, who won fame in the seventeenth century by defending the rights of the Barony of Lovat.

To Mr. and Mrs. Joel P. Blayney were born eight children as follows: Albert, born in 1855, married to Dessie Malone; Sophia S., born in 1857, married to William B. Gibson; Lillie M., born in 1860, married to William Egan; Clement A., born in 1862, died in infancy; and Edward E., Charles

A., Lizzie A. and S. Rice, born in 1865, 1869, 1871, 1876, respectively, all living in the paternal home. Mr. Blayney is a living example of what patience, perseverance, resolution, steadfast integrity and strict attention to business will accomplish in the proper channel. He commenced life with but $700, to-day he is the owner of 535 acres of as fine land as can be found in the county, well stocked with cattle, horses, hogs and sheep; and all this is over and above losses he has sustained from time to time in speculation, forfeiture of bonds, etc., aggregating some $10,000. Mr. Blayney has always been a Democrat, and served in various township offices. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church at West Alexander.

ISRAEL BREESE. Prominent among the retired men of Morris township, who have made life a success, is the subject of this memoir, so well and favorably known in the community. Israel Breese was born near Sparta, in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., January 20, 1817. His father, Henry Breese, was born near Mendham, Morris Co., N. J., December 2, 1783, and emigrated to Washington county, Penn., about the beginning of the present century. Phoebe Breese, mother of our subject, who was a daughter of Jonathan Hayden, was born near the place of her husband's nativity, November 15, 1785, and married in 1804. Henry Breese removed to Washington county to look after the large estate of his father-in-law, near Sparta; but after a time resumed work at his trade, blacksmithing, which he followed the greater part of his life. He died in 1870; his wife surviving him six years. To them were born twelve children, five of whom are now living: Mary Ann (wife of Henry Brown), now residing in Athens county, Ohio; Phoebe Jane (wife of Joseph Vauseyoe, of East Finley township, Washington county); Silas F. (now a resident of Greene county, near Beulah); Henry (who has for thirty years resided in Iowa), and Israel, the subject of this sketch.

After receiving but limited educational advantages, Israel, at the age of fourteen years, left home and started out to face the "stern realities of life" without a trade or other advantages, save his character and energy, to commend him. He was not long in gaining a foothold, and his prosperity has been marked. In addition to a comfortable home in the town of Prosperity, where he resides, he owns a well improved farm. He at one time conducted a successful mercantile business at Nineveh, Greene Co., Penn. His business capacity, integrity and genial disposition have commended him as a fitting subject for trusted public positions, which he has often been solicited to accept; but save one term of service as auditor of Greene county, he has refused to be an office holder except in his own township. Through his business efforts, while serving as auditor, $16,000 of back taxes were collected, and methods were instituted which resulted in a reduction in the rate of taxation. Many attempts were made to persuade him to accept other trusts, but he steadfastly refused. His political views accord with those of the Democratic party. Mr. Breese was married in 1842 to Miss Charlotte, daughter of Stephen Cooper, of Franklin township, and to this union ten children were born, viz.: Leroy Woods, William Cooper, Lavina, Mary Louisa, Silas Finley, Clara, James Henry, Lewis Campbell, Forest Adams and Charles Weaver, of whom the first five are deceased; Clara married, G. M. Wilson, of Morris township; James Henry married Bell Conger; Lewis Campbell married Florence Andrew; Forest Adams married Bertha Hayden, of Prosperity; Charles Weaver is unmarried and resides with his father. The mother of this family died in 1884, and October 14, 1886, Mr. Breese married Amanda J., daughter of George F. Wolfe, of Greene county, Penn., whose father, Christopher Wolfe, emigrated from near Morristown, N. J., about the beginning of the present century.

THOMAS M. PATTERSON, one of the oldest and most influential farmers of Cross Creek township, is a native of the same, having been born March 2, 1827, on the J. N. Walker farm. He is a son of James Patterson, and grandson of Gen. Thomas Patterson, whose grandfather (James) was a native of Ireland. James Patterson (1) was born in Ireland in 1708, and coming to America in 1728, settled in Little Britain township, Lancaster Co., Penn. He married in Pennsylvania, and reared a family of ten children, the sons being named as follows: William, John, Samuel, James and Thomas.

William Patterson was born in 1733, and was first married to Rosanna Scott, who bore him children as follows: Mary, Moses, Samuel, Thomas and James. The mother of these died April 5, 1769, and on April 10, 1770, William Patterson married Elizabeth Brown, and ten children were born to this second union: John, Rosanna, William, Nathaniel, Rachel, Elizabeth, Josiah, Hannah, Nathan and Eleanor. In 1779 the family removed to Cross Creek township, this county, settling on a farm now owned by R. M. Patterson. The father was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He died June 29, 1818, and his wife passed from earth about the year 1828.

Gen. Thomas Patterson (grandfather of subject) was born October 1, 1764, in Lancaster county, Penn., and was about fifteen years of age when his parents removed to Washington county. In 1795

he was married to Elizabeth Finley, of Westmoreland county, Penn.; and twelve children were born to them, those who lived to an adult age being William, James, Samuel, Mary, John, Thomas, Finley, Elizabeth, Moses and Rosanna. Mr. Patterson was a prosperous farmer and very influential citizen, having represented Washington county in the United States Congress for several years. He died November 17, 1841.

James Patterson was born April 24, 1798, in Cross Creek township, and passed his life in the vicinity of his birthplace. On June 29, 1820, he was married to Eliza Walker, daughter of Alexander and Elizabeth (Norris) Walker, of Cross Creek township, and they had eleven children, two of whom are deceased. Those now living are Elizabeth (Mrs. Russell T. Johnson), Mary (Mrs. Richard Wells), Thomas M. (subject), Alexander (who was a wool dealer of New York City, married Jane Hodgens, and died January 7, 1888), Jane (deceased wife of Robert Marquis), Ambrose (who lived in Nebraska, married Margaret A. Richey, and died October 15, 1886), James M. (living in Plattsmouth, Neb., and married to Eleanor Campbell), David F. (a lawyer of Allegheny, Penn., married to Mary Gardener) and Emily A. (Mrs. Samuel Latta, living in Cass county, Neb.). The father of this family died August 17, 1861, at the home of his son, Thomas M. In politics he was a Democrat, active to the interests of his party, and he was a wide-awake and prosperous business man, winning friends and success by his integrity. He was a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church of Cross Creek township for nearly thirty-four years, and after a painful illness of several months he was laid "where the weary are at rest;" his widow died December 9, 1886.

Thomas M. Patterson (the subject proper of this sketch) was reared to manhood on the home farm in Cross Creek township, and in early boyhood evinced a passionate fondness for the equine race. At the age of fourteen he was given a six-horse team, which he cared for and drove many years. At that time it was necessary for him to make a trip to Pittsburgh nearly every week in order to exchange the farm produce for other necessary articles. On January 14, 1847, he was wedded to Miss Sarah J. Barber, of Jefferson township, this county, born November 18, 1827, on the old homestead, a daughter of John Barber (deceased), a prominent farmer of that vicinity. In 1857, Thomas M. Patterson bought a half interest in the store at Patterson's Mills, which he conducted, also managing his farm until 1861. He then sold his interest in the store, and bought the two-hundred acre farm upon which he has since worked. He keeps the land in a high state of cultivation, and gives much attention to sheep raising, doing an extensive business in that branch. Politically he has ever been an active Democrat, and has served as justice of the peace, assistant assessor and in various other township offices. He is a liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church of Cross Creek village, Mrs. Patterson being a member of that denomination.

JOSEPH N. HENRY, a well-known resident of South Strabane township, is a son of John Henry, who was born October 14, 1825, in South Strabane township, on the farm now occupied by his brother, Robert D. John Henry passed his earlier years in attending to the duties of the home farm, but his inclinations led him to follow mechanical work, and he commenced to learn the carpenter's trade. After becoming familiar with each detail of the work, he made a business of general contracting and building, meanwhile managing a farm. He finally devoted his entire attention to the improvement and cultivation of the home place. On May 8, 1851, he was married to Jane N. White, a daughter of one of the pioneers of Chartiers township, and they had the following family of children: Ebenezer W. (residing in Iowa), Nicholas, Robert, Joseph N. and Lewis A., all living but Nicholas, who died when eighteen months old. John Henry was the architect of his own fortune, and owned over 400 acres of land in Washington county, Penn., also a farm in Iowa. Politically he was formerly a Whig, and afterward became a Republican, ever taking an active interest in the affairs of his party, and serving acceptably many years as school director in the township. He was highly esteemed by all who knew him, and in religion was an active member of the United Presbyterian Church, which he served as a trustee. He died July 11, 1887, and was buried in the Washington cemetery. His widow, Jane N. Henry, died February 21, 1892, and was laid to rest by the side of her husband.

Joseph N. Henry was born May 21, 1859, on the home farm where his entire life has been passed, and received his early education in the common schools. On September 17, 1885, he was united in marriage with Emma, daughter of Charles S. Van Kirk, of Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., and they have had three children: Mary, John and Katharine E. Mr. Henry is an active member of the Republican party. The family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek.

JAMES S. MOUNTS, a native of Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., was born May 6, 1835. He is a son of Joseph Mounts, who was also a native of Washington county, born November 30, 1793, and passed his earlier years at home. On July 28, 1817, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Montgomery, who bore him three children: Richard, Mary Jane and Elizabeth. In April, 1824, the father was married to Nancy McLaughlin, who was born April 7, 1808, a daughter of James McLaughlin. James McLaughlin was born in Ireland, where he was married to Sarah Hawthorne, and soon afterward left his home in the old country to seek one in the New World. He finally settled in Washington county, Penn., where the remainder of his life was passed, and the following children were born and reared: Nancy, James, Sarah, Martha and Andrew.

After his marriage Joseph Mounts settled on a small farm in Buffalo township, Washington county, and remained there twenty-eight years, when he purchased the farm on which the remainder of his life was passed. His children were: Sarah (Mrs. James Coulson), Margaret (Mrs. Samuel Carson), Eleanor (Mrs. David Clark), Martha, Nancy C. (Mrs. James Prigg), James S. (subject of this sketch), Rebecca (Mrs. William Prigg), Martha J. (Mrs. John Logan), Maria A., Rachel and Joseph. Mr. Mounts was a Democrat, and took an active interest in public affairs. He died August 5, 1877, and was buried in Washington cemetery.

James S. Mounts spent his early life on the home farm, and received his education in the common schools of the neighborhood. On October 20, 1861, he was married to Susan, daughter of Jacob Werich, and the following children were born to them: Melvin, Warren M., Fannie (Mrs. Ed. Elwood), Nancy and James. The mother of these children dying, Mr. Mounts was married February 4, 1892, to Lizzie, daughter of Marquette Wright, of Washington. Mr. Mounts has always been a successful farmer, and is an enterprising citizen. In political opinion he is a prominent and earnest worker in his party. He was a member of the U. P. Church until the Civil war opened, when the Democrats were prohibited from fellowship, since which time he has been connected with no church.

JONAS COOPER. Prominent among the oldest, best known and most highly esteemed citizens of Washington county stands Jonas Cooper, who in his social and political life has proven himself in all respects worthy of the good name he bears. He is a native of the county, having been born May 30, 1811, on the farm where he now lives in Franklin township. His grand father, Moses Cooper, was born August 8, 1727, in New Jersey, and there married Mary Doty, who was born April 30, 1733, and died November 14, 1823. The names and dates of birth of the children born to this union are as follows: Zebulon, January 13, 1752 (died December 22, 1835); Moses, April 4, 1751 (died April 16, 1831); Mary, June 6, 1756 (died October 24, 1832); Elizabeth,

May 26, 1759 (died in 1844); Nathaniel, September 21, 1761 (died April 16, 1848); Eunice, March 26, 1761 (died July 14, 1850); Lemuel, March 4, 1767 (died January 19, 1797); Penelope, November 28, 1769 (died July 28, 1833); Ephraim, July 9, 1772 (died February 18, 1860); and Stephen, February 14, 1775 (died May 29, 1853). In 1778 the father, Moses Cooper, started with his large family from New Jersey for Washington county, Penn., but while on the way he died in Fayette county, Penn., where he is buried. He had sold his property in New Jersey, receiving in payment thereof "Continental money," which had so depreciated at the time of his death as to be comparatively worthless. The family, now almost penniless, continued their journey westward, arriving in course of time at their destination. Zebulon, one of the sons, had learned the trade of a tanner in New Jersey, and upon his arrival in Washington county commenced business in a very modest way in that line. He took his brother Ephraim as an apprentice, teaching him both the tanning and shoemaking trades, the first of which he (Ephraim) subsequently followed nearly his entire life. He commenced by tanning his own leather, and going from house to house, making shoes at 30 cents a pair. He soon, however, purchased the farm now occupied by our subject, and on it built one of the first tanneries in this section, which stood until 1890. On February 27, 1791, he married Margaret, daughter of Abram Van Voorhees, who bore him the following children: Daniel, born February 17, 1795, died June 26, 1877; Catherine, born June 17, 1798, died February 12, 1876; Nellie, born January 6, 1804, died December 16, 1878; Lany, born December 4, 1806; Pamela, born February 28, 1811; and Jonas, born May 30, 1814. The father died February 18, 1860, the mother on March 6, 1859. Ephraim Cooper was an energetic man, and one who took a lively interest in the prosperity and growth of his county. He taught his trade to at least fourteen men and boys. In politics he was an active Whig, and in religion was first a leading supporter of the Upper Ten-Mile Presbyterian Church, of which he was one of the organizers, and in 1831 united with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Jonas Cooper passed his boyhood and youth with his parents, attending school occasionally. When old enough he learned the trade of a tanner, and after the retirement of his father from active life conducted the tannery which the latter had established. On November 3, 1836, Mr. Cooper married Sarah, daughter of Luther Axtell, of New Jersey, who came at an early date to Washington county. The children born of this union were: Daniel, born September 14, 1837, died January 27, 1875, in Jefferson county (he was educated at Waynesburgh College, and for many years was a minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church); Philip A., born February 12, 1839; Emeline (Mrs. Joseph Riggs, of Morris township), born July 8, 1842; Alva, born May 20, 1844 (he was educated at Waynesburgh College, and was a minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Bentleyville, Washington county); Sarah J. (Mrs. Ira B. Baldwin), born April 13, 1848 (in Decatur county, Kans.); and Jonas J., born July 13, 1853, died at the age of ten years. Our subject has been from his youth a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. In politics he was first an Old line Whig, then a Republican, but is now a pronounced supporter of the Prohibition party. His wife died August 23, 1885.

Philip A. Cooper enlisted in August, 1862, in Company C, One Hundred and Fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, which was first sent to Maryland to guard the railroads, and then joined Hancock's division. He participated in many of the hardest fought battles of the army of the Potomac, including Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Mine Run, Wilderness, Ford's Tavern, Deep Bottom, Charles City Cross Roads, Reams Station, Petersburg, and many others, and was present at Lee's surrender. On his return home he commenced farming, an occupation he has since continued. On January 4, 1870, Mr. Cooper married Ellen, daughter of Michael Slusher, of Amwell township, and of this union have been born the following children: Addie M., Ashton Carey, Nora B., Howard D. and Lewis C. Mr. Cooper is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. In politics he was formerly a Republican, but is now a Prohibitionist.

JAMES S. ARTHUR, a prominent citizen of Chartiers township, is one of the three children born to William Arthur, whose father was also named William. William Arthur, the grandfather of James S. was born in Ireland, and some time after his marriage came to Washington county, Penn., with his family. He settled on a farm in Chartiers township, where his two sons, William and James, were reared. The father died in 1840, having been preceded by his wife in 1838.

William Arthur was born in Ireland, and came with his parents to Pennsylvania when only four years of age, there growing to manhood. He then selected as a life companion Rebecca Foster, and after marriage the young people settled on the farm in Chartiers township, which is now occupied by the son James. Three children were born to their union: Elizabeth (wife of John McCarty, of Chartiers township), James S., and Mary Anne, who died in her eighteenth year. William Arthur passed his whole life in this county. He was an active worker in the Democratic party, and in religion a member of the United Presbyterian Church. He died about the year 1847, being followed by his wife in 1868.

James S. Arthur was born January 27, 1833, in Chartiers township, this county, and passed his early life on the home farm, being educated in the subscription and district schools of the period. On January 28, 1864, he was married to Sarah Jane Palmer, who was born in Washington county, September 21, 1813, a daughter of David and Hannah (Crawford) Palmer. David Palmer was born in July, 1816, in County Armagh, Ireland, and in 1833 came with his parents to Washington county, Penn., where in 1842 he was married to Hannah Crawford. After his marriage Mr. Palmer settled on a farm in this county, where the following children were born: Thompson (living in North Strabane township), Sarah Jane (wife of James S. Arthur), Margery (married to Newton G. Watson, and died in Iowa May 27, 1891), Morrison (deceased in May, 1868,) and Elizabeth (wife of Prof. S. W. Reed, living in Washington, Iowa). The father of this family died in July, 1890, having been preceded by his wife in May, 1872.

After his marriage to Sarah Jane Palmer, James Arthur settled on the homestead farm, consisting of 110 acres. This farm is underlaid with a valuable six-foot vein of coal, and the mines have been opened on the farm for a number of years, Mr. Arthur's ancestors having been active coal merchants. The mines are still under operation by J. S. Arthur & Sons. Mr. Arthur takes an active part in politics, voting with the Democratic party, and is a well-known and enterprising citizen. James S. and Sarah Arthur have been blessed with a family of eight children, as follows: Ida May, William, Elizabeth Jeannette, Margaret, James S., David Clarence, John (deceased in infancy) and George Lawrence.

MRS. MARTHA G. BELL. Among the well known and highly respected families of East Finley township none hold higher social position than that of the late Zadoc L. Bell. He was a son of Samuel Bell, a native of Fayette county, Penn., born in 1806, of Scotch-Irish parents.

When Samuel was yet a boy his father died, and his home was made with his widowed mother until he was fourteen years of age, when he was apprenticed to a blacksmith to learn the trade. With him he remained until he was twenty one years old, when to his sorrow he learned that his employer was bankrupt, and he had to take an old, broken down horse in payment of wages due him. Not discouraged, however, at this unexpected interruption to his prospects, Mr. Bell mounded his horse, then his only possession, and set out for the West. Horse and rider swam the Monongahela river, and then proceeded on to Van Buren, Franklin (then Morris) township, Washington county, where he rented a kit of blacksmith's tools, and purchased a leather apron on time, toward the payment of which the first 50 cents he earned in his new venture went. He worked hard, and was soon able to pay the balance and purchase the tools. He was married to Matilda Luellen, who was born January 14, 1810, and who became the mother of the following named children: Sarah, wife of A. C. Cracroft, of Franklin township; Thomas J., a farmer of East Finley township; Zadoc L.; Elizabeth, wife of M. A. McKeen, of East Finley township; Nancy, wife of David Gantz; Martha, who was married to Dr. T. P. Simpson, but is now deceased; and Robert, a farmer of Franklin township. The untiring energy, industry and perseverance of Samuel Bell soon enabled him to purchase a small tract of land, and afterward another, still larger. In 1840 he abandoned his trade and commenced farming, which he followed the rest of his life, doing, in connection therewith a large business in live stock, buying and selling, in all of which interests he deservedly prospered, and at the time of his death, in 1880, he was the owner of several hundred acres of the very best farm land in the county. He was a thoroughly representative self-made man in every essential. His widow died in 1890.

Zadoc L. Bell, second son of the above, was born February 12, 1832, at Van Buren, Franklin (then Morris) township, Washington Co., Penn. There he received a liberal education at the country schools, and followed agricultural pursuits on his father's farm. On April 9, 1855, he was united in marriage with Martha G. McKeen, daughter of John and Margaret McKeen, of East Finley township, and she bore him seven children, of whom the following is a brief record: Theodore D., born July 22, 1856, is now a farmer in Morris township, this county; Matilda, born March 13, 1858, married C. H. Andrews, and died May 22, 1888; Samuel, born January 20, 1861, is a jeweler in Claysville, Penn.; Sarah Ellen, born August 13, 1863, is married to E. C. Booth, of Washington, Penn.; Erminie Blanche, born July 12, 1866, is married to J. E. Andrews, of Lindley's Mills, this county; Thomas Remley, born April 5, 1870, is a school teacher and lives at home; Birdie Caroline, born August 29, 1872, is married to L. H. Ramsey, of Lagonda, Penn. Soon after his marriage Zadoc L. Bell purchased of his father the old Van Seyoc farm, on which his widow yet resides and manages. This property is one of the best in East Finley township. Mr. Bell died suddenly July 9, 1891, after a busy and successful life. In addition to his general farming interests he dealt extensively in live stock, and in all his business transactions he was recognized as an honorable, straightforward man, one who made and kept hosts of friends, and wielded an influence for good in the community. In politics he was a life-long Democrat, and one of the advisers in his party; in religion he was a most liberal contributor, not only to his own church, the Cumberland Presbyterian at Fairview, but to all denominations in need of pecuniary assistance. His widow is a member of the Fairview Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

ROBERT LITTLE. Among the older and most successful agriculturists of East Finley township, none stand higher or are more respected than the gentleman whose name opens this sketch.

William Little, father of our subject, was born in Bedford county, Penn., in 1798, of Scotch-Irish parents. His educational opportunities were very meager, but his practical experiences were almost unlimited. At about the age of eighteen he set out for the then "great West," at that time offering magnificent opportunities for ambitious young men who were willing to work and encounter hardships. About the year 1817 he arrived in Washington county, Penn., and soon found employment in the carding-mills there, in which he worked about seven years, or until after his marriage in 1823. He then purchased with his hard-earned savings a tract of land in East Finley township, near the Buffalo township line, on which he erected a log cabin, moving thereon with his young wife, and here they passed the remainder of their days, working industriously and adding to their possessions. Mrs. Little was a Miss Mary Ann Patterson, a native of Washington, Penn., whose father, James Patterson, had emigrated from Ireland. Ten children were born to this union, as follows: James, who died at the age of fifteen years; Henry, now a retired farmer, residing in Hiawatha, Kans.; Alexander H., living retired in Washington, Penn.; William, who died at the age of thirty five years; Robert, our subject; Martha, deceased at the age of twenty-one; Isabel, deceased at the age of thirty-nine; Jane, now a resident of Hiawatha, Kans., married to Stewart Little; Carpenter, deceased in infancy, and Kate, wife of William McCreery, of Buffalo township. The father died in 1887, the mother in 1880. They were members of the M. E. Church, and in politics Mr. Little was a life-long Democrat.

Robert Little, the subject of this memoir, was born February 26, 1831, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn. His education was somewhat limited, as regards book learning, but his knowledge of agriculture, which he obtained under the preceptorship of his father, was invaluable.

On April 1, 1856, he was married to Mary Ashbrook, who was born February 17, 1835, a daughter of Absalom and Elizabeth (Braddock) Ashbrook, and to this union the following children were born: A daughter that died in infancy; James, born December 10, 1857, died September 1, 1862; Ida Bell, born April 19, 1860, married to William Forgie, of Washington, Penn.; Lizzie Ann, born June 4, 1862, wife of William Donaldson, of East Finley township; Amelia J., born June 9, 1865, and William A., born September 7, 1869, both living at home. After his marriage Mr. Litle purchased some land adjoining his father's property, situated about three miles southeast of Claysville, on Buffalo creek, in East Finley township. Here he has since resided, engaged in general farming, in which he has been eminently successful, and he and his worthy life partner enjoy the esteem and respect of all their neighbors. They are members of the M. E. Church at Claysville, and in politics Mr. Litle is a solid Democrat.

EDWARD GRAHAM ALEXANDER, a prosperous farmer of East Finley township, is a grandson of John Alexander, a native of Ireland, who immigrated to Fayette county, Penn., in an early day, where his children were born and reared.

Edward Alexander, son of the pioneer John, was born in Fayette county, Penn., November 14, 1792, and when yet a boy came in company with two brothers to Ohio, which was then considered "out West." They located in the northern part of the State, and remained there some time, but Edward, becoming discontented, returned to Washington county, Penn., and took a contract for the construction of one mile of the "National pike," west of Washington borough. On April 4, 1816, Mr. Alexander was married to Sarah Shoaff, a native of Virginia (born near Rumley), of German ancestry, and the following children were born to them: James, Jacob, Edward Graham (subject), David (deceased in infancy), Hezekiah and Sarah Jane (wife of Jesse Plants), living in East Finley township. Our subject and the daughter just named are the only living members of the above family. After his marriage Mr. Alexander lived some time on Buffalo creek, and in 1825 came to East Finley township, locating on the farm now occupied by his son Edward, which is situated on Templeton fork of Wheeling creek, about half a mile from its mouth. Mr. Alexander continued to reside on this farm until his death, which occurred in the year 1874. His wife died in 1880.

Edward Graham Alexander was born in East Finley township, Washington county, June 8, 1820, and passed his boyhood on the farm. In 1848 he was united in marriage with Hannah Vanderhoof, who was born June 24, 1829, a daughter of Peter Vanderhoof, a native of New Jersey. She bore him children as follows: Margaret J., Hezekiah, William, Isabel (who died February 15, 1890), Mary, Sarah, Amanda, James, Rosanna, Catherine and Jacob. After his marriage Mr. Alexander moved into a log cabin near his present home, and began the struggle of life. By dint of incessant toil and tireless energy he has succeeded in accumulating a comfortable property, and also in winning and retaining the highest regard of all who know him. In politics he has always been a Democrat. He attends the Windy Gap C. P. Church, of which his wife is a member.

LEWIS A. HENRY, a young and enterprising citizen of South Strabane township, is a son of John Henry, who was born October 14, 1825, on the farm in South Strabane township, Washington county, which is now occupied by Robert D. Henry. John Henry passed his earlier years in agricultural duties, and being of a mechanical turn of mind, afterward learned the carpenter's trade, beginning business as a general contractor and builder, and managing a farm at the same time. He ultimately gave his whole time to the latter occupation, making numerous improvements on the home place. He was united in marriage May 8, 1851, with Jane N. White, whose parents were among the pioneers of Chartiers township, and to their union were born children as follows: Ebenezer W. (living in Iowa), Nicholas, Robert, Joseph N. and Lewis A., all living but Nicholas, who died when eighteen months old. Mr. Henry owed his financial success to his own exertions, and accumulated a comfortable property, being the owner of over 400 acres of land in Washington county, Penn., also of a farm in Iowa. In political preferences John Henry was formerly a Whig, and upon the organization of the party became identified with the principles of the Republican platform, and filled the office of a school director in the township for many years. He was a highly respected citizen, and in religion an active member of the United Presbyterian Church, in which he filled the office of trustee. On July 11, 1887, he passed away, and was laid to rest in Washington cemetery; his wife, Mrs. Jane N. Henry, died February 21, 1892, and was laid to rest beside him.

Lewis A. Henry was reared in South Strabane township, this county, and acquired his early education in the common schools. In the year 1880, he entered Duff's Business College, Pittsburgh, Penn., from which he graduated the same year. He then began to manage the farm, and on February 14, 1889, was married to Mary, daughter of James McClure, a resident of Chartiers township,

Washington county. They came immediately to the home place where they have since resided. Mr. Henry and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek, and in political life he is an enthusiastic Republican.

LOUIS DUVALL, one of the most substantial farmers of Hopewell township, was the youngest son of Louis, who was a son of Alexander and Abigail Duvall. Alexander Duvall came from France to America at an early day, and first located east of the mountains, afterward removing to Fayette county, Penn., near the Monongahela river, where the remainder of his days were passed.

Louis Duvall received a common-school education, and after his marriage, to Hannah McAdams, removed to Still Water, Ohio, then almost an unbroken wilderness. They were in constant dread of the Indians, and when her husband was obliged to leave home to go to mill the wife would hide herself and children until his return. Mr. Duvall contracted malaria while in Ohio, and returned to Washington county to regain his health. No house being ready for them on their return, they lived for a time in a barn, which was remodeled and fitted up for the purpose. But though living to a goodly age, Mr. Duvall never regained his health, and upon the devoted wife and mother fell the heavy weight of providing and caring for the needs of the family. She often found it necessary to take her infant to the field, leaving it in a corner of the fence while she hoed corn. By their united efforts, in spite of the husband's poor health, they were successful and accumulated considerable property. Of the nine children born to them, only three are now living, viz.: Hannah (widow of Elias Garrett, of West Bethlehem township), Abigail (wife of Jacob Deems, now residing in West Pike Run township, this county) and Louis. Mary, Eliza, Jane, Maria, Isabel and John are deceased. The father and mother were members of the Society of Friends, being regular attendants at the services, though the meeting house was five miles distant.

Louis Duvall was born in 1830, in East Pike Run township, this county, and was reared on the home farm. Owing to the feeble health of his father the bulk of the farm work fell upon the boys as soon as they were old enough to be of use. In the summer time he could not attend school, and through the winter, school lasted but three months. All farm work was done by hand in those days. Grain was cut with sickles or cradles, as there were no threshing machines; it was then beaten out with flails or trampled out with horses, being afterward cleaned in a fanning-mill. The winter season was the time for doing such work, and as the process was long and tedious, the opportunities for getting an education were very limited. The schools of that time were very primitive affairs compared with those of to-day, and speaking of them Mr. Duvall said: "I wonder that we got any education. If the children of to-day could see with what difficulties we had to contend, they would better appreciate the advantages of the present school system. The school-house I attended was as good as the times afforded. It was built of hewn logs, and had windows of four small panes each. The seats were slabs, into which wooden pegs were driven for legs. There were no backs or desks. Around the sides of the room holes were bored into which long wooden pins were driven. On these pins boards were fastened, forming a writing-desk. The ceiling was low and liberally festooned with cobwebs. No maps or charts were used to help the youngsters with their lessons. Into a room of this kind fifty or sixty pupils were crowded. The teachers were men of muscle as well as brains, and believed in the efficacy of the rod." Mr. Duvall attended school whenever possible until he was sixteen or eighteen years of age, then turned his attention entirely to farming, working his father's place.

In 1853 he was married to Mary Deems, a native of Clarksville, Greene Co., Penn., daughter of John and Mary (Reynolds) Deems, the former being a native of Washington county, and the latter born in Fayette county, Penn. To Mr. and Mrs. Duvall have been born eleven children, as follows: John R., Hannah M., Annie M., San Jacinto, William L., Mary Olive, Ulysses G. and Schuyler C. (twins), Lurilla (deceased), W. Claud and Dot Dell. They continued to reside in East Pike Run township until 1879, when Mr. Duvall purchased a farm of 163 acres in Hopewell township, where he has been engaged in farming and wool growing, being ably assisted by his sons, none of whom are married. Two of the daughters are married: Hannah (to John Barnes, residing in Claysville, this county) and San Jacinto (married to Albert Rush, living in Hopewell township, this county). Mr. Duvall has endeavored to give each of his children as good an education as possible. His twin sons are attending college at Ada, Ohio. In politics he is a Republican, and in religion he and his wife are members of Buffalo Presbyterian Church.

ROBERT B. FRYE, a prominent merchant of Finleyville, is a son of West Frye, whose father, Luke Frye, was of German descent, and a native of Washington county, living near the Horseshoe church. Luke Frye was married to Miss West, a daughter of Samuel West, of Washington county, and to this union were born three children, namely: West (whose sketch follows), Hester (wife of Elgy Van Voorhes), and Violet (Mrs. James Jennings).

West Frye was born in 1818, near the Horseshoe church, Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn. He was reared to farm life, and in early days distilled whisky in connection with his agricultural duties. In 1840 he was married to Miss Christina Van Voorhes, a daughter of Daniel Van Voorhes, of Fallowfield township, Washington county. She was born in 1821, and reared on the farm, receiving her education at the high school and seminary of Allegheny, Penn. After they were married the young couple located on the old homestead near Horseshoe church, where they remained several years. They afterward moved to Monongahela, where he engaged in distilling, but in 1857 moved to Union township, this county, where he followed farming and hotel keeping. At that time the town of Finleyville was yet in its infancy, and has since been enlarged so much that it now covers a portion of the Frye farm. Mr. Frye was instrumental in building up the town, having erected several dwellings and business blocks. In politics he was a valued member of the Republican party. The following children were born to this couple, viz.: Robert B. (whose name opens this sketch); Sarah A. (who was married to J. H. Gaston, and is engaged in the millinery and notion business); Mary H. (who was married to L. N. Morrison); Martha E. (Mrs. Boggs, of Des Moines, Iowa), and Ella C. (living at home).

Robert B. Frye was born in 1841, on the old farm at Horseshoe church, this county, and assisted his father in the general agricultural duties. He graduated from the Iron City College, Pittsburgh, and in 1862 joined the Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry. He served in the army of the Potomac until the siege of Petersburg, when his regiment joined General Sheridan's forces, and entered the Shenandoah Valley. September 28, 1862, Robert Frye was left on the field for dead, at Rock Fish Gap, near Waynesborough. He was captured by the enemy, and (as soon as his wounds would permit) taken to Libby Prison November 10, 1864, where he remained until February 22, 1865. He was then paroled and first taken to Annapolis, thence to Philadelphia, and put in the Mower general hospital, from there receiving his discharge June 17, 1865. After the war he came home and went West in 1866, but, returning to Washington county in 1870, was married to Catherine B., a daughter of Michael Teeple. The wedding ceremony took place on the anniversary of the day that he was wounded on the battle field, September 28, 1870. The young couple first located in Melrose, Iowa, and then lived in Kansas and Colorado, and different parts of the West. In 1891 they returned to Finleyville, Washington county, to help care for his aged mother. Mr. and Mrs. Frye are the parents of three children: Ella M., Jennie D. and Robert M. He was one of the first to support the Republican party, but has recently espoused the cause of the Peoples' party, and was the nominee of same, for representative from Washington county, in the campaign of 1892.

MRS. VIOLET G. HAPPER. John A. Happer (deceased) was a cultured citizen, and a representative of one of the oldest families of Union township, his grandfather, John Happer, having settled upon the Happer homestead in Union township in 1787. This ancestor was a native of Ireland, from which country he and his wife, Martha (Patton), emigrated in 1778, and on May 19, 1787, received a patent for 300 acres in Union township. He was a weaver by trade, but after arriving in America devoted his life to agricultural pursuits. His children were Ann (Mrs. John Steele), Andrew, Baptist (who always resided on the old homestead), Andrew (who lived in Ohio), John, Samuel and Jane, none of whom are yet living.

Baptist Happer, son of John and Martha, was born July 15, 1787, on the home farm in Union township, Washington county. On September 27, 1808, he was united in marriage with Miss Ann Arrell, and remained on the homestead all his life. He was a prosperous agriculturist, and an extensive stock dealer. Politically he was a supporter of the principles embodied in the Whig party. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Happer: Sarah (deceased wife of Rev. Thomas Gault, who resided in the Western States); John P. (deceased); Samuel (deceased), who went West; John A. (deceased); Andrew P. (still living), for forty years a missionary in China, whither he was sent by the Presbyterian Board of Missions; James B., a resident of Illinois; and Margaret J., who resides in the West.

John A. Happer was born October 1, 1816, on the ancestral acres in Union township, Washington county. He attended Jefferson College, and became a well-educated, intellectual and prominent citizen, serving in the State Legislature in 1862-63. In 1838 he was married to Violet Gardener, who was born in 1818, on a farm in Allegheny county, Penn., daughter of John Gardener, a native of Chester county, Penn. The young couple continued to reside on the homestead, which contains 220 acres of fine land, and in connection with general farming, Mr. Happer made a specialty of stock raising. He was the first to bring Berkshire hogs into the neighborhood, and among the first to introduce Durham cattle in Union township. In political opinion he was a Republican, and took a special interest in educational matters, having served for many years as a member of the school board. In religion he was a member and elder of the Mingo Presbyterian Church. He died November 11, 1890, leaving a widow and the following children: Andrew G. (a resident of Washington, Penn.), Maggie A. (wife of J. J. Beacon, L.L. D.), Isabella (married to Dr. Cheeseman), James B. (deceased), Frank A. (living in Washington, D. C., is married to Emma Foster), Oliver P. (deceased), Elizabeth, Wilmer, and Ella Blanche (deceased).

HELON B. LEYDA was born July 27, 1834, in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a son of George and Luzanna (New Kirk) Leyda, and grandson of Benjamin and Catherine (Stoody) Leyda. The latter couple were natives of Pennsylvania, and settled in Washington county, Penn., where they reared a family of eleven children.

George Leyda was born in 1796, and reared on the farm, receiving a limited literary training in the subscription schools. In 1823 he embarked on the matrimonial sea in company with Luzanna New Kirk, who was born in 1803. He then purchased a large tract of land, and followed farming and stock raising extensively in Washington county the remainder of his life. Politically he voted the Republican ticket, and in church connection he and his wife were members of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church. He died in 1864, his wife in 1868, leaving the following family of children: Catherine (wife of L. V. Riddle, a farmer of Somerset township), Rhoda (married to Noah Myers, a resident of Toronto, Ohio), Julia (widow of David Clark, living in Nottingham township), Mary (widow of Daniel Teeters, of this county), Jane (wife of William Williams, a farmer of this county), James H. (a practicing physician of Allegheny, Penn.), Isaac N. (practicing medicine with his brother James), Almond R. (a real estate dealer of Beaver Falls, Beaver Co., Penn.) and Helon B.

Helon B. Leyda remained on the home farm during his boyhood, and attended school. On March 23, 1882, he was married to Mary, daughter of John and Julia A. (Grable) McCormick. Mr. Leyda owns 108 acres of well-cultivated land. In politics he is a Republican, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JOHAN L. PROUDFIT. He who begins at the lowest round of the ladder, and, with his eyes fixed on the goal, overcomes each obstacle, rising step by step until that goal is won, is the man to whom all honor is due. Of such a character is the gentleman of whom we write. He is a worthy representative of an old and well-known pioneer family.

David Proudfit, grandfather of subject, was a native of Scotland, and coming to America, located in York county, Penn., where a son, John, was born to him, January 28, 1775. In 1802 this John Proudfit came to Washington county, Penn., locating in Hanover township. On April 9, 1809, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Lyle, a native of Cross Creek (then Hopewell) township, born March 24, 1793, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Hays) Lyle. Some time after their marriage John and Elizabeth (Lyle) Proudfit returned to York county, as the father of John was growing old and feeble, and needed the care of his children. The young people remained on the home farm until the death of the father, which event occurred in 1826. John and his family then again moved to Washington county, settling one mile west of Burgettstown, where he passed the remainder of his life. The trips across the mountains were fraught with much danger and inconvenience. On one occasion Mr. and Mrs. Proudfit rode 300 miles on horseback to make a visit to relatives in York county, the wife carrying an infant in her arms, and many hardships were endured on the journey. The following children were born to these pioneers: David, born August 13, 1810, died September 19, 1813; John L. (deceased), born September 3, 1812; James K., born April 21, 1815, died February 25, 1816; Eliza J. (Mrs. Arthur Campbell, of Smith township), born January 2, 1817, died December 21, 1892; Agnes, born June 17, 1819, died August 15, 1824; Robert F., born December 23, 1821, died in Smith township, in September, 1886; Cinderella (wife of Jacob Proudfit, a native of Ashland county, Ohio), born September 16, 1824; William, born May 10, 1828; Andrew J., born March 20, 1831; and Eleanor (Mrs. Thomas Shipley, of Hanover township, this county), born August 29, 1833, now in Hanover township.

John L. Proudfit was born in Hanover township, Washington county, and when but eight months old was taken by his parents to York county, Penn., where he received his early education. When sixteen years of age he returned with his parents to Smith township, Washington county, and entered the arena of agricultural pursuits. When a young man he was married to Eleanor Campbell, who bore him four children, as follows: Elizabeth (Mrs. William A. P. Linn), Jennie (wife of Dr. W. P. Taylor), Martha E. (deceased wife of John M. Moore) and Amanda, deceased. On December 24, 1867, Mr. Proudfit married, for his second wife, Mrs. Nancy Byers, widow of Alexander Byers, and daughter of Alexander Duncan, who was born November 14, 1792, in Smith township, where his whole life was passed. Mr. Duncan was first married to Matilda Crothers, a native of this county, who bore him two children, James C., and Matilda E. (wife of Samuel MacFarland, but now deceased). The mother of these children dying, for his second wife Mr. Duncan married Jane Knox White, daughter of Thomas White. They settled near Florence, Penn., and three children were born to their union, of whom the following is a brief record: Nancy D. was married to J. L. Proudfit, as above stated; Jane was the wife of David Van Eman, and became the mother of three children: Alexander, William W. and Jennie White; John W. (deceased) was married to Harriet Calley, who bore him the following children: George A. (deceased), Byers D., Addie J., Levi H., John C., James M., Hattie and Robert M. Mr. Duncan was first a Whig, afterward a Republican in politics, and in religion a member and trustee of the Presbyterian Church at Florence.

J. L. Rouapt

John L. and Nancy Proudfit continued to reside at Burgettstown, where he dealt extensively in stock, giving special attention to sheep raising. When the Burgettstown National Bank was organized, he was elected president of that corporation, at first of the Savings Bank connected with it, filling that office until his death, which occurred in 1882, when he was seventy years of age. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a Presbyterian, and an elder in that Church, at the time of his death a member of the U. P. Church in Burgettstown. Mrs. Proudfit is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Since the death of her husband she has continued to reside at the old home, having a niece living with her.

WILLIAM Mc. McCULLOUGH, the only son of William, and a grandson of Isaac and Margaret McCullough, was born January 13, 1810, in Somerset township, this county. The grandparents emigrated from Ireland in an early day, and made their permanent home in Washington county, Pennsylvania.

William McCullough (son of Isaac) was born in 1813 on the home place in Somerset township, this county, and after his school days were over became a merchant in Vanceville, same county. He was married January 10, 1839, to Miss Elizabeth Hassock, also a native of the county. He died July 5, 1840, leaving his infant son to the care of the widowed mother, who lived until 1884, when she too crossed "over the dark river."

William Mc. McCullough was reared to agricultural pursuits, and received a district school education in the schools of Somerset township. He resides on the old homestead, which consists of 155 acres of good land. The old place has flourished well under his care, for he has acquired an enviable reputation as a prosperous and practical farmer, and makes a study of his chosen calling; he is also actively identified with all worthy enterprises for the public good. He usually casts his ballot with the Republican party, but, being liberal in his views, votes for the men he considers most competent for township and county offices, regardless of their party preferences. Mr. McCullough has filled the position of county auditor for several terms of office, and has been school director for the last two years. He is a member of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church. Mr. McCullough is unmarried.

WILLIAM B. McKENNAN, an influential citizen of Washington, was born in Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn., March 4, 1829. His grandfather, Capt. William McKennan (son of the Rev. William McKennan, a Presbyterian minister of New Castle, Del.), was born in 1758. He was married to Elizabeth, daughter of John Thompson, and a niece of Gov. Thomas McKean. Mr. McKennan entered the war of the Revolution, served as captain of a company, and was wounded in the engagement at Brandywine. In 1798 he came to West Virginia, thence moving, in 1800, to Washington county, Penn., and, being appointed prothonotary, in 1801 located in Washington borough. He was a trustee of Washington Academy and of Washington College. He died in January, 1810, leaving a widow and the following named children: William, John T., Thomas M. T., David, James W. and Ann E.

John T. McKennan was born in Washington, this county, and there passed his early life. He received a good education, and graduated at Washington College, afterward engaging in the tanning business at Brownsville, Penn. He was married to Harriet Bowman, who was born June 16, 1795, at Brownsville, and she bore him children as follows: Isabella L., born July 27, 1818, died December 18, 1841, at Brownsville; Elizabeth, yet living; Mary S., born August 6, 1823, died July 29, 1866, at Brownsville; Jacob, yet living; Annie B., born September 23, 1827, died March 7, 1830, at Brownsville; and William B., subject of sketch. John T. McKennan acted as cashier of the National Bank at Brownsville for some time. He was a Whig, and a member of and elder in the Presbyterian Church for many years. There is a remarkable coincidence in his and his brother's (Thomas M. T.) deaths, taking place in the same house, far removed from their homes. In September, 1830, while on business for the Bank of Brownsville, John T. McKennan was taken sick, and died on the 18th of that month at the house of his sister-in-law, Mrs. Bell, in Reading, Penn. In July, 1852, his brother, Thomas M. T., while in the East on business connected with the Hempfield (now the Baltimore & Ohio) Railroad, was taken sick and died at the same house of the same sister-in-law. John T. was buried in the heart of the city of Reading, and an Episcopal church was built over his grave. There the body remained until the Reading cemetery was established, when the remains were taken to the cemetery, only a few years since. Mrs. Harriet (Bowman) McKennan, his wife, was called from earth March 8, 1832, at Brownsville, Penn.

William B. McKennan, son of John T. and Harriet (Bowman) McKennan, passed his early youth at Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn., and received his education at Kenyon, afterward attending Washington and Jefferson College. On September 4, 1860, he was united in marriage with Adeline, daughter of Benjamin Ramsey. The young couple settled in Franklin township, Washington county, and the following children were born to their union: John T., Martha R. (wife of J. H. Moore), Benjamin R., Thomas R. and Mary S. Mr. McKennan has always resided on the same place, and is universally esteemed by his neighbors. In political opinion he is a Republican, and has served three terms as director of the county home. In religious faith, he is a member of the Episcopal Church of Washington borough.

HARVEY LINDLEY. In recording the names of the prominent citizens of Washington county, the list would be incomplete were that of Harvey Lindley omitted.

He comes of an old New Jersey family, from which State his grandfather, Levi Lindley, came to this county (in the year 1788), making the journey on horseback, finally arriving in Morris township, bringing his family later and settling where the village of Lindley's Mills now is. Here, in the woods, he erected his log cabin, and underwent many hardships and vicissitudes of which the present generation know but little. About the same time his two brothers, Demas and Caleb, came to this country, each of whom sent a son back to Princeton College, where they graduated and both became Presbyterian ministers.

The three brothers were truly the pioneer settlers, and gave character as energetic, Christian men to the community in which they lived. They were the first to build a fort for protection against Indian invasions. Lindley's Fort, as it was known, was built on the farm of Demas Lindley, now owned by Isaac Connett, and was located just west of the present brick dwelling. They were, also, the prime movers in organizing and establishing Upper and Lower Ten Mile Presbyterian Churches. Demas erected and ran the first gristmill in Morris township. He kept the first postoffice in the township, and it was the only office at that early date between Washington and Waynesburg. The mail was carried and delivered once a week on horseback. One by one the giant trees yielded to the pioneer's axe, and ere long the wild animals were driven back by the march of civilization. In most respects the country was comparatively safe, save when marauding bands of Indians made depredatory raids on the humble homes of the white man. While a resident of New Jersey, Mr. Lindley was married to a lady of that State, who bore him the following named children: Zabby, William, Benjamin and Timothy.

Benjamin Lindley, son of Levi, and father of Harvey, was born in New Jersey, July 28, 1779, and was eight years old when he came with his parents to Washington county. On May 27, 1800, he married a Miss Logan, who bore him two children: Experience, born February 8, 1802, and Margaret, born September 15, 1803. The mother of these children dying, Mr. Lindley married for his second wife, Jerusha Cooper, who was born January 13, 1782, a daughter of Zebulon Cooper, and by this union there were the following named children: Zebulon, born August 11, 1808; Mary, born May 9, 1810; Sarah, born July 5, 1812; Cephas, born March 28, 1816; Demas, born August 9, 1818; Anna, born June 28, 1823, and Harvey, born April 15, 1826. After marriage Mr. Lindley remained a short time in Morris township, and then purchased the farm now occupied by Harvey Lindley, and which was materially improved by him and his descendants. After a long life of usefulness Benjamin Lindley passed from earth in September, 1869, in his ninety-first year, leaving a record that all may well emulate, his second wife having preceded him to the "other shore." He was one of the organizers of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Bethel, in which he was an elder for many years, and in politics he was an Old-time Whig. He was five feet eight inches high, and weighed 165 pounds.

Harvey Lindley, whose name opens this memoir, is a native of Franklin township, born on the old home place where his entire life has been passed. His boyhood and youth were occupied in assisting in the hard work of the farm, year in and year out, with the occasional relief of a few weeks attendance at the subscription schools in mid-winter. On November 11, 1847, he was united in marriage with Harriet N., daughter of Dr. Henry Blachly, of Morris township, and the children born to this union were: Henry B., born February 2, 1849, married to Miss Sarah M., daughter of Dryden Vankirk, of Franklin township, died in his thirty-second year. Anna E., born March 19, 1853, married to Samuel W., son of Oliver Cozad, of Franklin township; they have one child, Orville O. Oscar F., born December 15, 1855, married to Miss Jennie, daughter of David Craft, of Morris township, and living on a farm in Barber county, Kans.; they have five children, Willis E., David H., Mary E., Harriet T. and Lutella. Howard A., born

June 20, 1863, married to Miss Adeline, daughter of David Clark, of Buffalo township; they have three children, Laura M., Henry W. and Herbert S. Abraham Lincoln, born April 7, 1865, married to Miss Mary L., daughter of Stephen Post, Franklin township. Howard A. and A. L. are living at the home place, and caring for the farm which contains 300 acres prime land. The mother of this family was called from earth July 22, 1891, in her sixty-fourth year, and was buried in Prosperity cemetery. She was a noble, Christian woman, and her influence for good will long be felt among the numerous friends she left to mourn her departure from their midst. Both she and Mr. Lindley were members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Bethel for many years, and he was an elder in the same for over thirty years. In politics he was originally an Old-time Whig, and since the organization of the party, has been a staunch Republican; in school matters he has always taken a zealous interest, and was a director for many years. For several years Mr. Lindley has been in poor health.

LAURENCE NOBLE is one of the young business men of Claysville, enjoying and deserving the esteem of the community. He was born December 5, 1865, in Jacksonville, Greene Co., Penn., a son of R. L. Noble, who was born in Claysville, Penn., in 1823, and resided there till he was twenty-eight years of age. In 1845 R. L. Noble was married to Harriet Hoskinson, of Greene county, and in 1852 they moved from Claysville to Jacksonville, Greene Co., Penn.

Our subject received his education in the Jacksonville schools, and having acquired a good business training, he began life for himself at an early age, working at various occupations. In 1883 he accepted a clerkship in Claysville, in the furniture and undertaking establishment of Isaac Teal. In 1886 he bought out his employer, and in company with George M. Gray continued the business until February, 1891, when Mr. Gray was succeeded in the business by Y. M. Enlow. In 1889 Mr. Noble bought an interest in the hardware firm now known as James H. Noble & Co., and is at the present time a member of the firms of Enlow & Noble and James H. Noble & Co. Although a young man, Mr. Noble has achieved an enviable success, and has a good reputation as a business man. Politically he is a Republican.

THOMAS J. McCLELLAND. This gentleman was a worthy representative of the Scottish patriots whose blood flowed in his veins. Many years ago, during the rebellion in Scotland, one William McClelland left his native heath and came to Ireland. There his life was passed in agricultural pursuits, and three children were born to him, namely: Hans, James and William.

Hans McClelland was born in 1756, in Ireland, and there passed his boyhood. When a young man he emigrated to America, locating on a farm two and one-half miles from Canon-burg, Washington Co., Penn., where he was engaged in distilling and general farming. He was married to Catherine Carson, a native of Ireland, who bore him the following children: William, James, Ebenezer, John, Ann, Nancy and Sarah, all of whom lived to be over fifty years of age. The father died in 1818.

Ebenezer McClelland was born in 1772, in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, and became one of the most extensive wool buyers in Washington and neighboring counties, his annual purchase of wool sometimes amounting to 1,300,000 pounds; and he was also one of the most extensive breeders of fine-wooled sheep in Washington county. In 1823 he was married to Esther, daughter of John Campbell, of Cecil township, this county. Her father was born in Scotland, and coming to Washington county in pioneer times, was often obliged to flee from the Indians. Her grandfather Campbell was killed May 26, 1782, at Crawford's defeat. To the union of Ebenezer and Esther (Campbell) McClelland children were born as follows: J. C., Sarah J., Thomas J., William, Ebenezer, James and Catherine. The three yet living are James, Ebenezer and J. C.

Thomas J. McClelland was born May 21, 1828, on the old home farm in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn. He was four years of age when the family moved to North Strabane township, where his education was received. He also attended Jefferson College, and assisted his father in business. On December 18, 1851, he was married to Mary E., daughter of Andrew Borland, who emigrated from County Antrim, Ireland, and settled on Brushrun, Peters township, this county. He was married to Elizabeth McClure, of South Strabane township, and resided on the old place until 1856, when he moved to Clokey, same county, where he died, leaving the following children: Alexander, Mary E. (widow of Thomas J. McClelland), Rebecca, Margaret A., Ann, Elizabeth, Sarah, Andrew, Catherine, Rachel, Martha and James, of whom Rebecca, Catherine, Rachel and Martha are deceased. Mary E. was born July 2, 1827, on Brushrun, Peters township, this county, where her girlhood was passed.

To the union of Thomas J. and Mary E. (Borland) McClelland, five children were born, viz.: Catherine M., Elizabeth (wife of Thomas Hill, Union township), Ebenezer E., living on the home farm (married to Georgia M., daughter of Hugh Flannigan, of Union township, has two children: Ethel B. and Helen J.), Thomas J. and an infant daughter. The father died March 13, 1884, in his fifty-sixth year. He was a stanch member of the Democratic party, and served as school director for fifteen years, as well as in various other capacities. The home place contains 188 acres of very fine land, and part of the rich coal vein underlying the farm has been sold for $11,500.

FREDERICK W. COOPER. Among the successful and popular citizens of Nottingham township, none have been more prominently identified with the interests of the community than the Cooper family. Frederic Cooper, grandfather of the present generation, was an active business man, conducting a farm, distillery, carding-mill and gristmill, in which he was assisted by his sons Samuel F. and Frederick K. Cooper.

Samuel F. Cooper was born May 2, 1807, in Nottingham township, and received a good education at the schools of Waynesburgh, and assisted with the farm work, and other interests with which his father was identified. In 1831 he was married to Sarah Van Voorhis, who was born in 1814. Her father, Daniel Van Voorhis, was a prominent man, owning a large distillery and oil mill, and dealing extensively in stock. Five children were born to this marriage, namely: John P., Frederick W., Mary J., Clara E. and Van. Of this family, the latter three are deceased, and John P. moved to Tennessee in 1869, where he followed farming. The father was a Democrat, and filled almost every office in Nottingham township. He possessed a remarkable memory, and was a well-educated man, enjoying the respect and confidence of all who knew him. He was extensively engaged in the fruit growing business. He died May 3, 1875, his widow May 19, 1892.

Frederick W. Cooper was born March 31, 1837, in Nottingham township, this county, and passed his early boyhood on the home place. On January 4, 1860, he married Miss Maria L. Stewart, of Allegheny county, Penn., who bore him two children, both deceased in early infancy. The mother died April 20, 1864, and for his second choice Mr. Cooper married October 20, 1870, Mary W., daughter of John Manown. They have four children, namely: Frank A., Samuel F., Clara G. and Ella F., all living at home.

Mr. Cooper has been an extensive traveler. He left home when a young man, and herded cattle six months for his uncle Van Vanvoorhis, in Illinois, in 1854; then returned home, and in the autumn of 1856 went to Missouri and Kansas, arriving in the latter State just at the close of the Kansas troubles. He then traveled throughout the West. In 1860 he and his wife moved to a tract of land in Iowa which his father had entered of the Government, remaining there three years, improving the land, when, his wife's health failing, they returned to her home in Pennsylvania, where she died. He stayed at home the following summer, and in 1865 shipped a carload of horses to Illinois, sold his horses, organized a company with Mr. V. B. Ward, of Richland, Keokuk Co., Iowa, and on April 13, 1865, they started for California, in wagons, arriving at Salt Lake City, Utah, on the 4th of July following. They remained there one year, thence going to northern Montana, where they passed a year in the mines. He then entered the commissary and quartermaster's office as clerk in Montana, and was employed there six months under James L. Fisk, afterward riding his horse 500 miles from Helena, Mont., to Walla Walla, on the Columbia river, thence going to San Francisco, Cal., where he sold books three months for H. H. Bancroft, finally returning to his present home in Nottingham township. He is now proprietor of 160 acres, known as the "Nottingham stock farm," near Venetia post-office. The farm is principally pasture land, and he makes a specialty of raising fine Jersey cattle, also a good grade of roadsters. Mr. Cooper in his political affiliations is a Democrat.

HUGHES, JAMES M., WORKMAN, JR., SAMUEL L. and THOMAS McK., prominent citizens of Washington, are sons of S. L. and Susan (Workman) Hughes.

Barnabas Hughes was a native of Ireland, came to America in 1756, settling in what is now the State of New Jersey. He had two sons, William and John. John Hughes came to Carlisle in 1770, and after a few years entered the Continental army under Capt. Hendricks. The company in which he was placed was formed with eight other companies into a battalion of riflemen in July, 1775, and placed in command of Col. William Thompson. They encamped at Cambridge, August 13, 1775, and in the month of September Capt. Hendricks' company, with others, left for Canada under command of Col. Arnold, and took part in the attack upon Quebec. After this expedition Mr. Hughes was promoted from the ranks to a captaincy, and he remained with the army during the remainder of the war, being present at the battles of Princeton, Brandywine, Germantown and Monmouth. At the conclusion of the struggle he married, in 1786, Sarah Wiley, and came to Washington county, Penn., with Timothy Ryan. They purchased large tracts of land on Fish creek (now in Greene county), patented to them in August, 1786; Mr. Hughes purchased Ryan's interest same year. During the year 1793 Mr. Hughes bought land on north branch of Ten-Mile creek, where he kept a store for about nine years, and in 1802 he removed to the town of Washington, where he continued in the store business. After several years he returned to his land or farm in Amwell township, where he died September 18, 1815, leaving six children: Mary Ann, James, Samuel, Thomas, John and Isabelle. Of these, James married Mary, daughter of Gen. Abner Lacock, and at their decease they left five children: Sarah, Susan, Margaret, Samuel L. and Ann Hughes. In March, 1837, Samuel L. Hughes married Susan Workman. He was a successful farmer, and served as justice of the peace for seven terms, in Amwell township. He died in November, 1880, his widow in May, 1885, leaving nine children, viz.: Ann F., Mary V., James M., Workman, Jr., John W., Elizabeth E., Samuel L., Susan R. and Thomas McK., of whom Ann F. Hughes was married in 1861 to Hiram Vankirk, and they have two children: James H. and Francis J. Vankirk.

JAMES M. HUGHES, eldest son of S. L. and Susan W. Hughes, at the age of eighteen years enlisted in the One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment P. V. I., for three years, or during the war. He participated in all the battles and skirmishes of his regiment from Chancellorsville to Appomattox, forty-three engagements in all. In 1867 he married Sarah E. Bane, and their family consists of two sons: Blanchard G. and Haldain B. Hughes, who were graduated from Washington and Jefferson College in classes of '91 and '92 respectively. They each selected the law as a profession. Blanchard is a student at present in the Buffalo Law School, Buffalo, N. Y.; Haldain is registered with Messrs. Taylor & McIlvaine, Washington, Penn.

WORKMAN HUGHES, JR., second son of S. L. and Susan W. Hughes, was elected to the office of recorder of deeds in November, 1878, and served six years, being the only recorder elected to that office for more than one term since 1842. During his term of office he, with the assistance of his brothers, James M., S. L. and T. McK. Hughes, made a complete index to the record of the office. When his term of office expired, January 1, 1885, he entered into the real estate and insurance business. On October 31, 1889, he married Hannah B. Winggett, and they have two children: Susan W. and Howard W. Hughes.

John W. Hughes, third son of S. L. and Susan W. Hughes, became a master machinist. He married, July 16, 1877, Martha S. Good, of Illinois; they now reside in New York City. They had a daughter, Susan W., who died of diphtheria at Fair Haven, Vt., at the age of eight years.

SAMUEL L. HUGHES, fourth son of S. L. and Susan W. Hughes, was married November 11, 1883, to Minnie G. Spriggs, and they had three children: Margaretta, Susan W. and Thomas McKennan

Hughes, of whom Margaretta died of diphtheria July 3, 1890. Mr. Hughes has been engaged in the real estate and life insurance business, in connection with his brother Workman Hughes, Jr., since January 1, 1885.

THOMAS McK. HUGHES, fifth and youngest son of S. L. and Susan W. Hughes, studied law with the former firm of McCracken & McIlvaine (the latter being the judge of courts of this county), and was admitted to practice in the several courts of the county at the June term, 1880. At the age of twenty-three, and since 1881, he has applied himself to his profession, and is now enjoying a large and substantial practice.

Mary V., Elizabeth E., Susan R. and Thomas McK. Hughes live on West Chestnut street, Washington, Pennsylvania.

THOMAS G. HAMILTON is one of the successful agriculturists of Nottingham township, of which he is a native. His father, James R. Hamilton, was born, in 1818, in Peters township, Washington county, and received a classical education. During his earlier years he followed the profession of school teaching, and, being solely dependent upon his daily earnings for a livelihood, was obliged to practice strict economy.

In 1846 James R. Hamilton was married to Miss Patience Morrison, a native of this county, and, having managed to save a small amount of his salary, the young man bought a little farm in Nottingham township, this county, upon which he and his bride began their wedded life. They were poor in worldly goods, but happy and rich in the possession of health and love. Dame Fortune soon began to smile upon the brave young couple who met her frowns with such cheery faces, and as years passed on children came to brighten the little home, as follows: Patience B. (wife of James H. Barkley), William H. L., Charles James Reed, John T. G., Joseph G. P., Elizabeth Ann, Margaret Elnora and Mary Jane. Of these the three latter are deceased. At the time of his death James R. Hamilton owned 300 acres of land.

Thomas G. Hamilton was born May 30, 1861, in Nottingham township, Washington county, and there passed his boyhood. On January 10, 1883, he made choice of a life companion in the person of Anna C., daughter of Benjamin Crawford, a very prominent farmer of this county. Four children have been born to this marriage, namely: John Reed, R. Lloyd, Patience May and Thomas Gleen. Mr. Hamilton owns eighty-two acres of the old homestead, and devotes much of his time to stock raising, making a specialty of sheep, in connection with general farming.

R W. GREGG is descended from a family who were among the first settlers in East Pike Run township, this county. Many years ago three brothers, Henry, William and John Gregg, emigrated from the Emerald Isle, and made a permanent settlement in East Pike Run township. Henry took out a patent for 349 acres of land known as the "Burning Mine," which is now owned by one Mr. Duvall. John Gregg was twice married, and William, the second brother, was the grandfather of R. W. Gregg. William Gregg was married to Ruth Jackman, a native of Ireland, and they settled on the farm in East Pike Run township, where five children were born, as follows: Henry (married to Jane Dowler), John (married to Nancy Gregg), Robert (married to Ann Robinson), Andrew and Margaret (Mrs. Crow).

Andrew Gregg was born in March, 1808, in East Pike Run township, grew to manhood on the homestead, and was married to Mary Ann Huggins, who was born in 1812 in what is now Allen township, Washington county. Of the children born to this union, six are yet living, namely: Lucy Ann, wife of V. C. Jones, of Fallowfield township; Ruth Ann, married to William Sphar, of Allen township; A. J., living in East Pike Run township; R. W. (whose name opens this sketch); Sarah Jane, wife of Thomas F. Frye, of Chase county, Kans., and J. H., living in Allen township. The father was actively identified with the interests of the Republican party. He died on the old farm in 1872; his widow is yet living on the place.

R. W. Gregg was born in 1848 on the home farm in East Pike Run township, and attended the common schools of the neighborhood. In 1881 he was united in marriage with Emeline Beadle, a native of Fallowfield township, a daughter of Jacob and Mary (Wallace) Beadle, who were born in eastern Pennsylvania, and came to Fallowfield township in an early day; her father died in 1887, her mother in 1872. By this union was born to Mr. Gregg one son, Delbert, who lived about three months and then died. The mother passed away October 17, 1881, and Mr. Gregg afterward married Lizzie M. Jobes, of Allen township, Washington county, a daughter of William Jobes, whose father, John Jobes, was an early resident of the Monongahela Valley. By this marriage there were two sons: Albert K. and William Andrew. After his first marriage R. W. Gregg settled in Allen township, on the forty-six acres of well-cultivated land which is now his home. He votes the Republican ticket, and in religious faith he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Mt. Tabor. Mrs. Lizzie M. Gregg died September 1, 1892.

R THOMPSON, a native of Chartiers township, is a son of Andrew Thompson, who was born February 7, 1793, also in Chartiers township, and passed his early life on the home farm, receiving a limited education at the subscription schools. On July 6, 1827, he married Miss Elizabeth Bell, who was born May 23, 1797, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county.

Andrew Thompson passed his married life on the farm in Chartiers township now occupied by our subject, and four children were born to him: Mary Ann (deceased April 22, 1870); R. R.; Elizabeth M. (wife of James McBurney, of Hickory, Mt. Pleasant), and Jane (married to Mark Cowden, farmer, of Mt. Pleasant township). Andrew Thompson was a farmer, and in politics a staunch Whig. In church connection he was formerly a Seceder, afterward uniting with the Hickory U. P. Church, of which he remained a member until his death, that event occurring January 23, 1860. Mrs. Thompson was laid to rest March 10, 1871.

R. R. Thompson was born October 6, 1830, on the home farm in Chartiers township, this county, and was educated at the subscription and public schools of the vicinity. On October 1, 1871, he was united in marriage with Jane McBurney, a native of Mt. Pleasant township, this county, a daughter of John (2) and granddaughter of John (1) McBurney. John McBurney (the grandfather) was born in 1764 in County Down, Ireland, and in 1783 emigrated to America, locating in Washington county, Penn. In 1798 he was married to Sarah Hunter, a native of Chambersburgh, Penn. Her grandfather was married in 1790, and then settled in Robinson township, Washington county, his son and grandchild Sarah (then a child of ten years) also making their home in this county. The grandfather died September 2, 1846, and was followed by his wife in 1863, in her ninetieth year.

John McBurney (the father of Mrs. R. R. Thompson) was born June 29, 1802, in Robinson township, Washington county, and in early life changed his residence in Robinson township. On February 7, 1828, he was married to Jane Keys, who was born in 1806, near Poland, Ohio, coming in 1808 to this county with her parents, and settling in Mt. Pleasant township. She was a daughter of James Keys, who was born in 1766, in Washington county, and growing to manhood was married in Mt. Pleasant to Jane McClellan (born in 1783), and they settled on a farm in Smith township, this county, where seven children were born to them, three of whom are now living: James (in Steubenville, Ohio), Joseph (in Smith township), and Ezra C. (in Emporia, Kans., having located there). The parents of these children are now deceased. Mr. McBurney passed the first years of his married life on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and in 1871 moved to Hickory, also in this county. John and Jane (Keys) McBurney were the parents of the following children: Jane (wife of R. R. Thompson); John (living in Mt. Pleasant township); Sarah (widow of Robert Jeffery, of Canonsburg); James (living in Hickory, this county); Martha (Mrs. James McIlvaine, of Mt. Pleasant township); Elizabeth (deceased in 1846, aged six years); William (deceased in 1846, at the age of three years); Ezra (living with his family on the old homestead in Mt. Pleasant township), and Wilham A. (who recently lost his wife); he has located in Canonsburg, Penn.; his little daughter, Lizzie, died August 15, 1892. John McBurney was a member of the U. P. Church at Hickory, in which he was an elder for many years. He died April 8, 1883, at his own home in Hickory, Penn.; his wife died at the home of her daughter Jane in Chartiers township, September 29, 1884.

After his marriage to Jane McBurney, Mr. R. R. Thompson settled on his present home of 175 acres of well-cultivated land, where his time is principally employed in farming and stock raising. Mr. Thompson votes with the Republican party, but prefers to devote his principal attention to private business. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Hickory, this county.

MRS. ELLEN J. CARTER, widow of John Carter, is a native of Mt. Pleasant township, a daughter of Matthew Kemps, who was born in Ireland. He was married to Nancy Peoples, and their children were eight in number, as follows: John, James Peoples, Elizabeth Ann, David, Ellen Jang, Thomas Slater, Samuel and Matthew McNary, all born in Washington county. The mother of this family died in 1850, and the father afterward moved to Sigourney county, Iowa, where he passed the remainder of his life. Ellen J. Kemps was married in August, 1865, to John Carter, a native of Washington county, son of William Carter, who was born in Scotland and was married to Ann McKee. In 1819 they immigrated to America, locating in Washington county, Penn., near the town of Washington, but afterward moved to Mt. Pleasant township, same county, where they died. They had seven children, viz.: Margaret, Robert, Janet, Maria, John, Thomas and Margaret Ann.

John Carter was born in 1826, near Washington, Penn., and received a limited education in the schools of Mt. Pleasant township, commencing to work on the farm when but ten years of age. After his marriage to Miss Kemps he bought the farm where his son is now living, which contains 220 acres, and devoted his time to its cultivation and improvement. Three children were born to this union: William H., married to Maggie White, who bore him one daughter; Margaret Hazel (they are living on the home farm); Leila Ada, a graduate of Curry University, Pittsburgh, Penn., and Robert Leander, a student at the academy, in Hickory, Penn. Mr. Carter was actively interested in politics, voting with the Republican party, but preferring to devote the greater part of his time to private business and domestic pleasures. He died in 1877, in Mt. Pleasant township, deeply mourned by all who knew him as a good friend and honorable, useful citizen. His widow is yet residing on the old homestead. She is a member of the United Presbyterian Church, at Hickory, with which her husband was also connected.

SAMUEL RONEY, a prominent agriculturist of the county, was born September 29, 1820, in a round log cabin built by his father in West Finley township, Washington Co., Penn. Hercules Roney, his grandfather, was a native of County Donegal, Ireland, whence, when a young man, he emigrated to America, coming direct to Ohio county, W. Va., where he patented 100 acres of land and built a cabin thereon. He also patented a large tract of land in what is now West Finley township, this county. He participated in many perilous adventures with the Indians, and took an active part in the battle in which Crawford was defeated. He erected a blockhouse for many years known as "Roney's blockhouse," and on this historic spot now stands a handsome residence, occupied by John Roney, a descendant of Hercules Roney, who died in July, 1812. He was one of the very first settlers in Washington county, and was among the most widely known of the county's pioneers. He married Margaret, daughter of William Buchanan, a native of West Finley township, and to this union were born five sons and four daughters, all long since deceased.

William Roney, father of subject, was reared on the home farm, where he was born, and where, under his father's preceptorship, he learned practical lessons in agriculture, which in after life served to make him one of the most successful farmers in his township. On November 9, 1809, he was married to Jane Lawrence, who bore him six children: Samuel and Jane (twins), James, Maggie, William and John.

Samuel Roney received his education at the schools of the locality of his birth, and April 15, 1839, being then nineteen years old, he left home to learn the trade of a tanner, which he followed several years till ill-health compelled him to abandon it. He then turned his attention to farming pursuits, which he afterward successfully carried on. In May, 1843, he was united in marriage with Mary A., daughter of John Sutherland, and the following named children have been born to them: Lizzie, Mary, Maggie Bell, W. G. (a resident of Hopewell township), J. L. (in Claysville, Penn.) and Samuel A. (who is on the farm with his father). The mother died July 3, 1892, and is buried in Buffalo cemetery. On November 22, 1892, Mr. Roney, with his daughter, Mary, moved to Claysville, where they are now living. In 1843 he joined the Presbyterian Church in West Alexander and moved to Upper Buffalo in 1850. In politics he is a lifelong Republican, having cast his first vote in 1841. Mr. Roney is gifted with a remarkable memory, and is considered an authority on all subjects requiring thought and study.

GEORGE E. SMITH. George Smith was born in the Emerald Isle, and crossing the ocean at an early date settled near Greensburgh, Westmoreland Co., Penn. When a young man he was married to Miss Todd, a native of Westmoreland county, who bore him eight children, namely: William, Mary, Thomas, David, Nancy, George, Edward and Martha, all now deceased. The father devoted his life to agricultural pursuits.

Thomas Smith was born in 1780, in Westmoreland county, Penn., where his boyhood was passed. He was united in marriage with Nancy, daughter of David Stewart, a prominent farmer living near Pittsburgh, Allegheny county, and four children were born to their union, as follows: George E., Amelia and two unnamed. The father learned the saddler's trade when a young man, and followed same for some time in Youngstown, Penn. After the death of his wife he removed to Elizabethtown, Ky., where he passed his later years.

George E. Smith was born January 18, 1820, in Youngstown, Penn., and remained there until about ten years of age. He then accompanied his father to Kentucky, where he resided during his minority, and where he cast his first vote. He then returned to Allegheny county, Penn., and saw the first steamboat that landed at Pittsburgh. On October 30, 1845, he married Phebe, daughter of Thomas and Rebecca Kourns, who lived in Allegheny county, about two miles from Pittsburgh. After his marriage he taught school about ten years, then conducted a wholesale grocery business for about four years, and in 1857 came to their present farm in Peters township, Washington county. Soon after locating in this county he was elected a justice of the peace by the Democratic party, and he has held this position for seven consecutive terms, enjoying the distinction of being the only justice in Washington county who has had but one decision reversed by the higher courts. During thirty five years of official service he has won the esteem and confidence of all who know him, and has been intrusted with important business by many citizens of Peters township. He is a member and liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church at Fairview. Three children have been born to them, namely: Edward T., Rebecca K. (wife of George Hayes), and John S.

Edward T. Smith was born September 5, 1846, in Allegheny county, Penn., and lived there until he was eight years of age, when he came to his present home in Peters township, Washington county. When a young man he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed twelve years, and was then employed as sawyer in a sawmill for five years. On January 5, 1865, he was married to Jennie Hamilton, of Nottingham township, daughter of Henry Hamilton. The young couple first settled in Bower Hill, Washington county, and in the spring of 1892 came to the farm in Peters township which was given him by his aunt, Miss Fannie J. Stewart. Edward T. and Jennie Smith are the parents of the following children: Margaret A., Carrie (Mrs. Robert Dixon), George H. (deceased), William S., Ada Bell, Susan A. and Amelia T. Mr. Smith owns fifty-one acres of land, also a house and lot in Bower Hill. He is a Democrat in politics, and is past counsellor of the Jr. O. U. A. M. He is a member of Venetia Council, No. 598. In religious faith he is a member of Peters Creek United Presbyterian Church.

ISRAEL WEIRICH. Late in the last century the ancestors of the Weirich family came from Germany, and located in eastern Pennsylvania. There, in Lebanon county, in 1801, Jacob Weirich, the father of subject, was born, and there passed the first few years of his life. At an early age he accompanied his parents westward, settling with them on the original Weirich homestead in Washington county, where the remainder of his long life was spent. The county was then little more than a wilderness, not yet having given evidence of those varied resources which have since made it so famous.

The story of his boyhood is that of almost any youth in similar circumstances. In early manhood he was married to Susan, daughter of Fredrick Foster, of Washington, Penn. With small means, but full of confidence and with bright hopes for the future, the young couple entered upon what proved to be a long and happy married life. Of the five children born to them four survive: Israel, Elizabeth (Mrs. William Ely), Mary (Mrs. Simon Ashbrook) and Susan (Mrs. James Mounitz). The youngest daughter, Amanda (Mrs. William Morton), died in 1882 from the effects of blood poisoning. In the spring of 1885, while still active and apparently hale and strong, Mr. Weirich was stricken with paralysis, from the effects of which he died August 12, same year, at the advanced age of eighty-one years. In his life Mr. Weirich, though singularly quiet and unobtrusive, was yet a man of broad views and unselfish aims, ever ready with moral and financial support for any enterprise which had for its object the advancement or good of the community. In his occupation he had, from small beginnings, reached independence and prosperity through perseverance, industry and frugality, coupled with that surest method—strict integrity. Always living up to those principles which later in life he openly avowed by uniting with the East Buffalo Presbyterian Church, he was ever recognized as upright and straightforward in business transactions, a kind, indulgent husband and father, and an esteemed neighbor and friend. Regarding his political views, Mr. Weirich was formerly a Whig, afterward a Republican, but always refrained from participating actively in political affairs. His widow, Mrs. Susan Weirich, a lady wonderfully strong and active for her age, still survives and resides in Washington, Pennsylvania.

Israel Weirich, the subject of our sketch, is the oldest child and only son born to Jacob and Susan (Poster) Weirich. Born and raised upon his father's farm, he has followed agricultural pursuits all his life, and his energy, foresight and constant attention to duty have been rewarded with a measure of success beyond the average. Mr. Weirich's boyhood days would hardly accord with the popular idea of the early life of an only son. The practical side of the gospel of work was among his first lessons. A part of each winter at the district school composed the sum of his school education; and while yet very young he assumed the management of the major portion of his father's increasing interests at the sacrifice of opportunities for a more liberal education, a course which he regretted ever afterward. His loss in this respect, however, was a gain in the dearer school of experience, the lessons of which were constantly turned to practical account in his after life. On March 30, 1859, Mr. Weirich was united in marriage with Sarah, daughter of James and Sarah Thompson, of Buffalo township, and immediately settled upon and took charge of his father's farm in the same township. Three years later he removed to his present home in Canton township, a farm of 225 acres, which he has since been constantly improving until it is one of the most complete and desirable in the county. In 1887 the old homestead, which had originally been one of the old taverns in the days of the stage coach, was removed and replaced by an elegant modern structure, beautifully situated and complete in all its appointments. A large family—seven sons and two daughters—have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Weirich, all yet living with the exception of one daughter who died in childhood.

Though his sense of duty compelled him to forego his earlier educational advantages, through the influence of extended travel, constant reading and his lively interest in all public affairs, Mr. Weirich is a man of liberal ideas and broad views. Profiting by his own experience and fully realizing the benefits of a liberal education, he has sent four sons to Washington and Jefferson College, and his daughter to the Washington Female Seminary. In politics Mr. Weirich is a Republican, though not a strong partisan. He never allowed party lines to restrain him from casting his vote on what he considered the side of justice and right, in favor of whatever political party it might be. He has been a lifelong member of the Presbyterian Church; was for many years a ruling elder in the East Buffalo Church, and was one of the founders of, and is a ruling elder in, the Third Presbyterian Church of Washington, Pennsylvania.

Always cautious and prone to weigh well any enterprise before entering into it, it was his practice, when a course was resolved on, to pursue it with an energy characteristic of his German extraction, and with results which demonstrated his belief in the truth of the maxim: "Whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well."

While good fortune has so uniformly followed him in his various undertakings, Mr. Weirich has ever been ready to extend a helping hand to those who have been less fortunate in this world's affairs. His acts of charity, however, have always been performed in a quiet, undemonstrative manner, rendered the more so by his invariable habit of dispersing them widely and without regard to sect or creed. If, however, his charities have been extended in any one direction more than another, it has been with a view to the relief and uplifting of the colored race in the South. Ever a friend of the negroes, with a full realization of their present condition, gained directly by travel and observation in the South, and with a firm belief in a bright future for the race, he has been constant with sympathy and financial support for their cause.

JOHNSON PATTERSON CLUTTER, a prosperous farmer and miller, Morris township, is a descendant of an old Irish American family. John Clutter, a native of Ireland, immigrated to New Jersey in early colonial days, and is the earliest ancestor of the family in this country. He moved to Washington county, Penn., in 1788, and located on a farm of about six hundred acres one mile north of Lindley's Mills, where he died in 1828. One of his sons, John, born February 17, 1771, married in Pennsylvania, March 1, 1792, Phoebe Headley, a native of New Jersey, born October 16, 1774. In 1792 they located on a farm about one mile northwest of Lindley's Mills, in Morris township, where they reared a family of thirteen children, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Nancy, October 29, 1792; Isaac, July 8, 1794; Abraham, October 29, 1795; Jacob, August 5, 1797; Abigail, July 13, 1799; Martha, August 19, 1801; Eunice, May 3, 1804; John P. (the father of the subject of this sketch); Ruth B., October 22, 1808; Joseph, October 2, 1810; Phoebe, February 18, 1813; Hannah, August 18, 1814; Lavina, January 28, 1818; of whom Joseph and Hannah are the only living members. Joseph was married, in Washington county, Penn., and removed to Missouri in 1876, where he now resides. Hannah married, in 1838, Samuel Booth, who died of typhoid fever in 1839, and in 1851 Mrs. Booth married L. F. Day; Mr. Day died in 1852. He was a Christian gentleman, a strong advocate of the abolition of slavery, and an earnest worker in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which Mrs. Day is also a member.

John Patterson Clutter, the eighth child born to John and Phoebe (Headley) Clutter, was born September 2, 1807, in Morris township, Washington county. He was reared to farm life, and received but a meager education. He married, in 1835, Margaret Andrew, also a native of Morris township, born January 11, 1816, and seven children were born to them, five of whom are living, as follows: Maria, born July 1, 1836; James Jasper, born August 28, 1838, now a resident of Hamilton, Caldwell Co., Mo.; Thomas H. Benton, born August 2, 1841, a prominent physician of Crestline, Ohio; Evelina, born September 16, 1844; Samuel B., born August 11, 1846, engaged in the hotel business at Washington; John Patterson; Robert M., born April 10, 1857, connected with the W. & W. R. R. Company, and residing at Waynesburgh, Greene Co., Penn.

John Patterson Clutter, the sixth child of John P. and Margaret (Andrew) Clutter, was born January 23, 1854. He received a common school education, and afterward attended Monongahela College, at Jefferson, Penn. After leaving college he taught school for a period of three years, when he began the operation of the mill, which he now successfully controls. Mr. Clutter married January 3, 1889, Mary Alice, a daughter of Hamilton Penn, of Morris township, and to them have been born five children: Cleveland, Joanna Grace, Bernice, Margaret, John H. and Emma, all of whom (except Cleveland, who died at the age of six months) are still living. Mr. Clutter is an ardent Democrat, and was elected county auditor in 1889, receiving the largest vote in his own township of any candidate before the people. Both he and Mrs. Clutter are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, at West Union, Penn. In addition to his mill work he owns and conducts a farm.

JOSEPH V. MANES, an influential and prosperous citizen of North Strabane township, was born January 25, 1839, in Elizabeth township, Allegheny Co., Penn., the youngest son of Culbert and Susan (Vankirk) Manes.

Culbert Manes was born August 11, 1798, in Elizabeth township, Allegheny county, where he was married February 17, 1824, to Susan Alice Vankirk, a daughter of Samuel Vankirk, of New Jersey birth, who belonged to an old pioneer family. He took part in the battle of Brandywine, and several of his family served under Gen. Washington. He was married to Mary Price, of New Jersey, and their children were: Samuel, Joseph, John, Isaac, Thomas, William, Sarah, Betsy, Mary, Ruth and Susan (Mrs. Culbert Manes). Mr. Vankirk followed agricultural pursuits; in politics he was a Democrat. After the marriage of Culbert Manes, he located in Allegheny county, near Elizabeth, but in the spring of 1857 made a permanent settlement in North Strabane township, Washington county, where he engaged in farming. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Culbert Manes: John P., born December 1, 1824; Mary J. (Mrs. Greer), born March 7, 1826; Samuel, born January 9, 1828, died February 6, 1829; Margaret A. (Mrs. Lyon), born January 12, 1831, and Joseph V., born January 25, 1839. Mr. Manes was a Democrat, and served his party in different capacities. He and his wife were ardent members of the Presbyterian Church. He died August 5, 1889, having been preceded by his wife December 1, 1880.

Joseph V. Manes passed his early life in Allegheny county, Penn., where he obtained a common school education, and when eighteen years of age came to North Strabane township. On May 8, 1862, he was married to Caroline Bebout, who was born January 29, 1814, daughter of Peter Bebout and granddaughter of John Bebout, who came from Scotland in an early day; and died in Washington county. Peter Bebout was a native of New Jersey, and was married to Isabella Cooper, who was born August 12, 1805, in Ohio. They settled in Washington county, Penn., in an early day, and reared the following children: Mary J. (wife of William Hays), born August 27, 1825; Susan (wife of William Bebout, a retired farmer of Washington county), born November 26, 1826; Ira, a retired farmer of Washington county, born September 5, 1828; Margaret (wife of Cephas Cochran, born August 31, 1830, died February 10, 1878); David R., a retired farmer of Washington county, born September 3, 1832; Isabella (wife of John Crouch), born April 7, 1834; Joshua, born July 5, 1836; Stephen, born October 21, 1838 (deceased); Martha J., born January 18, 1841 (deceased February 25, 1872); Caroline S. (wife of Joseph Manes), born January 29, 1844; Hermon H. (a retired farmer and stock dealer of Canonsburg), born August 31, 1847. Peter Bebout was married twice, and was the father of twenty children. [There is no record of his first wife.] He had five brothers and four sisters. Mr. and Mrs. Bebout were consistent members of the Presbyterian Church.

To the union of Joseph V. and Caroline (Bebout) Manes have been born children as follows: John J., born August 24, 1863 (married February 9, 1888, to Nannie Wallace, who bore him one child, Flora Myrtle, on March 10, 1889); Laura A., born February 18, 1865 (deceased September 29, 1867); William H., born January 17, 1868; James E., born November 22, 1869; Mary L., born April 11, 1872; Joseph, born November 21, 1875; Dora S., born April 15, 1878; Clyde A., born May 1, 1880; Charles C., born February 19, 1883; Oscar L., born May 7, 1886. Mr. and Mrs. Manes have been identified with the history of the county many years, and have taken an active interest in all public enterprises. Mr. Manes has followed agricultural pursuits, and now owns a fertile and well cultivated farm of 145 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Manes are consistent members of the Presbyterian Church.

SAMUEL ALEXANDER (deceased). The ancestors of this well known citizen were numbered with those heroic pioneers, the story of whose lives is ever new. That "truth is stranger than fiction" is amply proven when we read the thrilling adventures and hair-breadth escapes of those who gave to us our fair homes, by sacrificing in many cases all that was dearest to their own happiness. Men of iron, firm in the line of duty whereso'er it called, never flinching though the next moment might be their last—women who with tearless eyes could, like the Spartan mother, send their best-beloved to victory or death—such were the ancestors of the Alexander family.

Samuel Alexander was born in the Emerald Isle of Scotch Irish parents, and was a soldier in the British army. His children were Joseph, Samuel and Thomas, the latter born March 13, 1758. This family emigrated to America some time during the first part of the seventeenth century, settling in Maryland. Joseph was born at Chadd's Ford, Md., in 1766, and about the year 1785 came with his brothers, Thomas and Samuel, to Washington county, Penn. In March, 1786, they took out a patent for 100 acres of land on Millers run, which was then included in Washington county, now in Allegheny county. Some time after this purchase Joseph sold his interest in the land to his brothers and purchased, of one Mercer, a farm near Canonsburg. Descendants of the Mercer family may be yet living in Florence, Penn.

In early life Joseph Alexander was married to Elizabeth West, who was born June 7, 1777. To this marriage were born five children, two sons and three daughters, namely: Mary (Mrs. Mahood), Samuel, Elizabeth (Mrs. Dickson), Dr. J. W. Alexander, of Canonsburg, and Susan (Mrs. Quail), all now deceased. The father of this family died March 23, 1828; the mother on September 3, 1866.

Samuel Alexander, second child of Joseph and Elizabeth (West) Alexander, was born June 3, 1811, on the home farm near Canonsburg, North Strabane township, Washington county. On January 21, 1860, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Logan Van Eman, a daughter of Joseph and Isabella Logan Van Eman. The first child born to this union was a son that died in infancy; the second was a daughter, Mary Elizabeth, who was born May 21, 1863, and died December 10, 1889. The father was called to enter the silent land October 2, 1874, and Mrs. Alexander is now residing in Canonsburg, though yet retaining possession of the old homestead in North Strabane township. This family were Presbyterians, as were all the families of the connection in past generations as far as known.

SA. McCALMONT. This gentleman belongs to a prominent pioneer family, who were identified with the early history of Pennsylvania. John McCalmont was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and there married Mary Proudfit, a native of the same place. The young couple came to Washington county, and settled in Mt. Pleasant township, where the wife died. He was there married to Mrs. Margaret (McKee) Moore, who died on the farm now owned by their grandson.

John McCalmont, son of John and Mary (Proudfit) McCalmont, was born in 1818, in Mt. Pleasant township, and on April 15, 1842, was united in marriage with Mary Ann Moore, born January 7, 1822, in the same township, a daughter of John and Margaret (McKee) Moore. The father who was a life-long resident of this county, was killed in 1834 while attending the raising of the U. P. church in Hickory. His widow some years after married this same John McCalmont. John and Mary A. (Moore) McCalmont celebrated their golden wedding June 11, 1892, and on March 10, 1893, he was called to his rest. Their family are as follows: Margaret N., (yet living with her parents), John H. (sketch of whom follows), S. A. (of whom further mention is made), J. Andrew (first married to Anna Harsha, deceased, then to Hester Felinghuysen; is a U. P. minister at Dexter, Iowa), W. A. (married to Emma, daughter of Rev.

W. A. McConnell, of Hickory, this county), Mary A. (wife of John P. White, of Mt. Pleasant township), Jennie E. (Mrs. R. G. Jeffrey, Cross Creek township), and Rev. D. T. (married to Lelah Donaldson; is a U. P. minister at Glade Mills, Butler Co., Penn.). The father had been an active worker in the Republican party, and he and his wife were members of the U. P. Church at Hickory, this county.

JOHN H. McCALMONT was born December 21, 1844, on the old farm in the southern part of Mt. Pleasant township, near Mt. Prospect church. He is the second child of John and Mary Ann (Moore) McCalmont, whose history is given in these pages. He attended the Rankin and Cherry Valley district schools during his boyhood, and in March, 1865, enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Tenth P. V. L., was mustered into service at Pittsburgh, Penn., and assigned to the Second Corps, Army of the Potomac. He served till the close of the war, took part in the Grand Review at Washington and Bailey's Cross Roads, and was discharged in 1865, at Arlington Heights. After the war the soldier garb was exchanged for the attire of a farmer, and he began working in the harvest field.

On February 27, 1879, he married Elizabeth, daughter of William and Rachel (May) McConnell, all three natives of Cecil township, this county. In 1883 her parents moved to Hickory, where the mother died January 9, 1887. In 1881 Mr. and Mrs. McCalmont settled on their present farm, which contains 132 acres of well-cultivated land. For the past five years he has been engaged in the dairy business, milking from eighteen to twenty cows per day. He is actively identified with the Republican party, and both he and his wife are members of the Mt. Pleasant U. P. Church, at Hickory. They have two children, Wilbert and Rachel May.

S. A. McCALMONT (whose name opens this sketch) was born December 22, 1846, on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, and received his education in the district schools. On September 28, 1875, he was married to Mattie A. Jeffrey, who was born in Cross Creek township, this county, daughter of Robert and Eliza (Russell) Jeffrey. The father was born in Canton township, the mother in Chartiers towuship, and after their marriage they settled in Cross Creek township. Mr. Jeffrey commenced life a poor boy, but accumulated a good property; his wife died in January, 1878. Mr. and Mrs. S. A. McCalmont began married life in Mount Pleasant township, where she died November 7, 1877. Mr. McCalmont is an active member of the Republican party, and a member and trustee of the United Presbyterian Church at Hickory.

JAMES P. McCALMONT. The genealogy of the prominent family of which this gentleman is a worthy representative can be traced to one William McCalmont (then spelled McCammont), who was a native of Lancaster county, Penn., and served seven years in the Revolutionary war. A relative, the famous Maj. James McCammont, had charge of forty troopers when Gen. Washington crossed the Delaware, and was a distinguished officer throughout the Revolutionary war. William McCammont and his relatives were very prominent workers in the churches of the Cumberland Valley, in eastern Pennsylvania. He came to Cross Creek township, Washington county, soon after the close of the Revolutionary war, and was buried in this county; but little, however, is known concerning his life.

His son, John McCalmont, was born in 1781, in Lancaster county, Penn., and was married to Mary Proudfit, of York county. In 1808 he and his wife crossed the mountains on horseback with their only child James. They located about one mile west of Hickory, in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington county, where he followed the blacksmith's trade, also being a successful farmer, and rapidly accumulated property. At the age of sixty years he retired from active work. He was a perfect type of the hospitable, generous-hearted, social pioneer, always glad to welcome friends at any time. He died in 1859, and was buried in the Hickory U. P. cemetery, of which church he was a member. In politics he was a Whig originally, and later a Republican. John McCalmont was twice married, and his first wife bore him the following children: James, Nancy (never married), Mary (wife of John Henderson, Mt. Pleasant township), David (a farmer of Mt. Pleasant township), John (living in Mt. Pleasant township, was married April 15, 1842, and on June 14, 1892, celebrated his golden wedding; he died March 10, 1893, and was buried March 13), Alexander (a retired citizen of West Middletown, Penn.), Eliza (Mrs. Samuel Moore, of Mt. Pleasant township) and Samuel (deceased at the age of twenty years). Alexander is the only living member of this family. The mother died and was buried in Hickory cemetery, and for his second wife John McCalmont was married to Mrs. Margaret (McKee) Moore, a widow lady, who bore him no children, and survived him seven years. She was buried in the Hickory cemetery.

James McCalmont (son of John) was born January 29, 1807, in York county, Penn., and was but a child when he crossed the mountains with his parents to Washington county. His education was received in the log cabin schools of Mt. Pleasant township, and his boyhood was passed on the farm of his father, where, as the eldest son, a considerable amount of work fell to his share. In early youth he took charge of the home farm, and in 1835 was married to Sarah McBurney, who was born in 1811, near Midway, in Washington county, a daughter of John and Sarah (Hunter) McBurney. The following children were born to James and Sarah McCalmont: Mary A., Mrs. Samuel Fisher, of Columbiana county, Ohio; Elizabeth J., wife of John H. Miller, of Mt. Pleasant township; John A., a farmer, of Robinson township; James P., whose sketch follows; Sarah H., wife of W. B. McClure, an expert civil engineer of Los Angeles, Cal.; David A., a farmer, of Robinson township; Robert M., an agriculturist, living near Xenia, Ohio; Esther A., wife of Rev. Joseph McNab, a U. P. minister, of Tingley, Iowa; and Kate, married to Rev. J. A. Shrader, a U. P. minister, of Butler county, Penn. Mr. and Mrs. McCalmont resided on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township for three years after their marriage, and in 1839 removed to Robinson township, this county, purchasing the farm of Rev. Moses Allen, where they lived many years. James McCalmont was a scientific farmer and an extensive wool grower, giving considerable attention and study to the improvement in quality and length of that staple, and meeting with signal success. He was a leader in the Associate Church, and in 1839 was elected as an elder in the Burgettstown Church, where he remained until 1863. He then transferred his membership to the newly-organized Centre U. P. Church, in which he was installed as elder, holding that office until his death. In politics he was a Whig and Republican, and was a very strong Abolitionist. Although his party was hopelessly in the minority in Robinson township, he was chosen to fill nearly every local office; he was secretary of the local division of the first temperance society organized in his neighborhood; was the first road commissioner under the new system, and was elected squire two terms. A true and faithful friend, and an honored citizen, he passed to his rest October 31, 1890, with the words: "The old man is worn out. I am at peace with my friends, my family and my God." His wife had preceded him in 1879, and both are buried in the Centre cemetery, near Midway.

James P. McCalmont was born November 18, 1842, near Candor, Washington Co., Penn., and received a very fair education, considering his limited opportunities, the greater part of his time being devoted to farm work. On August 22, 1867, he was united in marriage with Mary C. McFarland, who was born December 29, 1844, daughter of Samuel and Jane (Van Euman) McFarland, of Robinson township. The children of this family are as follows: Luella, Sarah J., Samuel J., Joseph M., John E. and Robert V. All are living and at home. After his marriage James P. Mc-

Calmont resided in Mt. Pleasant township four years, then located in North Fayette township, Allegheny county. In 1875 he came to Hanover township, Washington county, and settled on the "John McConnell" farm, where he has successfully followed general farming, stock raising and dairy business. He has an excellent, practical education, and is a progressive man. In 1868 he was elected an elder of the U. P. Church at Centre, and in 1876 became a member of the Paris U. P. Church, with which his wife and four eldest children are identified. Politically he is a Republican, and is in sympathy with the Prohibition doctrine.

WILLIAM H. HILL is a descendant of Joseph Hill, who was the first of the Hill family to settle in Washington county. He was an Irishman, and first came to Maryland in 1774, thence moving to West Bethlehem township, he settled on Plum run, west of Beallsville, and took up 600 acres of land. The Indians at this early date were so numerous and hostile that he was obliged to abandon the tract, and go east for a time; upon his return later he was not molested. Here he lived the remainder of his days, dying upon the farm in about 1820. He was twice married, his first wife being a Miss Ackley, and his second a Miss Margaret Joy. From these marriages thirteen children were born: Joseph, married to Mary Jamison; James, married to Ann Hill; Thomas, married to Rachel Speers; John, married to Nancy Sargeant; Margaret, wife of James Beatty; Elizabeth, wife of John Welsh; Sarah, married to John Sargeant; Benjamin, married to Delilah Notestine; William, married to Narcissa Beatty; Atkinson, married to Miss Reemer; Rebecca, who became Mrs. William Freeman; Eleanor, married to William Hawkins, now living in Kansas; and Henry, a bachelor, who removed to Ohio. Politically Joseph Hill was a Federalist and a Whig.

James Hill was born on the old home place, March 21, 1777, and spent his whole life there. He received a fair education in a country school, but was a great reader, and possessed a good memory. At twenty-one years of age he engaged in farming, and cleared up the home tract of 160 acres. On October 20, 1797, he married Annie, daughter of Robert Hill. To them eight children were born, viz.: Joseph, Margaret, Nancy, John, Fanny, James, Stephen and Robert. The last died January 29, 1893. To each of them he presented a good farm. Joseph, Mrs. Richard Morton, Stephen, Mrs. Henry Weaver, James, Fanny, Robert and John are all gone. Mr. Hill was first a Whig and then a Republican. He was an earnest Bible student, and a deacon of the Baptist Church for many years, which office he retained until a year prior to his death, which occurred in 1861. Mrs. Hill always remained in the Church of England. She died November 12, 1856, and both are buried in the family burying ground.

James Hill, Jr., was born November 27, 1810, on the homestead where his youth was spent. He received the usual education of those early days, became a well-informed man, a good scholar, and taught school several terms. In 1830 he engaged in farming on the place where his son now lives, following this occupation very successfully all his life; he added sixty acres to the 100 which he owned, thus making a valuable farm. He was married April 14, 1831, to Charlotte, daughter of William Horner, of Fayette county, and the following children were born to them: Mrs. Cynthia Weaver (deceased); Mary Jane (deceased); Margaret Ann and William Horner. Mr. Hill was school director of his township for twelve or fifteen years, and also filled several different offices in the township. He did a great deal of business in settling estates. He was a Whig and Republican in politics, and his religious views leaned toward the Baptist Church. He died October 1, 1890.

William Horner Hill, the only son of James and Charlotte (Horner) Hill, was born July 3, 1841, on the old farm, and has always remained there. He began his education in the common schools, but his health failing, was compelled to give up study when young; but he has been a great reader and is especially interested in works of history and sacred literature. He began business on the farm with his father, having an equal share in the profits, and has since been very successful, still retaining the old farm of 160 acres. Mr. Hill is a Republican, but is inclined to independent views regarding men and political parties. He and a sister are members of the Methodist Church.

ROBERT T. BARBOUR, a retired farmer of Hanover township, is a native of Jefferson township, this county, and a grandson of Abraham Barbour, who was the first member of this family to locate in Washington county.

Abraham Barbour was born of English parents in 1775, in New Jersey, and was there married to Jane Moore, a native of that State, whose parents were also of English extraction. Soon after their marriage this young couple, with Mr. Moore and family, started to seek a home in western Pennsylvania. The party came together across the mountains in a large, six-horse wagon, which contained the passengers and their entire stock of worldly goods. When coming down hill, in the absence of a lock, the men would cut down a small tree, attaching it to the rear end of the vehicle to drag on the ground and hold back the wagon. Other teams having adopted the same scheme, huge piles of such material were soon collected at the foot of the steep hills. On arriving at Westmoreland county, Penn., William Moore and his family concluded to remain there, and made a location in that vicinity, but Abraham Barbour and his bride went farther west, locating in the territory then called Cross Creek township, but which is now Jefferson township. Here he bought a farm by making a small cash payment, and in order to pay the amount of his indebtedness then began the traffic of packing salt over the mountains, bringing it from Winchester, Va. He would start with his two or three horses and so many sacks of feed, leaving the grain at various places along the road, and on the return trip would feed his horses at the same places. This business proved a profitable one, for he was soon freed from debt, and devoted the remainder of his life to "tilling the virgin soil." In politics he was a Democrat, and was one of the highly-respected citizens of Jefferson township. He died in 1858, and his wife passed away in 1859. The children of this family were born as follows: Cornelius, a deceased farmer of Knox county, Ohio; a daughter, died in early youth; John, whose sketch follows. Jane, deceased wife of George Stewart, of Knox county, Ohio; Eleanor, widow of William Allen, is living in Knox county, Ohio, and Abraham (a farmer of Knox county, Ohio).

John Barbour was born in 1800, in Jefferson township, having been reared to manhood on the home farm and educated in the rude schools of the period. In 1824 he was married to Elizabeth Moore, who was born in 1803 in Muskingum county, Ohio, a daughter of John Moore. The following children were born to the union of John and Elizabeth Barbour: John M., a farmer of Jefferson township; Cornelius, a farmer of Hanover township; Sarah J., Mrs. T. M. Patterson, of Patterson's Mills; Robert T., the subject of this sketch; Abraham, a farmer of Jefferson township, and Fanny M., a maiden lady of Jefferson township. The parents passed their first years of wedded life in an old log cabin in Jefferson township, this building being afterward supplanted by a comfortable dwelling. He was a successful farmer, and in politics a lifelong Democrat, having held several offices in Jefferson township. His death occurred June 30, 1873, and February 19, 1892, his wife was laid by his side in Cross Creek cemetery.

Robert T. Barbour was born January 14, 1829, in Jefferson township. He grew to manhood on the farm, and was educated in the rate schools. He married Mary E. West, April 27, 1853. She was born May 18, 1838, in Harrison county, Ohio. Her mother dying when Mary was an infant, she was reared to womanhood by an aunt, Eleanor Hill, of Paris, Penn. To this union the following children were born: Elizabeth E., widow of Stephen Peabody; Fanny M., living at home; Sarah J., residing with her parents; William M., agent and operator at Dismore Station, P. C. C. & St. L. Ry.; Maggie V., Leona and Halbert, the latter three living at home. After his marriage Robert T. Barbour located in Hanover township, and soon afterward moved to McLean county, Ill., remaining there until 1859, when he returned to Hanover township, and has since been engaged in general farming and stock raising. In 1885 Mr. Barbour was seized with rheumatism, and this unwelcome companion has clung to him so tenaciously that he has been obliged to almost retire from active farm work. Mr. Barbour is gifted with a good memory. He is a pleasant and agreeable companion, a good neighbor and valued citizen. In politics he has been a lifelong Democrat.

JOHN F. SCOTT was born October 25, 1826, on the farm which is yet his home. He is a son of Arthur Scott, who was born about 1794, in County Tyrone, Ireland.

Arthur Scott married Martha Finton, who was born in Ireland in 1789, and about 1824 they sailed for America. On landing at New York they proceeded to Philadelphia, thence to Washington county, Penn., making a location on the headwaters of King's creek, in Hanover township. He rented property for some time, finally purchasing a tract of fifty acres, from the greater part of which the heavy timber had to be cleared away. He possessed but limited means, but finally managed to accumulate sufficient money to place him in comfortable circumstances. He was a member of the Democratic party. He died December 12, 1852, being preceded by his wife October 29, 1852. They are buried in the Presbyterian cemetery at Frankfort, both having been members of that denomination. They were the parents of the following children: John F., Martha J. (Mrs. Henry Breen, of New Cumberland, W. Va.), Letitia (wife of Jesse Sleutz, of Jefferson county, Ohio), Eliza (unmarried, deceased November 4, 1852, at the age of seventeen years), and Robert (deceased October 26, 1852, aged fifteen years). All the deceased members of the above family passed away within five weeks of each other.

John F. Scott was born on the old farm, attended the rude schools of the period, and continued work on the farm until some time after the death of his parents. On April 25, 1857, he married Mary Ann Lipsey, who, born in 1821, in Ireland, came to this country with her parents in 1823. To this union three children were born, viz.: William McF. (deceased when two years old),

Mary J. (living at home) and Sarah C. (a school teacher, and graduate of the Pennsylvania State Normal School). Mr. and Mrs. Scott have always resided on their present farm, where he follows general farming and stock raising, being an admirer of first-class stock. In politics he is a life-long Democrat, having held numerous offices in Hanover township. On October 18, 1891, he was called to mourn the loss of the wife of his youth, who was buried in the Presbyterian cemetery at Frankfort. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Scott is an active worker, having held the office of trustee for several years.

JAMES WARD, an expert blacksmith, of California, is a son of William Ward, who was born near Bel Air, Harford Co., Md. In early manhood he learned the blacksmith's trade, and then came to Washington county, Penn., locating in Fallowfield township, and there followed farming in connection with his trade. Prior to locating in Pennsylvania, William Ward had been a slaveholder, but liberated them after leaving Maryland. He was married to Pleasant, daughter of Henry Speers, of Fallowfield township, and their children were Nancy, Solomon, Wilson, Rebecca, James, Elizabeth, Mary Jane, Amanda, William and Melissa. The father was a Whig and Republican in politics, and in religion was prominently identified with the M. E. Church, having served for some time as a local preacher.

James Ward was born March 16, 1826, in Fallowfield township, and received his early education in the subscription schools. When he was twenty years of age he opened a blacksmith shop at Twilight, and six months afterward moved to Greenfield, remaining there until 1886, then came to California. On June 15, 1852, he married Sarah, daughter of Solomon Fry, and she has borne him three children, namely: Addison, Alberta (wife of Dr. Letherman) and Laura. Although Mr. Ward had an inclination for the carpenter's trade, circumstances compelled him to continue in the blacksmith's business, and he was obliged to borrow the money with which to purchase his first set of tools. He became an expert in his trade. Originally a Whig, he has been, since the organization of the Republican party, an active worker in its ranks. He and family are members of the M. E. Church.

WILLIAM RODGERS, a prominent dairyman and leading agriculturist of Fallowfield township, is a native of the North of Ireland, born in 1828, in County Donegal. In 1833 his parents, Samuel and Margaret (Cook) Rodgers, also natives of County Donegal, embarked with their family for America, and after a voyage of seven weeks landed in the New World. Proceeding at once to Pennsylvania, they made a permanent home in Clarion county, where the father followed agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his busy life. He died in 1852, his widow in 1860. Their children were as follows: Elizabeth (wife of Matthew Banks, of Butler county, Penn.), deceased in 1889; Susanna (widow of George Harwood, who died in 1891), living in Pittsburgh, Penn.; Jane (widow of Robert Banks), living in Butler county, Penn.; Sally (wife of William McElhaney, of Armstrong, Penn.), deceased in 1891; Margaret, married to Mr. Robert Gailey, of West Belle Vernon, Penn.; Rebecca, widow of Samuel Rodgers, of Armstrong county, Penn.; Mary (wife of George M. McKinney), deceased in 1886, and William, subject of sketch.

William Rodgers, as will be seen, was five years old when he came with his parents to the United States, and to Pennsylvania. He received his education at the common school, and in the academies of Clarion and Butler counties, after which he commenced farming in Clarion county. In 1863 he removed from there to Fallowfield township, Washington county, where he has since resided. In 1859 William Rodgers was united in marriage with Miss S. E. Sphar, daughter of John and Lucy Ann (Scott) Sphar, of Allen township, this county, and ten children have been born to them, as follows: Myron K., a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, civil engineer-in-chief of the "Mountain Consolidated Company," in Butte City, Mont., where he has lived since 1886 (in 1892 he married Lucy Joiner); Anna M., a graduate of Washington Female Seminary, married to Dwight Furness, U. S. consular agent for the State of Guanajuato, Mexico, and dealer in high-grade ores, living in the city of Guanajuato; John, a law student, at present residing in Chicago; Samuel Clark, a graduate of Ohio Wesleyan University, now secretary and treasurer of "The Furness & Lewis Co.," in Guanajuato, Mexico; William G., attending Washington and Jefferson College; Lillie Gertrude, who attended Ohio Wesleyan University, and is married to Don E. King, a lawyer in Washington C. H., West Va., and Wesley P., Rosetta B., Joseph Henry and Adeline Patti, all four yet under the parental roof. The parents, sensible of the weighty responsibility involved in rearing a large family, and justly appreciating the benefits resulting from a thorough education—to the end of educating and cultivating what is best and noblest in the young mind—have given their elder children more than an average academical and collegiate training, while the younger members have before them similar advantages and blessings. Mr. Rodgers has all his life taken an active interest in educational matters, and is an especial enthusiast in the common-school system of the present day. When a young man he was the promoter of an academy in Franklin, Penn., and he taught school for some three years with marked success. Politically he votes the Republican ticket, and he and his wife and all their children are members and liberal supporters of the M. E. Church.

I SAAC LEADBETER. The life of this gentleman is a history in itself, illustrative of what can be attained by indomitable perseverance, a stout heart and a willing pair of hands. He is a son of the rugged and romantic land of the Cymri, having been born in Blaenavon, Monmouthshire, South Wales, in 1828. In 1840, then a lad of twelve summers, he came with a brother-in-law and family to America, the passage across the Atlantic being made in an American sailing vessel. Landing in Alexandria, Va., after a voyage of seven weeks and two days, the party proceeded to Washington, D. C., thence by train to Baltimore, from which city they traveled by canal to a place called Trout Run, on the Susquehanna, and from there by stage some twenty-five miles through the wilderness to a small town in Tioga county, Penn., called Blossburg, where they resided three years. At the end of that time they retraced their steps by the same route to Trout Run, and from there journeyed to Pittsburgh by canal. The canal boat which conveyed them was built in three sections, which were taken apart when they reached the Alleghanies, being brought separate over the mountains—five inclines up and five inclines down, into the canal again, and then once more hitched together. They crossed the Allegheny river in the aqueduct, and landed at Bayardstown, near where the Union depot now stands. There they took boat to Young's Landing, on the Monongahela, two miles below Greenfield, now called Coal Centre.

At the time of the California "gold fever" Mr. Leadbeter, in company with six others, set out for the new Eldorado in the spring of 1850, taking the overland route, and arriving in Hangtown six months after the day of their starting, many hardships being endured on the journey. After two years' sojourn in the mines, he returned home via the Isthmus of Panama, and in 1856 he revisited California, traveling by the Nicaragua route, and again remained in the "gold diggings" two years. In 1863 the Smith & Co. Coal Company was organized, the firm being composed of Isaac Leadbeter, L. E. Smith and Edward Blinco, which was dissolved on the death of Mr. Smith in the year 1873. In 1874 a new company came into existence, styled the L. Leadbeter Company, which did business until 1878, and in the following year our subject and family moved to Cherokee county, Kans., but the fascination of his early manhood home still haunted him, and impelled him in 1880 to once more become a citizen of the Keystone State. Up to the year 1880, when he retired from active life, Mr. Leadbeter's occupation was for the most part mining and shipping coal. He began life with a coal pick in his hand, and has felt the cutting edge of poverty's lance; but by industry and perseverance, coupled with sound judgment and solid business principles, he succeeded in conquering every opposition, and to day he ranks with the most prosperous men in the land.

In June, 1849, our subject was united in marriage with Isabel, daughter of Robert and Margaret Smiley, and six children have been born to them—one son and five daughters, viz.: Sarah Crow, wife of John Crow; Nancy, wife of John Young; Robert Leonard, a general merchant of Coal Centre, married to Cora Hicks; Mary Eliza, wife of Jacob Hormell; Harriet Malinda, wife of A. E. Freeman, and Cora Belle, living at home with her parents. The parents have given their children excellent school advantages, and all have been brought up to a Christian life. Mr. Leadbeter's home since 1855 has been in Coal Centre, with the exception of two years he and his family lived in Kansas (as already related), from which place he and the family moved to their present residence in 1880. In 1858 Mr. Leadbeter united with Pike Run Lodge, No. 491, I. O. O. F., of California, and was one of the organizers and charter members of Vesta Lodge, No. 696, Coal Centre. He has proven a most zealous and active member, and has passed all the Chairs. Mr. Leadbeter has extensive real-estate interests in the boroughs of California, Granville and Coal Centre. In church affairs he has ever been especially prominent. From the days of his early youth he has been identified with the Methodist Episcopal denomination, and has served in every official capacity, being at the present time district steward. In the Sunday-school he is recognized as a leader, and when the Sabbath day comes Mr. Leadbeter appears in armor, at his post.

It is but fair to add that in business circles few in his line of trade are better known throughout the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys than Isaac Leadbeter, whose name is the synonym for honor and integrity. As a man he is genial as the sunshine, generous to a fault, respected and beloved by all.

SCOTT FAMILY. The sons and daughters of Old Erin have ever been among the first to volunteer in any enterprise requiring pluck, fortitude and gallant heroism. It is therefore not surprising, that, in ascertaining the nationality of our forefathers, so many of those who first braved the dangers and privations of pioneer life have been natives of the fair Emerald Isle, small in area, but mighty in the strength of a heroic race. One of their poets aptly expresses the sentiments of the true Irishman the world over, in the lines:

When Erin first rose from the dark swelling flood,
God blessed the green island, He saw it was good,
The Emerald of Europe, it sparkled, it shone,
In the ring of this world the most precious stone,
Arm of Erin prove strong; but be gentle as brave,
And uplifted to strike, still be ready to save,
Nor one feeling of vengeance presume to defile,
The cause of the men of the Emerald Isle.

WILLIAM SCOTT, the great-great-great-great-grandfather of the present generation:

Should auld relations be forgot
And never brought to mind;
Should auld relations be forgot,
And days of auld lang syne.

William Scott, the progenitor of the family with which this genealogy has to deal (as taken from a late history), was born in Scotland in the latter part of the seventeenth century, the exact date being not known. On account of his loyalty to the principles of the "Church of Scotland," and bitter opposition to popery, he, with many other families of Covenanter sympathies, in order to enjoy peace and safety, was compelled to leave his native land and find a home elsewhere. He accordingly went to the North of Ireland, County Derry. There he laid out a deer park and salmon fishery, as he was a man of considerable wealth (judged by the standard of those days, not of the present). But few details of his life have come down to us, nor do we know when he died, and of his family we have no account, except of one son, Joseph.

Joseph Scott, son of William Scott, was born in County Derry, Ireland, in the early part of the eighteenth century. His children (so far as has been ascertained) were one daughter and five sons, viz.: Mary, William, Zaccheus, Nathan, Samuel and James. He died in Ireland, after which his children emigrated to America, first locating in Lancaster county, Penn., some of them afterward moving to Washington (now Allegheny) county, same State. William (the eldest son) was killed in one of the Indian wars; Zaccheus settled with his brother James, on a farm in Elizabeth township, Allegheny Co., Penn., and all trace of him has been lost; Nathan located in New Jersey, and nothing further has been heard of him except that he had one son; James, the youngest son of Joseph Scott, Sr., when he came to western Pennsylvania settled in what is known as the "Forks of the Yough" settlement, now Elizabeth township, Allegheny Co., Penn. This farm he afterward patented, November 9, 1789; part of this farm is now owned by his grandson, Zaccheus Scott. James Scott had eight children, and three of the sons were in the war of 1812, two of them as captains, one being promoted to colonel (but little further is known of the family connection).

Mary (the eldest child and only daughter of Joseph Scott, Sr.) was married near the year 1760, to James Young, of Lancaster county, Penn. Mr. Young lived on the main road from Philadelphia to Lancaster, and kept an inn at which the wagoners stopped on their route. Mr. Young died prior to the year 1780, his wife afterward married John Morgan, and with her eight children came to western Pennsylvania in 1780, and located in what is now Robinson township, Allegheny Co., Penn., near where the fort (afterward known as the "Cowan Fort") was built. She was known to the succeeding generation as Grandmother Morgan, and her descendants as far as known at this writing are 324.

Samuel Scott (son of Joseph Scott, Sr.) was born in County Derry, Ireland, in 1751, and in youth came to this country, first locating in Lancaster county, Penn. He attended a communion of the Reformed Presbyterian Church at that place, was married about the year 1775, to Elizabeth Wilson, a sister of Rev. J. R. Wilson, of the same church, and moved to western Pennsylvania, settling on a farm on Mingo creek, Washington Co., Penn. He bought a team of horses in Lancaster county, a Conestoga wagon and farm implements, and drove through by way of Bedford Springs to the above-named place. There he remained until about the year 1795, when he moved to Campbell's run, Washington county (now in Robinson township, Allegheny Co., Penn.), was one of the pioneers of the settlement, and helped to build the Cowan fort, or blockhouse, in which the settlers would often leave their wives and children for safety from the Indians. He rented a farm of 331 acres from John Bail, which he afterward bought, in November, 1799, the same for £516 specie, the deed thereof being recorded March 1, 1800. Mr. Scott purchased on May 1, 1805, a farm in Washington county on the headwaters of Miller's run, Mt. Pleasant township, containing 309 $\frac{1}{4}$  acres, for the sum of \$2,474 (which farm he afterward willed to his sons John and Joseph), same being the eastern part of the land granted to Gen. George Washington, owned at that time by Alexander Addison. In the fall of 1805, a communion service was held at the home of Samuel Scott, on Campbell's run, about fifty persons having gathered, most of them coming from a distance. The dwelling was but a log cabin, and consequently the barn floor was covered with straw, over which was spread wagon covers and blankets. Here the guests slept, Mr. Scott lodging with the company, feeding the horses and people. Thursday was kept as a fast day; Friday all the able-bodied men went to work hewing and hauling logs to erect a communion table, seats and a tent, so that the minister could address the audience, and services were held Saturday afternoon, Sabbath and Monday morning, after which the worshipers returned to their homes.

In 1815 Mr. Scott went on a chase on horseback to the land office at Canton or Mansfield, Ohio, being first of the numerous competitors, and entered a section of land (640 acres); he also, at another place entered a half section—in all 960 acres. It was a perilous journey at that time, on account of the Indians. He died in 1819, aged sixty-eight years, owning at the time about 1,600 acres of land. His wife died in 1827, aged seventy-eight years, and they are buried in the cemetery at Union (U. P.) church, in Robinson township, Allegheny county. They were active and influential members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, in which he was a ruling elder for many years. They raised a family of nine children, all of whom grew to maturity and reared families. Their names are as follows: John, Margaret, Elizabeth, William, Mary, Joseph, Samuel, Nancy and James. His descendants at this writing, as far as known, are 619 in number. Part of the farm or homestead is still owned by Scott connection. The farm on Miller's run he left by will to his two sons, John and Joseph—the north end, 159 $\frac{1}{4}$  acres to John, and his grandchildren still own sixty-five acres of it, and goes by the name of the Scott heirs. The south end, 150 acres, he left to his son Joseph, and his son James owns and lives on it. Each of the farms have three producing oil wells, some of them, at this writing, producing at the rate of seventy-five barrels per hour.

Joseph Scott, son of Samuel, was born in 1786, in Allegheny county, Penn., becoming inured from boyhood to the privations and hardships of the frontier settlements. In 1808 he was married to Margaret McCurdy, of Allegheny county, afterward settling in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, on the farm afterward left him by his father Samuel. She bore him eight children, one of whom, Joseph L. (the only one living), is married and resides in Cecil township. The mother died June 4, 1827, and in 1829 the father was united in marriage with Sarah Douglas, who was born in 1795, in Cecil township, this county; she was a daughter, of Patrick Douglas, a native of Scotland, who came with his parents to America when but nine years of age, locating in eastern Pennsylvania, and afterward settling in Cecil township, where he died in his eighty-ninth year. The mother passed away when eighty-eight years old. Joseph and Sarah (Douglas) Scott began married life on his farm (as above mentioned) on Miller's run in Mt. Pleasant township (now occupied by their son James), upon which he erected a good brick residence in 1834. Their children were as follows: Nancy (deceased in infancy), Margaret S. (widow of James K. Robb, of Jackson county, Kans., who was reared in this county but died in Ohio). Nancy (deceased in 1887), Robert D. (of whom a sketch follows), James (of whom special mention is made further on) and John (living in Mt. Pleasant township, married to Lizzie Bolton). The father was a soldier in the war of 1812, and an influential citizen, having assisted in settling several estates. He was an active member of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, of which he was ruling elder several years. He died May 14, 1861, and August 2, 1882, his wife was laid beside him.

ROBERT D. SCOTT, eldest son of Joseph and Sarah (Douglas) Scott, was born January 16, 1834, on the old home place in Mt. Pleasant township, where his early education was received. On May 25, 1870, he selected a life companion in the person of Mattie R., daughter of William Thompson. The father was born in Mt. Pleasant township, and was married to Eliza Jane Fleming, a native of the same place. In 1874 they moved to Allegheny county, Penn., where he passed away in April, 1882. Mrs. Thompson is yet living in that county, and is the mother of twelve children, viz.: Mary (deceased in her twenty-second year), Mattie R. (Mrs. Robert D. Scott), Sarah Ann (wife of Alexander May, of Cecil township), Eliza Jane (Mrs. C. R. Potter, of McDonald, Penn.), Ebenezer (at home), Maria (residing with her mother), Alice (Mrs. Samuel Thompson, of Canonsburg, Penn.), Emma (wife of James Riddle, of Allegheny county, Penn.), William Harvey Smith (living in Mansfield, Penn.), two deceased in infancy, and Joseph (living in Sioux City, Iowa). Since their marriage Robert D. and Mattie R. (Thompson) Scott have resided on the farm in Cecil township, containing 119½ acres of well-improved land, upon which he has erected good buildings. Four children have blessed this union: John Herbert, Sarah Elizabeth, one deceased in infancy, and Mary (who died at the age of seven years and six months). Mr. and Mrs. Scott and their two children are members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, of which he is an elder, and he has also served about thirty-five years as treasurer.

JAMES SCOTT (second son of Joseph and Sarah (Douglas) Scott) was born January 1, 1836, on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, receiving his education in the district schools of the neighborhood. In 1867 he was united in marriage with Eliza Thompson, a native of Carroll county, Ohio, daughter of Hance and Eliza (Henderson) Thompson. The parents were born in Ireland, emigrating to America in 1830. In 1834 they moved to a farm in Carroll county, Ohio, thence to Harrison county, Ohio, where he died February 9, 1892, having been preceded in 1863 by his wife. She was the mother of the following children: Sarah (deceased in Carroll county, Ohio, at the age of ten years), Margaret (deceased in Pittsburgh, Penn.), George (deceased in childhood), Eliza (wife of James Scott), George (deceased in his eighteenth year), Jane (living in Harrison county, Ohio), Sarah (wife of Joseph Thompson, Carroll county, Ohio) and W. P. (living in Carroll county, Ohio). James and Eliza (Thompson) Scott lived on a farm adjoining their present home until 1880, when they removed to the place of 150 acres which they now occupy. The tract has been in the family name since 1805, being originally a part of the George Washington survey. It also contains a producing oil well, which yields from seventy-five to eighty barrels of oil per day. Mr. and Mrs. Scott are members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, of which he is ruling elder. They have four children, namely: Lizzie H., Sadie B., Ida M. and Jennie A.

ISAAC J. DEEDS is a worthy descendant of a well-known pioneer family. He is a son of Isaac Deeds and a grandson of Andrew Deeds.

Andrew Deeds was born January 1, 1760, in eastern Pennsylvania, and came to Washington county, settling on the Dutch fork of Buffalo creek, in Donegal township, about two and three-quarters miles north of Coon Island. He was of German descent, and among the first pioneers of this county. Andrew Deeds was married to Mary Miller, who was born June 20, 1760, in eastern Pennsylvania, a daughter of Jacob Miller, coming with her parents to Donegal township, this county.

Her father, Jacob Miller, was of German birth, and, immigrating with his wife to America, was among the early settlers on Dutch fork of Buffalo creek. Jacob Miller and a neighbor, John Hupp, were both killed on Easter Sunday, 1782. They started together to visit a friend, not knowing that a party of Indians had raided in, as was their custom in the springtime and autumn. Miller and Hupp had nearly arrived at their friend's house, when suddenly they were met by the savage redskins in the path that led through the lonely and uncultivated forest, and, amid the yells and savage shrieks of the painted Indians, they were killed and scalped. Soon the news came to the few settlers that the Indians were making a raid among them, and they all left their homes and made a speedy effort to seek safety in the Miller blockhouse. Soon the few settlers who had succeeded in gaining the blockhouse were surrounded by a party of about seventy Shawanese Indians, and almost without any ammunition, and totally without provisions to eat. The wives of Miller and Hupp were among those who escaped to the fort, and they there prepared ammunition to keep off the Indians. At this moment the latter, leaping from their concealment, appeared in every direction around the blockhouse, and a hot and continuous firing commenced. The female band, in despair and anguish, were forced to the conclusion that the blockhouse would now soon be taken by storm, or envelop them in its flames; and, with no hope of a successful resistance, were about to give up. In this crisis of terrible emergency, but with the consoling language of hope, and with courage sufficiently unflinching for the dire emergency, Providence panoplied those female heroines with daring courage. And then, nerving their arms and steeling their hearts to the severe duties of the moment, they, snatching up their rifles, fired at the approaching savages, and then ran from porthole to porthole, protruding the muzzles in different directions to convey the idea of a great force in the house, at each presentation causing the savages to cower behind trees or other objects for protection. This executed strategy of these pioneer heroines without doubt saved the few inmates from an immediate and horrible death. The Indians, evidently filled with chagrin and disappointment, skulked about the blockhouse till nightfall, and then a few of them left during the night, bearing away with them the scalps of Miller and Hupp. The loss of these two men to the neighborhood was severely felt at a time when men were so much needed; but all hearts in that blockhouse were overflowing with thankfulness and gratitude to a kind and merciful Preserver for vouchsafing to them His aid and protection when their great and terror-filling peril was impending, and saving them from the ruthless hands of the merciless and bloodthirsty savages.

With sad and anxious hearts the wives of Miller and Hupp lived in hopes that their loving husbands would soon arrive in safety at the blockhouse, not knowing then that they were massacred by the savage Indians; so the lifeless bodies of Miller and Hupp remained for several days where they had been left by the Indians. By and by some friends and a few settlers, concluding it was safe to leave the fort, with cautious steps and armed with a few guns, set out in search of Miller and Hupp, whose bodies they found less than one-half mile north of the fort, on a ridge in a small path that led through the dense forest. (The field is now owned by Clint Miller). They brought the lifeless bodies to the Miller blockhouse, and prepared them for burial. They were interred in one grave, a few yards from the blockhouse, and placed side by side, each body being wrapped in a sheet, without any coffin, and some rude puncheons were placed around them in their grave. There was no time for the mourners to prepare a box or coffin for their departed friends, as they did not know how soon the Indians might surround them, and kill or take them all prisoners. And in that ancient and lonely graveyard to-day are lying, clustered around the graves of these two pioneers, the remains of Jacob Klow, Jacob Miller, Jr., Fredrick Miller, Ann Hupp and her daughter Margaret Titus, and other friends. Fredrick and Capt. Jacob were sons of the unfortunate Jacob Miller, Sr. Fredrick died on March 27, 1814, aged forty-three years, and Capt. Jacob Miller died August 20, 1830, aged sixty-eight years. The graveyard where those heroes are buried is situated a few yards from Clint Miller's residence, in a ravine near the waters of Little Buffalo creek. This is one illustrative incident of pioneer life.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Deeds had the following family of children: Adam, Jacob, John, Isaac, Catherine and Mary. After his marriage Mr. Deeds located on a farm adjoining the "Old Miller blockhouse tract of land." He passed the remainder of his life on the farm, dying December 5, 1831, and was followed by his wife October 15, 1842. He was an industrious man, and accumulated a considerable property.

Isaac Deeds, the youngest son of Andrew Deeds, was born August 12, 1800, on the farm in Donegal township, passing his younger days in assisting his father, and attending the subscription schools. He remained at home until after the death of his father, and took care of his mother. On November 15, 1832, he was united in marriage with Sarah Rodgers, who was born September 8, 1809, daughter of Francis and Elizabeth (Hupp) Rodgers, the latter being the daughter of John Hupp. They had two children, Belle and Isaac J. Mr. Deeds passed the first years of married life on his father's farm, devoting his time to agriculture, and dealing extensively in stock. He afterward purchased and moved upon the "Abe Miller" tract of land, adjoining the old Deeds farm. Mr. Deeds was a very successful, sagacious business man, and eventually became one of the largest landholders in Donegal township. Politically, he was originally a Whig, afterward becoming a Republican. He died September 26, 1886, having been preceded by his wife May 12, 1842. Their two children, Isaac J. and Belle, are living on the home farm. Isaac J. is an active member of the Republican party.

JAMES S. BUCHANAN. Of the many countries represented in America, none have bequeathed to the New World a better or more intelligent class than has "bonnie Scotland."

She has given us the noblest and best blood of a nation eminent in the history of the world as patriots, citizens and statesmen. James Buchanan, grandfather of subject, was born in Scotland, and in early manhood came to America, settling on a farm in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., where he died many years ago. He and his wife were members of the Seceder Church.

Thomas Buchanan, father of our subject, was born in 1800, in Chartiers township, this county, and in 1824 was united in marriage with Jane Smiley, who was born in 1804, in Cross Creek township, this county. After their marriage the young people settled on the farm now owned by their son James S., and followed farming and wool growing. He was extensively engaged in raising sheep, making a large profit from the business. In politics he opposed slavery, voted the Democratic ticket, and served the county as supervisor of the poor. Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan were formerly members of the Seceder (now U. P.) Church at Hickory, afterward uniting with the North Buffalo U. P. Church. He died May 7, 1871, followed by his widow in March, 1885. They were the parents of the following children: Nancy Jane (deceased in 1883), Mary Ann (who married Rev. Samuel Alexander, of Abilene, Kans., and died in 1862), Sarah Martha (who married Rev. Josiah Alexander, of Belmont, Ohio, and died in 1854, while visiting her parents), Hester (Mrs. Robert Flanigan, of Mt. Pleasant township), Elizabeth E. (wife of J. D. Smith, in Lawrence county, Penn.), Rebecca Margaret (deceased in 1854), James S. (our subject), Harriet (deceased in 1853), Maria Miller (Mrs. James Herriot, living in Lawrence, Kans.), Caroline (deceased in youth) and Ella S. (wife of William Smith, of Douglas county, Kans.).

James S. Buchanan was born April 1, 1838, on the present home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, receiving his elementary education in the district schools. He then took a course at Duff's Commercial College, graduating with the class of '58. After leaving school he devoted himself to agricultural pursuits. In 1878 he was one of the first to introduce Holstein cattle into Washington county, since which time he has made a specialty of raising that breed, also the Dorset horned and Merino sheep. (H. S. Buchanan, the son, in company with J. B. Henderson, imported the first lot of Dorset horned sheep into Washington county, and it is believed the first importation ever made of sheep direct to said county). In 1861 Mr. Buchanan was united in marriage with Martha L. McCarrel. Her grandfather, Lodowyck McCarrel, was born in Ireland about the close of the last century, came to Washington county and married Martha Leman. They settled in Mt. Pleasant township, and reared a family. Andrew McCarrel, father of Mrs. Buchanan, was born in Mt. Pleasant township, and in early life was married to Elizabeth, daughter of William Wilson, pastor of the U. P. Church at Clinton, Penn. After their marriage they settled on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, where Mr. McCarrel died December 29, 1883, having been preceded by his wife in July, 1874. They were members of the U. P. Church at Hickory, afterward uniting with the Chartiers Cross Roads Church. James S. Buchanan and his wife began wedded life on the home farm, where they have continued to remain. Three children have been born to their union, viz.: Beulah W. (wife of Dr. C. L. Campbell, Hickory), Herbert S. (married in 1889 to Lena, daughter of J. R. Lyle, of Mt. Pleasant township) and Lulu F. married November 30, 1892, to J. B. Henderson, of Washington, Penn.). Mr. Buchanan's farm contains 400 acres of well-cultivated land. In politics he is a Democrat, and is much interested in the recent organization of farmers for mutual protection and co-operation. He is now serving his twenty-second year as justice of the peace, having entered on his fifth term of five years each. He was a strong candidate for the State Legislature in 1886, and has taken an active interest in securing railroads in the community. Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan are members of the Presbyterian Church at Mt. Prospect.

Squire Buchanan was the first man to take an interest in the leasing of land in his part of the county for oil and gas, and was one of the first to call a meeting of the citizens of Mt. Pleasant township; he took an active part in the leasing of 10,000 acres, spending one winter. The first gas well was found on a farm adjoining Mr. Buchanan's, and this led to drilling for gas in Washington county, resulting in oil. Mr. Buchanan has settled many estates, and in many instances acted as administrator. His home is about nine miles from Washington borough, and about two and a half miles from Hickory.

SAMUEL CONNER, a member of one of the early families of Washington county, Penn., is the eldest son of John Conner, a son of Samuel Conner. The grandfather was born and reared in Maryland, and there married to Sarah Graham. They came to this county many years ago, first settling in Burgettstown, where he followed the wheelwright's trade, and afterward moving to Mt. Pleasant township. His wife died in 1821, and he followed her prior to 1848.

John Conner was born February 18, 1810, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, where he passed his boyhood. In early life he was married to Margaret Edgar, a native of Cecil township, this county. She was a daughter of Adam Edgar, a native of Ireland, who came to America in 1786. He married Sarah Jamison, who was born and reared in Bucks county, Penn., and they had eleven children, five sons and six daughters, all now deceased but Thomas, who lives in Boone county, Iowa. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Conner settled in Mt. Pleasant township, thence moving to the farm in Cecil township, now owned by W. J. Kelso. In 1844 John Conner bought 186 acres of the Donald farm in Cecil township, upon which they made their permanent home. Mrs.

Conner died February 14, 1890. They were the parents of six children, as follows: One that died in infancy, Samuel, Adam (who died May 11, 1861), Sarah Jane, Abigail (deceased October 31, 1885) and John (living in Pittsburgh, Penn.). The father is yet living, and has entered his eighty-third year. He was a member of the U. P. Church at Squeers Springs, with which his wife was also connected, and they afterward transferred their membership to the church in Canonsburg.

Samuel Conner was born in 1840 on the home place in Cecil township, this county, and received his education in the schools of the home district. He has always resided in the vicinity of his birth-place, and does a general farming and dairy business. In politics he votes with the Democratic party, and in religious faith he is a member of the U. P. Church.

MRS. JANE (LEE) KERR, a popular and intelligent lady of Cross Creek township, is a granddaughter of Hugh Lee, who was born in Ireland, and was there married to Mary Elliott. They immigrated to America in 1790, settling on the farm in Cross Creek township, Washington Co., Penn., now occupied by a great-grandson, W. C. Lee. Six children were born to this couple: James, William, Hugh, Robert, Ann and Ellen. Of these, Hugh Lee was born in 1773, in County Donegal, Ireland, and came with his father to Washington county. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, which he followed through life. He was united in marriage with Miss Hannah Orr, who was born in 1787, and to their union came children as follows: Mary, William, John, Margaret, an infant unnamed, Hugh, Hannah A., and Jane (Mrs. I. H. Kerr). The father was a very influential citizen, and used all the means in his power to promote the interests of others. In religious faith he was a member of the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church, and in 1818 was elected an elder for life. His death occurred in 1837, in Claysville, while he was attending the Presbytery.

Jane Lee was born March 7, 1827, on the old homestead, and in her early youth attended the common schools of the vicinity. On September 8, 1847, she was united in marriage with Isaac Hampton Kerr, a native of New Jersey, and son of Aaron and Sarah (Peppard) Kerr.

Aaron Kerr was born June 4, 1776, in Maryland, and was married to Sarah Peppard (at the time living near Hackettstown, Md.), daughter of the late Rev. Francis Peppard, of that place. Aaron Kerr was a member of the Presbyterian Church from early manhood, and had been elected four times as ruling elder, first time in Hackettstown (Md.) Church, when but twenty-one years of age.

After their marriage Aaron and Sarah Kerr settled on Pigeon creek, this county, afterward moving to Washington borough, where he was engaged in mercantile business; he was also a ruling elder in the church there. In 1831 he moved to Monongahela City, and there carried on commercial business until 1845, when he came to Cross Creek village, still engaging in mercantile pursuits. In politics he was a Whig, and from 1824 to 1828 was a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature. He served as a member of the constitutional convention in 1836, and was again chosen to the Assembly in 1840. He died May 1, 1854, at the age of seventy-eight years.

Isaac Hampton Kerr, son of Aaron and Sarah (Peppard) Kerr, was born June 24, 1814, in New Jersey, and remained with his father until they came to Cross Creek village. He then married Miss Jane Lee, who bore him three children, viz.: Leeanna (wife of Dr. T. C. M. Stockton, of Cross Creek village); Aaron Hervey (a merchant of Cross Creek village), and Milton Brainard, a merchant in southern Kansas). Mr. Kerr was a thorough business man, following mercantile pursuits during most of his life, and accumulating considerable property. He was a member, trustee and treasurer of the Cross Creek Church for many years. He died February 1, 1866.

THOMAS PETTIT, a prosperous and enterprising farmer of Cross Creek township, Washington Co., Penn., is a son of Matthias Pettit, who was born on a farm near Washington borough. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, but his inclinations were opposed to farm life, and when a boy he learned the tailor's trade. He was married to Sarah, a daughter of Barnabas Hughes, a prominent farmer living near Washington. Soon thereafter Matthias Pettit moved to Elkhart county, Ind., and there worked at his trade the remainder of his life, dying in 1838. He left three children, namely: Margaret Ann (wife of John Munce), Thomas, and William H. (a blacksmith of Beaver Falls, Penn.)

Thomas Pettit was born April 4, 1836, in Elkhart county, Ind., and soon after the death of his father came to the home of his grandfather in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn. He remained on the farm in Amwell township until reaching maturity, and on March 27, 1861, was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Boone, who was born in 1836. The following children have been born to their union: Calvin M., born in 1862 (a clerk in R. P. Wallace's glass store, Pittsburgh, Penn.); William H., born in 1864 (living with his father); Minnie, born in 1866 (wife of G. Hunter Patterson, foreman of the R. P. Wallace glass store, Pittsburgh); Charles E., born in 1868, and Thomas M., born in 1873, are residing with their parents. Thomas Pettit began life working by the month, continuing to labor as a farm hand for five or six years, when he began farming on shares. Two years after his marriage he purchased his first farm, which was situated near Washington, but sold it the following year. He then lived in different parts of the county, sometimes buying a farm and occasionally renting one. In 1889 he bought a fine place of 102 acres, where he has since resided, and upon which is a comfortable residence, which enhances the value of the property. Politically, Thomas Pettit is a staunch Republican, as were his ancestors, his grandfather being one of the two men in Amwell township, this county, who voted for J. P. Hale for President on the Abolition ticket. Mr. Pettit is an active member of the Disciple Church at Middletown.

JAMES HAMILTON (deceased), who in his lifetime was a successful business man of North Strabane township, was of Irish parentage. His father, Alexander Hamilton, was born in the Emerald Isle, and when a small boy came with his parents to America. They settled in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., where the parents died, and Alexander was married to Jane Colwell. Their children were James, Joseph C. and John (both farming in North Strabane township), Mary (widow of William Crawford), Sarah, Robert C., Alexander, Elizabeth, James, Anna and Margaret. Of these, Robert C., Alexander, Elizabeth, James, Anna and Margaret are deceased. Mr. Hamilton voted with the Democratic party, but was not an active politician. He and his wife were both active members of the old Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Hamilton died in 1860, and was followed to the grave by her husband in 1864.

James Hamilton was born December 27, 1809, in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., and grew to manhood on the home place, receiving his early education at the country schools of the vicinity. On October 1, 1846, he was united in marriage with Miss Lucy Bushyager, who was born February 17, 1816, in Washington county, Penn., daughter of George and Mary Bushyager. Mr. Bushyager was born in Germany and immigrated to Pennsylvania, where he was married to Mary Miller, a native of that State. Nine children were born to them, of whom are now living: Sarah (wife of Joseph Gilchrist, a farmer of Iowa), John (a farmer of Westmoreland county, Penn.,) and Lucy (Mrs. James Hamilton). Mr. Bushyager was a farmer and died in Westmoreland county, Penn.; his wife died in Iowa.

Mr. and Mrs. James Hamilton had children as follows: Four are now living—Robert C., born February 27, 1851; Margaret, born March 20, 1853 (married December 21, 1882, to Samuel McNary); James A., born October 16, 1855, and George L. born September 1, 1858; Sarah J., who died March 18, 1889, and three that died in infancy. Of this family George L. was married March 21, 1879, to Miss Sadie A. Chamberlain, who was born October 9, 1859, a native of Washington county, and three children were born to them, namely: James H., born December 17, 1879; Nelly B., born September 27, 1881, and Hannah E., born October 19, 1883. Mr. Hamilton had a good farm of 106 acres, lying half a mile south of Thomas. In politics he was a Democrat, and was ever interested in all worthy enterprises. He died November 25, 1892, aged eighty-three years.

JAMES JOHNSTON, who, since 1884, has lived a retired life in the borough of Washington, is a native of Canton township, this county, born April 12, 1821. His grandfather, James Johnston, was a native of Lancaster county, Penn., where he was married, and reared the following children: Nancy (Mrs. Thomas Connelly), Jennie (Mrs. Benjamin McKehan), and Samuel. In 1810 he came to Washington county and settled in Canton township, where he died. He was a leading Democrat, and a member of the Presbyterian Church at Washington.

Samuel Johnston, son of this old pioneer, was also a native of Lancaster county, born in 1787. About 1818 he was married to Sarah McClane, of Chartiers township, this county, and they settled down to the stern realities of life on the old home place. The names of the children born to them are James, John M., Samuel G., Sarah Martha and Nancy J. The father of this family died June 14, 1870, the mother about 1841. They were members of the Presbyterian Church at Washington, and in politics Mr. Johnston was a Democrat.

James Johnston was educated in the public schools of his native township, and received a thoroughly practical training to farm life, which vocation he successfully followed until 1884, when he retired from active labor. On January 21, 1845, he was married to Mary M. McClane, who was born December 31, 1824, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., a daughter of Ebenezer and Jane (McMurray) McClane, and the children born to them were Samuel M., E. McClane, John (deceased), Sophronia (deceased), John (a physician practicing in Wellsburgh, W. Va.) and Anna J. The mother of this family was called from earth September 17, 1891, and was buried in Washington cemetery. Of the sons born to James and Mary M. (McClane) Johnston, E. McClane married, in the fall of 1875, Miss Rachel Hill, daughter of Abner and Lizzie Hill, and five children were born to this union, viz.: Studie (deceased in May, 1890), Mamie (deceased in January, 1886), Bessie, Ora, and one that died in infancy at the time of its mother's death in June, 1887. John married, in 1886, Miss Nannie Adams, and three children came to bless their home, viz.: William Parvin, Huldah Margaret and James Howard. Samuel M. and E. McClane Johnston are each operating farms owned by their father in Canton township.

Mr. Johnston, by assiduous labor and sound judgment in the management of his affairs, accumulated, during the three decades of his active life, a comfortable competency, and he now owns 330 acres of valuable land in Canton township, besides which he has an elegant brick dwelling on Jefferson avenue in the borough of Washington, where he and his daughter, Anna J., reside. He is a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church in Washington. In politics he is a straight Democrat, and has served as school director nine years with marked ability.

MRS. ELIZABETH J. MILLER is a granddaughter of David Glenn, who was born in Coleraine, Ireland. He came to Cumberland county, Penn., and married a Miss Thompson, who died not long afterward, leaving him one son, William. After her death David Glenn was married in Cumberland county, Penn., to Nancy Dunlap, a native of County Monaghan, Ireland. They first located near Newville, Penn., thence moving to Westmoreland county, and in 1809 made a permanent settlement in Washington county, where his children were reared as follows: William (the son of his first wife, who died in Chartiers township, this county); Gabriel (deceased in Claysville, Ohio); David, Samuel and John; Jane (who died in 1817); Polly (who died in March, 1882, when nearly ninety years of age) and James (the father of Mrs. Miller), all now deceased. James Glenn was born September 3, 1798, near Carlisle, Penn., and March 29, 1836, was united in marriage with Maria McCoy, who was born May 15, 1804, in Chartiers township. They have four children: James H., Samuel D., Anna M. and Cora L.

On May 29, 1884, Elizabeth J. Glenn was united in marriage with Col. Robert W. Miller, son of Jacob and Jane (Filson) Miller. The father was a native of Chester county, Penn., and the mother of eastern Virginia. They came to this county in an early day, and settled on the farm now occupied by his youngest son. He was a wagon maker, and erecting his shop upon the farm, followed his trade until his death, which occurred in November, 1857. They had a family of twelve children, but one of whom is now living.

Robert W. Miller was born October 12, 1815, in Chartiers township, and received his early education in the district schools of the neighborhood. He afterward entered Washington College, where he was a member of the class of '36, but did not graduate. Miller was a well-known and universally respected citizen, his demise being mourned by many friends. He was a man of fine personal appearance, six feet in stature, and well proportioned.

MRS. LILLIE M. AXTELL is the daughter of John Gregg, and granddaughter of John and Nancy Gregg. Among the early settlers of Washington county, whose deeds are an undying monument to their memory, were the ancestors of this well-known family.

L. M. Artell

In 1790 three brothers—Henry, William and John Gregg—left Ireland, the country of their birth, and crossed the ocean to America. After a voyage of sixteen weeks they all came to Washington county, Penn., and settled in East Pike Run township, where Henry secured a tract of 349 acres called the "Burning Mine," now owned by a Mr. Duvall. Henry Gregg served as justice of the peace in 1796. He was married to Jane Dowler, and of their children were: John, Henry, Thomas and Edward. The parents died in 1834 in West Pike Run township. The second brother of the three who emigrated from Ireland was William Gregg, and he was married in the old country to a lady, who bore him the following children: Henry, John, William, Andrew, Robert, Christina (wife of John Crow) and Mrs. Jackman. John Gregg, the younger brother of the three who came to America in 1790, married in 1794, Miss Nancy Gregg, a native of Ireland. The names and dates of birth of their children are: James, August 8, 1795; Eleanor, May 22, 1797; Andrew, April 9, 1799; Mary, September 8, 1801; Henry, April 28, 1804; Sarah, September 8, 1806; Ann, November 9, 1808; John, January 23, 1811; Margaret, February 8, 1813, and Elizabeth, February 11, 1815. The father died July 20, 1841, followed by the mother April 14, 1844; she was a member of the M. E. Church. The three brothers who first settled in America were all members of the M. E. Church, and in politics affiliated with the Whig party.

John Gregg, son of John and Nancy Gregg, was born in Washington county, Penn., on the pioneer farm in East Pike Run township, where his boyhood was passed. On September 25, 1851, he was united in marriage with Sarah Conway, who was born August 31, 1824, and they were the parents of the following children: William H., born August 21, 1853; John E., born May 30, 1856; Simeon, born February 3, 1858; James, born June 3, 1861; Nancy J., born November 9, 1863; and Lillie M., whose name opens this sketch. Of these the four sons are all married, and live on farms in Vernon county, Mo., while Nancy J. lives with her sister, Mrs. Lillie M. Axtell, on the home place in East Pike Run township. The father passed his entire life on the homestead, and was an active worker in the Republican party. He died March 15, 1879, the mother on May 6, 1891. She was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Lillie M. Gregg was born January 23, 1865, on the home farm in East Pike Run township, and remained with her parents during girlhood. On April 29, 1886, she was united in marriage with Luther M. Axtell, a son of Rev. Luther Axtell, a Presbyterian clergyman, who was born and reared in Washington county, Penn., and there married to Sarah Lincoln. Since his death, which occurred March 23, 1886, his widow has resided in Coal Centre. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Luther M. Axtell was born January 9, 1855, in Greene county, Penn., and was reared and educated in the town of Coal Centre, this county. He graduated at the Southwestern State Normal School, California, Penn., in 1880, and afterward founded and conducted private schools with great success for several years, and became principal of the West Brownsville public schools, also serving in succession, and with the same degree of capability, as principal of the Burgettstown and Coal Centre schools. As an instructor in the public schools he has never been surpassed. "He introduced into his school some of the finest points of the 'New Education,' and with the introduction came his marvelous success, which was the result of a determined and powerful intellect. He ended his brilliant career as a teacher at Grandville, Penn., and from the school at that place will come many who will show the power of his intellect." In 1891 he was elected county recorder on the Republican ticket, having from early life taken an active interest in politics. Mr. Axtell died March 18, 1891, at Washington, Penn. (whether he had moved soon after his election), leaving a widow, and one daughter, Sarah, who was born March 17, 1889. He had a long and severe illness, which he bore with Christian fortitude, and the end came quickly and peacefully, he remaining conscious until the last. His remains repose in Howe cemetery, near Coal Centre. Mrs. Axtell has a well-cultivated farm of 136 acres in East Pike Run township, where she has resided since the death of her husband.

SAMUEL McNARY (deceased). No family has been more prominently connected with the history of Washington county, and no name is better known than that of McNary. Samuel McNary is a grandson of Thomas McNary, and a son of David McNary, who was born in Scotland, and, coming to Pennsylvania when yet a lad, was afterward married to Jane Edgar, a native of Ireland. Their son, Samuel McNary, was born January 22, 1822, and passed his boyhood in the usual pursuits of rural life. Two weeks after attaining his majority he was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of David and Margaret (Martin) Templeton, both of whom were natives of this county. Mr. and Mrs. McNary began wedded life as tenants, but when his father died he inherited 140 acres in North Strabane township, to which they removed, and where they resided until October 6, 1891, when they located in Houstonville, Chartiers township. They reared a family of thirteen children, as follows: Jane (wife of George Black), Margaret (deceased), Mary (deceased wife of James Pollock), Ann (living at home), Belle (Mrs. Samuel Berry), Lizzie (married to James Kelso), Ella (living at home), Edgar (married to Luella, daughter of William Morgan), David T. (married to Almeda Clark), John (married to Jennie Whitely), Joseph B. (married to Mattie Pattison), James Martin (who married Lizzie Hess) and Emma (at home). Mr. McNary always took an active part in promoting the educational interests of his community, and in politics was an ardent supporter of the principles of the Republican party. He was a member of the United Presbyterian Church, in which he served as elder for many years, and with which his family are connected. He passed away September 29, 1892.

AARON HERVEY KERR, a prominent figure in Washington county business circles, is a grand-son of Aaron Kerr, who was born June 4, 1776, in Maryland, and was married to Sarah Peppard (at the time living near Hackettstown, Md.), daughter of the late Rev. Francis Peppard, of that place. Aaron Kerr was a member of the Presbyterian Church from early manhood, and had been elected four times as ruling elder, first time in the Hackettstown (Md.) Church, when but twenty-one years of age. After their marriage Aaron and Sarah Kerr settled on Pigeon creek, this county, afterward moving to Washington borough, where he was engaged in mercantile business; he was also a ruling elder in the church there. In 1831 he moved to Monongahela City, and there carried on commercial business until 1845, when he came to Cross Creek village, still engaging in mercantile pursuits. In politics he was a Whig, and from 1824 to 1828 was a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature. He served as a member of the constitutional convention in 1836, and was again chosen to the Assembly in 1840. He died May 1, 1851, at the age of seventy-eight.

Isaac Hampton Kerr, son of Aaron and Sarah (Peppard) Kerr, was born June 24, 1814, in New Jersey, and remained with his father until they came to Cross Creek village. He then married Miss Jane Lee, a granddaughter of Hugh Lee, who was born in Ireland, where he married Mary Elliott. In 1790 they emigrated to America, settling on the farm in Cross Creek township, Washington Co., Penn., now occupied by a great-grandson, W. C. Lee. Six children were born to this couple: James, William, Hugh, Robert, Ann and Ellen. Of these Hugh Lee was born in 1773, in County Donegal, Ireland, and came with his father to Washington county. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, which he followed through life. He was united in marriage with Miss Hannah Orr, who was born in 1787, and to their union came children as follows: Mary, William, John, Margaret, an infant unnamed, Hugh, Hannah A. and Jane (Mrs. I. H. Kerr). The father was a very influential citizen, and used all the means in his power to promote the interests of others. In religious faith he was a member of the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church, and in 1818 was elected an elder for life. His death occurred in 1837, in Claysville, while he was attending the Presbytery.

To Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Hampton Kerr were born three children, viz.: Leeanna (wife of Dr. T. C. M. Stockton, of Cross Creek village), Aaron Hervey (a merchant of Cross Creek village) and Milton Brainard (a merchant in southern Kansas). Mr. Kerr was a thorough business man, following mercantile pursuits during most of his life, and accumulating considerable property. He was a member, trustee and treasurer of the Cross Creek Church for many years. He died February 1, 1866; his widow is yet living in Cross Creek township.

Aaron Hervey Kerr, the eldest son of Isaac H. and Jane (Lee) Kerr, was born May 29, 1850, in Cross Creek village. He passed his boyhood days in assisting his father in the store, and thus gained a knowledge of mercantile life, which has been the foundation of his career as one of the most successful business men of Washington county. He attended Duff's Business College, at Pittsburgh, Penn., from which he graduated in 1868. He then took charge of the extensive business of his father (who had died two years previous), having the entire management of the store. In 1867, when but seventeen years of age, Mr. Kerr made his first eastern trip to replenish his stock of goods. From the first he evinced traits which comprise the successful business man, and though young in years, he has achieved a reputation of which many an older and more experienced man might be proud. On May 27, 1874, Mr. Kerr was united in marriage with Miss Georgette Gault, daughter of David Gault, a prominent farmer of Cross Creek township. She is a graduate of the Steubenville Seminary, class of '68, and is actively interested in the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. They have two daughters: Janie Blanche, born March 31, 1875 (attending Hollidaysburg, (Penn.) school for girls), and Grace Matilda, born March 14, 1880. Mr. Kerr has been connected with the Burgettstown National Bank since its organization, formerly as a stockholder and member of the first board of directors, then as vice-president, and is now president of that institution, having been unanimously elected at the January meeting of directors in 1887. In religion he is a member and treasurer of the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church. In politics he has always been a staunch member of the Republican party.

His father was born on Ruff's creek, Greene county, Penn. He followed farming, and passed nearly all of his life near Amity, Amwell township, this county. His children were: John, Jacob, J. J. W. Swart was born September 1, 1823, near the present site of Amity, Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., and lived with his father's family until he was twenty-one years of age. He then moved to Greene county, Penn., and there took up and cleared 200 acres of land, to which he afterward added forty acres. Dr. William W. Sprowls was born March 30, 1852, on the old place in Bentleyville, Washington county. At the age of seventeen he began teaching school, continuing in that profession for twelve years. in addition to his practice took a half interest in a drug store with J. W. Lyle. JOHN A. DICKIE, a prosperous and well-known farmer of Donegal township, is of Scotch descent. His grandfather, Alexander Dickie, was born in the west of Scotland, and followed a farmer's life. He was there married to a countrywoman, and their children were: Alexander, Robert, John, James (deceased in Scotland), Nancy, and one whose name is unknown. These children were all born in Scotland, and all save James accompanied their parents to the United States, in about the year 1832. They landed at New York, and moving westward, located in the northern part of Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn. Here Mr. Alexander continued to follow farming until his wife died, when he soon afterward went to live with his daughter-in-law, and at her home passed away.

John Dickie, son of Alexander Dickie, was born in Scotland, and passed his early years on his father's farm in Pennsylvania. He was married to Margaret Wilson, a native of Fayette county, Penn., and they had five children, namely: Elizabeth (living in Claysville, this county, the widow of John Mills), John A. (our subject), Ann (Mrs. Nelson McNeal, of Donegal township), Robert (a farmer of Donegal township), and William (deceased in infancy). For a number of years after his marriage Mr. Dickie followed farming in the northern part of Donegal township, and then moved to West Virginia, where he died in 1854. He was a Democrat in political opinions. His widow is now living in Claysville.

John A. Dickie, the eldest son of John and Margaret (Wilson) Dickie, was born December 7, 1844, in Donegal township, and received his education at the country schools. At the age of ten years, his father having died, he went to live with Guyan Moore, of Donegal township, where he made his home, and assisted in the farm work, until the spring of 1862, when he remained a short time with William Lytle. On August 16, 1862, he enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I.; he took part in the battle of Gettysburg, and being severely wounded on the second day of that fight, was obliged to remain in the hospital nine months. On recovering, he joined his regiment at Deep Bottom, Va., and the next day was again wounded. Mr. Dickie was unfit for service during the remainder of the war, and when the struggle was ended, he returned to Washington county, Penn., and engaged in farm work. On January 27, 1869, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Sarah Jane (Hicks) Miller, widow of William Miller, and a native of Marshall county, W. Va. To their union have been born three daughters: Margaret Elizabeth, Anna Mary and Fannie Esther, all of whom are living at home. After his marriage Mr. Dickie farmed in Donegal township, and in 1879 purchased his present well-improved piece of farm land, located about two miles west of Claysville, along the National pike, formerly called the "Ned McLaughlin farm." He has erected a new residence, also a good barn, and these improvements have greatly enhanced the value and appearance of the place. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville, in which Mr. Dickie is a ruling elder. Politically he is a lifelong Republican.

WILLIAM W. KEENAN. This prominent and successful agriculturist, and highly esteemed citizen of Donegal township, where he owns one of the finest of the many excellent farms to be here seen, deserves more than a passing notice in the pages of this Biographical Record. He was born March 19, 1832, in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., on the farm he now owns.

Henry Keenan, grandfather of subject, was a native of Belfast, Ireland, where he was twice married, his first wife bearing him two children: James and Samuel, and his second wife also two children: John and Martha. The father of this family, some time prior to the year 1800, came to this country with his wife and some of his children, settling in Independence township, Washington Co., Penn., where he passed the rest of his days. His son James was one of these pioneer immigrants, and the first record we can find of him in Washington county is of his working as a day laborer on a farm in Independence township. In 1812 he was married to Elizabeth Smith, a native of Washington county, who bore him eight children, the following being their names and the dates of their birth: Jane, January 29, 1813; Henry, June 15, 1815; Mary Ann, September 11, 1817; John, February 7, 1819; George, September 14, 1822; Forgnus, February 10, 1824; Samuel, June 25, 1828, and William W., March 19, 1832.

After his first marriage Mr. Keenan settled on a tract of land he had purchased in Donegal township, near the confluence of Buck run and Buffalo creek, and here he followed agriculture all his life, meeting with hard-earned success, and increasing, year by year, his possessions. He died April 24, 1853, on the farm he had first located on, and was followed by his wife March 2, 1854. He was a prominent member of and liberal contributor toward the Dutch Fork Disciple Church, and in politics he was a lifelong Democrat.

William W. Keenan early learned the practical lessons of farm life on his father's farm, his literary education, such as it was, being received at the schools of the neighborhood. His parents were for many years almost helpless, requiring no small amount of care and attention, a great portion of which fell to the lot of our subject, and as a consequence his attendance at school was much circumscribed. He remained with his parents as long as they lived, and after their decease took charge of the home farm, which he has since successfully conducted. On April 3, 1866, Mr. Keenan was married to Amanda Wallace, who was born February 3, 1832, in Ohio county, W. Va., a daughter of Robert Wallace, of Brooke county, W. Va., who was born May 5, 1805, in Westmoreland county, Penn. He went to West Virginia with his parents when a lad, and there married Hannah Arthur, who was born in 1810, in Independence township, Washington Co., Penn. They removed to Licking county, Ohio, where the mother died August 15, 1846. They had seven children, as follows: Amanda M. (Mrs. Keenan); Robert A., teaching in a commercial college at Topeka, Kans.; Mary Jane (deceased at the age of three years); Samuel B., who died at the age of four years; William A. (a farmer, in Kansas); David M. (who died in infancy), and one who died unnamed. Mr. and Mrs. Keenan have no children of their own, but have adopted two, a boy and a girl, for whom they provided a good home: the girl, now grown to young womanhood, is married to Henry C. Anderson; the boy, now a young man, is yet living with his foster parents. Mr. and Mrs. Keenan are members of the Disciple Church. In political sentiments he was originally a Whig, and since the formation of the party has been a straight Republican. He justly enjoys the respect and esteem of his friends and neighbors, and his success in life is marked to day by a pleasant home and one of the finest farms in Donegal township.

MICHAEL DAUGHERTY, a leading merchant of West Alexander, was born June 30, 1819, in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a son of Roger Daugherty, who was born in County Donegal, Ireland, and coming to America when a young man, he was married to Ellen Aiken, a native of Maryland. They then settled in Washington county, Penn., first locating on Pigeon creek, where they remained several years, after which they came to Donegal township. To this pioneer couple the following children were born: Charles, Mary (Mrs. William Emorick), Elizabeth (Mrs. Thomas Arnold), Isabella (wife of James Campsey), John, Bridget (Mrs. Samuel Kirk), Michael (our subject), Sarah (wife of S. Patterson), and Eleanor (Mrs. John Kirk). The mother of this family died February 23, 1866, aged seventy-nine years, four months, seventeen days.

Michael Daugherty received his education at the subscription schools of Donegal township. At the age of eighteen years he was apprenticed to Joseph McKusky, of West Alexander, to learn the tailor's trade, and remained with him three years. He afterward began business as a merchant tailor in partnership with Samuel Galloway, and so continued for ten years. Mr. Daugherty then purchased a confectionery store, which he has since carried on with well-merited success. On March 8, 1842, he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of David Wilson, of West Alexander, and they had two children: Minerva (deceased), and R. B., of Washington borough. This wife dying May 15, 1849, he was next married on March 27, 1851, to Angelina, daughter of George Young, of West Virginia, and they have had two daughters: Frances E. (deceased wife of Rev. E. J. Smith), and Ida M. (Mrs. James Sutherland). Mr. Daugherty is a representative self-made man, having commenced life with but little, and by industry and enterprise has achieved success. He is a staunch member of the M. E. Church; in politics he was formerly a Whig, and is now an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party. He has served as burgess of West Alexander, and as a member of the borough council, and is recognized as a useful, loyal citizen.

Mr. Weygandt followed farming principally, and was a prosperous man. He was a prominent Democrat, and held the offices of road commissioner and township clerk. He and his wife were members of the Lutheran Church, while their children are all Presbyterians. Mr. Weygandt died in 1861, on the old farm in Amwell township.

John M. Weygandt, the subject of this memoir, was married on October 31, 1878, to Miss Anna B. Darlington, daughter of Griffith and Martha Darlington, of Washington, this county, and three children have been born to them, viz.: Mabel, Albert and Robert. Thomas Grier located in Chester county, Penn., thence removing to Cumberland, Penn., where he married, and reared a family of twelve children.

James Grier, a son of the pioneer Thomas, was a native of Cumberland county, Penn., and in early life was married to a Miss Espy, who died soon after their union. James Grier then made choice of a second wife in the person of Mary Staurt, who bore him the following children: Samuel S. (deceased), Jennie, Sarah Ann, William James, Rebecca, Frances and Thomas S. All of this family are devout members of the Central Presbyterian Church, of Caouensburg. Mr. Grier votes with the Republican party.

JAMES CARROLL, a highly-respected and much esteemed farmer citizen of West Finley township, was born November 15, 1833, on the old Carroll homestead in East Finley township, this county.

Robert Carroll and wife, accompanied by his two brothers, John and Hamilton, and a sister Jane, emigrated in 1760 from Ireland to America, locating in a place called Mingo, western Pennsylvania, thence moving in a few years to East Finley township, Washington Co., where they settled on one of the headwaters of Wheeling creek, near the present postoffice of Gale, and began cutting down the forest trees until a space was cleared for the log cabin (perhaps the first in that vicinity) which they soon erected. Like all the pioneer settlers, they were in hourly danger from the hostile savages, and endured the inevitable hardships of backwoods life. In 1781 work began in earnest, and Washington county was founded. In the summer of that year John and Hamilton Carroll, who resided with their brother Robert, went out one morning, and when but a short distance from the cabin both men were shot down by the Indians. Robert's wife (who with her two children was in the cabin) heard the report, and knowing the boys had no firearms with them, immediately grasped the situation; she snatched the infant from his couch and with him in her arms, and her little son of four years clinging to her side, ran to a cornfield near by, where she waited till the Indians reached the cabin. The faithful dog remained on guard at the door, and barked vigorously at the murderers, who were obliged to kill him before they could enter the house. The heroic mother knew when the barking of the dog ceased that the Indians were busily engaged in ransacking the house, and immediately taking advantage of the opportunity ran for life with her children to the nearest fort, which was five miles distant (now at Prosperity), though she had to travel much further; but she reached it safely at last, the infant in her arms, and little James running by her side. While these terrible scenes were in progress the husband and father was absent, having left home a day or two before, and gone to a mill on the Monongahela river. On returning home he was horrified to find the floor stained with blood, and other evidences of the presence of the marauding savages. Almost heart-broken the poor man hurried to the fort, and was overjoyed to find his wife and children safe within, but heard with anguish of the terrible fate of his brothers. A few days later a party of men left the fort, and finding the dead bodies of John and Hamilton (whose scalps the Indians had taken as trophies), buried them in what has since been known as the Carroll graveyard: these two victims of Indian fury being the first who were there interred. The burying ground is but a short distance from where the cabin stood. After all traces of the Indians had disappeared, Robert and his wife returned home and were not again molested. The infant Robert, who was saved from the Indians by his mother, grew to manhood and married Margaret Craig, who bore him one daughter; while James, whose little feet proved of such good service on that memorable day, was united in marriage with Margaret Marshall, to which union the following children were born: William, Robert, John, Hamilton, James, Hugh, Joseph, Thomas, Mary and Jane.

John Carroll, father of subject, was born in 1808 on the same farm as was his son James, and was here reared to agricultural pursuits, which he followed on the old homestead until 1855, in which year he moved to West Finley township, where he passed the rest of his days, dying in 1876. He had married a Miss Rebecca Donley, and they had seven children, as follows: James, the subject of this sketch; William D., who married Melissa Alexander; John H., who married Anna Wirt; Hamilton B., who married Ida Underwood; Elizabeth, married to Harrison Thompson; Mary, married to Jackson Steele, and Sarah, married to William Eckols. John Carroll was a practical brick burner. Politically he was a solid Democrat until the breaking out of the Civil war.

James Carroll came to West Finley township with his father in 1855, and has been a resident of the same ever since, living on various farms from time to time, but finally settling on his present fine property, which is well equipped with all modern improvements, including a comfortable and commodious dwelling. Mr. Carroll was married September 30, 1858, to Miss Agnes Patterson, who was born January 12, 1840, in West Finley township, daughter of Robert and Sarah (Rodgers) Patterson, and to this union six children have been born, viz.: Ola G., wife of W. L. Blayney; Lulu J., wife of Harry Sprowls, and Ella, Cora M., John H. and Alta Rebecca, all at home. Politically Mr. Carroll is a staunch Republican.

JOSHUA AND ANDREW G. PLYMIRE are descended from a hardy and industrious race of people, who (according to the earliest authentic record) first settled in York county, Penn. The exact date of their immigration to this country is unknown, but they were among the earliest pioneers of that county. The grandfather of Joshua and Andrew G. Plymire moved at an early date to Washington county, Penn., bringing his family with him. The journey was necessarily slow and tedious, the baggage being carried on the backs of horses, while the family usually walked beside them, but they finally arrived in Washington county, and erected their cabin home on the farm which is now the property of their descendants. Years of toil and privations followed, of which the present generation can form no adequate conception, surrounded as we are today by the comforts and luxuries of life. But they struggled bravely on, these heroic pioneers, and prepared the way for the comfortable homes and cultivated fields which we possess. To Mr. and Mrs. Plymire were born children as follows: Henry, Adam, Martin, Barney, John, Samuel, Barbara, Elizabeth and Catherine. In political opinions Mr. Plymire was a staunch Democrat, and in religion he was one of the organizers of the Lutheran Church.

John Plymire, a son of the above named pioneer, was born in York county, Penn., and was only two years of age when his father came to Washington county. He passed his boyhood days on the home farm, and received a limited education, as was the common lot of the children of the frontier. On attaining mature age he was united in marriage with Catherine Gantz, who was a member of one of the old families of the county, and she bore him the following children: Joshua, Absalom G. (born in September, 1824), Sarah (Mrs. Philip Welch), Phoebe (Mrs. William De Normandie), Barbara (Mrs. Joseph England), Andrew G., Mahala (Mrs. Henry De Normandie), Lewis, and Mary (wife of J. H. Stewart). After his marriage Mr. Plymire settled on the home place in South Strabane township, where he resided until his death. He united with the Lutheran Church in early youth, and died in that faith in 1870, having been preceded by his wife in 1853; both are now buried in Washington cemetery. In political preferences he was an active Democrat.

Joshua Plymire, son of John and Catherine (Gantz) Plymire, was born March 19, 1823, on his father's farm in South Strabane township, Washington county, and passed his youth at home. He is an active member of the Democratic party, and a liberal supporter of various enterprises tending toward the general improvement.

Andrew G. Plymire, third son of John and Catherine Plymire, was born July 12, 1833, on the paternal acres. On December 19, 1867, he was united in marriage with Melissa E., daughter of Jacob Harshman, of Buffalo township, this county, and they have had the following children: Harry, Walter, Boyd, Samuel and Alvin. After his marriage Mr. Plymire came to the farm where he now resides. He is an enterprising citizen, and a member of the Democratic party. In religious connection he is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Washington.

THOMAS FORSYTH. Among the leading business men of Canonsburg this gentleman is a prominent figure. His grandparents were natives of Ireland, and their children immigrated to America in an early day, locating in Independence and Cross Creek townships, Washington Co., Penn.

Thomas Forsyth, one of the children of the above-mentioned family, was born in County Down, Ireland, and was about eighteen years of age when he came with the rest of the family to America, having previously learned the tailor's trade. He first located in Independence township, this county, some years afterward moved to Venice, then purchased a farm in Cecil township, this county, where most of his life was passed. He was married to Margaret, daughter of William Crawford, a native of Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and their children were William C., John, Thomas, Nancy (wife of James Quinn), George and Oliver. The father was a Whig and Republican. In church relations he was formerly connected with the Covenanters Society, then united with the Seceder Church. Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth are buried in Clinton, Allegheny county, whither they had removed a few years before their death.

Thomas Forsyth, son of Thomas and Margaret (Crawford) Forsyth, was born April 25, 1825, in Independence township, this county, and attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood during his boyhood, which afforded but meager advantages. At the age of fourteen years he entered the employ of his father in the tailor business, serving an apprenticeship of six years. In 1845 he opened a tailor establishment in Hickory, this county, which he conducted for many years. On September 7, 1817, he was married to Jane A. McNary, a native of Mt. Pleasant township, daughter of Samuel McNary. In 1873 Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth moved to Steubenville, Ohio. While a resident of Steubenville Mr. Forsyth invented Forsyth's system of actual measurement, whereby an impress of the body is transferred to the cloth, which system is still in practical use. In 1876 he came to Canonsburg, this county, where he conducted an extensive business until 1888. His son, A. M. Forsyth, being a practical tailor, is continuing the business at the old stand. He is married to Miss M. M. Smith, of Canonsburg. Thomas Forsyth is an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party, and is now serving as director of the public schools. In religious faith he is a member and elder of the Central Presbyterian Church. The following children have been born to this marriage: McNary (who was educated in Washington and Jefferson College, is a graduate of Western Theological Seminary, and was a Presbyterian minister; he married Miss Annie Birchfield, of Allegheny City, Penn.; was placed at Millvale church); Mary Margaret (Mrs. George Ralston); Samuel T.; Alvin M.; C. J. (attended Washington and Jefferson College, then attended the Western Theological Seminary and is now a Presbyterian clergyman; he married Miss Anna McGahey, of Hubbard, Ohio; he is situated at West Elizabeth, Penn.), and James W. Of these children, McNary, M. M. Ralston, Samuel T. and James W. are deceased.

JAMES H. MCGOWEN. This well-known, influential citizen of Franklin township is a native of the county, born February 19, 1828, in Amwell township.

His grandfather, James McGowen, who was born near Philadelphia, Penn., the youngest of seven children, came to Washington county with his brothers Robert and William, and all three made a settlement here. In early life James McGowen was apprenticed to a manufacturer of reeds, serving his time in this county. He used to go to Cincinnati in a canoe, starting from Wheeling, and bring back material for his trade. When he was quite a young man he accompanied Col. Williamson against the Indians through Virginia and Ohio, and had many narrow escapes, though he was never injured. At about the age of twenty-six he was married to Abigail Haris, who bore him a large family of children, of whom James was the only one to attain majority; Mr. McGowen's second wife was a Miss Foster, who also bore him a large family. His first dwelling house was erected on the ground now occupied by the colored M. E. church, and he had to make a clearing for it among the hazel bushes. This venerable pioneer died at the age of ninety-two years, in politics a Jacksonian Democrat, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church.

James McGowen, the father of subject, passed his early life both in town and on his father's farm. He was well educated, having attended, in addition to the common schools, Washington College; he taught school for many years in the county, proving a most successful teacher. When a young man he married Mary, daughter of Daniel Hughes, and the children born to their union are: Abigail (Mrs. William Adams), James H., Elizabeth (Mrs. Wilson Wylie) and Mary. The father died March 26, 1871, the mother August 1, 1886, and both rest in Washington cemetery. They were members of the M. E. Church, and in politics Mr. McGowen was originally a Whig, afterward a Republican

James H. McGowen has spent his entire life on the farm where he now resides, where his parents had moved when he was but three weeks old; he attended during a few of the winter months the schools of his district, but for the most part he is self educated. On February 10, 1854, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of D. T. Hughes, of New York, and their children are Mary Miranda (Mrs. Richard Wilson), Albert A. (married to Laura, daughter of John Ramsey), Eliza L., Warren Blachby, Lizzie A., Edwin R. H., James H., Jr., and Etta W. The family are all adherents of the M. E. Church at Washington, of which Mr. and Mrs. McGowen have been members for forty years. In his political relations he was originally a Whig, having cast his first vote for Gen. Scott, and since the organization of the Republicans he has been a member of that party. He has been supervisor, and has served as school director nine years with credit to himself and the utmost satisfaction to his constituents.

A. O. DAY. In 1795 there came by slow and painful stages a few families from Morris town, N. J., to Washington county, Penn., to found homes for themselves on the frontier; and, lured by the reports of old neighbors who had some years previously settled there, they took up land and erected their cabins in Morris township. Among these were the family of Artemas Day—consisting of himself, his wife (Bethany (Axtell) Day) and their children, Bethuel, Parmelia, Sarah, Luther, Daniel and Artemas; and that of Zephaniah Hathaway, with his wife (Sarah (Prudent) Hathaway) and their children, Joseph and Hannah. Bound together by old friendship, and common cause against nature and Indians, these families were destined to still closer relationship, for the little Daniel Day, three years old at the time of that trying journey across the mountains, and Hannah Hathaway, two years his junior, were married in 1818. They too, settled in Morris township, where their busy lives were spent.

Artemas Day, the pioneer of this family, was an unobtrusive citizen, best known as being influential in the organization and support of church and school, still holding proudly the honor of having been a soldier of the Revolution. His son, Daniel, with such education as the country schools of that time afforded, was yet widely read, and among the the best informed men of his day. In politics he was an uncompromising Whig. He served as a soldier in the war of 1812, and died in 1820, leaving his widow with four children—Cynthia H., Anne E., A. O. and Clarissa.

A. O. Day, the subject proper of these lines, though but a little lad when his father died, commenced then his fight with the world. And though sometimes he had to say: "The battle goeth hard," he triumphed, and may be said to have won success in the truest meaning of that word. His boyhood was spent on the farm, and in a life of unremitting toil he yet managed to secure more than the ordinary education of "district schools;" reading history by firelight in a "sugar camp;" or, without a teacher, interpreting the mysterious symbols of higher mathematics. He taught school for several terms, and then, after a brief preparatory course in Washington College, read medicine. But the feeling was strong that teaching was his true vocation, and medicine not proving attractive, he again entered the schoolroom as teacher, not to leave it until after thirty years of service. It is as a teacher that he is most widely known and will be longest remembered. He was twice elected register of his county—in 1872, and again in 1875. In politics a Republican, and in religious belief a Cumberland Presbyterian, he can be called neither a narrow partisan nor a bigoted sectarian.

In 1850 Mr. Day was married to Hannah Jane, daughter of Andrew Bell and Mary A. (Boyd) Bell, of Washington, this county, and he has always lived in or near Washington, for the last fifteen years on his farm in Franklin township. Of his seven living children—four sons and three daughters—Edgar W. is a Presbyterian minister; Alfred M. and John N. are farmers; Minor H. is an editor; Bell M. is a teacher; Jen H. is the wife of Charles B. Andrew, of Franklin township; and Cordelia B., the youngest daughter, is with her parents.

WILLIAM C. McCOLLUM, a prominent, progressive farmer of Amwell township, is a grandson of John McCollum, who came with his wife from New Jersey to Washington county, Penn., in an early day, and located near Amity, on the spot where Albert Kelsey's residence now stands. John McCollum there purchased about 100 acres of the original "Thaddeus Dodd" patent, and began farming, taking his part in the development of the wild new country. His children were Moses, Alexander, Jacob, Stephen, John, Thomas, Japheth B., Mary (Mrs. Miles), Sarah (Mrs. Masters), Hannah, and Deborah (Mrs. Smith).

Moses McCollum was born in New Jersey February 23, 1784, and in boyhood came with his parents to Amwell township, where he attended the district school in the winter, and assisted his father in summer. Although his educational opportunities were limited, they were sufficient to enable him to become a successful school teacher. He was also a weaver, and had to employ help to carry on the farm while he engaged in that business. On March 26, 1818, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Clutter, of Morris township, and to this union were born nine children: Samuel, born June 5, 1819; Sarah, born April 13, 1821; Rachel (Mrs. Bebout), born March 9, 1823; John, born November 29, 1824; Jane (Mrs. Miles), born October 6, 1826; Moses, born November 4, 1828 (he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, in which he was orderly sergeant, and died May 17, 1863, from the effects of a wound received at the battle of Chancellorsville, while bravely defending his country); William C., born November 2, 1830; Leety C., born January 30, 1834, and Andrew J., born April 29, 1836. Mr. McCollum was very successful in business, and accumulated a comfortable property for that period. He was a public-spirited man, and in politics was an Old-line Whig. On March 31, 1839, he died, aged fifty-five, his widow in 1881, in her eighty-sixth year.

William C. McCollum was born on the old farm in Amwell township, this county, and now occupies a portion of the very house wherein he first saw the light. He has never left the home of his childhood, and the greater part of his earlier years were passed in assisting his widowed mother and attending the common schools, which then afforded very meager opportunities; but by dint of good judgment and extended observation, he has acquired a valuable store of general information. On June 5, 1861, he was united in marriage with Harriet E. Thomas, of Morris township, this county, who was born October 10, 1839. Mr. and Mrs. McCollum have had five children: James Roscoe, born April 2, 1862, now principal of the schools in Wright county, Iowa; Grant, born June 2, 1865; John R., born June 30, 1868, now in the freshman class of Washington and Jefferson College, Washington; Mary J., born January 19, 1878, and Myrtle, born February 23, 1882. Mr. McCollum has a well-cultivated farm, consisting of 158 acres, the result of his own economy and hard work. He was school director for three years, and has always been deeply interested in educational matters. Having experienced the lack of such advantages in his own boyhood and youth, he is doubly anxious to see the rising generation enjoy superior school training. He and his family have many years been members of the Methodist Protestant Church.

JR. HENDERSON, a prominent stockman and farmer of Chartiers township, was born October 5, 1858, in Chartiers township, this county. His father, Robert Henderson, was born January 2, 1816, in the same house where his son first saw the light of day. Robert Henderson was reared to agricultural pursuits, and when a young man was married, on September 25, 1850, to Margaret Reed, who died August 29, 1882, leaving one son and two daughters to mourn her death, namely: J. R., Mary Martha (wife of William Grounds, has two children) and Jemima J. (Mrs. Linus Welch). The father was a prosperous agriculturist, and for many years had served as ruling elder in the United Presbyterian Church, and also took an active interest in the educational progress of the community. He died June 29, 1886.

J. R. Henderson passed his youth on the home place, receiving a common-school education, and on June 25, 1884, was united in marriage with Elizabeth F. Martin, and they have had two sons, George D. and an infant (deceased). Mr. and Mrs. Henderson are members of the United Presbyterian Church, and in business life he is very successful, making a specialty of raising a fine breed of stock.

JONATHAN McWILLIAMS, a worthy representative of one of the oldest and most prominent families of Washington county, is a native of the same, having been born October 25, 1823, in Buffalo township.

John McWilliams, his grandfather, a native of Ireland, when twelve years of age immigrated, in 1763, in company with two brothers—David and William—to America, taking up their first residence in New Castle, Del. Here they remained some time, and then came to Washington county, where they made their permanent home in Buffalo township, on "Lion's Bush," a tract of land granted on a Virginia certificate, and surveyed September 19, 1785. During the early part of their settlement they were much troubled by the Indians, many times having to flee to the nearest blockhouse for safety, and they never thought of going from home, even to church, without their trusty rifles. The farm on which they had settled was wild, and all the improvements thereon had to be made by the ceaseless labor of the family. While yet a young man, John McWilliams married Jane, daughter of Robert Taylor, an early settler of the county, and the founder of Taylors-town, and the following are the names and dates of birth of the children born to them: Mary, May 29, 1781; Martha, October 8, 1783; Wallace, December 2, 1785; John, December 1, 1788; Sarah, December 19, 1789; Jean, November 18, 1791; Margaret, November 29, 1793; Elizabeth, December 29, 1795; Margaret, March 31, 1798; and Hannah, February 3, 1800. The family were members of the Presbyterian Church at Upper Buffalo, in which Mr. McWilliams was an elder for years; in politics he was a Democrat. Grandfather McWilliams died October 8, 1837; the grandmother about 1845.

Wallace McWilliams, father of subject, was born in Buffalo township, this county, and received his education at the primitive schools of the neighborhood. On April 6, 1819, he married Nancy, daughter of James Cleland, a native of Maryland, and the children born to them were John, Elizabeth (wife of John Flack), Jonathan and Jane (wife of W. S. Caldwell). The father of this family died June 20, 1860, the mother August 24, 1864. Mr. McWilliams was a prominent Democrat in his day, and for many years was a leading man in his party, holding several positions of trust in both township and county at various times; he was one of the board of commissioners appointed by the court for the purchase of the Washington County Poor Farm. In 1830 he was nominated and elected a member of the State Legislature, and re-elected for the ensuing term; in 1841 he was again elected to the position. He was a presidential elector in 1836, when Van Buren was elected President. In the militia of the day he took a lively interest, and was one time major-general of the forces in Washington and Greene counties. He was a consistent member and powerful supporter of the Presbyterian Church, and was a progressive, loyal citizen, greatly interested in the cause of education in his locality, serving many years on the school board.

Jonathan McWilliams was reared from earliest boyhood to the arduous duties of farm life, his winter months being for a few years devoted to attending the subscription and common schools of the neighborhood. On October 20, 1857, he was married to Z. W., daughter of William McCleese, of Chester county, Penn., and the young couple afterward remained on the McWilliams home place till 1871, in which year they came to Claysville, where they have since resided. They have no children. They are members of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics Mr. McWilliams is a lifelong Democrat. He has been a farmer all his days, but is now living retired, having accumulated a satisfactory competence. Like his father, he is progressive in the extreme, and in the management of schools it can safely be said that there is no one more zealous, active or useful in the community.

JAMES COOPER, one of the oldest residents of Franklin township, is a native of the same, having been born in that locality, April 18, 1817. His father, Stephen Cooper, was also born in Franklin township, and his grandfather, Zebulon Cooper, was a native of New Jersey, which had long been the home of the family. Zebulon Cooper was married to Mary White (a native of Long Island), and soon afterward came to Pennsylvania, where he erected a log cabin, and commenced to establish a home in the forests of Washington county. The following children were born to this pioneer couple: Susanna, born July 22, 1776; Zebu-lon, born October 28, 1778; Elizabeth, born April 29, 1781; Mary, born July 18, 1783; John, born January 11, 1786; Silvanus, born December 27, 1787; Jerusha, born October 17, 1789; Stephen, born January 26, 1792; Ephraim, born June 7, 1794; Eunice, born July 18, 1795, and Hannah, born November 17, 1798. Mr. Cooper was a strong advocate of the principles embodied in the Whig party. He was one of the earliest Presbyterians of Franklin township, and took a deep interest in the religious welfare of the community. He and his wife resided on the farm until their death.

Stephen Cooper grew to manhood in Franklin township, Washington county, on the farm of his father, and shared in the many privations of pioneer life. He received a limited school education, and on March 22, 1816, was united in marriage with Hannah, daughter of James Bane, and their children were: James, Lavina, William, Charlotte, Rebecca, Amasa, Josiah, Lewis W., Sophia, Stephen, Phebe, Ellen and David. After his marriage Mr. Cooper settled on the farm where the remainder of his life was spent, and which he improved with the aid of his sons. He was interested in all questions pertaining to the growth and improvement of the township, and was a member of the Whig party, afterward becoming a Republican. He died in 1880, and his wife rests by his side.

James Cooper remained on the home farm in Franklin township during his earlier years, and on January 6, 1840, was married to Harriet, daughter of Ezra Young, of New Jersey. After his marriage Mr. Cooper settled on the farm which is his present home. To this union the following children were born: Ann E., John W., Warren, Addison and Lewis. The mother died in 1849, and Mr. Cooper was afterward married to Susan, daughter of Harry Van Kirk, an early resident of Washington county, and their children are: Henry, Morris, Marion, Charles P., Bryant, Jane and Mary. Mr. Cooper has made many improvements on his farm. In politics he was formerly a Whig, and since the formation of that party has been a Republican. Although he has never accepted a political office, he is deeply interested in the progress of his party. In religion he has been a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church for many years.

WILLIAM HAZLETT, a prominent and progressive agriculturist, and a worthy representative of one of the oldest and best-known families of Franklin township, is a native of the same, born March 6, 1819.

The paternal ancestry were English. Samuel Hazlett, grandfather of our subject, having been a native of the "land that bears a well-known name," whence early in life he moved to Ireland. Here he married Ann White, a daughter of Erin, and shortly afterward emigrated to America, making their first home in the New World near Baltimore, Md., where he followed carpentering, and where were born to them two children—William and Mary. About 1778 they set out with their little family on a journey to Pennsylvania, on horseback, accompanied by a slave named "Jingo," and a convict whose "time" had been purchased by Mr. Hazlett. Slowly the party wended their way over the rough roads, until they finally reached Washington county, and here they made a halt near where is now the farm occupied by A. O. Day, in Franklin township, being among the first to settle in the township. Here their first dwelling was an old abandoned log cabin, with no floor save mother earth, and here they had to make a clearing for their farm—the men chopping down the forest trees, while the grandmother dug up the briars and other underbrush. They afterward learned that the family who had previously occupied this old cabin had been murdered by Indians. For the first year the young Hazlett colony raised but little on their small clearing, and their chief article of food was hominy, and such other provisions as they may have brought with them; they had to bring salt from Baltimore on horseback. Their nearest neighbors were a long way removed, and consequently they had but few visitors, except it might be a prowling Indian or wolf; on one occasion a couple of rattlesnakes entered their cabin, and coiled themselves up for warmth on the stones on which the fire had been burning. After a time the family built and moved into the house where now dwells the subject of this sketch. In Washington county six more children were born to the pioneer Samuel Hazlett, viz.: Elizabeth, Ellen, Nancy, Ruth, James and Samuel. The grandfather died several years ago, the grandmother at the age of ninety-six years, when the grandson, William, was a lad of some twelve or fourteen years.

Samuel Hazlett, father of William, was born in 1790, in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education at the subscription schools of the neighborhood. He followed agricultural pursuits on the old homestead all his life, and died August 28, 1872, aged eighty-two years, honored and respected by all. He was a leading member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics was a sound Democrat. He was twice married—first time to Rebecca, daughter of Arthur Hamilton, a native of Ireland, and she bore him children as follows: Elsa, William (subject), Ann (in Allegheny county), Elizabeth, Caroline (in Washington county) and Charlotte. This wife dying, Samuel Hazlett was afterward united in marriage with Jemima Forsyth, a native of Franklin township, and the children born to this marriage were Samuel J. (deceased), Isaac, John, James, Josephine (wife of John Finley) and Ruth

E., all living in Fayette county, Penn., except John, who is a resident of Amwell township, this county. The mother of these children died in 1870.

William Hazlett was reared to agricultural pursuits on the home place, a few weeks in winter time, during his boyhood, being spent at the schools of the neighborhood, although many a winter's day did he thresh with a flail. On October 29, 1844, he was married to Margaret C., daughter of Joshua Dickerson, and the children born to them were Joshua (a physician in Vanderbilt, Fayette county), Samuel and Maggie (both deceased), Rebecca (Mrs. Lewis Hamilton, in Muskingum county, Ohio), Addison (on a farm), Matilda (Mrs. William McLenathan, in Amwell township), William (on a farm), Samuel Lewis (on the home farm), and James (deceased). On April 21, 1863, the mother died, and the father afterward married Comfort A. West, of Cadiz, Ohio. In 1852 Mr. Hazlett settled on the home farm, where the family now reside. He was formerly a Whig, and since the formation of the party has been an active Republican, his first Presidential vote being cast for William H. Harrison. He has always taken a lively interest in the prosperity of his county and township, especially in educational matters, and for twenty-five years he has held the office of school director; he has also been supervisor of his township. For many years Mr. Hazlett has been a member of the Presbyterian Church of Upper Ten-Mile, and one of its leading and most substantial supporters. His farm is situated seven miles from Washington, and comprises 150 acres, while the farm on which his sons Addison and William are living has 150 acres. Mr. Hazlett has been a hard worker all his life, and enjoyed good health until 1891, when he had an attack of the "grippe," from which he has not yet completely recovered.

JOHAN MOODY, an energetic young agriculturist of Robinson township, Washington county, is of Irish descent, and traces his lineage to one, Joseph Moody, a native of Ireland. Joseph Moody came to America in early manhood, first settling in Washington county, Penn. In 1812 he moved to Jefferson county, Ohio, where he died.

David Moody, a son of Joseph, was born in Washington county, Penn., but, when yet a boy, moved with his parents to Jefferson county, Ohio, where he grew to manhood. Returning to his native county in Pennsylvania, he was married to Margaret, daughter of John Flanegin, a native of Ireland, and three children were born to them, viz.: John, Margaret and Jane.

John Moody (father of subject) was born in Washington county, Penn. He learned the cabinet maker's trade, and afterward followed undertaking, being now engaged in agricultural pursuits. He has served his township twenty years as justice of the peace. He was united in marriage with Margaret Derstine, of Allegheny county, daughter of Benjamin Derstine, a prominent business man of Sewickley, Allegheny county. John and Margaret (Derstine) Moody have six children, namely: John, Albert, Stella, Harry, James and an infant son.

John Moody was born in Clinton, Allegheny Co., Penn., and was reared to manhood on the home farm; he attended several terms at the academy at Sewickley, Allegheny county. He was married to Miss Agnes M., daughter of John M. Stewart, who was also born in Clinton, Allegheny county. The young people began wedded life on a farm in their native county, soon afterward moving to Washington county, Penn. Three children have been born to this union: Estelle, John and Ralph. Mr. Moody has ninety-two acres of good farm land; in politics he is a Democrat, and has served his township as justice of the peace. In religious faith he is connected with the Robinson United Presbyterian Church.

Albert Moody, son of John and Margaret (Derstine) Moody, was born in Clinton, Allegheny Co., Penn. He was married to Miss Martha E. Hutchison, daughter of James and Susan Hutchison, of Washington county, Penn., and one child has been born to this union, Susan Margaret.

Harry Moody, son of John and Margaret (Derstine) Moody, was born in Clinton, Allegheny Co., Penn., and was married to Miss Maud Burns, daughter of John S. and Annie Burnis, of Allegheny county.

JOHAN E. STEWART, for many years a leading and representative agriculturist of Mt. Pleasant township, now a resident of the borough of Washington, is a native of Allegheny county, born in Findley township, April 5, 1842.

James Stewart, his great-grandfather, was born in Dauphin county, Penn., April 25, 1754, and August 25, 1779, there married Margaret McCowen, a native of the same county, born February 19, 1759. They settled near Clinton, in that township, their nearest neighbors at the time being—to the north, seven miles distant, to the south, four and one-half miles. James Stewart took up a large tract of land, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying July 21, 1821, at the age of sixty-seven years; his wife had passed away July 5, 1816, at the age of fifty-seven years. They were the parents of children as follows: James, twice married, first to Elizabeth Dickson, afterward to Isabella Gladden; John (of whom mention is made further on); Richard, married to Mary Stewart; Thomas, twice married, first to Isabella Brown, afterward to Eleanor Cherry; Joseph, married to Mary Ewing; Margaret, married to Josiah Guy; Jane, married to Matthew McCoy; Eleanor, married to James Simpson; Ann, married to William Guy; Mary, married to James Moore; and Sarah, married to Henry Cowan, most of whom lived and died in Allegheny county.

Of this family, John (grandfather of subject), born June 4, 1780, married Elizabeth Glass, and settled on the farm in Allegheny county, on which his son, James, and grandson, John E. (subject), were born. Here he died in 1846, aged sixty-six years, leaving a widow and six children, the former of whom was called from earth in October, 1869, at the age of eighty years. Their children were: James, born July 11, 1809; Robert, born August 17, 1811; Margaret, born May 31, 1814; Jane, born November 15, 1816; John M., born May 21, 1819; and Elizabeth, born 1812. Of these, Robert died when a young man; Margaret married John Smiley, of Washington county, and is now a widow living in Burgettstown; Jane married Henry Aten, and is now a widow, with residence in Allegheny county; John M., a farmer, died July 3, 1881, in Allegheny county; Elizabeth married Thomas Armor, of Allegheny county, and died in July, 1890.

James Stewart grew to manhood on the old home farm, where he spent his entire life. On October 8, 1840, he was married to Miss Rachel P., daughter of Edward Cherry, of Washington county, and they became the parents of the following interesting family: John E. (subject); Sarah J., married to Samuel Aten, of Wyandot county, Ohio; Amanda E., married to George Jardine, and now living near Clinton, Allegheny county; Maggie E., injured by a fall when three years old, and permanently crippled in her lower limbs (she was born June 3, 1855, and died December 5, 1873); Rankin M., an agriculturist, living on the old home farm in Allegheny county; and Mattie A., unmarried, having her home with her brother Rankin M. The father died October 10, 1882, the mother on December 13, same year. Mr. Stewart was not an active politician, nevertheless held various local public offices of trust; a member of the Presbyterian Church, he was an elder in same, as were also nearly all the older members of the Stewart family. He was a prominent man in his township, and took an active interest in all local matters tending to the advancement and welfare of the community.

John E. Stewart remained at the parental home until he was twenty-nine years of age, and received a common-school education, necessarily somewhat limited, as being the eldest in the family he had to, early in life, commence in the farm work, assisting his father, who was severely injured in one foot, and had ill health for a few years. After his marriage in 1871 he removed to Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and settled on a farm which he had purchased and which he still owns. Here they remained till November, 1891, when they moved into the borough of Washington, where they still make their home, having purchased a residence on West Main street. They have no children. Mr. Stewart is a Democrat, and while in Mt. Pleasant township, he served as school director, supervisor and justice of the peace; in 1890 he was elected county commissioner, resigning the office of justice of the peace after two years' service. He and his wife are members of the Third Presbyterian Church of Washington. His farm, which is situated in the northern part of Mt. Pleasant township, comprises 140 acres of highly improved land, and is conceded to be one of the finest in the township.

On August 10, 1871, Mr. Stewart was married to Miss Jennie M. Stewart, who was born May 5, 1844, daughter of Joseph Stewart, also of Findley township, Allegheny county, but the families are in no other way related. Prior to her marriage she had been a teacher in her native county. Her grandfather, Samuel Stewart, came from Dauphin county, Penn., to Allegheny county in an early day.

He was married in Dauphin county to Jane Patterson, who lived to be ninety-seven years of age, dying in the fall of 1867, her husband passing away in 1837. Their children were James, Robert, Hugh, Flora, Nancy, Margaret, William, Samuel, Joseph and Uriah, of whom Joseph was the father of Mrs. John E. Stewart. He was born May 20, 1816, and married Hannah Glass, daughter of an early settler of Robinson township, Allegheny county, and they lived to celebrate their golden wedding October 3, 1889. They were the parents of children as follows: Samuel G., married to Harriet Stoddard; Jennie M. (Mrs. John E. Stewart); Olivia M., wife of Albert Aten, of Allegheny county; William J., married to Maggie Miller; John P., married to Lida Phummer; Joseph P., single (the last two named are partners in a mercantile business in Finleyville, Penn.); Sadie A., deceased at the age of about six years; Andrew D., living on the old home farm with his mother, and Albert E., a merchant of Hickman, Allegheny county. The father of this family died December 19, 1892, a member of the Presbyterian Church; in early manhood he had associated himself with the United Presbyterian Church. The old Stewart homestead where Mrs. Joseph Stewart and her son, Andrew D., now reside, is the original tract settled by the family many years ago, never having changed hands.

JOSEPH W. ROBB. Among those undaunted pioneers who braved the hardships and dangers of frontier life to make a home in Washington county, Joseph Robb (grandfather of the present family) and his faithful wife deserve an honored place. Joseph Robb was born and reared in Chester county, Penn., and was married to a native of the same State. Soon after their union the young couple came to Washington county, in 1790, purchasing of the Government and moving upon a tract consisting of 400 acres, known as the "Omi tract." A log cabin was soon erected and improvements energetically begun by the stout-hearted young settler, who often carried salt over the mountains on horseback. Time passed on, and as the rude uncultivated land was transformed into fields of moving grain, the little home took on an air of comfort and civilization. Children as follows were born to these pioneers: Ebenezer, William and John, and as the parents grew weary with the weight of years, strong young arms and brave young hearts lifted the burdens of life from their shoulders. Joseph Robb was a member and elder of the Associate Reformed Church, and in politics voted with the Whig party. He died April 14, 1847, and was buried by the side of his wife in the cemetery of Robinson's Run church.

Ebenezer Robb, the eldest son of Joseph, was born July 9, 1803, and was reared and educated on the home farm. On January 26, 1836, he was united in marriage with Eliza Wallace, who was born near Pigeon creek, daughter of Robert Wallace. The young people made a permanent home in Robinson township, this county, where he followed farming and stock raising. Five children were born to their union, namely: William and Joseph (both now deceased); Robert (a prominent business man in Allegheny City, and is an elder in the Westminster Church of that place); Joseph W. and Mary E. (wife of Joseph Reynolds). The father of this family was formerly a member of the Associate Reformed Church of Robinson's Run, and afterward joined the United Presbyterian Church at McDonald, serving as an elder in both Societies. In politics he was originally a Whig, afterward a Republican. He took an active interest in educational matters, and served as justice of the peace two terms. Mr. Robb died in August, 1884, having been preceded to the grave by his wife in 1877, and their remains rest in the cemetery at Robinson's Run.

Joseph W. Robb was born May 18, 1851, on the old homestead in Robinson township. His elementary education was received at the common schools of the neighborhood, and he afterward became a student in the Allegheny City Academy. On November 27, 1879, Mr. Robb married Rachel Lindsey, a daughter of William Lindsey, who was born in June, 1811, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, where his earlier years were passed. He was married to Ann Van Eman, a resident of this county, and the young people remained in Mt. Pleasant township till 1876, the following children being born to their union: Sarah, John, Elizabeth, Van Eman, Anna, Rebecca, Marguerita, Irene, Robert and Rachel (Mrs. Robb). Mr. Lindsey was an extensive dealer in stock, and in politics voted with the Republican party. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church. He died in 1883; his widow is yet living with her children.

Joseph and Rachel (Lindsey) Robb settled on the paternal homestead, where their children have been born as follows: Edmund E., born August 31, 1881; Anna Ethel, born September 2, 1883, died January 7, 1885; Mary Margretta, born August 9, 1886; Laura Ellen, born October 24, 1888, and Joseph Lloyd, born December 19, 1892. Mr. Robb is an active Republican, has served his township in various capacities, and has now entered upon his second term as school director. He and his family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at McDonald, in which he is an elder.

ROBERT BAMFORD, a practical and prosperous agriculturist of Robinson township, is a native of Washington county.

Robert Bamford, his father, was born in 1824, in Ireland, and in 1848 came with a party of young people to Pittsburgh, Penn. He had learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed about eighteen months in Pittsburgh. On March 8, 1851, he was united in marriage with Sarah G., daughter of David and Martha (Adams) Gordon, both natives of Ireland. David Gordon was first married to Sarah Gardener, who bore him eight children, all now deceased. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Gordon was married to Martha Adams, who had eight children, but two of whom are yet living: Sarah G. (wife of Robert Bamford) and Eliza (wife of John Hauley), of Belfast, Ireland. The father died in 1838, in Ireland, his wife following him in 1852.

Robert and Sarah G. (Gardener) Bamford were the parents of four children, namely: David G. (a miller in Midway, Robinson township), born February 20, 1852; William, born November 16, 1854 (farming in this county); Robert, born February 16, 1857; and Mary, born February 2, 1859 (living at home). In 1853 Mr. Bamford moved to Nobles-town, Allegheny county, working there at his trade for about two years. He then moved to Bulger, this county, remaining about four years, thence to Primrose, where he resided four years, continuing to follow his trade during these changes of location. In 1863 he bought a farm of fifty-three acres (where his son Robert is now living), in Robinson township, and still followed his trade. He afterward added 182½ acres to the farm, and became an extensive dealer in stock, accumulating a large amount of property by combining his agricultural duties with his trade, which he followed thirty three years.

He voted with the Democratic party, and was much interested in educational matters, having been school director; he was also one of the directors of the Oakdale Mutual Fire Insurance Company. He was a member and trustee of the U. P. Church for many years. He died January 3, 1887, and his widow is yet living with her son on the home farm. She is a member of the United Presbyterian Church.

Robert Bamford was reared on the home farm, and educated in the common schools of the neighborhood. On February 16, 1887, he was united in marriage with Jennie M. Donaldson, of this county, who was born August 20, 1856, and was a daughter of John M. Donaldson. John M. Donaldson was a son of Andrew, whose father, James Donaldson, emigrated from Ireland at an early day, locating in Washington county, where children were born and reared as follows: Thomas, Andrew, John, Richard, and four daughters, whose names are unknown.

Andrew Donaldson was born in this county, being educated in the rate schools of the period, which were built of rough-hewn logs, and furnished in the most primitive manner. In early life he was married to Jane, daughter of John McBurney, and they settled on a farm situated between Bavington and North Star, where the following children were born to them: Sally, Jane, Mary Ann, Elizabeth (deceased), Esther (deceased), James, John M., Margaret, Thomas and an unnamed infant. Of these children seven are now living.

Mr. Donaldson was an active Democrat, and in religion was first united with the Associate Reformed Church of Robinson township, which afterward became the United Presbyterian Society. He died in 1843. John M. Donaldson was born July 25, 1831, on the home farm in this county. In 1855 he was married to Martha M. Bigger, and they came to the farm where they are now living, which, together with 109 acres presented by Mr. Bigger, forms a good place of 279 acres. The following children were born to their union: Jane M. (Mrs. Bamford), Andrew, Thomas B., Sarah C., Mary E., Emmett T. (deceased), Elizabeth H., James W., Margaret B., Richard M., and Holland H.

Robert and Jennie M. (Donaldson) Bamford have one son, John D., born March 27, 1888. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bamford are earnest members of the Centre United Presbyterian Church, in which he serves as trustee.

JOHAN G. JOHNSON, a successful business man of Cross Creek township, is another example of what patience, industry and enterprise can accomplish. He is a son of John Johnson, of Canonsburg, Penn., whose father was Richard Johnson. The latter was a native of County Down, Ireland, and immigrated to America in early manhood, settling near Canonsburg, this county, in about 1800. He was married to a Miss Bradford, a resident of Canonsburg, and children were born to them as follows: George, David (a resident of Steubenville, Ohio), Mary (Mrs. Thomas Allison), Elizabeth (widow of John Stockton), John (living in Canonsburg) and William (a physician).

John Johnson was born in 1806, on the farm near Canonsburg now occupied by R. V. Johnson, and was reared to manhood on the home place. He was married to Miss Rebecca VanEman, of Cecil township, Washington county, a daughter of Joseph VanEman, who was a prominent farmer of that vicinity. After their marriage the young people settled on the home place, where their three children were born, namely: R. V., a farmer and civil engineer of North Strabane township, this county; J. B., a farmer and dairyman of Chartiers township, this county; and John G., the subject of our present sketch. Shortly before his death, which occurred October 9, 1888, Mr. Johnson retired to Canonsburg, there passing his declining years.

John G. Johnson was born November 13, 1845, on the old home farm near Canonsburg, where his boyhood was spent. He attended the academy at Beaver, Penn., afterward beginning an active business life as a farmer and stock dealer, following that vocation until within the past few years, and making a trip to Pittsburgh with stock nearly every week. In June, 1874, he was united in marriage with Miss Annie K. Morrison, of Chartiers township, this county, and four children have blessed their union, namely: George L., William M., John (deceased in infancy) and Earnest. Mr. Johnson owns 166 acres of good land, two houses and lots in Canonsburg, a storeroom and dwelling, and three good houses in Burgettstown. In politics he has been a staunch Republican, although never caring to take an active part in the turmoil of political warfare. Mr. Johnson is now living in a beautiful home, situated at the eastern extremity of Cross Creek village, and is enjoying the fruits of a life of industry.

THOMAS BORLAND McCORKLE, retired farmer, Canonsburg, late of Cross Creek township, was born July 7, 1835, on the old farm of his father, John McCorkle, where his grandfather settled in 1810.

The paternal great-grandfather of our subject emigrated from the North of Ireland to Pennsylvania, settling east of the mountains at an early date, probably in Adams county, as his son Thomas was born in that county. This Thomas McCorkle came to Washington county, and November 7, 1810, purchased the old homestead farm of something over 432 acres. He was born February 12, 1759, in Adams county, Penn., and died on his farm in Cross Creek township May 25, 1843, at the age of eighty-four years, three months and thirteen days. His father, Robert McCorkle, came to Washington county, and died on the son's farm June 26, 1822, in his ninetieth year, in Cross Creek township, and he was buried in West Middletown graveyard, Hopewell township, this county. Thomas McCorkle and his wife, Esther (Terrell) McCorkle, were members of the Associate Reformed Church in West Middletown, and he was a ruling elder in the same for many years. He always followed farming, and was a man of fine principle. Esther McCorkle died December 12, 1839, aged sixty-five years. Their children were as follows: Robert, born October 26, 1796, died when a young man, unmarried; Margaret, born November 22, 1798, married Thomas Ritchey, of Hopewell township; Frances, born February 7, 1800, died unmarried; John, born June 4, 1803, married Mary McCorkle, of Somerset township; Jane, born September 14, 1807, married Charles Phillis, of Claysville, Ohio; Thomas, born March 24, 1814, married Margaret Welch, who is now a widow and is living in Burgettstown, Washington county.

John and Mary (McCorkle) McCorkle were married January 14, 1834. She was born February 22, 1810. They were both members of the Associate Reformed Church of West Middletown, in which he was a ruling elder. He held various offices of trust, and was a man of more than ordinary executive ability and intelligence, serving as county supervisor, school director and as executor, administrator and guardian for many estates. It was through his persistent efforts that the post-office, Woodrow, in Cross Creek township, was established. He was a member of an old militia company. Mr. and Mrs. McCorkle had one child, Thomas Borland, our subject. The mother died May 25, 1836, and May 12, 1842, the father married Miss Mary Hay, who was born October 13, 1814, on the old homestead farm of her father in Chartiers township, this county, a daughter of David and Mary (McCullough) Hay. Of this union no children were born. Mrs. McCorkle is still living in West Middletown, and is a member of West Middletown U. P. Church. She is descended from the Hays of Scotland.

Thomas B. McCorkle was educated at the common schools of Cross Creek township, known as "Bushy Rock," and when of proper age learned farming with his father. On June 21, 1871, he
